To the Right Honorable the Lord PRESIDENT and COUNCIL to his Highneſs the Lord PROTECTOR.

I Preſume to preſent to your Honors a Continuation of the full Review of a Diſpute of which the firſt part was preſented to his Highneſs more than a year ago. To which Writing I take my ſelf many ways obliged, not onely becauſe of my own engagements, but alſo, and that chiefly, by reaſon of the important concernment that the truth be preſerved. I am ſenſible that the increaſe of Books is thought a grievance by many, and that none are more unwelcome, than ſuch as are about Controverſies, ſpecially when they tend to unſettle men in what they have received, and in no point more than in this. Few have abilitie to diſcern in Diſputes which part preponderates: Few are willing to beſtow pains in ſuch unpleaſant ſtudies: Few can digeſt a truth which expoſeth to reproach and loſs. Theſe and other conſiderations had kept me from this adventure, if my allegiance to Chriſt had not bound me to vindicate his truth, and charity to men tied me to endeavour their undeceiving. Wiſdom muſt be juſtified by her children: nor can he give a good account to Chriſt at his appearing, who ſhall, out of undue reſpects, leave to ſpoil the truth with which he is intruſted. Polemick Writing are to few delightfull, yet neceſſary; it being unlikely that practice of piey ſhould flouriſh when Doctrines of Faith and Worſhip are corrupted. They that decline ſtudying and meddling with Controverſies, if they be not ſluggiſh, yet are likely unwary, not heeding that thereby the wall is unrepaired, which ſhould keep out Seducers from perverting the Churches. Peace is indeed very deſirable, but Truth is put firſt, *Zech.*8.19. Were menbetter temper'd than commonly they are, diſſenters might ventilate things in queſtion with leſs offence; I mention it with rejoycing, as a ſign of Gods preſence with us, in hope that the ſame Spirit of unanimity will diffuſe it ſelf among our Chriſtian brethren throughout the Nation. That Diſſenters and Contenders in writing, and otherwiſe, in this and other points, for their ſeveral judgments, have acted hitherto in the buſineſs of approving publick Preachers with much harmony of minde, and agreement of votes; Surely the work of Chriſt would be much advanced by a firm conſociation in order to the work of Chriſt ſo far as we agree, though there ſhould remain, as no doubt there will, diverſities of opinions in things diſputable. Nor do I deſpair that Diſputes will be mannaged with more ſweetneſs of ſpirit, candour, and tenderneſs towards diſſenters than formerly they have been.

In this hope my intention is (with Gods aſſiſtence) to proſecute the Diſpute begun, a part whereof I now tender to your Honours, being deſirous that my ſelf, and the cauſe I mannage ſhould ſtand right in your eys, who are the eys of the Common-wealth. For whom I beg light from Heaven toguide you in your way, and help from him, who hath been hitherto your ſtrength, and who will be with you, while you be with him, and remain,

The Contents.

*Sect.*1. Of the reason and purport of this writing.

*Sect.*2. That no good argument can be drawn from positive rites of the Old Testament to prove a Divine appointment in positive rites of the New, nor is it true which Mr. Baxter saith that infants admission into the Church is fully determined in the Old Testament.

*Sect.*3. Mr. Blakes plea for arguments from analogy in meer positive rites of the Old Testament, and Mr. Baxters speech about infant admission as determined in it, are refelled.

*Sect.*4. Mr. Baxters speech about the little sayd for Antipædobaptism is vain, and his speech about the antiquity of infant-baptism, is very inconsiderate; and his speech about the difficulty and importance of the point in question is examined.

*Sect.*5. The first argument against infant-baptism from the institution *Mat.*19.28. Mark 16.16. and the practise in the New Testament is urged.

*Sect.*6. Mr. Blakes exception, against the major, that such institution or example as I require for infant-baptism is unnecessary, is refelled.

*Sect.*7. Mr. Marshalls exceptions that *Matth.*28.19. is not the institution of baptism, that onely Disciples are not appointed to be baptized, that this was a rule onely for a Church to be constituted, are refelled.

*Sect.*8. The exceptions of Mr. Cobbet, Mr. Blake &c. against the arguing from the order of teaching afore baptizing, of Mr. Marshal, Mr. Hussey, &c. that baptizing is discipling, are refelled.

*Sect.*9. The exception of Mr. Marshal, Mr. Blake, Mr. Cobbet, that nations are appointed to be baptized *Matth.*28.19. and so infants is refelled.

*Sect.*10. That infants of believers are not Disciples appointed to be baptized, *Matth.*28.19.

*Sect.*11. Mr. Cottons allegations in his Dialogue *ch.*1. to prove infants Disciples, are shewed to be insufficient.

*Sect.*12. Mr. Baxters allegation of Acts 15.10. to prove infants Disciples, is fully answered, and his arguments retorted.

*Sect.*13. The arguments are vindicated which are brought to prove infants not meant by Disciples Acts 15.10.

*Sect.*14. Infants discipleship is not proved by Mr. Baxter from *Lev.*25.41,42. which speaks of the Israelites being Gods servants.

*Sect.*15. That infants are not proved to be Christs Disciples from being subjects to Christ, Christians, belonging to Christ, Luke 9.47,48 *Matth.*18.5. Mark 9.41.

Sect 16. Dr. Featlie and Mr. Stephens arguments from John 3.5. for infant-baptism, are answered, and baptism shewed not to be a cause of regeneration, and Mr. Cranfords words are considered.

*Sect.*17. The 31. Cap. of Mr. Baxters plain Scripture-proof, &c. is answered, and Mark 10.13,14,15,16. is shewed to make nothing for infants visible Church-membership and baptism, and his description of visible Church-membership is considered and his argument from *Deut.*29.10. shewed to be insufficient.

*Sect.*18. The 41. Chap. of Mr. Blakes Vindic. Fœder. about Christs speech of little children *Matth.*19.14. is answered, and my sayings in my Postscript vindicated.

*Sect.*19. Animadversions on Mr. *Cobbets. Just Vindic. part.*1. *ch.*4. and the arguings of Dr. Homes, Mr. Bailee, Mr. Fuller, Mr. Sidenham from the words and actions of Christ to little ones are answered.

*Sect.*20. The practise of infant-baptism is not proved, Acts 16. 15. by baptizing an household, against Mr. Marshall, Dr. Homes Mr. Bailee, Mr. Cook, Mr. Sidenham, Mr Fuller.

*Sect.*22. Mr. Blakes argument from *Gal.*4.29. is answered.

*Sect.*24 Dr. Hammond his way of proving infant-baptism from the Jews baptizing Proselytes children, is shewed to be vain.

Of the Reaſon and Purport of this writing,

HAving by my Poſtſcript, Antidote, Addition to the Apology, Præcurſor, and Ample diſquiſition of the meaning of the ingraffing, Rom. 11. 17 The promiſe, Acts 2. 39. The holineſſe of Children, 1. Cor. 7. 14 formerly printed, endeavoured to vindicate my ſelf, and the doctrine of Anti Pædobaptiſm, which I aſſert, from the objections which have been publiſhed to hinder the entertainment of it; I now proceed with the divine aſſiſtance to review the diſpute about Infant Baptiſm, which was made publick by the Printing of my Exercitation and Examen of Mr. Marſhal's Sermon in the year 1645. which is become the more laborious and tedious to me by reason of the many Antagonists, and their several writings since published, notwithstanding the equal and serious motion I made in the Epilogue of my Examen, that I might see some one writing, either of the Assemblies, or of their Committees, or the London Ministers (who in their attestation ceasur'd my Positions as erroneous and pernicious) in which the whole strength of the proofs for Infant-baptism might be put together, and Readers with my self eased of the trouble and charge of buying and perusing so many several writings, which some disclaim, and others magnifie. But this motion which would have quickly brought the matter to an issue, and made a shorter dispatch of the dispute than is now likely to be, being so far from meeting with a ready acceptance, that thereby an occasion was taken to misrepresent me as a braving challenger, and one that minds self-ostentation more than the truth of God (which is an artifice unworthy the users) and an opposite course taken to bear me down with a floud of injurious calumnies, and impetuous rather than considerate Antagonists, I am put to this choice, either to weary my self by answering so manie several writings, or else give advantage to them who are ready to take all advantages how indirectly soever (as appears by master Baxters dealing with me about the dispute at Bewdly, master Simon Ford of Reading his dealing with me about the passages in the Act at Oxford 1652.) to possesse people with prejudices against me, and of the unanswerablenesse of what is brought for Infant baptism, if they can but pretend that it is declined, though it be neglected onely for the futility and feeblenesse of it. But the former being more eligible for the truths sake, I conceive my self engaged to proceed in the Review of the Dispute. The writings which with mine own I am to review, are either such as are directly written against me, or such as at least for the truths sake I conceive meet to examine, whether they meddle with my writings or not; of the former sort are Master Stephen Marshals defence of his Sermon, Master John Gerees Vindiciæ pædobaptismi, and Vindiciæ Vindiciarum, Doctor Nathanuel Homes his Animadversions on my Exercitation, Master Thomas Blake his Answer to my Letter, and a great part of his Vindiciæ fœderis, and most of all Mr. Richard Baxter his plain Scripture proof of Infants Church-membership berſhip and Baptiſm. and together with theſe, what Mr. Thomas Cobbet of New England, in his juſt vindication hath thought fit to oppoſe againſt my Examen, ſent in a manuſcript to New England, and delivered to him to examine, as Mr. Cotton informed me by his letter, though I be not named in Mr. Cobbets book. Others there are, which though they do not expreſly oppoſe me, yet Mr. M. Mr. B. or ſome other, do direct me to them, as Mr. Cottons Dialogue, Voſſius his Theſes, Mr. Baillees Anabaptiſm, Mr. Drew, Mr. Church, Mr. Stephens, Dr. Featly, Mr. Lyford, Doctor Hammond, &c. Mr. Rutherfurd is one, to whoſe writing Mr. Baxter pag. 211. directs me, but I have not yet met with anie other thing which he hath written about this argument, than what I find in his Temperate plea, chap. 11, 12. yet when any other thing of his, or any other Authors, occurrs, which ſuggeſts any thing conſidetable, beſides what others before have publiſhed, and is already anſwered, I do intend to take it into the Review, and to deal impartially, as one that ſeeks truth, and is ſenſible that he is accountable to the Lord about writing as well as ſpeaking; nevertheleſſe, in handling thereof, I ſhall not tie my ſelf, any further than I ſee neceſſary, to ſet down each Authors words at large, but ſo much of them as I conceive requiſite, and according to their meaning, and the force of their arguments, as rightly as I can. The method I once intended to uſe in this Review was according to the order of my Examen, but I ſhall now uſe ſuch an arbitrary method as I ſhall judge moſt clear and comprehenſive, beginning with Mr. Richard Baxter his three firſt chapters of the firſt part of his book fore-named.

SECT. II.

That no good argument can be drawn from the positive Rites of the old Testament, to prove a divine appointment in positive Rites of the new; nor is it true as Mr B. saith, that Infants admission into the Church is fully determined in the old Testament.

MAster B. begins the dispute, pag. 1. with a preface tending to move affections, otherwise than pleaders before the Aropagites were to do, and was desired of Mr. B. that Logick might be used, and Rhetorick forborn; but however the preface is framed, and takes with many, yet so many mistakes in it are shewed in my Præcursor, as might deterre readers from blinding their eyes by the dust raised in it. He then tells us he must needs lay down several positions that must necessarily be well understood before they could understand the point in hand, and these are no fewer than ten, which if they had been all omitted, I see not but that the point might have been as well understood as now it is. I do not remember where master B. makes any use of them for clearing the point, and therefore I judge them, with his three propositions, chap. 2. to serve onely to forestall mens minds, if they be not used to dull the Readers attention ere he come to the point, as the Turks use their Asapi to blunt the Christians swords by killing them afore their Janizaries fall on. But what ever the intent was, there are sundry passages that require animadversions; His first position is, That the holy Ghost speaks of somethings in scripture more fully, and of others more sparingly, which I grant to be true; but I like not his instance when he saith, that the scripture speaks little concerning the heathen that never heard the Gospell, whether any of them be saved? or upon what terms he dealeth with them for life or death? Far is it [saith he,] from my reach, to discover the Holy Ghosts mind in this: whereas me thinks the Scripture speaketh much of this, Ephes. 2. 1, 2, 3, 12. Rom. 1. & 2. & 3. & 11. Chapters. And to be doubtfull, whether they that never heard the Gospel

Gospel were saved, and upon what terms God dealt with them for life or death, is in my apprehension to be unresolved whether there be not ano her way of salvation than by Christ; whether a man living and dying a professed Idolater without repentance, may not be saved by his moral demeanour; and whether Pelagianism be not true, that by nature without grace men may be saved. Vedelius in his book de deo synagoga charged Barlet the Arminian with a dangerous position in writing in verses before a book of Manasseh Ben Israel the Jew, that the God of Iews and Christians was one, and intimating that Iews remaining in denial of Christ might have God for their God, contrary to Iohn 8. 24. and 14. 6. Act. 4 12. 1 Iohn 2. 23. and 5. 12. 2. Iohn 9. How much more dangerous a conceit must this be, much lessening the grace of God in Christ, tending to Pelagianism, and to make Idolatrie a venial sin, to imagine that men that never had the Gospel nor the Prophets, but were such, even the best of them, as are described Rom. 1. 21. &c. that they should be saved, when the Scripture so plainly tels us, Revel. 21. 8. 27. & 22. 15. that all Idolaters shall be without? But I leave master B. to Doctor Prideaux his lecture de salute Ethnicorum to resolve him in this point.

And whereas he saith the Scripture speaketh sparingly of Infants, it seems then some at least of his texts he brings for Infants discipleship and visible Church-membership are impertinent, sith they are so many; and whereas he instanceth in the case of Infant-Baptism among such things as are not plainly determined in Scripture, he doth thereby gainsay the title of his book, which he cals plain Scripture proof of Infants baptism; nor is he relieved by what he replies in his praefatinamis morator, where nothing is brought out of his words, before or after, wch shews I have not rightly alleged his words in my Praecursor, Sect. 2. And his words pag. 9. [the grounds of it are very easie and plain, though to many it be difficult to discern how it is from those grounds inferred] do confirm my observation, that he contradicted his title, sith the inference which is the proof, is in them confessed to be difficult. But what he saith in the words following, pag. 3. 4. is more exactly to be scanned, as touching the main Basis of Pædo-Baptism. The new Testament (saith Mr. B.) speaks more sparingly of that which is more fully discovered in the old, what need the same thing be so done twice, except men had questioned the authority of the old? the whole Scripture is the perfect word and Law of God; & if he should reveal all his mind in one part, what use should we make of the other? How silent is the N. T. concerning Christian magistracy? which made the Anabaptists of old deny it: Where find you a Christian in the new Testament that exercised the place of a King, a Parliament-man, or Justice of Peace, or the like? so of an oath before a Magistrate, of war, of the Sabbath, &c. how sparing is the new Testament? and why? but because there was enough said of them before in the old; This also is the very case in the question in hand. The main question is not, by what sign members are to be admitted into the Church? or whether by a sign or without? But at what age they are to be admitted members? now this is as fully determined in the old Testament, as most things in the Bible, and therefore what need any more?

Answ. Mr. B. here asserts in the question about Infant baptism, that it is as fully determined in the old Testament as most things in the Bible, at what age persons should be admitted members into the Church, and therefore what need any more? which if true, Mr. B. had done well to have spared the allegation of Mat. 28. 19. Acts 15. 10. Luk. 9. 42. 48. Mat. 18. 5. Mark 9. 41. Rom. 11. 17, 19, 20, 24, 25, 26. Mat. 23. 37, 38, 39. Rom. 4. 11. 1. Cor. 7. 14, Mark 9. 36, 37. and 10. 13, 14, 15, 16. and others the allegation of Act. 2. 38, 39. and 16. 15. 1. Cor. 10 1, 2. for Infant-baptism, not troubling the Reader with more, when, if he speak true, the proof might have been made by fewer texts; Frustra fit per plura, quod fieri potest per pauciora. And indeed when Pædo-baptists speak not like wranglers, but ingenuously confesse the naked truth, they acknowledge there is no expresse precept or example for Infantbaptism in the new Testament, but they must flye to the old, Master Marshal in his sermon of baptizing Infants, pag. 34. Doctor Young in the passage cited in my Praecursor, Sect. 22. Eaton and Taylor, defence, pag. 57. Do not you conclude Infants must be baptized, not because the new Testament expressly saith so, but because you find it in the old; the Jews children were circumcised, therefore Christians children must be baptized. The assembly at Westminster answer to the dissenting Brethren touching Ordination, pag. 186. If parity will not serve turn to prove an ordinance of Christ, or at least to warrant a practice, how will our brethren prove baptizing of infants? Which confessions me thinks should deterre Pædobaptists from alleging precept and practice of it out of the new Testament; or at least readers and hearers should learn more wit than to be cheated thereby, when their own confessions do shew that they are brought onely to fill up books, and to deceive the poor simple readers. But let us view Mr. B. words better.

He saith, the main question is not by what sign members are to be admitted into the Church, or whether by a sign or without, but at what age they are to be admitted members? now this is as fully determined in the old Testament as most things in the Bible. Mr. M. in his defence, pag. 195. saith thus; First, for the point of willworship I shall desire you to prove this Conclusion, That all things belonging to Christian worship, even in the circumstances of it, even the ages and sexes of the persons to whom the ordinances are to be applyed, must expresly be set down in the new Testament; if you prove not this, you say nothing to the purpose, for this is our very case, pag. 205. This about Infant baptism touches but a circumstance of age.

Answ. Tis true, the main question is, whether infants are to be baptized? But they that deny it, do so, not meerly because of their age, but because they appear not ordinarily to be disciples of Christ, or believers, or capable of these in act. Their admission by baptism is questioned because of their nondiscipleship, not precisely by reason of their age. Mr. B. in his Appendix to his plain scripture proof, &c. pag. 302. And that in so material a thing as Infant baptism, and so about the proper subject of so great an ordinance; and if you judge Infant baptism a meer circumstance, you are much mistaken. If the question about Infant baptism touch but a circumstance of age, then the question about Infant-communion toucheth but a circumstance of age, and if men may without precept or

example in the new Testament of Infantbaptism be acquitted from willworship, because it toucheth but a circumstance of age, by the same reason they may be acquitted from willworship, who give Infants the Communion, because it toucheth but a circumstance of age. Our Lord Christ and his Apostles having determined who are to be baptized, it is manifest willworship or humane Invention to baptize others than he and they have appointed; and it is so much the worse, because it is not onely about the proper subject of so great an ordinance, but also the main end and use of baptism, by altering of which the ordinance is quite changed into another thing, and the Church of God exceedingly corrupted. But letting that passe, admission of Infants into the Church (Mr. B. saith) is fully determined in the old Testament; if he mean not the Christian visible Church, he speaks ambiguously, and if his words be meant of the Christion visible Churah (of which onely is the question) then it is as fully determined in the old Testament, that Infants should be admitted into the visible Church Christian as most things in the Bible, as that God made heaven and earth, idols are vanities, fornication a sin, &c. But surely none will believe Mr. B. in this, but he that is so simple as to believe every word. Me thinks he should not have said such a word at Bewdly, where he saith in his History, were many antient stayd Christians, that would not as children be tost up and down, and carried too and fro with every wind of doctrine, except he presumed they would take what he said, as true, without trial. Formerly this was the received doctrine, that Baptism was the sacrament of admission into the Christian Church, that Baptism and the Lords supper were the sacraments of the new Testament, instituted by Christ himself, that Circumcision, and the Passeover, and the whole Jewish Church policy are abrogated, which if true, it is very bold to say, that Infants are to be admitted into the visible Church Christian, is as fully determined in the old Testament, as most things in the Bible, when there is not a word in all the old Testament about the age, or way of admission into the visible Church Christian. But where doth Mr. B. find this admission so fully determined in the old Testament? In the dispute at Bewdly he denied the precept of Circumcision to be the ordinance of visible church-membership, And in my Præcursor, Sect. 6 I say, as yet I can find no such law or ordinance for Infants visible Church-membership save what is injoyned concerning Circumcision. To wch he replies in his Præfestinantis morator, What not yet? And yet dare you boast so confidently of your prepared confutation? yet can you find no law that made women Church-members? nor the uncircumcised males in the wilderness? O the power of prejudice! Whereto I say, though I boast not of my prepared confutation, but speak of it modestly, yet I find no cause to be lesse confident of my prepared confutation, because of these frivolous interogations of Mr. B. It is not the power of prejudice which is the reason why I find not a law or ordinance for Infants visible Church-membership, but because I do not see or read of law or ordinance for Infants visible Church-membership besides that of Circumcision, either upon my own search, or Mr. B's, or others shewing; I asked once a Preacher at Bewdley where it was? he told me it was Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12, 13. I told him I find a relation of a fact, of a thing that was done, but not a word of any law, ordinance precept or command, determining thus it shall be, this shall be done, &c. or any other form of speech that imports a law, ordinance, precept, statute or command to make female infants visible Church-members; much lesse do I find an appointment, law, ordinance, that some infants were once to be admitted members of the visible Church (which Mr. B. should have proved to be unrepealed, according to his assertion, cap. 5. 26.) except the law of Circumcising infants. And therefore my confutation of Mr. B's argument, cap. 5. might be sufficient, if I only denied such an ordinance or appointment, till it be shewed. I do confess my weakness in my answering at Bewdley, in that I permitted Mr. B. to run on in the proof of an ordinance unrepealed, afore he had shewed me where that ordinance is, but I perceived therein what I feared still, that I should not in a verball dispute observe what was necessary to be heeded. But I may say with truth Mr. B. either understands not what is meant by a law, ordinance, appointment liable to repeal, or still binding, or loves to pervert words from the genuine sense, as he did the word [accuse;] or else he is unwilling to speak plainly, who being provoked to shew in what text of Scripture that pretended law, ordinance, appointment is, doth not yet shew it. And for his assertion here, it exceeds all faith, that infant admission into the Church (meaning the visible Church Christian) should be as fully determined in the old Testament, as most things in the Bible.

But wherever, Mr. B. imagines it is fully determined in the old Testament, the Assembly at Westminster in their Confession of faith, chap. 25. Art. 4. allege but one text out of the old Testament, viz. Gen. 17. 7, 9. for admission of Infants by Baptism into the visible Church, and if Mr. M. their Champion in this Point expresse their minds, they deduce Infant-baptism from this principle, All Gods Commands and Institutions about the Sacraments of the Jews bind us as much as they did them in all things which belong to the substance of the Covenant, and were not accidental to them. Which how false it is, how contrary to the Tenet of Divines former and later, is shewed in my Examen, part. 3. Sect. 12. to which I may add the Assemblies confession of faith, chap. 19. Art. 3. All which ceremonial laws are now abrogated under the New Testament. And if all of them be abrogated, how can it be true that the law about circumcising Infants still binds? But Mr. M. in his Defence pag. 195. conceives his argument from the analogy of the Ceremonial law of Circumcision, which he calls his Analogical argument, pag. 201. good; on the contrary I deny any argument from analogy of the Ceremonial law good in meer positive ceremonies to prove thus it was in the old Testament, therefore it must be so in the new, And thus I argue,

1. Arguments from Analogy in meer positive Rites of the old Testament to make rules for observing meer positive Ceremonies of the new without institution gathered by precept or apostolical example or other declaration in the new Testament, do suppose that without Institution there may be par ratio, a like reason of the use of the one Ceremony as the other. But this is not true; For in positive Rites there is no reason for the use of this & not another thing in this manner to this end, by, or to persons, but the will of the appointer. For there is not any thing natural or moral in them, they have no general equity, they are supposed to be meerly not mixtly positive. Therefore where there is not the like Institution, there is not a like reason; and therefore this opinion of Analogy in positive Rites from a parity of reason without Institution in the new Testament is a meer fancy, and no good ground ground for an argument. To apply it to the case in hand, Circumcision and Baptism are meerly positive ordinances; Mr. B. cals them, p. 9. Positives about worship. Generally Sacraments by Divines are reckoned among meer positives; Chamier. Panstr. Cath. Tom. 4. l. 2. c. 12. Sect. 20. nulla vera ratio Sacramentorum potest consistere absque institutione. l. 7. c. 10. Sect. 1. nullum Sacramentum est à naturâ suâ, itaque prorsus ab institutione. The places are innumerable in Protestant writers and others to prove this; were it not that I find my Antagonists often forget what is elsewhere yielded by them, I should not say so much, the thing being so plain, that there is nothing natural or moral in them, because till they were appointed (which was thousands of years after the creation) they were not used, nor taken for signs of that which they signified. The reason then of Baptism and Circumcision is meerly Institution; if then there be not the like Institution, there is not the like reason. This argument is confirmed by Mr. M'. grant, Defence, pag. 92. 182. the formal reason of the Iews being circumcised was the Command of God, therefore there is not the like reason of Infant-baptism as of Infant-circumcision without the like command of God. But there is no expresse command for Infant-baptism as Mr. M. confesseth, therefore there is not par ratio, like reason of the one as the other.

Mr. Collings caveat for Proph. pag. 77. The equity of the ceremonial law is a dark notion to me, Christ is the equity of it. The Apostle cals it a shadow; the equity the of it is the substance of a shadow, and what that is I cannot divine besides Christ whose shadow it was. I always understood by the ceremonial laws those laws that concerned the worship of God in that time, which were wholly ceremonial and abolished being fulfilled in Christ.

2. I thus argue, If all the Laws and Commands about the Sacraments, positive Rites and Ceremonies of the Jews, be now abrogated, then no argument upon supposed analogy or parity of reason from the institution of those abrogated Rites can prove a binding rule to us about a meer positive Rite of the new Testament. For how can that make a binding rule to us about another meer positive Rite without any other Institution, which it self is abrogated? that which binds not at all, binds not about another thing, v. g. Baptism. But all the Laws and Commands about the Sacraments, positive Rites and Ceremonies of the Jews, are now abrogated, as is proved in my Examen, part. 3. sect. 12. and confessed by the Assembly Conf. of faith, chap. 19. art. 3. ergo none of them bind. This argument is confirmed by the words of Mr Cawdrey Sabbat. Redi v. part. 2. chap. 7. sect. 7. pag. 263. No ceremonial commandement can infer a moral commandement. The reason of our assertion is this, because partial commandments given to some Nation or persons (as the Ceremonial precepts were) cannot infer a general to oblige others, even all the world. Again, Sect. 10. pag. 276. First it is so in all other like special and ceremonial Commandements concerning dayes, whensoever the particular day was abrogated, the whole Commandement concerning that day was utterly abolished, the Law of Circumcision and of the Passeover is expired as well as the sacramental and ceremonial actions commanded by that law. This Mr. M. conceived he had prevented by supposing that in some commands about the Sacraments of the Iews, are some things that belong to the substance of the Covenant, and limiting his assertion to those. And when in my Examen pag. 115. I argued, that in no good sense it can be true that some of the commands of God about the Sacraments of the Jews contained things belonging to the substance of the Covenant, he tels us pag. 198, 199. of his Defence, that our Sacraments have the same substance with theirs, the same general nature, end, and use; which he makes in these things, theirs were seals of the Covenant, so ours, &c. But none of all these are to the purpose, his allegations tending onely to prove that our Sacraments and the Jews have the same general nature, which he calls substance, but not a word to shew that any command about them belonged to the substance of the Covenant, but as if he were angry, or did disdain a man should question his dictates, onely recites his meaning, and a passage or two of Protestant Authors, and never answers a word to my objection, Exam. pag. 115. that in no good sense could it be true that some commands of God about the Sacraments of the Jews did contain things belonging to the substance of the Covenant. Yea when I animadverted on that saying in his Sermon, the manner of administration of this Covenant was first by types, shadows and sacrifices, &c. It had been convenient to have named Circumcision, that it might not be conceived to belong to the substance of the Covenant: I reply, saith he, in his Defence, pag. 99. this is a very small quar-

rell, I added, &c. which supplies both Circumcision and other things. Which words in the plain construction of them do note, that Circumcision is comprehended in his &c. as belonging to the manner of administration, not to the substance of the Covenant. And yet pag. 187. he hath these words, I have already proved (that is no where, no not so much as in attempt) that Circumcision though a part of their administration did yet belong to the substance (meaning of the Covenant of grace) belong to it, I say, not as a part of it, but as a means of applying it. So uncertain and enterferring one another are his speeches about this thing. And yet this salve he adds is not true in any sense in which the word [substance] may be taken. For if he mean by [applying the Covenant] the signifying Christ to come, or the spiritual part promised, so Circumcision was a Type or shadow, and therefore according to his doctrine belonging to the administration that then was, not to the substance of the Covenant; if he mean by [applying the Conant] sealing or assuring the righteousnesse of faith to mens consciences, neither doth this make it of the substance of the Covenant, the Covenant being made before, and though Circumcision had never thus applyed it, the substance of the Covenant had been the same, yea the Covenant was the same in substance, according to his own doctrine, 2000. years before Circumcision did apply it to any; now I do not conceive any thing is to be said of the substance of a thing, when the thing may be entire without it; so that in this point I deprehend in Mr. M. speeches nothing but dictates, and those very uncertain and confused.

Secondly, saith he, pag. 198. When I say that Gods Commands about their Sacraments bind us, my meaning never was to assert, that the ritual part of their Sacraments do remain in the least particle, or that we are tyed to practise any of those things, but onely that there is a general and analogical nature, wherein the Sacraments of the Old and New Testament do agree, which he thus a little before expresseth, my meaning being plainly this, that all Gods Commands and Institutions about the Sacraments of the Jews as touching their general nature of being Sacraments and Seals of the Covenant, and as touching their use and end, do bind us in our Sacraments, because they are the same; whereto I reply, that Mr. M. supposeth the Commands of God are about the general nature of being Sacraments and Seals of the Covenant; which is a most vain conceit, there being no such Command or Institution, there's no such Command that Sacraments should have the general nature of Sacraments, or be Seals of the Covenant, or that they should signifie Christ and seal spiritual grace: these things they have from their nature, as he saith, which is the same without any Institution. The natures, essences and quiddities of things are eternal, invariable, and so come not under Command, which reacheth onely to things contingent, that may be done, or not be done. Did ever any wise man command to men that man should be a reasonable living body, or whitenesse a visible quality, or fatherhood a relation? And to say that God commands Sacraments to seal the Covenant, what is this but to say that God commands himself? For he alone by the Sacraments seals to us the Covenant or Promise of Christ, or grace by him. All Commands of God are concerning what the persons commanded should do, and they must needs be of particulars, not of generals, for actio est singularium, action is of singular persons and things. Though God may command man to think or acknowledge Sacraments to be Seals of the Covenant, yet it were a most vain thing for God to command that Sacraments should be Seals of the Covenant, or to have this general end or use, to seal or signifie Christ, and spiritual grace, to us, which belongs onely to himself to do by his declaration of his meaning in them. Such Commands as Mr. M. imagines, are a meer Chimæra, or dream of his brain. Secondly, the like is to be sayd concerning his conceit, that such Commands bind us in our Sacraments; For to bind us is to determine what is to be done, or not to be done by us; But such imagined Commands do not determine what is to be done or not to be done by us, and therefore cannot bind at all. Thirdly, when Mr. M. confesseth we are not tyed to the least particle of the ritual part or any practise of those things, he doth thereby acknowledge that all the Commands of God about the Sacraments of the Jews, which were all about rituals, are quite abrogated. For all Sacraments are Rites or Ceremonies, and to imagine a Command about a Sacrament, and not about a ritual part or Ceremony, is to imagine a Command about a Sacrament, which is not a Sacrament, Chamier. Panstr. Cathol. Tom. 4. lib. 1. chap. 8. Sect. 9.

arguing against Suarez the Jesuit, that dreamed of a Sacrament appointed in the law of nature for remedy of original sin, yet had no determined Ceremony, speaks thus; Sacramentum aliquod institutum à Deo, Ceremonia nulla determinata à Deo; quis capiat? Sacramentum instituì et Ceremoniam non determinari? Æquè dixerit loquutum esse deum, et tamen vocem nullam protulisse, nam æquè Sacramenti genus est Ceremonia et Vox loquutionis. Fourthly, were it supposed that there were some Commands about the general nature of Sacraments, binding us, though every particle and practice of the ritual part be abrogated, yet this would not reach Mr. M'. intent, which is to prove the Command of sealing Infants with the initial seal in force, binds. But to seal Infants with the initial seal in force is not of the general nature of Sacraments (for then it should belong to the after seal as well as the initiating) but after his own dictates of the special nature of the initial seal, and so Mr. M'. principle serves not for his purpose.

Thirdly, I argued thus, Examen. part. 2. sect. 8. If we may frame an addition to Gods worship from analogy or resemblance conceived by us between two ordinances, whereof one is quite taken away, without any Institution gathered by precept or Apostolical example, then a certain rule may be set down from Gods word how far a man may go in his conceived parity of reason equity or analogy, and where he must stay; For to use the words of the Author, whose book is intituled Gralla, if Christians must measure their worship according to the Institution and Ceremonies of the Jews, it is needfull that either they imitate them in all things, or else that some OEdipus resolve this riddle hitherto not resolved, to wit, what is moral and imitable in those Ceremonies, and what not. But out of Gods word no rule can be framed to resolve us how far we must or may not go in this conceived parity of reason, equity, or analogy, Ergo. The major is evinced from the perfection of Gods word, and the providence of God to have the consciences of his people rightly guided. The minor is proved by provoking those analogists that determine from the Commands about the Mosaical Rites and usages what must be done or may not be done about the meer positive worship and Church-order of the New Testament, to set down this rule out of Gods word. This argument is confirmed by experience in the controversie between Presbyterians and Independents, jarring about the extent of Infant-baptism, the Elders in new England, Mr. Hooker, (besides Mr. Firmin) Mr. Barslet, &c. restraining it to the Infants of members joined in a Church gathered after the congregational way as it is called. Mr. Cawdrey, Mr. Blake, Mr. Rutherfurd and others extend it farther, master B. Plain scripture proof, &c. chap. 29. part 1. pag. 101. to all whosoever they be, if they be at a believers dispose. And both sides pretend analogy, which being uncertain, Mr. Ball after much debate about this difference, as distrusting analogy, determines thus in his reply to the answer of the new England Elders to the 9. posit. posit. 3. and 4. pag. 38. But in whatsoever Circumcision and Baptism do agree or differ (which is as much as to say, whatsoever their analogy or resemblance be) we must look to the Institution (therefore the Institution of each Sacrament must be our rule in the use of them, not analogy, and analogy is not sufficient to guide us without Institution, and to shew that analogy serves not turn of it self to determine who are to be baptised, he adds) and neither stretch it wider, nor draw it narrower than the Lord hath made it, for he is the Institutor of the Sacraments according to his own good pleasure, and it is our part to learn of him, both to whom, how, and for what end the Sacraments are to be administred, how they agree, and wherein they differ, in all which we must affirm nothing but what God hath taught us, and as he hath taught us. Which how they cut the sinews of the argument from Circumcision to Baptism, without wrong to master Ball, is shewed in my Apology, Sect. 13. pag. 57.

Mr. M. in his Defence, pag. 83. Mr. Blake pag. 74, 75. of his answer to my letter, seem to deny, that Pædobaptists do frame an addition to Gods worship from such analogy, the contraty whereof is manifest from the passages cited before. But Mr. Blake over and above, pag. 75. sets down three cautions, which being observed, then this kind of arguing from analogy and proportion is without any such pretended danger. The insufficieny of which cautions being shewed in my Postscript to the Apology, Sect 17 pag. 143. I conceive it unnecessary to repeat my words, which the Reader may here find, and the vindication of them from what Mr. Blake opposeth in his vindiciæ fœderis, chap 42. follows in the next Section.

4. I argued, that if this way of making rules binding mens consciences in meer positive worship from analogy of the ceremonies or rites of the Old Testament, without institution in the New, be valid, then our Christian liberty from the Ceremonial Law is made void. For by this way of determining things as of Gods appointment, by our conceived analogy, all or a great part of the Ceremonial Law may be put on our necks under pretence of analogy, and so the fruit of Christs purchase of Christian liberty lost, and we in vain exhorted to stand fast in the liberty, wherewith Christ hath made us free. For as Chillingworth once told Knot the Jesuit, if the Pope be made sole Judge of Controversies, & infallible Expositor of Scripture, it will be in effect all one, as if he were allowed to make a new Scripture and Articles of faith; and tyranny may be introduced as well by arbitrary expounding, as well as by arbitrary making of laws: so in this case the bondage of Moses his law may be put on our necks, not onely by those that say, it binds in the letter, but also by those that say, Gods commands about the Sacraments of the Jews bind us in the analogy and proportion.

5. This argument hath strength from the sad experience the Church hath formerly and of late had in yielding to these reasonings from analogy, in the many Canons of Popes and Prelates, heavily loading Gods Church with rites and decrees about them, imposed from analogy of the Ceremonial Laws of Moses. The Constitutions of Popes, and Canons of Prelates, and the books of the maintainers of them expounding and defending their rituals, and liturgies, are full of them, to wit, rites about Priests, their Orders, Garments, Dues, Festivals, Sacraments, Votaries, Religious houses, and such like, drawn from Mosaical Laws. It is a common complaint of Protestants and Antiprelatists, that in imitation of the Jews, under pretence of analogy, a new named Judaism hath been brought into the Christian Church, and the reforming of them like Hercules his labour in clensing Augias his stable Some I have named in my Examen, part. 3. s. 9. more I might. In the Augustan Confession among the Articles of abuses, in the chapter of the Ecclesiastick power, its the general complaint, that Popish writers made a worship in the New Testament, like the Levitical. I may use Mr. Bs words in his Appendix to plain Scripture-proof, &c. pag. 302. And indeed if all that is not contrary to Scripture customs, and that mans vain wit can find reasonable from Scripture, must be admitted, and that upon equal authority with Scripture, if they do but take it for a tradition Apostolical. Then 1. it will set mans wit a work to make God a worship, or judge of the currantness of it, according to his reason; and one man will think it reasonable and another not. 2. And what a multitude of Ceremonies will this admit into the Church, to the burthening of mens consciences, and the polluting of Gods worship? Is not this the door that the body of Popish trash came in at? and the Argument that hardneth them in it, and hindereth their reformation to this day? And if you open this Gap, what a multitude of fopperies will rush in? Certainly by this means the Gospel hath been shadow'd and repressed; no stint either hath been or could be put to the inundation of such impositions, as long as liberty hath been given under pretence of analogy with Jewish rites to add to the worship and discipline of the new Testament: but it hath happened according to Austins Complaint, Epist. 119. to Ianuarius, that the state of the Jewish Church under Divine precepts hath been more tolerable, than the Christian burdened with humane presumptions. Ames Bell. enerv. tom. 3. lib. 1. cap. 8. th. 15. Romanenses in suis ceremoniis partim imitati sunt Gentes, partim Iudæos. th. 17. Ceremoniæ hujusmodi tollunt discrimen illud quod Deus voluit esse inter Iudæos & Christianos, quia padagogiam Iudaica similem habent.

6. If such Arguments from Analogy of Jewish rites abrogated may be valid to impose on mens consciences things about the worship of God, then Popes and Prelates are not only unblamable and justifiable in so doing, but also Protestants and Non-conformists will be unjustifiable in no yielding to them, but opposing them.

Mr. Church Divine warrant of Infant-bapt. pag. 49. in answer to these three latter reasons, speaks thus. Arguing from the Jewish types for the Substance of those shadowes, tends neither to an introducement of Judaism, nor yet to a justification of the Quisquilian toyes of the Papists: for it is neither arguing for the Ceremonies of the Jewish Church, nor for the fooleries of the Popish Synagogue, but for privileges which the faithful may expect by Christ, of which those ceremonies were prenunciative,

and are ceased, not because they were evil, but because we have the substance and truth of them, which is much better, non quia damnata, sed quia in melius mutata, August.

Answ. The objection was, Arguing from Circumcision for Baptism of infants, is the way to introduce Judaism, and to subject the Church again to the whole burthen of Jewish Ceremonies: Mr. Churches answer is, Arguing from the Jewish types for the substance of those shadowes, &c. Which answer is either meerly impertinent, or else he conceives arguing from Circumcision for Baptism of infants to be arguing from the Jewish type for the substance of the shadow. Which if he stand to, then he must make Circumcision the type, and Baptism of infants the substance of Circumcision, which sure is not according to Scripture, which makes Christ the body, of which the ceremonies, and among them Circumcision, was a shadow, Col. 2. 17. Nor doth Mr. Church prove any thing that he saith, but vainly dictate, when he makes arguing for infant Baptism from Circumcision to be arguing for privileges which the faithful may expect by Christ, and makes Circumcision a ceremony prenunciative of infant Baptism; against which, and the whole way of arguing from the use of Jewish rites to Christian from analogy without other institution, I further reason.

7. Protestant Divines do frequently deny the Jewish Sacraments to be types or figures of ours, Ames. Bellarm. ener. tom. 3. lib. 1. cap. 3. th. 11. Sacramenta externa sunt figuræ: figuras figurarum non instituit Deus, that they figured or represented Christ and his grace, not other Sacraments. Cap. 4. th. 13. Absque ulla ratione asseritur circumcisionem fuisse figuram baptismi: sacramentum non est signum visibilis sacramenti, sed invisibilis gratiæ. Therefore no right arguing by analogy from a Jewish rite to a Christian, which must suppose one to be a sign of the other, which is denyed by them. Mr. Church his speech is vain, That the Apostle argues from the Sacrifices in the Jewish Church, Rom. 12. 2. Heb. 13. 15. the offering of our selves, and the sacrificing of praises, which he calls the calves of the lips, &c. For 1. the Apostle doth not argue at all, but only allusively calls the presenting of our bodies, and giving thanks, a sacrifice, and the calves of our lips, by reason of some resemblance: which if it be arguing

In the use of every Metaphor there is arguing. 2. Were it arguing, yet it is not to the purpose, sith it is not any arguing from the use of one rite to another by analogy; but from a rite to a moral duty, to wit, devotion and thanksgiving. And when he adds, And from sealing the promise by the initial Sacrament to infants of Gods people aforetime, may the sealing of the promise by the initial Sacrament to infants of Christians in this Dispensation be rightly argued; sealing the promise, being the substance of Circumcision and benefit intended by it: and such arguing hath no colour of setting up Iudaism, for arguing for the thing signified tends not to the introducement of antiquated Ceremonies, he doth but write at random. For if the reason of his assertion be pertinent, then he must hold, that sealing the promise by the initial Sacrament to infants of Christians in this Dispensation is the substance of circumcision and benefit intended by it. But it is either unintelligible to me in what sense the sealing of the promise by baptism to infants of Christians can be the substance of circumcision, and the benefit intended by it, or else it is very absurd.

For then it will plainly follow, 1. That till infant baptism of Christians, Circumcision was without its substance, and the benefit intended by it. 2. He makes infant baptism the thing signified by circumcision, and the substance of circumcision, and so one ceremony signifies, and is the substance of another. But however we judge of his unintelligible or absurd arguing, it appears not by his answer but that the way of arguing by analogy from circumcision to baptism, that is from the regulating our practice in a rite of the New Testament by a rite of the Old, as obliging our consciences, may and doth introduce Judaism, and other evils, as was objected.

Mr. Blake answer to my Letter, pag. 97. seems to put by this arguing of mine, by advising me to read over Bellermine, and tell him then whether his arguments to lay the Sacraments of the Iews as low as types, and to extol the Sacraments of Christians as their antitypes, be not the self same that I and my party make use of to make so large a difference between circumcision and baptism. Protestants deny them indeed to be types, because they affirm they are in substance the same, our doctrine keeps us at a distance from Bellarmine, when you are in this reconciled to him, making the same differences As he doth between Circumcision and Baptism.

Answ. Had M. Blake directed me to the place in Bellarmine, he would have me seriously read over, I should have done it. But now not well knowing what place in Bellarmine he would have me read, and the reading him all over, and that seriously, being a very tedious task, I do not gratifie M. Blake in his request: But to what he saith, I reply, I put sundry differences between Circumcision and Baptism in my Examen, part 3. sect. 9. which Mr. M. his Defence doth not shew to be false. If they, or any other I make, be the same with Bellarmines, and yet true, Mr. Blake doth causelessly except against me for agreeing with Bellarmine; sure it is no matter of blame to agree with the Devil himself in the truth, it is no evill to believe there is one God, because the Devils do so, James 2.19. But how this should reconcile me to Bellarmine in that which I except against him, that he makes the Jews Sacraments Types of ours, is to me unintelligible. 2. Dr. Ames his words shew, that therefore he denied that Circumcision was the figure or type of Baptism, because a Sacrament is not a sign of a visible Sacrament, but of invisible grace, and that God hath not appointed figures of figures, or types of types, but types of some body or substance. The reason M. Blake gives why they are not types, because they are in substance the same, I know not what Protestants do give, whoever they be that do say so, in my apprehension, either they speak non-sense, or false. Sacraments being nothing but actions used to some ends, according to appointment, what substance they should have, but the actions and the use, I understand not. Now that the actions are not the same, it is manifest, cutting off a little skin, killing, roasting eating a lamb, being not the same with washing the body with water, and breaking and eating bread, and drinking wine; and for their end and use it is certain, however they may agree in some things, yet those being generals, and accompanied with more differences in their end and use both general and particular, it may be with greater reason denied, that they are the same in substance, than averred that they are: And arguments drawn from the one to the other concerning their use, are from things unlike, as much as like, yea denied by the users to be types, figures or signs the one of the other, and therefore cannot infer a parity in the thing questioned, without institution.

8. The ceremonies of the Jews are now not only mortal, but dead, buried, and deadly, according to the received Doctrine; yea, some condemn not only the use of them formally, but also materally; Rutherford Divine right of Church-Government, Introd. sect. 1. pag. 8. saith, It is a false ground of the Prelates, that Circumcision, a Passeover Lamb, and all the Jewish ceremonies, though with another end and intention than to shadow forth Christ to come in the flesh, are indifferent. Riv. on Exod, 20. Walaus are cited by Mr. Cawdrey, Sab. Red. part. 4. c. 1. pag. 527. to the same purpose; therefore not to be revived, no not in Effigie by following any rule about them, as by Analogie, or proportion between them and ours, without like institution binding us.

9. Arguments from Analogie in positive rites, without institution in the New Testament, except God declare either by general rule, or particular example he allowes such Arguments, are but humane inventions, as not being from the Spirit of God, (for that speaks only in the word about Doctrines, but from mans reason: But such are the Arguments drawn from a positive rite of the Old Testament now abrogated, to regulate our practice in the Sacraments of the New, as obliging our consciences. Therefore they are against the second Commandment in the Decalogue, our Saviours words Mat. 15. 9. In vain do they worship me, teaching for Doctrines mens Precepts; it is tyranny and usurpation in them that impose them, and violation of their liberty, forbidden by the Apostle, Col. 2. 20. in them that submit to them. Davenant exhort. to brotherly communion, ch. 1. tells us, that Luther wisely admoniseth us, that in matters surmounting the capacity of humane reason, we beware of Etymologies, Analogies, Consequences and Examples.

10. Arguments from conceived Analogy, are but Arguments from that which is like, not the same: But such are but weak things. Proportions are weak probations, said M. Rutherford, Due right of Presbyt. ch. 2. sect. 2. pag. 37. Chamier Panstr. Cath. tom. 1. lib. 9. c. 10. s. 47. Deinde sunt hujus generis conclusiones magis verisimiles quam necessariæ nisi nitantur Diserto Dei verbo. Oxford Convocat. reasons against the Covenant, pag. 27. The Arguments à minore and à majore are subject to many fallacies, and unless there be a parity of reason in every requisite respect between the things compared, will not hold good: They do illustrate rather than prove; and therefore they that assert that Pœdobaptism is fully determined in the old Testament, where they have nothing but analogy from Circumcision, and the Jewish Church state, what ever their confidence be, do but shew their weakness. I shall now examine what Master Blake saith in answer to my Arguments, and then what Mr. B. brings for his speech above recited.

SECT. III.

Mr. Blakes plea for arguments from analogy in meer positive rites of the old Testament, and Mr. Bs. speech about infant-admission as determined in it, are refelled.

MAster Blake Vindic. Fœderis ch. 42. sect. 2. speaking of me saith. And to this end he sets himself, First to dispute down all Arguments à pari, all whatsoever that are grounded on parity of reason, or analogy and proportion. This he speaks to in his Examen pag. 28. And I may here fitly refer the Reader to that which I have written chap. 10. sect. 4. *of my answer to M.*T. only in a few words viudicate it from his exceptions against it in his Apology, page 140.

Answ. It is not true, That I set my self to dispute down all arguments à pari, all whatsoever that are grounded on parity of reason, or analogy and proportion. For 1 in the place cited Examen pag. 28, 29. I do expresly level my arguing against arguments from analogy onely in positive instituted worship consisting in outward rites, such as Circumcision, Baptism, and the Lords Supper are, which have nothing moral or natural in them, but are in whole and part cetemonial. 2. I do dispute against all such arguments, not as brought to illustrate or confirm a thing otherwise proved from institution, but when they are brought to infer Divine institutions and commands obligatory of mens consciences.

I had said Exam. part. 2. ſ. 8. pag. 29. To me it is a dangerous principle upon which they go that ſo argue, to wit, that in meer poſitive things (ſuch as Circumciſion and Baptiſm are) we may frame an addition to Gods worſhip from analogy or reſemblance conceived by us between two ordinances, whereof one is quite taken away, without inſtitution gathered by precept or Apoſtolical example. Mr. Blake anſwer to my letter pag. 74 asks who thoſe be? I told him that he did Birth-privilege pag. 15. (I ſhould have ſaid 14) and I mean thoſe words, upon this ground (the Covenant) Infants under the Law were Circumciſed, and upon the ſame ground Infants are now to be Baptized: by the grounds of both Circumciſion and Baptiſm we inforce the Baptiſm of Infants: what is objected againſt one concludes againſt both: Circumciſion and Baptiſm are therefore by the Apoſtle promiſcuouſly taken; there being the ſame principal and main end of both. But he ſaith now Vindic. fœderis pag. 373. In my whole diſcourſe I did ſtudiouſly avoid arguments drawn barely from analogy, ſo that we may ſee how willing Mr. T. is to quarrel, and how loath to ſpeak truth:

Anſw. There was nothing but truth and fair arguing in my Apology pag. 142. For though Mr. B. denies his argument to be barely from the analogy between Circumciſion and Baptiſm, by which he hid inforce the Baptiſm of Infants, yet his arguing from the grounds of both, without inſtitution gathered by precept, or Apoſtolical example, is barely from analogy. Analogy or proportion I neither did imagine nor conceive Mr. B. made in the likeneſs, reſemblance, or evenneſs in the ritual part of Circumciſion and Baptiſm, that is the cutting off the skin, or the waſhing the body, as if he did argue, Infants had a skin cut off, therefore Infants are to be waſhed with water: But the analogy I conceive made by him between them, is in the ſuppoſed parity of reaſon, taken from (as he calls them) the grounds of both, excluding inſtitution, as my words ſhew, Examen p g. 29. and poſtſcript pag. 142. now this Mr. B. doth in the words cited, arguing from the Covenant, the ſame principal and main end of both, and thence dictating what is objected againſt one concludes againſt both, and aſſerting (though falſely) that Circumciſion and Baptiſm are therefore by the Apoſtle promiſcuouſly taken, and mentions not the distinct institution of Infant-baptism from Infantcircumcision, but as if he counted them the same, yea as if he meant them all one, imposeth on the Apostle as if he took Baptism and Circumcision promiscuously; wherein he argues from bare analogy (if not identity) between them without institution. And therefore I do still charge him with arguing according to that principle, which he saith, is as dangerous to him as to me. But he hath yet another shift.

In case, saith he, I had by analogy with Circumcision made proof of Infants title to Baptism, it would not have freed him from calumny, seeing it is no addition to worship, Baptism is worship as Circumcision was, this is but a demonstration of the latitude and extent of it.

Answ. There is no calumny in it. For he adds to Gods worship who doth make something worship of God, which he hath not appointed, as Non-Conformists did argue in their Negative argument against the Bishops Ceremonies from Deut. 4. 2. and though the Conformists did allow some addition to Gods worship in indifferent ceremonies, yet they agreed that to make any such addition as necessary binding the conscience, or part of Gods worship, specially when it is in things determined by institution, was unlawful. Now God hath appointed expresly disciples or believers in Christ to be baptized, Mat. 28. 19. Mark 16. 16. and no other, and this is his instituted worship; he then who baptizeth Infants who are not disciples or believers, and doth this as Gods worship, doth add to the worship having no institution gathered by precept or Apostolical example: nor doth he demonstrate, but devise a latitude and extent of the worship of his own head, or worships God after the precepts of men. As for the words, it is no addition to worship, Baptism is worship as Circumcision was, they seems to intimate, if there be any reason in them, than Infantbaptism is no addition to worship, because Baptism is worship as Circmcision was, which imports, that there could be no addition to worship in adding to Baptism, because it is worship as Circumcision was, whereas the reason is better to the contrary, that it being not commanded Infant-baptism is addition to worship, because Baptism is worship as circumcision was.

Mr. Blake goes on. It runs in Mr. T. his head that we go about to find not a Baptism-institution, but an Infant-baptism. institution, and that barely by analogy from Circumcision. This I confess were a wild undertaking.

Answ. Tis true, I did think Mr. M. in his Sermon pag. 44. when he said, Baptism was instituted long before (that command Mat. 28. 19.) to be the seal of the Covenant, had sought its institution from Gen. 17. and in his Defence I find not that which might take me off from that conceit. And it still runs in my head that Mr. Blake must either find not onely a Baptism-institution, but also an Infant-baptism-institution, or else we must yield Infant-baptism a corruption of that ordinance, whether it be called will-worship, or profaning it, or what other sin that corruption be termed. As he that will acquit prayer to Saints, or for the dead, from corruption, must find not onely an institution of prayer, but also of prayer to Saints and for the dead; he that will acquit Infant-communion, Bell-baptism, &c. from corruption, must find not onely an institution of the Communion and Baptism, but also of Infant-communion and Bell-baptism. I agree, that it were a wild undertaking to go about to find an institution of Infant-baptism, especially Gen. 17. because it is not to be found there, or in any other part of holy Scripture, and yet I think Pædobaptists do go about to find an institution of Infant-baptism, and that barely by analogy from Circumcision, as I shew before, and therefore by Mr. Blakes own censure their attempt is a wild undertaking.

He addes. Neither I nor Mr. T. to help me, can find an Infant-circumcision-institution. If he instances Gen. 17. 12. He that is eight dayes old shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations; I say that is no institution of Circumcision, but a subsequent directory for the particular day (according to the Pædagogy of those times) when the person was to be circumcised. The institution we find not with restriction to infancy, but in that latitude as to comprize males of any age, v. 10. This is my Covenant which ye shall keep between me and you, and thy seed after thee, every man-child among you shall be circumcised. Mr. T. knows very well, that by man-child onely the sex and not the growth is distingnished, omnis mas, as Junius and Tremellius, every male, as Aniſworth reads it; If that after directory had not followed, they might have circumciſed (as we baptize) infants upon any day at our beſt conveniences. This is plain in the text, and may be further cleared; if the inſtitution it ſelf be with that limit of time to the eighth day, then it had been their ſin (according to Mr. Tombs, the ſin of will-worſhip) in caſe that time through negligence had ſlipt, to have circumciſed them another day, as it was for a man unclean, or in a journey on the 14*th day of the firſt moneth (the time appointed for the paſſeover) to obſerve it any other day, till God appointed the* 14*th day of the ſecond moneth for ſuch occaſions,* Num. 9. 6, 7, 8. But that they had their liberty by vertue of the inſtitution to circumciſe any other day, when that was over, is clear in the text, and may be farther made plain, that Abraham ſo underſtood it by his circumciſing of Iſhmael at 13 years, which had been without warrant, had there been an inſtitution only for children of eight dayes; when God was diſpleaſed at Moſes his neglect of the Circumciſion of his Son, Exod. 4. 24. yet he was pleaſed that he was after circumciſed v. 26. So that as there was an inſtitution in Old-Teſtament-times, for all males in Covenant without difference of age; ſo there is in New-Teſtament times an inſtitution of Baptiſm for all in Covenant without difference of age or ſex.

Anſw. Mr. Blake ſaith, neither he nor I to help him can find an Infant-circumciſion-inſtitution, and yet he himſelf finds, Gen. 17. 10. an inſtitution in that latitude, as to comprize males of any age: if there be an inſtitution to circumciſe males of any age, then there is an inſtitution to circumciſe male infants, who are of ſome age. And therefore it ſeems to me a wild ſpeech of Mr. B. to deny the finding of an inſtitution of Infant-circumciſion, when he himſelf ſets down the inſtitution of it within a few lines of thoſe words. But he conceives it no inſtitution of circumciſion Gen. 12. 10. To which I ſay, Be it ſubſequent directory, or what ever elſe he will call it, Mr. Blake might eaſily perceive by my words, Examen pag. 28, 29. and elſewhere, I take the word inſtitution for any appointment by precept, command or example approved, either expreſs, or gathered by good conſequence; if any of theſe wayes an inſtitution of Infant-baptiſm can be ſhewed out of the New Testament without the analogy of Circumcision, I should not make any doubt of it, and therefore it is but unnecessary wrangling which he useth about the word [institution]. Let him shew any subsequent directory for Infant-baptism, as is for Infant-circumcision without the analogy of Circumcision, and I am satisfied. Yet to shew the vanity of his speeches and arguings I shall a little scanne them. He denies an institution of Infant-circumcision, Gen. 17. 10. he saith, it is but a subsequent directory for the particular day.

Answ. Ausonius Popma de differ. verborum l. 3. Institutiones sunt praecepta, quibus docentur homines atque instituuntur. In this general acception a directory is an institution. But were it taken strictly for a command establishing that rite, surely v. 12. not onely the particular day was appointed, but the person also, to wit, the Infant of eight dayes old among Abrahams people, and all the verses 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. together are termed sanctio circumcisionis, by Parens in his Commentary. But we find not the institution with restriction to Infancy, saith Mr. Blake. Ans. True, nor did I ever say the institution was restrained to Infancy, or that there was an institution only for children of eight dayes, nor do I deny that the precept Gen. 17. 10. was more general than that it should be restrained to the eighth day: yet v. 12. the circumcising of infants was limited to the eighth day. Mr. Cawdrey Sabb. rediv. part. 1. pag. 135. For some particular occasions of worship, God was pleased of old to determine some time exclusively, as the eighth day from the birth of a child for Circumcision, and the eighth day for the sacrificing of the firstling males of cattel, neither sooner nor later. Nor do there want those among Protestant Divines, who make it unlawful to do it before or after but will-worship, except in cases of necessity, as in the wilderness, &c. in which case the rule holds, God will have mercy and not sacrifice, and the thing might be done afterwards, as in the circumcision of those who were born in time of their travel in the wilderness. But to have altered the time of a mans own motion, without such neeessity. had been will-worship, as it was charged on Jeroboam 1 Kings 12. 33. that he sacrificed in the moneth he had devised of his own heart. What Mr. Blake saith, there is in the New-Testament-times an institution of baptism for all in Covenant, without difference of age or sex, is false, except by being in Covenant he understand, not being in Covenant by Gods promiſe onely, or others faith, or undertaking for them, but by their own act of Covenanting, that is engaging themſelves in their own perſons by their own act to be Chriſts Diſciples or believers in him, there being no inſtitution in the New Teſtament times of baptizing any other than Diſciples or Believers in Chriſt. Mr. Blake adds. I inſtanced in the Apoſtles argument from analogy for Miniſters maintenance, 1 Cor. 9.9. 1 Tim. 5. 18. Mr. Tombs anſwers, The Apoſtle doth not by bare analogy conclude Miniſters maintenance, but from the Lords ordinance; He does conlude it then (by his confeſſion) from analogy, though not barely from analogy. Neither have any one of Mr. Ts Antagoniſts concluded Infant baptiſm barely from analogy of Circumciſion. There are other arguments which wait for his anſwer, ſo that this inſtance ſtands.

Anſw. My Confeſſion was not, that the Apoſtle argued from any ſuch analogy as Pædobaptiſts conclude Infants-baptiſm from, to wit, the rule of Circumciſion, thus, Circumciſion was appointed to Infants in Covenant, therefore Baptiſm is appointed to Infants in Covenant, they having the ſame main and principle end to ſeal the Covenant of grace (which is Mr. Blakes own arguing) which is from a ceremonial rite of the Old Teſtament to a ceremonial rite of the New, without precept or example of Chriſt or his Apoſtles. For 1. The Apoſtles argument 1 Cor. 9. 9. ſeems not to me to be from analogy, but a teſtimony explained. So Mr. Dicſon in his Com. Arg. 3. a teſtimonio legis de pabulo bovi trituranti dando: quod oſtendit dictum eſſe in gratiam omnium laborantium in aliorum uſum, potiſſimum in miniſterio. Diodati, The end of Gods Law is not to ſhew how cattel ſhould be fed, but to command equity to be uſed in juſt rewarding of thoſe who labour for us. Mr. Blake himſelf vindic. fœderis pag. 406. Thirdly he argues from the command of the Law: 2. If it be from any analogy, it is in things that have a parity of equity, and ſo it is in moral things, which are perpetual, not

To Mr. Fiſher, urging 1 Cor. 9. 10. for an equity of the Ceremonial Law to prove Chriſtmas, Mr. Collings Caveat p. 77. ſaith. The Apoſtle indeed 1 Cor. 9. 10. urgeth the equity of that piece of the Law, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the Oxe, &c. but I never took that for a piece of the Ceremonial, but for a piece of the Judicial Law.

not in meer positive rites. 3. It is an analogy which the Apostle delivered to us, not analogy made by men not guided by an infallible spirit, as is the inference of Pædobaptism from Circumcision, and therefore is not of force to oblige mens consciences. I have shewed before that the Pædobaptists main argument is barely from such analogy, and for other arguments waiting for mine answer, either they are answered before sufficiently, or God assisting, will have answer in this Review. Mr. Blakes arguments vindic. fœde. ch. 43. sect. 1. require no longer answer. The first is the same with Mr. Bs. second. And the Major is to be denied, if by [unless order be given to the contrary] be meant of order given to the contrary in formal positive terms, such as this, Thou shalt not baptize Infants. If it be meant of order given to the contrary, either in expres formal prohibitive terms, or equipollent, the Minor is to be denied.

In the second the Major is to be denyed, and in like manner the third, distinguishing the term [holy] In the fourth both the Major and the Minor, and so likewise the fifth, explaining the term [church privileges] In the sixth the Major is to be denyed if understood of the invisible Kingdom of God only, if of the visible, the Minor is to be denyed: In the other two additionals, the Major if universal is to be denyed, and the Minor is true of infants of unbelievers as well as believers.

And for the last Argument the matter is as easily answered as the form. For the Major, Those that are to be saved are to be added to the Church by baptism, Acts 2.47. is to be limited by the text v. 41. thus [when they willingly receive the word] If no larger answer be given Mr. B. to these arguments, yet this will be enough to shew they are without much difficulty answerable. Mr. Bs. proofs likewise, God assisting, shall have fuller answer than they deserve, though were it not for his own and others conceits of his writings for infant-baptism, I should think it lost time to bestow it in an exact examination of his inconsiderable dictates.

As for the present instance of M. B. of the Apostles arguing from analogy, he may see it now fallen, and so likewise the next, of which he speaks thus.

I instanced in the Apostles arguing 1 Cor. 10. 16, 17. he makes it good that partaking together of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, we are made one Eccleſiaſtical body, by way of Analogy with the like in the ſacrifices of the Jews, yea in the ſacrifices of the Gentiles; to which Mr. T. ſaies, this argument is to preve, that they which profeſs Chriſt may not partake of the things of Idols. From this general truth, that they which join in the ſervice of any God, they hold Communion with that God, and are one with thoſe that worſhip that God; this the Apoſtle proves by inſtances in the Chriſtian and Jewiſh ſervices. So that this argument is from a general truth proved by induction of inſtances. Mr. T. miſtakes, the Apoſtle takes no ſuch general truth for granted, but affirms that we are one body at the Lords table, which he firſt proves by analogy in the inſtances mentioned, and then concludes thence againſt communion with Idols; That which the Apoſtle diſputes he laies down, but we have not theſe words in the text.

Lords

Anſw. There is no miſtake in my Analyſis of the Apoſtles words. He had v. 14. warned them of Idolatry, to wit in going with the Infidels to their Idol feaſts, and to make them more heedful of what he ſaid he prefaceth, v. 19. And then argues: not thus, they that partake of the Lords Supper are made one Eccleſiaſtical body by way of analogy with the like in the ſacrifices of the Jews, yea in the ſacrifices of the Gentiles; For then the concluſion to be proved ſhould be, we are one body Eccleſiaſtical at the Lords table, and the ſacrifices of the Gentiles ſhould be the medium to prove it, which had been unfit for ſuch a proof, nor in any paſſage of the Apoſtle is uſed to that end. For how inept an Argument had this been, the Gentiles in their ſacrifices had communion with the Idol, therefore they that partake of the Lords Supper are made one body Eccleſiaſtical? Nor would the proof be much otherwiſe if it were thus (as Mr. Blake makes it) we are one body Eccleſiaſtical who partake of the Lords Supper, therefore in Gentile ſacrifices we communicate with Idols. And me thinks there is a circle in this proof, by the Gentiles ſacrifices to prove we are one body Eccleſiaſtical in the Lords Supper, and thence to prove we communicate with Idols in Gentile ſacrifices. But the ſcope of the Apoſtle appears by the words, v. 14. and v. 19, 20, 21. evidently to be the diſſwading them from the Idol-feaſts on their ſacrifices, becauſe they had therein fellowſhip with the Idol, did partake of its cup and table, and so with Devils v. 20, 21. which had been an argument inconcludent, were it not thus made, To have fellowship with the Idol is evil to be avoided by Christians, as being Communion with Devils. But to partake of the thing offered to Idols is to have fellowship with the Idol. Ergo, The Minor, which alone is proved, rests on this general maxim, They have fellowship with a true or supposed Deity, who partake of his service, and this the Apostle proves to be true by the instances of the Christians and the Israelites, v. 16, 17, 18. I know sundry Protestant Expositors make the argument to be thus, Ye may not partake of the Idol banquets, because ye are partakers of the Lords supper. But I conceive this not right: For v. 16, 17. the Apostles medium is not from the matter of fact what they did, or duty what they were to do, but from the tendence of their action in common construction and interpretation of the end and use of such actions, which did shew they had Communion in the body of Christ. Which is clearly proved from v. 18. where the Apostle allegeth the Israelites partaking of their altar to the same purpose to which he had used the former, v. 16, 17. now the Christians neither did nor were to partake then of the Jewish altar, and it is not a reason from their fact or duty, but onely from that wherein Christians breaking bread, Jews and Gentiles eating of their sacrifices did agree, that these actions testified their fellowship with that Lord for whom these services were performed. And therefore by Piscator, Dickson, and others, the argument is thus framed, Israelites by eating of the sacrifices testified they were professors and partakers of the Jewish religion, therefore they that eat of Idol sacrifices, they testify that they Communicate with Idolaters in their idolatry: Yea Mr. Blake himself in his answer to my Letter pag. 74. doth plainly acknowledge the Apostles argument to be from a general maxim common to all religious service, when he saith, yea he further makes it good (that which he concluded before) in the words following, even from the Heathen, it is of the nature of religious worship, whether true or false, to make those of one body (as I may say) religious that partake of them. Whence it is apparent that it is not an argument to prove any duty in a Christian rite of the New Testament from the ceremonial law, sith it is by his own confession even from the Gentiles sactifices, which sure by analogy or resemblance being altogether forbidden, cannot make us a rule in Christian meer positive worship, and therefore there is no such argument in the Apostles speech from analogy, as I oppugn.

Mr. Blake yet adds. I instanced in Christs defence of his disciples from the charge of the Pharisees, Mat. 12. 3, 4. by analogy and proportion of the like in David. Mr. T. answers, that is only an instance to prove that sacrifice must give place to mercy, a ceremonial to a moral duty, not an argument from meer analogy or resemblance of things different. He proves that truth then by analogy, if not by meer analogy, and he tells us of no other thing that is joined to help it out, and make it an argument compleat. To these, abundance more might be added.

Answ. It is enough to shew this instance impertinent, in that it is not from such analogy as is used to prove Infant-baptism by Infant-circumcision; Thus it was in a rite in the old Testament upon this ground, Ergo, it must be so in a rite of the New Testament, because the same pretended ground remains other than Gods command or institution: which I called meer analogy in meer positives without a distinct command about each rite. As for my exposition it was right, that Christ allegeth Davids fact as an instance, that ceremonials give place to morals, and sacrifice to mercy, as appears by v. 7. And hence in giving rules about exposition of the Decalogue usually from this passage a rule is drawn, that ceremonials give place to morals, sacrifice to mercy. Sure I am, neither here, nor any where else in Scripture is there found such an argument as this, Thus it was in a ceremony of Moses Law, therfore thus is must be in a rite or ceremony of the New Testament.

Mr. Blake proceeds thus. Upon Mr. T. his desire of rules how farre we may go in this parity of reason, and himself allowing this way of reasoning in morals, which in many cases might be singularly usefull and very helpful in this particular; he is yet silent, we may then keep our way of reasoning without rules, as well as he his; I yet gave in mine, which he epitomizes, and gives in to the Reader by the halves. To whom in the first place I might apply that of the Poet, Carpere vel noli nostra, vel ede tua.

Answ. There was no reason I should set down rules about reasoning from analogy in morals, how usefull soever they might be. For 1. though I said in my Examen pag. 28. for that which is natural or moral in worship an institution or command in the old Testament is allowed as obligatory to Christians, yet I did not say that in morals a man may reason as Pædobaptists reason in ceremonials, This was a duty or sin in the Old Testament, therefore another thing is a duty or sin in the New Testament (which was not in the old also) by imagined parity of reason, as my words Postscript sect. 17. import. 2 Neither is it necessary to set down any other rules than what either Logicians set down in the Topicks about arguments à comparatis, or Divines give in the expounding the Decalogue. 3. If any more were requisite, yet it would have been to draw me into a dispute on the by, to fall on that point in that place. 4. If it had been fit for me to do it, yet at that time I had no leisure, the Postscript being written when my Apology was almost printed, as I say in the Postscript sect. 1. which is also a reason why I did not set down all his words about his rules in my Postscript sect. 17. which he calls epitomizing of them, and giving in to the Reader by halves, when the rules were as fully delivered by me as himself, and only the applications and amplifications omitted, nor doth he shew wherein I have omitted any thing of the strength of them. But whereas Mr. Blake saith, he may keep up his way of reasoning without rules, as well as I mine, he doth untruly suggest that I keep up any way of reasoning without rules; my way of reasoning is such as the Apostle used 1 Cor. 11. 23. and best Divines count certain, to take that onely as of Gods appointment in meer positive ceremonies of the New Testament, which is gathered by Christ or the Apostles, precept or example, in the New Testament. Pareus Comment. in Mat. 26. 26. quicquid igitur Dominus Jesus hic instituit atque præcepit necessariò est observandum, nec omittendum, quicquid non instituit nec præcepit non est quasi necessarium huic sacramento obtrudendum sed rejiciendum. Hinc videant illi qui fractionem panis à Domino institutam omittunt vel damnant. Which doubtless is as true concerning Baptism, Mat. 28. 19. Jus Divinum Eccl. regiminis by London Ministers, part. 2. ch. 10 pag. 99. The power of Church government is not natural but positive. Therefore all such power claimed or exercised without such positive grant is meerly sine titulo, & ipso facto null and void. And for his way of reasoning without rules, to wit, to argue thus, It was so in a meer positive ceremony of the old Testament now abolished upon this conceived reason, Ergo, it must be in like sort in another ceremony of the new Testament, which is conceived to have in part the same use, if he kept it up, it will condemn the reformation of many Popish and Prelatical ceremonies, and justifie the retaining of them.

The thing I required in my Examen pag. 29. was this, I desire any learned man to set me down a rule from Gods Word, how far I may go in my conceived parity of reason, equity or analogy (to wit, in meer positive things to frame an addition to Gods worship from analogy or resemblance conceived by us between two ordinances, whereof one is taken away, without any institution gathered by precept or Apostolical example) and where I must stay; when it will be superstition and wil-worship, when not, when my conscience may be satisfied, when not.

Mr. Blake, Vindic. fœd. pag. 375. saies of me. Take them as he layes them down Apolog. pag. 142. 1. When parity of reason or analogy doth not institute any piece of worship, or the least part of the service of God, but onely help to a right understanding of the nature, use and extent of that which is instituted. 2. When in our reasoning from analogy for the right understanding of any institution or ordinance, we do not rest solely on the analogy with other commands, but have our further reason for confirmation. 3. When the analogy holds full proportion in that for which it is brought, so that nothing can fairly be brought against the one, but may be also concluded against the other. Against these rules he takes three exceptions, 1. That never a one of these rules is brought out of Gods Word, for there is neither declaration of such rule, nor example to prove it. The first rule I thus illustrated, Ainsw. pag. 76. You find nothing in Scripture for excommunication of women, yet we find in the old Testament Miriam shut out of the Camp, Num. 12. 14. and in all penalties for transgression, in Scriptures we find no regard had of distinction of sex, and by consequence it is not to be denied, that women offending are within this censure. Mr. T. magisterially answers, The proving of excommunicating of women from Miriams shutting out of the Camp, Num. 12. 14 is not a Scripture Collection, but a meer device of men. If there be no such thing as excommunication in the New Testament (as Mr. T. saies pag. 92. and unsaies pag. 93.) then I confess what he saies, but if there be such an institution (which here is not a time to examine, as I am sure there is of Baptism) then it may be evinced from that place that it reacheth to both sexes. Mr. T. would have us to proceed by alterable rules of prudence. This prudence as may be inferred, is to reach to both sexes.

Answ. My answer notwithstanding this reply stands good. For 1. He brings not any declaration or example where the Holy Ghost argues thus, Excommunication extends to women, because Miriam was shut out of the Camp, Num. 12. 14. It is true, the Anti-Erastians, as Rutherfurd Divine right of Church-govern. ment, c. 7. q. 3. attempt to prove that separating from the congregation for leprosie typified Christian excommunication, and thence Mr. Blake would prove Excommunication of women. But neither is any other than an humane device, it cannot be proved, that onely scandalous sin answers to leprosie; original sin or sins of thoughts may as well be conceived to be signified by it, and separating from the congregation may as well typifie exclusion from heaven, as removal from the visible Church, yea more agreeable to the end, sith putting out of the Camp was not for amendment as excommunication was. That excommunication which the Scripture in the New Testament mentions as belonging to Christians, I grant is to be of women as well as men, but we need not run to the Old Testament to prove it, 1 Cor. 5. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. 2 Thess. 3. 6. 14. 2 Tim. 3. 5. prove it. If that Rev. 2. 20. belong to excommunication, a woman is in expres terms made liable to it. I agree with Mr. Blake, In all penalties for transgression in Scripture we find no regard had of distinction of sexe, and by consequence it is not to be denied, that women offending are within this censure: so that by his own grant we need not run to analogy from ejecting the Leper, to prove excommunicating of women. It is not true, that I say and unsay: my words are plain, distinguishing juridical Excommunication of superious from social, granting this latter, though demurring about the former. I have shewed my meaning plainly in the Addition of my Apology sect. 17. 19. in my letter to Mr. Robert Baillee of Scotland; what Mr. Blake holds in this point I cannot well tell. Some conference I had with him in London made me doubtful whether he were not somewhat of Erastus his judgement in this point; here he doth not say there is an institution of Excommunication as he is sure there is of Baptism. But I deny if there be an institution of excommunition that it may be evinced from Num. 12. 14. that it reacheth both sexes, much less that any precept may be thence gathered as obliging Christians in the use of excommunication: If there were a rule thence obliging, it would follow that excommunication is to be but seven dayes, and then the excommunicate to be received in again. What I said of ordering things by alterable rules of prudence is expressely meant of things concerning which we have not precise direction from Gods Word, which I suppose Mr. Blake will not deny to be true, though he is pleased to mention it, as if it were mine and not his tenent.

He saith further. I brought an instance not for a proof of it self, but illustration of another proof from Divines arguing against nonresidence from Ezek. 44. 8. This (he saies) is good after other arguments, but of it self is not convincing. Such arguments then are of validity when aright placed and marshalled orderly, I hope this of mine then is of force, it is not in the van but brings up the rear.

Answ. What I acknowledged, that the argument was good after other arguments, I mean to illustrate, not to prove, nor would I deny an argument from Circumcision of infants good to illustrate Baptism of infants, if it were before proved from precept or Apostolical example, manifested in expres assertion, or deduced by good consequences. But the most of Pædobaptists make the argument from Circumcision their Achilles, and by their texts, and confession of a Committee of them, it was the main, if not the onely argument in the Assembly. Mr. Bs arguments he puts in the van are no better, as is briefly shewed, Postscript, sect. 2. &c. Yet for the text Ezek. 44. 8. upon better consideration it seems not fit to illustrate a proof against nonresidence, sith the sin there charged was not leaving the Temple themselves, but admitting at the will of the Prince other than of the Tribe of Levi to be in Gods sanctuary, Num. 18. 4. yea even the uncircumcised, and thereby Gods holy things were profaned, and idolatry brought in. And therefore the observation of the New Annot. of the second edition is, that unlawful Ministers, false in doctrine, foul in life, are not to be admitted but ejected. But for Mr. Blakes rule, there is no one text brought out of Gods Word to prove it, that we may argue from analogy, so as to infer a duty from an use in meer positive worship of the Old Testament now abolished in the use of a rite of the New, without any other precept in the New Testament, when we do not institute thence any piece of worship, or the least part of the service of God, but onely make it a help to a right understanding of the nature, use and extent of that which is instituted. Yea this rule seems to me to speak inconsistencies, For he supposeth that analogy may not institute any piece of worship, or the least part of the service of God, yet allows direction from analogy in the nature, extent and use of that which is instituted; whereas the nature, use and extent being the chief part, or the very service it self, and are determined in the institution Mat. 28.19. if we may take direction from our conceived analogy in them, we may not onely institute a piece of worship, or the least part of the service of God (which Mr. Blake denies) but also the main part, yea the very service it self, which hath no greater parts than the nature, use and extent. So that Mr. Blakes first rule, denying the use of analogy in the least part of Gods service, yet allowing it in the nature, use and extent of that which is instituted, is but a rule destroying in one part, what is built up in the other.

He adds further. The second and third rules he saies are not set down from any declaration or example in the Scripture. I desire him at his leisure to look again, and he may see the second rule confirmed from the Apostles way of thus arguing, 1 Cor. 9. and the Lord Christs Mat. 12. The third is confirmed by that reasoning of Christ with the Pharisees before mentioned, compared with our reasoning with Antipædobaptists.

Answ. I have looked again, and I say still these are impertinently alleged by Mr. B. as being not one of them from such analogy as Mr. B. maintaines and I deny, as I have before shewed, and for Antipædobaptists reasonings, they are the faireſt that can be, keeping close to the confessed institution of Christ, and practice of the Apostles, and there is this objection which is fairly brought against Infant-baptism, that there is no command or example for it in Scripture, which cannot be brought against Infant circumcision, and for the hypotheses of Pædobaptists from the Covenant, seal, succession to circumcision, &c. there is not one of them true, as God willing shall be shewed in the process of this Review.

Mr. Blake goes on, His second exception is, These are very uncertain. For no reason is given, why they may not make a new worship, who may by their analogy extend it beyond the institution in the New Testament. This very well answers Mr. T. his ingenuity, to which I may reply by way of retortion, why may not Mr. T. as well deny an institution and destroy it, as well as curtail that which is instituted? we shall be able to make it good, that he curtails Christs institution in the New Testament, cutting off many Churchmembers in Covenant; he shall never be able to prove that we extend it by analogy or otherwise beyond the institution.

Answ. That exception of mine did very well agree with ingenuity, and it might have stood better with Mr. Bs. ingenuity, to have taken the exception as sufficient to invalidate his rule, than to have made this taunting reply. The answer had no fault, but that it was a little more modest than might have stood with truth. For 1. I might have said truly, not onely that no reason is given, but also that no reason can be given, why they may not make a new worship, who may by their analogy extend it beyond the institution in the New Testament. For their analogy being a meer humane invention, if they have authority to enlarge the ordinance, they have authority to make a new worship; the Papists if they have authority to appoint Baptizing of bells, they have authority to appoint the Sign of the Cross, for the same end for which baptism was; the same authority which serves for the one, serves for the other. Yea, if the analogy direct in the nature, use and extent of an instituted worship, what doth it else but make a new worship? And that it may be seen how dangerous it is to follow Mr. Blakes rule, I would have it considered how we shall avoid justifying the Popish mass, if we stick to it. He allows analogy in the understanding of the nature or use of an instituted worship, the Lords Supper is an instituted worship, and it is conceived it succeeds the Passeover, as Baptism Circumcision; if then by the analogy of Circumcision we may gather the use of Baptism, we may in like manner from the analogy of the Passeover, gather the use of the Louds Supper. It is certain from the Apostles words, 1 Cor. 5.7. For Christ our Passeover is sacrificed for us, that the Passeover was a sacrifice, crifice, and such a sacrifice as resembled Christ, and therefore propitiatory; and then by analogy the use of the Lords Supper is so too, which is the chief point whereby the popish mass is established. The very self same rule will prove the Ministers of the Gospel, who succeed the Priests of the Law, and by analogy from whom, according to Mr. Blake, the Apostle reasoneth, 1 Cor. 9. 13, 14. will be proved sacrificing Priests, if as Mr. Blake saith, analogy may direct us in the use of an instituted ordinance. 2. I say Mr. Blake doth by his analogy according to his first rule, allow the making a new worship: For the worship is not the same, but a new worship, when though the same element be used, yet the nature, use and extent of is otherwise than the institution, as though the Pharisees used water according to the tradition of the Elders, Mark 7. which is the element used in Baptism, yet their washing their hands was another worship than Christian Baptism, because the nature, use and extent of it, was other than the institution of Baptism: So likewise though water be retained in their so called Infant-baptism, yet it being neither used in the manner appointed by Christ, to wit, by dipping, but by sprinkling- or powring, nor on the subject appointed by Christ to be baptized, to wit, disciples or believers in him, but on Infants, who are not such, nor to the end Christ appointed, that is, to testifie by that act their owning Christ for their Lord, their dying to sin, and rising to newness of life, but onely to seal the Covenant of Grace, I say a new worship is made in their Infant-watering, as there was of old a new worship made in Infant-communion, and is at this day in the Popish mass, and Baptizing of bells. As for Mr. Blakes retortion, I do grant Mr. T. may as well deny an institution, and destroy as well as curtail that which is instituted. But that by denying Infants visible Churchmembership in the Christian Church of the New Testament, and their being in Covenant, and right thereby to Baptism, I curtail Christs institution, I do then expect he will be able to make good, when he proves the snow black and the crow white. And whether I prove that by analogy or some other way Baptism is extended beyond the institution in Infant-baptism, I leave it to the Reader to judge.

Mr. Blake goes on thus. The second rule (he saies) overthrows all, for if we may not rest solely on the analogy, why at all?

How

How then is that collection from Ezek. 44. 8. good, after other arguments against non-residence? neither do I say, that it may not go alone, but it will hardly go alone, but other arguments will be found to second it, in which I also gave instances.

Answ. 1. The collection from Ezek. 44. 8. is good to illustrate, not to rest on as a proof, yet with the correction of my speech as above. 2. I did not charge him that he said it may not go alone, nor is it to the purpose which he tells us that he said analogy will hardly go alone. But this I say, His second rule is that reasoning from analogy holds when we do not rest solely on the analogy with other commands, but have our further reason for confirmation, which doth plainly intimate that we may not rest solely on it. Now I argue, if it be a good proof, we may rest solely on it; For one good proof is enough for a man to rest upon, though more arguments make it clearer. If then we may not rest solely on analogy with other commands (as Mr. Blakes words intimate) then it is not a sufficient proof. To which in Mr. Blakes words there is no reply, nor hath he avoided my objection that his second rule overthrows what he contends for, the validity of his analogical arguments impugned by me.

Mr. Blake of me. He adds, this is enough to shew that analogy hath no strength, that indeed it doth not onely illustrate, connot prove, what is an argument by analogy, but an argument à simili? I had thought there had been much difference between these two kinds of arguments à pari & à simili; pari à similibus omninò differunt, saith Scheibler in his Topicks. I may send him to his Dictionary to see whether one be not Englished equal or even, and the other like or semblable. I may send him to the Predicaments whether one be not in Quantity, the other in Quality, and demand of him whether there be magis & minus par & æquale, as there is magis & minus simile? And to consult with the Topicks whether that be not one head from which they draw arguments which in their judgement are valid: Hath Mr. T. never read de paribus idem est judicium? quod valet in re pari valet etiam in compari. I think he never read de similibus idem est judicium: quod valet in simili valet etiam in re assimilata. If Mr. T. be agreed we will refer it to the Common Law, whether this way of reasoning will hold or no; if it fail, we shall need no other Levellers to take down that art, it will fall of it self, they have scarce any other way of arguing. But if these onely illustrate (which I think no Logician will say) yet it is here sufficient, There was an institution of Circumcision and there is of Baptism; neither of these needs proof being not in controversie between us and our adversaries. The right subject of Baptism onely is enquired after; the institution hath Infants we say within the verge, and are not excluded from it; For this we have our arguments which from the initiating sacrament of the Iews we onely illustrate.

Answ. It seems Mr. Blake thought he had me here at a lift, and therefore after a message from him by words of mouth some years since, intimating he took my speech to be absurd, that an argument from analogy is but an argument à simili, he bestirs himself in this manner in this his book. But to stop him in his career. He tells me he had thought there had been much difference between these two kinds of arguments à pari & simili: which may be true, and yet my speech true also, what is an argument by analogy (I did not say à pari) but an argument à simili? He tells me, paria à similibus omninò differunt, saith Scheibler in his Topicks. Answ. It is true, Scheibler Top. c. 23. q. 2. saith so, But withal he tells us, that Titelman comprehends paria sub similibus, & Hunnæus, similium & parium aut nullum aut perexile discrimen esse ait, idq; propterea, quia eadem exempla referantur ad similia & paria. Yea even Scheibler himself c. 23. saith, Ad similia etiam pertinent parabola & analogia; analogia est similitudo composita trium vel quatuor terminorum. Keckerm. syst. log. lib. 3. c. 6. sequitur locus qui est à similitudine composita, qua dicitur analogia seu proportio. Burgersdicius Instit. log. l. 2. c. 18. Intelligitur hoc loco non simplex sed composita similitudo sive analogia. And in the same place hath this passage even of analogy. Argumenta ex locis similium petita magis illustrant quàm probant, & ut ait Molinæus afferunt magis dissentiendi puderem quàm assentiendi necessitatem. Georg. Dunæus. Comment. in Rami Dialecti. lib. 1. c. 21. Comparatio similium vulgatè dicitur, id est similitudo, dicitur etiam proportio Græcè ἀναλογία ut similia proportio nalia Græcè ἀνάλογα & à mathematicis ἀναλογία, ἀναλογίαν, inquit Fabius lib. 5. c.

quidem à simili seperavimus, non eam subjectam huic generi putamus. Nam ut unum ad decem, sic decem ad centum, similè certè est, & ut hostis sic malis civis. At certè proportio nihil aliud est, quam duarum rationum similitudo. Sic enim Euclides ὁρίζ. ε. ἀναλογίαν ἐν τρισὶν ὅροις εἶναι. Ratio autem seu λόγος est duorum inter se terminorum collatio. Exempli gratia, ut 2. ad 4. sic 3. ad 6. proportio sive similitudo est, quia eadem est ratio seu qualitas 4. ad 2. quæ 6. ad 3. scilicet dupla. Solent quidem hæ voces à quibusdam ad quantitatum collectiones adstringi, verùm generalis sunt significationis. Nam & similitudo omnis proportio est, & qualitas omnis ratio est. And for the Dictionary. Pares cum paribus facillime Congregantur in Cicero, is rendred by Cooper, like most readily gather in company with like. Par est, Plaut. it is like or equal. Par Coeat jungatq; pari. Horat. Jam sumus Ergo Pares, Martial. These and innumerable instances besides shew that however in the Predicaments par is applied to discrete quantity, and simile to quality, yet they are taken without such exactness in other Authors, and that frequently parity is as much as likeness in quality and other conditions. And it is known that it is a rule in Logick, that qualities are sometimes expressed by words of quantity, as when we say a great Philosopher. And for the Topicks locus à pari is not à pari numero, or simili qualitate onely properly so called, but also from any such argument which makes it probable that the like may be said of the one as of the other: locus à majori & minori is all one with locus à magis & minus probabili. I find in Keckerm. syst. log. l. 3. c. 7. this Canon. De paribus & similibus idem est judicium. I grant good use of arguments à paribus & à similibus in the Common Law, which they call from the same case: nor do I except against it as insufficient for Judges and Lawyers to determine by. Yet as in the Law when there is a Statute Law which determines any case, Judges and Lawyers use not then such arguments: so Christ having made an express Statute concerning Baptizing, and who are to be baptized, it is against the Law of God for Mr. Blake to run to his analogy, and to impose on mens consciences such uncertain conjectures as his analogy from circumcision, which are no better than his own and other Pædobaptists figments. And me thinks his words shew there is no strength in it, when he saith. The institution of Baptism hath infants within the verge, and are not excluded from it; For this we have our arguments, which from the initiating sacrament of the Jews we onely illustrate. If other Pædobaptists would stand to this, we should be less cumbred with the argument from the Covenant and seal, which was Mr. Marshals and the Assemblies main if not onely argument. However the Reader may here take notice that Mr. Blake confesses that he with others do onely illustrate their arguments for Pædobaptism by the argument from the initiating sacrament of the Jews: which may move the considerate Reader to regard little that argument, and to look for other arguments from the institution comprehending infants, which have and will appear frivolous, as his exception here against me hath been.

Mr. Blake yet adds. The third likewise saith he, is uncertain and vain; For how shall we know when the analogy holds full proportion? when nothing can be fairly brought against the one but may be also concluded on the other? when is the proportion full? if onely when omnia sunt paria. When Mr. T. will destroy our old Logick to set up his own Divinity, it were to be wisht that he would furnish us with a new piece of Logick as he hath done of Divinity, that all learning humane and divine may stoop to his reformation. I have learnt these for maximes. Parium exacta est convenientia. Quod de uno parium affirmatur id affirmatur etiam de altero & e contra. But these with Mr. T. are vain and uncertain, and all arguments that dance not after his pipe, though our Saviors, St. Pauls, or any others.

Answ. There is nothing here but flirts and flams. Neither do I destroy old Logick, nor set up any other than what I have from the Scripture, yea and the best approved writers: nor need I any new Logick to help me in the reformation of Infant baptism, but such as Protestant Divines have used in reformation of Popish and Prelatical ceremonies. I do not say the maximes of Logick Mr. Blake here sets down are vain and uncertain, and all arguments that dance not after my pipe. But this I say, Mr. Blakes rule about arguing from analogy conceived between Circumcision and Baptism, or any other Old and New Testament rites, so as without precept or Apostolical example in the New Testament to frame an ob-obligation on our consciences is vain, and uncertain, not doth our Saviot, or St. Paul, or any other sacred writer argue so, as in my answer above may be seen.

Mr. Blake, This can never happen (saith Mr. T.) in analogies between the rites of Moses and the rites of Christ. How did Paul then reason from a parity in the Jewish altar and the Lords table, 1 Cor. 10. 16, 17. Yea from manna and the rock to the Lords Table? as Pareus and other interpreters observe, that spiritual meat was eaten in the one and in the other, and a like danger of prophaning the one and the other.

Answ. I said true, it can never happen in analogies between the rites of Moses and the rites of Christ that all things should be even, or that there should be an exact agreement between them, so, as that which is affirmed of the one should be affirmed of the other, or that there should be the same reason in the use of the one as in the other, and thence inferred, what ought to be done in the one ought to be done in the other, they who are to partake of the one are to partake of the other. This is enough to overthrow the supposed parity between Circumcision and Baptism as inferring Infant baptism, that they agree not in this, that the institution of Baptism extendeth it to all those to whom the institution of Circumcision extends it. It is not true that Paul did reason 1 Cor. 10. 16, 17. from such a parity in the Jewish altar and the Lords table, as if what was done at the one, must be done at the other by reason of an answerableness in the one rite to the other. But he argues from that which is common to both, and to all other Religions whether true or false, that they which did partake either of them did thereby profess the same Religion, to prove that they which should eat of the Idol meats had communion with the Idol, and so with the Devil. It is not true that the Apostle 1 Cor. 10. 1, 2, 3, 4. argues from manna and the rock to the Lords Table, as if he would prove that spiritual meat was eaten in the one, therefore in the other, or that it was dangerous to profane the one (for what danger was there in profaning the cloud, Sea, manna, or water out of the rock?) therefore there is the like danger of profaning the other, much less what was done in the one was to be done in the other by reason of analogy between them: But the Apostles argument is manifestly this, the Israelites being under the cloud, and passing through the Sea, was to them as Baptism to us, their eating manna and drinking water from the rock noted Christ as well as the Lords supper to us, and yet this could not save them from Gods displeasure when they sinned, therefore our sacraments will not shelter us from Gods wrath if we sin, which v. 6. 11. 12. of 1 Cor. 10. manifestly shew to be the force of the Apostles reasoning.

Mr. Blake adds. If when there is a parity in many things, it will be (saith he) uncertain how many parities will serve turn to make the proportion full. Here is an excellent dexterity to enervate so many Scripture arguments, that the weakness of this argument (in spight of all Logick) might appear; I have told him, and may tell him still, The Corinthians and the Pharisees wanted his head-piece, otherwise Christ and Paul had not gone so away with arguments of this nature. To satisfie him therefore fully, one parity will serve the turn. The exact proportion, say Logicians, is in quantum paria respectu tertii in quo paria comparantur. There are many imparities between the Lords supper and manna, yet they agree in this that both were spiritual meat; so between the Jewish altar and the Lords Table, but they agree in this, that there is Ecclesiastical communion in both of them, to make the partakers of one body Ecclesiastical: many differences between Circumcision and Baptism, but so farre they agree (by Mr. T. his confession) that both are initiating sacraments; he hath multiplied many differences, but stands not to any as in application to this particular in difference.

Answ. There is in my answer nothing tending to enervate any Scripture argument, though what I say is enough to shew the vanity of Mr. Blakes arguments, there being no certain rule to shew how many or what sort of parities, general or special, essential or accidental will serve turn. Neither Paul nor Christ did argue thus, this was appointed in a rite of the Old Testament, therefore thus it is to be observed in a rite of the New. In Logick it is usuall to deny an argument valid à comparatis, though there be some parities, caeteris non paribus. It is true one parity will serve turn to make things compared even in the thing in which they agree. But there must be so many parities, or such a parity in things compared as make them equal in the reason of the thing inferred,

vacuate the argument. Which is very manifest in the argument about Infant baptism. For the formal reason of Circumcising Infants being the command, there is no parity to infer thence Baptizing of Infants without the parity of command. Which is the difference I have often stood to in application to this particular in difference; which is not whether Baptism and Circumcision be initiating sacraments, but whether an argument can be drawn to bind conscience in the use of the one from a command, in the use of the other without a precept in the New Testament.

Mr. Blake concludes this section thus: The third exception is, It is uncertain whether these rules be sufficient, whether there be no need of any more. It is certain then that Mr. T. cannot make it appear that they are insufficient, in case he could he would not have left them at any uncertainty: I shall judge them sufficient till I hear from Mr. T. the contrary.

Answ. I have made it appear that these rules are not sufficient to make good the proof from analogy disproved by me: nor was it formerly uncertain to me they are not sufficient; yet I might say truly, it is uncertain, whether these rules be sufficient, whether there be no need of any more to satisfie others, who may think them too few as well as otherwise imperfect. I for my part do judge them notwithstanding Mr. Blakes plea to be insufficient, and all arguments inferring duty as of Gods appointment in the use of a rite of the New Testament from some likeness or agreement with a rite of the Old Testament now abolished, without direction in the New, as frivolous and serving onely to make wrangling, fill people with superstitions, and to weary Scholars, as I say in the Addition to my Apology in answer to Mr. Baillee sect. 15. Mr. Cawdrey Sabb. rediv. part. 4. ch. 1. against Dr. Sanderson, saying Divine right or institution is that First which is properly and primarily such; as what is (first) enjoined by express ordinance of God, or (secondly) what may be deduced therefrom by evident illation. Secondly that which is secondarily and consequently such. To which four things (say they) are required, 1. equity, 2. analogy, 3. insinuations in the new Testament, 4. continued practice of the Church, speaks thus. But this proceeding seems not sufficient. 3. There are things now in common use which have all the four conditions, and yet he will not say they are Divine institutions; as the observation of Easter &c. which yet are confessedly but Ecclesiasticall. And will Mr. Cawdrey make a Divine institution of Infant baptism which in the next page he saith we have no express command (nor expres example of it) in Scripture, from grounds which at most can make but analogy without equity (for in meer positive rites there is no equity but the appointers will) insinuations in the New Testament or any truly wel-proved continued practice of the Church? However Mr. Cawdreys words are sufficient to shew (though they oppose himself) that he counted analogy not sufficient, no not though accompanied with equity, insinuations in the New Testament and continued practice of the Church to make a thing of Divine institution, but only Ecclesiastical. Which being granted, Mr. Marshals analogical argument (as he calls it) which with him the words of the Assembly intimate to be the chief prop of the Divine institution of Infant baptism, falls to the ground. But lets hear what Mr. B. saith also.

What need (saith Mr B.) the same thing to be done twice, except men had questioned the authority of the old?

Answ. The Holy Ghost hath delivered many things twice in the Old and New Testament, yet sure it was needful, else it is not likely it would have been done. Will Mr. B. charge the Spirit of God with needless committing so many histories, sayings of Christ &c. to writing, because they were written before? And to his question I say, If there were no other need, yet there was this that the agreement of the Old and New Testament might appear, whereby the authority of both is greatly confirmed.

The whole Scripture saith he, is the perfect Word and Law of God: and if he should reveil all his mind in one part, what use should we make of the other.

Answ. The Gospels of the four Evangelists are the perfect Word and Law of God, they need no unwritten tradition for a supplement, in them those things are written by which we may have life, John 20. 31. yet there is use of Pauls Epistles. Suppose all Gods mind revealed in one part, so as no more doctrine or truth were in the rest than in one, yet there is use to confirm, explain, inforce that which is elsewhere written in that one part. And indeed this reasoning of his would prove that book or part of Scripture to be of no use, as suppose Marks Gospel, which is counted an abridgement of another, or so much of that Gospel as reveals no more of Gods mind than another doth: which me thinks Mr. B. on better consideration should disclaim.

He goes on. How silent is the New Testament concerning a Christian Magistracy? which made the Anabaptists of old deny it. Where find you a Christian in the New Testament that exercised the place of a king, a Parliament man, or Justice of Peace, or the like? so of an oath before a Magistrate, of war, of the Sabbath, &c. how sparing is the new Testament? and why? but because there was enough said of them in the old? This also is the very case in the question in hand.

Answ. The Anabaptists (as they are called) of former times, or some of them, as it is reported (for their own books I never saw) of them, denied it lawful for Christians to be Magistrates, to war, to swear, not onely because of the silence thereof in the New Testament, but also because they mistook the meaning of the texts, as forbidding them Is. 2. 4. Micah 4. 3. Zach. 9. 10. John 18. 36. Mat. 20. 26. Mat. 5. 34, 35. Luke 22. 25, 26. &c. And so either did or seemed to do some of the Antient Christians, even those who are called the Fathers, of which may be seen Sixtus Senensis Biblioth. sanct. lib. 6. annot. 25, 26. And yet learned men do not think the New Testament silent of a Christian Magistrate, of an oath, or war, but that there are texts for them in the New Testament, of which some are brought by Grot. l. 1. de Iure Belli. ac Pacis c. 2. 1 Tim. 2. 1, 2, 3. Rom. 13. 1. &c. And though there be no example of a Christian King, Parliament man, or Justice of Peace, yet we find a Christian Centurion Act. 10. a Christian Deputy Act. 13. 12. Christian parents, husbands, masters, whose government is allowed, and rules given about the managing of it. Wherefore I conceive Mr. B. doth too much betray Christian Magistracy, souldiery, civil judicature, &c. who suggests to his Reader, as if the New Testament were silent of Christian Magistracy, and sparing about war, or oaths before a Magistrate. I confess the determination of the Old Testament is obligatory, because these things are moral, not peculiar to the Jews: but it doth not follow therefore that an argument is valid from analogy conceived between rites of the old Testament and the new, or the Jewish policy and the Christian to conclude an obligation to us in a rite of the New Testament, the rites of the Old Testament being meerly positive, not from the beginning proper to the Jews, and together with the policy of the Jewish Church now abrogated.

But there seems to be more difficulty about the Sabbath. Mr. Marshall had said in his Sermon, that all that reject the baptizing of Infants do and must upon the same grounds reject the religious observation of the Lords day. In my Examen part. 2. sect. 8. I denied it, there being something moral from the beginning in the Sabbath, not so in Circumcision, and there being something in the new Testament to prove an institution of the Lords day, nothing about infant baptism. To this Mr. M. replies, However the determinate day doth depend wholly upon institution, therefore they who reject that which depends upon positive institution, unless its institution can be expresly found in the New Testament, are as much at a loss for the Lords day as for baptizing of infants. 2. And the advantage is here for infant baptism above the Lords day, because in the proof of infant baptism there is only need to shew the subject to whom baptism is to be applyed, in the Lords day the institution of the day it self.

Answ. 1. That which he saies first confirms my exception; for therein he acknowledgeth there is something natural or moral by institution about a Sabbath, but shews nothing natural or moral in Circumcision.

2. I never rejected infant baptism because its institution cannot be expresly in so many words or syllables without consequence found in the New Testament, but because it is not there either in expres words, or by good consequence.

3. If the determinate day require positive institution, there is institution brought out of the New Testament, if not expres, yet by good consequence; which I count sufficient.

4. Yet I do not count Mr. Ms. consequence good by analogy in his Defence pag. 208. The Jews keep the Sabbath on the seventh or last day of the week, ergo the Christians keep the Sabbath on the first day of the week. Of my judgement herein with other Antipædobaptists more may be seen in my Præcursor, S. 25. And for the other thing Mr. M. adds, it is nothing to the busineſs in hand, which is not about the greater or leſſer neceſſity of clearing the inſtitution of the Lords day or infant baptiſm, but about the principle by which infant baptiſm is rejected, whether it neceſſitate us to reject the Lords day: which I denyed, becauſe this principle, That uſe of a meer ceremony or poſitive rite which hath neither precept nor example in the New Teſtament is to be rejected, will not reach the Lords day, which is not meerly poſitive, but in part moral, and hath precept and example for it in the New Teſtament, neither of which can be ſaid of infant baptiſm.

That which Mr. B. adds next about the deſperate higheſt ſort of Antinomians, who wipe out all the Old Teſtament with a ſtroke, and that they may as well do ſo by the New Teſtament too if they pleaſe, and telling us the queſtion whether infants ſhould be baptized is turned into a higher, whether the Scriptures be the word of God or not? I might well let paſs as being nothing to the point in hand, the denying of infant baptiſm to be in the Old or New Teſtament, neither being upon the higher or lower ſort of Antinomians (if there be ſuch difference of them) principle, they that deny infant baptiſm, being not neceſſitated to it, nor ſo far as I find in their writings (except what I have met with in Mr. Dens Books) denying the obligation of moral precepts of the Old Teſtament. All that they are neceſſitated to maintain is, that Ceremonial precepts of the Old Teſtament and imagined ANALOGIE between Baptiſm and Circumciſion, the Jewiſh Church ſtate and the Chriſtian, are of no force to conclude a divine appointment concerning any Sacrament or meerly poſitive worſhip of the New Teſtament. And therefore his Pathetick Rhetorick, though elſewhere of uſe, yet in a diſpute as this his writing ſhould have been, hath the face either of malignancy towards his Antagoniſts, or of an indirect trick to prepoſſeſs people with horrour of that opinion, which he would refuſe afore he comes to his Arguments, which is the chief part of his skill. And for what he ſaith further that inceſtuous marriages are not forbidden in the New Teſtament, and tells the men of Bewdley, That ſome of eminency that deny Infant baptiſm deny either inceſtuous marriages, or any thing elſe not forbidden in the New Teſtament to be ſin. It is like the former, ſith he might know that Antipædobaptiſts are not neceſſitated to deny the obligation of the moral Law, in which the Laws about incestuous marriages appear to be in that the Canaanites were punished for their incests Levit. 18. 25. And Mr. B. if he had any mind to deal candidly with me, might have told them, that I was none of those men, sith he might (if he did read my books with any heed, of which I much doubt) have told them, that to this objection I answered in my Examen pag 111. 1. That the instance of the Lawes about forbidden marriages brought by Mr. M. is not to the point of the obligation of meer positive ceremonial worship, sith the command about prohibited degrees in marriage is moral 2. That yet there is for one branch of Incest an expres censure in the New Testament, proving the unlawfulnes of it. To which Mr. M. page 196. of his Defence saith, But how would you laugh at such a consequence in another, a man may not marry his Fathers wife, a thing which by the light of nature was abhorred among the Heathens, ergo all the degrees of forbidden marriages in Moses Laws stand firm? whereto I reply, I made no consequence but this, one branch of Incest is expresly censured in the New Testament, therefore it is unlawful. And this I only brought to shew the impertinency of Mr. M. allegation to prove the matter in question, it being granted by me that a morall precept of Moses is in force, thought not a ceremonial, and yet Mr. M. brings instances only of morals standing in force, none of ceremonials, and instead of cleering the pertinency of his own instances, makes a consequence as mine, which, saith he, I would laugh at in another, which dealing is cavilling not answering. The like to which is that which follows in him. The like say you against Polygamy, there is proof against it, Mat. 19. 5. 9. But is this an expres prohibition of it? Must you not be compelled to go by a consequence to bring it in, which is all I contend for? Whereto I reply. Though Mr. M. page 3. of his Defence charged me unjustly with a Socinian plot in my writings to question all conclusions deduced by consequence from Scripture, yet page 205. he saith of me, That I neither there nor here deny this Argument from a consequence to be sufficient for practice of some things in the worship of God, which are not expresly laid down in the New Testament, and therefore he might easily have seen, if he would, that to prove we may go by a consequence is not all he contends for, it being known to him that I grant it. But this he is to prove, or else he still is besides the business, that a consequence is good from analogy of an abrogated rite of the Old Testament to prove a Divine appointment concerning a meer positive rite of the New Testament, till this be done, his, and Mr. Bs. and Mr. Bls. arguings are quite besides the business in hand and carry an apparent shew of Sophistry, not of just disputing.

SECT. IV.

Mr. Bs. Speeches about the little said for Antipædobaptism is vain, and his speech about the Antiquity of Infant baptism is very inconsiderate, and his speech about the difficulty and importance of the point in question is examined

THe rest of Mr. Bs. ten positions are granted by me, but what he saith of me, pag. 5. that he never to his remembrance did plead with an able Papist, but he could say far more for his religion then Mr. T. said for his opinion on James 1. or his Sermon since, that he might insinuate that he and others had reason to be settled in the practice of infant baptism, because I said so little then, and my Sermon presently after, is like, King Iames his resolution, to be more for the Bishops and Ceremonies, because Doctor Reynolds and his Collegues sayd so little against them in the Conference at Hampton Court, from whence M: B. might gather, that if such men as Dr: Reynolds (whose equal every way the world did then or since scarce yield) D: Spark, M: Chaderton, M: Knewstubs, did fail to speak what had been requisite, when it was expected, though they were four, which were to object, and that upon a sufficient time of premeditation, and yet this no good evidence for Bishops and Ceremonies, it is no good evidence for infant baptism, that I being single, being to answer ex tempore, hardly allowed by M: B. to repeat his Arguments, whereof some were hypothetical syllogisms, brought to prove an hypothetical proposition, and therefore such as could not be well repeated, and his arguments containing such terms, as it appears now by his Book, he used in senses different from what other Authors use them, and yet would not explain them, with sundry other captious devices, and provoking speeches, as I have in part made manifest in my writings, and through Gods assistance shall do more, sayd so little at the dispute. Who is there that hath experience of humane infirmity, who knows not that distractions, forgetfulness, inadverrency, sudden weakness of body, extemporality necessitated, slowness of speech, care to restrain passion, do hinder a man from speaking that in a great meeting, which he could in his study by writing easily express? What I sayd Jan. 1. 1649. was almost wholly as a Respondent, as the Argument required. Now they that know the rule of Schools understand the Respondents business is but to repeat, deny, distinguish, apply to the arguments of the Opponent, and this was done by me then, why it was done no more fully my Antidote, Præcursor, and the Review shew. M: B. had in his Epistle Dedicatory to his Saints everlasting rest, published to the world, that I was driven to gross absurdities, being moved to name those absurdities in his answer to my Valedictory oration, he names 27. p. 207. To all which I answer in my Præcursor Sect: 17. and clear my self from the absurdities he imagined. In his Præfestinantis morator, when he comes to answer that Section, he onely replies thus, Sect: 17. I know not one word of Answer that this Section needs for him that will peruse my words. To which I conceive I may without any heat reply, that he either wrongs his Readers by not making good that I was driven to gross absurdities, after my clearing of my self from them, or me, in not acquitting me from his charge. But I must needs speak it, though with grief, that I have scarce met with less justice, or fair dealing from any man than from M: B. and both his and other Antagonists courses tend not to an impartial and equal way of examining the point in controversie, but they use artifices to prepossess men against me and my writings and speeches, and to deter them from considering them. In my Sermon January 20. 1649. was given an answer to M: Bs. arguments so far as I could retain them in memory, or finde them in some imperfect notes, when I had sought in vain to have them from M: B. himself in writing. Now they are in print, they have or shall have a large answer, if the Lord will. Papists may say much more than I sayd, yet that either for their Religion or ree will so much of moment can be sayd as against infant-

baptism is vainly surmised. It is well M: B. in his 7. Position confesseth some Divines have argued weakly for infant-baptism, and brought some misapplied Scriptures: If ye mean my Books by the third or fourth written against them, (as it is most likely) he might know my writings were in answer to M: Marshall, whose writing is conceived to contain the Assemblies grounds, he is stiled by M: Stalham the Antesignanus, and perhaps it may be judged arrogance in M: B. to imagine his own arguments better than his. For my part I think them weaker. However he had shewd some care of truth and love to me, if he had by communicating them to me endeavoured to stop me in my supposed error. But this I count my trouble, though I hope it will advantage the truth, that first Mr: M. Sermon hath been magnified, & that by examining it I hoped I had done my work, and yet after M: Blakes writing being magnified, I was put to answer that, and then Mr: Bs. preferred before them all, and yet I am referred by him to answer M: Cobbet, M: Drew, M: Church, and after all Doctor Hammonds is preferred, so that I must answer that, or else the truth be betrayed. It seems Pædobaptists know not well what to rely on, when they do shift so much from one to another. But I go on. M: Bs. eighth Position is, that one sound argument is enough to prove any thing true: yet more may be brought against infant-baptism. Almost all that Protestants dispute against Popish Rites, Non-conformists against Prelatical Ceremonies, may be said against Pædobaptism, M: Bs. words in answer to Mr. Bedford, Plain Scripture proof &c. pag. 302, 303. are appliable against infant-baptism. In my Præcursor I had set down M. B. words in the second Edition of the Saints everlasting rest, part. 1. chap. 8. Sect. 5. pag. 179. in the margin; in his Præfestinantis morator he sayth, To what end you recite my allegation of Justin Martyr is past my reach to imagine; unless you would insinuate that I confess this to be the course with all the baptized, which I expresly say was the way of baptizing the aged. Answ It had been easie for M. B. to conceive why I set down those words, to wit, to prove from his own confession, that to baptize upon profession of faith, and to admit none to the Lords Supper but those who are thus baptized, is no new over-strict way. And however he now endeavours to mince the matter, these words of his, [And in the primitive times none were baptized without an expres covenanting naming, wherein they renounced the world, flesh, and devil, and engaged themselves to Christ, and promised to obey him, as you may see in Tertul: Origen, Cyprian, and others at large.] being printed with a ful point at the end, are as plain a denial that infants were baptized in the primitive times, as words usually express. As for the words following; I will cite but one for all, who was before the rest, and that is Justin Martyr; speaking of the way of baptizing the aged, sayth, they are not words, if they be restrictive, that limit any ones speech but Justin Martyrs, and if by them M: B. would intimate that Justin Martyr did not in that speech set down the way of baptizing all that were then baptized, the words following saying thus, how we are dedicated to God we will now open unto you, and then setting down the constant way of baptizing without any exception, M. Bs. addition will easily be perceived to be but a shift to avoid the evidence of this relation of Justin Martyr, Apol. 2. ad Antoninum, being so plain to prove infant-baptism not to have been then in use among Christians. Likewise in my Praecursor, Sect. 16. pag. 66. I bring an argument against infant-baptism from M: Bs. own words mutatis mutandis. His answer in his Praefestinantis morator is in these words. His Confidence, pag. 66. is marvellous. I doubt not but that he knows that I take the words [since the solemn institution of Baptism Matth: 28.] inclusively; And so I answer, that this solemn institution is our warrant, requiring us both to disciple nations, and baptize Disciples; and we have other Scriptures which plainly prove infants to be Disciples.

Answ: My confidence is upon good reason, M: Bs. marvelling is from ignorance; what he means by taking the words [since the solemn institution of Baptism, Matth. 28.] inclusively I know not, except he mean that time when that institution was given, as well as the time after, or that institution to be a warrant as well as after precepts or examples. Either way the medium of M. B. serves my purpose. For it plainly asserts, that what we have no warrant, in all the New Testament, for, we are not to do ordinarily, what we have precept and example for, we are to do. Which if he will stand to, then his warrant out of the Old Testament is not sufficient for infant-baptism, and so it is not fully determined in the Old Testament, at what age persons are to be admitted into the Church, as he

ſayd before, and what we do we have warrant for by his own grant, ſith he cannot deny we have precept and example for baptizing profeſſors of faith. And then his including here *Matth.*28.19. in his Texts (though not brought *Plain Scripture proof, &c. pag.*342. to prove his antecedent) is an intimation that in all the reſt of the Texts, John 4.1. Acts 2.38,41. & 8.12,13,16,36,38. & 9.18. & 10.47.48. & 16.15,33. & 18.8. & 19.3,4,5. *Rom.*6.3, &c. he findes not precept or example for baptizing of infants, and ſo if he finde not warrant *Matth.*28.19. for baptizing infants, all his other proofs are by his own reaſoning made invalid. For ſure the Texts alleged do as evidently prove this antecedent [we have no warrant by word or example in all the New Teſtament (ſince the ſolemn inſtitution of Baptiſm, *Matth.*28.) to admit any member into the Church by Baptiſm, but believers by profeſſion, but both precept and conſtant example of admitting them by it] as Mr. Bs. [we have no warrant by word or example in all the New Teſtament (ſince the ſolemn inſtitution of Baptiſm, Matth.28) to admit any member into the Church without Baptiſm, but both precept and conſtant example of admitting them by it] The conſequent then [we muſt not admit ordinarily any by Baptiſm without profeſſion of faith] muſt by the force of his own illation be undoubted to thoſe that take the word for their rule. As for his evaſion, that he hath other Scriptures which plainly prove infants to be Diſciples, how miſerably he fails therein will appear by that which follows in this Review. The Reader may perceive that whatſoever his talk be about a Gift and Ordinance of viſible Church-membership unrepealed, and of Chriſts Laying of hands on little ones, and ſuch like Arguments and Texts he brings, yet if he will ſtand to his own reaſoning in Arg.9. againſt deniers of Baptiſm by Water, *pag.*342. of his Plain Scripture proof, &c. we have no warrant to admit ordinarily by Baptiſm, but according to the precept and example in the New Teſtament in the Text, *Matth.*28.19. and the other Texts before recited. Concerning which I have reaſon to be as confident as of common notions, that they include not infants, and to marvel that Mr. Bs. prejudice ſhould ſo blinde him, as not to ſee the futility of his arguings to prove infants to be Diſciples included in the inſtitution Matth. 28.19. But I proceed.

Becauſe, as he ſayth, pag.5. An anſwer cannot be always preſently given, which may make the caſe plain to ſome men, therefore Mr. B. ſhould have given his arguments in writing to thoſe that came to him, which had been an eaſier and fairer way than to tell them as he doth, pag.6. If any of you have taken up the opinion of Antepædobaptiſm, and have not read and ſtudied Mr. Cobber, M. Church, and other the chief books, and been able (at leaſt to himſelf) to confute them, you have but diſcovered a ſeared conſcience (a moſt heavy, though vain cenſure, ſhewing what raſhneſs and diſtemper was in Mr. B. in this writing) which either taketh error for no ſin, or elſe dare venture on ſin without fear, and have betrayed your own ſouls by your lazineſs, as if a man might not be ſatisfied by reading of the Scripture, and conference with the able of the oppoſite party, without reading ſo many Books. Sure Mr. B. who had read thoſe Books ſhewed little charity to thoſe of Bewdley that came to him for arguments for infant-baptiſm, when he would neither ſet down his own arguments in writing, nor direct them in what part of thoſe books they might have ſatisfaction; but fly upon them with ſo deep a charge, without any moderation of ſpirit. And when he ſaith, pag.7. He dare ſay by my books, that it is my caſe not to have received the doctrine of infant-baptiſm on the beſt grounds and arguments. I reply, 1. that there are many paſſages which make me think he never read my books with exact diligence and heed, but (if I may uſe his own words) He betrays his own ſoul by his lazineſs or prejudice. 2. It ſhews a fond conceit in him of his own arguments, which another perhaps will think weaker than thoſe of Calvin, Urſin, Piſcator, the Aſſembly, Mr. M. &c. which he might perceive by my Exercit. and otherwiſe, that I had conſidered. I ſaid in my Apology, pag.6. that I reſted wholly on 1 *Cor.*7.14. for many years, and that Text Mr. B. cals a full plain Text, and Dr. Hammond in effect builds all his proof for infant-baptiſm upon it, and therefore Mr. B. might have perceived his miſtake concerning me, if he had heeded my books. If ſome Divines have argued weakly for infant-baptiſm, uſed ſome unfit phraſes, and brought ſome miſapplied Scriptures, as he ſaith, I am ſure Mr. B. had reaſon to number himſelf among them, if he be not the man who hath in all theſe outſtripped them. I wiſh he had held his reſolution of not heaping up many arguments, it would have ſaved me much labor.

To his words, Whatsoever Mr. T. may pretend among the simple, I shall easily prove, that infant-baptism was used in the Church as high to the Apostles days as there is any sufficient History extant to inform us: and that the deferring of Baptism came in with the rest of Popery, upon Popish or heretical grounds.

I answer, 1. That my pretences about the innovation of infant-baptism are not among the simple, as he would insinuate, but among the most learned, for whose examination my allegations are obvious in print. 2. That his assertion concerning the antiquity of infant-baptism is most inconsiderate, there being nothing in Ignatius, Clemens Alexandrinus, Eusebius, Epiphanius, and other the most approved Histories and Authors, for his assertion. And for those he brings, the highest is Pope Hyginus, whose words he alleged out of his Decree, which I conceived had been in his Epistle decretal, judged to be counterfeit, but Mr. B. in his Præfestinantis morator lets fly at me Sect. 3. for my mistake. I confess I have not Blondellus, Surius, Nicolinus, Crab, Binius, Gratian; but Osiander Epit. Hist. Eccl. Cent. 2. l. 2. c. 5. saith, Reliqua Decreta, quæ huic Episcopo tribuuntur, ex Gratiano ad verbum (quia prolixa non sunt) referemus. And then sets down five Decrees, on the second of which he notes thus, Ex hoc decreto elucet vanitas harum constitutionum; & quod falsò prioribus Episcopis Romanis tribuantur. Quis enim credat? &c. Quare manifestum est hæc Decreta longo tempore post Hyginum facta, & in Ecclesiam Dei, jam superstitionibus Pontificiis contaminatam, introducta esse. Hujus farinæ sunt & proximè sequentia Decreta, de rebus frivolis edita, of which the last is, In catechismo, & in baptismo, & in confirmatione unus patrinus fieri potest, si necessitas cogat, non est tamen consuetudo Romana: sed per singulos (æstus) singuli suscipiunt. Whereby the Reader may perceive the Decree to be but a forgery, and that if it were true, yet it doth not mention the baptizing of infants, sith Gossips were at the Baptism of elder persons, (though Dr. Hammond say in his Letter, pag. 214. Godfathers have place onely in baptizing of Children) as may be made appear by instances at the baptizing of some Saxon Kings, and otherwise, and the Decree it self, putting a Gossip in Catechism before a Gossip in Baptism, makes makes it probable not to be meant of a Gossip to an infant baptized. And lest it be thought Osiander is alone, I will adjoyn the words of Mr. Fox, Acts and Monuments first book at the year 175. The like (that Telesphorus made them not) is to be thought also of the rest, not onely his Constitutions; but also of the other ancient Bishops and Martyrs, which followed after him, as of Hyginus anno 142. who succeeding him, and dying also a Martyr, as Volateranus lib. 22. declareth, is said or rather feigned to bring in the cream, one Godfather and Godmother in Baptism, to ordain the dedication of Churches: when as in his time so far it was off, that any solemn Churches were standing in Rome, that unneth the Christians could safely convent in their own houses. Likewise the distincting the orders of Metropolitans, Bishops, and other degrees, savour nothing less than of that time. Doctor Prideaux, one of Mr. Bs. own Authors for this Decree of Pope Hyginus about Gossips, though he make mention of it where he speaks of that Pope, Compend. of History, cap. 7. Sect. 3. interr. 7. yet after, among many of his inquiries, this is the third, Whether it be likely that these religious Popes in such extreme persecutions had liberty or list to think on making Cardinals or Gossips, and introduce a rabble of beggarly Ceremonies. And though I were mistaken in calling that decree of Hyginus the Decree in the Epistle, yet I think the Authors which censured the decretal Epistles did comprehend the Decrees ascribed to those first Popes among those forged Writings under that name. However, what I have produced is enough to justifie my speeches in my Praecursor, that the Decree ascribed to Pope Hyginus about Gossips, is so manifest a forgery, that I could hardly have imagined any learned Protestant would ever have alleged so notoriously forged a writing: so that I need not answer Mr. Bs. allegation of this testimony, as by currant consent of Historians assuring us that Hyginus Bishop of Rome did first ordain Godfathers and Godmothers at the baptizing of infants, and his questions thereon, but by telling him he hath reason to be ashamed of abusing men with this forgery after so much eviction of it by learned men, being more like a brazen faced allegation, than that he so censures me for without cause. The next of his allegations is Justin Martyr, from whom besides the bastard writing of Questions and Answers ad orthodoxos, all the rest alleged, pag. 156.

by Mr. B. is manifestly impertinent, and his genuine writing yields a good evidence against the use of infant-baptism, as unknown to him, as may appear by what is said before. Mr. B. in his Præfestinantis morator, says Sect. 3. Seeing you deny nothing in Justin Martyrs words, you must yield that it was known to Mothers that their infants were of Gods kingdom, and then certainly they were Church-members, and known Disciples or Christians. To which I reply, that I have not Justin Martyr now by me, and do doubt whether in that passage of the Epistle ad Zenam & Serenum, he did mean infants, sith the term is [children] which may be meant of persons who are come to some age capable of understanding; and if the words be meant of infants, yet it may be very well conceived that the meaning is, that of such is the Kingdom of Heaven, that is the Kingdom of Glory, and that not in respect of their present, but future estate, as when it is said, Matth. 5. 10. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousnesse sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven; that is, they shall have a great reward in Heaven, vers. 12. And then it neither proves their present being of Gods visible Kingdom, nor that they were Church-members, and known Disciples or Christians, and to be baptized. This testimony for the antiquity of infant-baptism I remember not alleged by any before Mr. B. and therefore besides the impertinency of the words, as he himself allegeth them, I see no need to search any further into it. His allegation, pag. 154. out of Irenæus is impertinent, wherein besides other frivolous inferences out of his words he tels us, that Irenæus cannot mean by sanctifying, internal real sanctifying onely, for then according to their exposition of Renascuntur, it should be but Tautology, q. d. [He sanctifieth all that are sanctified or new born] whereas had he heeded these words set down by himself, this imagined Tautology had been seen to be his meer mistake; for his words are, Omnes venit per semetipsum salvare, He came to save men of all ages, as Dr. Hammond renders it, not as Mr. B. He sanctifieth all that are sanctified. And yet if they had been thus, he sanctifieth by himself all that are born again or sanctified by him, it had not been a Tautology, sith it is manifest that Irenæus by [per semetipsum] meant by the patern or example of his own age, and then it is no Tautology, but hath this plain sense, that all that are sanctified by Christ, he came to sanctifie them by the patern or example of his own age, and therefore lived in every age of a man, which is the purport of Irenæus his discourse in that place, which is by all sorts of writers censured as his mistake Having said so much of Mr. Bs. mistakes, and thereby sufficiently shewed that no writer in the two first Centuries mentions infant-baptism, and therefore Mr. Bs. speech is most false, that he shall easily prove that infant-baptism was used in the Church as high as the Apostles days, as there is any sufficient history extant to inform us, I leave the examining of the testimonies for baptizing of infants, or against them, till I have finished the review of the dispute from Scripture testimonies, and then I intend not onely to examine what Mr. B. hath scribled in his Plain Scripure Proof, &c. part. 2. chap. 15. and in his Præfestinantis morator, Sect. 3. but also what Mr. Ms. friend Dr. Young (as I am informed) and what Dr. Hammond (men better acquainted with the writings of the Ancients than Mr. B. or Mr. Bl.) have said about the antiquity of infant-baptism, and do no whit doubt but that I shall with the Lords assistance make good the assertions of the first part of my Examen, that First, infant-baptism is not so ancient as is pretended; Secondly, that as it is now taught it is a late innovation, meaning as it is taught by the Assembly, Mr. M. and the reformed Churches called Calvinists. As for Mr. Bs. assertion, that he should easily prove that the deferring of Baptism came in with the rest of Popery upon popish or heretical grounds, if he mean the deferring it till a person were catechized and of years sufficient to answer by himself to the three questions, about Repentance, Faith, and Obedience, which were still put to the baptized, it is not onely vain and inconsiderate, but notoriously false, it being the constant order of the Church to baptize after catechising, and the baptizing of infants onely an exception from the common rule and order, in case of danger of death, till after Augustines days, who flourished in the fifth Century. The grounds on which Tertullian and Gregory Nazianzen did perswade the delaying of Baptism, were neither popish nor heretical, as their words alleged in my Exercit. Sect. 22. shew. But on the contrary, the hastening of infant-baptism manifestly appears by the words of Tertullian, and Gregory Nazianzen, alleged there, and of Cyprian, and Augustine, together with the relations of Gregory Nazianzens and Austins Baptism alleged in my Examen, Part. 1. Sect. 7,8. to have come from the popiſh conceit, that without Baptiſm infants could not come to Gods Kingdom, or were damned. I deny not, deferring of Baptiſm to have been an abuſe upon ſundry miſconceits ſet down in Mr. Ms. Defence, pag. 22,23,24,25. but not one of them popiſh, except that of waſhing away ſins by it, which was the very ground of haſtening infant-baptiſm, as appears from the paſſages forenamed by me. That which made perſons of years defer their own Baptiſm, made them haſten the Baptiſm of their infants.

Whereas Mr. B. would have Mr. Cradocks Goſpel Liberty read, I have read it, and do finde that neither in his ſecond part, chap. 12. nor here, Mr. Cradock is well uſed by Mr. B. Mr. Cradock pag. 114. counts the cuſtome of the Church the weakeſt rule to diſcern by, and then onely he leaves Chriſtians to it, when there is no other light to go forward. Mr. B. himſelf pag. 302. concludes againſt Mr. Bedford, that in ſo material a thing as infant-baptiſm, to hold Traditions Apoſtolical, not contrary to Scripture-cuſtome, or which may not be confirmed from Scripture, as our rule, is prejudicial to Scripture, and a complying with Papiſts. Beſides, I need not ſay any more than Mr. B. there ſaith about the uncertainty of Traditions unwritten, and cuſtomes of the Ancients, which may ſerve for the preſent till a fuller anſwer be made to that calumniating queſtion in his Præfeſtinantis morator, Sect. 3. Do not you care to ſmite through Chriſtianity, ſo you may bring down infant-baptiſm? which he hath as much need to anſwer as my ſelf; for he ſhews pag. 303. by the uncertainty about Eaſter, the miſtake of Irenæus about Chriſts age, how uncertain the relations of the Ancients are about things not ſet down in Scripture. And for the cuſtomes of Chriſtians an Age or two after the Apoſtles, Writers do ſhew many corrupt cuſtomes came in about Eaſter, Lent, Infant-communion, ſending the Communion to the abſent, mingling Water with Wine, Monaſtick profeſſion, honoring of Martyrs; about Baptiſm, giving Milk and Honey to the baptized, anointing them, the uſe of the ſign of the Croſs, which grew to a very great number in Auguſtines time, ſo as that in his 119. Epiſtle to Januarius, he complained, as is before mentioned, and yet they increaſed after in the heighth of Popery, by reaſon of the innumerable innumerable company of humane Ceremonies, insomuch as that the pure worship and truth of the Gospel was shadowed so much, as that for the abundance of such leavs, the fruit of the Gospel-worship and doctrine was very little or scarce discernible, and Christian Religion was almost wholly placed in those Ceremonies. And therefore however there were weight in that argument of the Apostle, we have no such custome, nor the Churches of God of those times, yet especially in matters of Ceremonies and positive worship the former after the Apostles days, much less the present customes of the holiest Saints and Churches should not be of any great weight in cases controverted, except when they serve to expound some passages of the Scripture that are cleared by them. Yet this will no whit infringe the validity of the testimony of the Ancients about the canonical books, or right readings of the Scripture, no more than the discrediting of the Jewish Rabbins relations about their Traditions doth infringe their testimony about the books of the Old Testament, though Mr. B. in his Præfestinantis morator, Sect. 3. would insinuate, as if denying the certainty of Austins rule about Apostolical Traditions must infer an uncertainty about the canonical Scripture, which shews his proness to calumniate me, and his inconsiderateness in not observing how this may be objected against his own speeches, pag. 303, as well as mine. As for Mr. Bs. tenth Position, though I grant it as it is set down, yet in his amplyfying of it there are sundry things that need animadversions. 1. That whereas he speaks of some, that disclaim Reason because they require expres words of Scripture, and content not themselves with his supposed evident consequences; he may know that I have often acknowledged consequences good proof from Scripture, and if others do deny consequences, I do imagine that if they were rightly understood, it would appear that they deny onely such far-fetcht consequences as are used about infant-baptism, resting upon such hypotheses as are taken for granted, when they have need of proof, or such consequences as are drawn from the rites of the Jews to the Sacraments of the New Testament, which if it be their meaning, Mr. Bs. censure of them as senseless ignorant wretches is too harsh and magisterial. 2. To what he saith, Will you allow of such an argument for infant-baptism as Christ brings for the Resurrection? I answer for my

ſelf and the people of Bewdley, to whom that ſpeech was intended, we will: but withall I ſay, that in viewing of his book I diſcern nothing but Mr. Bs. vanity, in imagining his arguments to be like Chriſts, when upon trial they have little in them but ſuperficial reaſonings urged with much confidence and importunity upon miſtakes, and ſtuffed with impertinent Texts, frivolous queſtions, and childiſh wonderings, fitted like things ſet in fields and gardens to fright birds, to deter the ſhallow heads of this age from the truth, who either have no minde, or no ability to examine it ſcholaſtically. This is my judgment of it. Chap. 2. After all his ten Poſitions, Mr. B. hath three more Propoſitions, the firſt about the difficulty of it, in amplifying of which he confeſſeth the point of infant-baptiſm to be ſuch, as the moſt godly learned impartial Divines cannot agree in, after all their writings, diſputing, ſtudying, and praying; which being true, it is moſt unjuſt in Mareſius that in his ſixth queſtion he makes the error of Anabaptiſts intolerable, in Miniſters, that they will not permit ſuch as deny infant-baptiſm to preach, nor will either themſelves hear them, or pray with them, or ſuffer their hearers, but renounce communion with them, and make ſeparations from them, and ſo ſhew themſelves Schiſmaticks, yea, and in their Pulpits and Writings endeavour to make them odious, exciting Magiſtrates to impriſon, expell, and deſtroy them; on the otherſide the Parlament is juſtified in that ſpeech of theirs in the Declaration Ordered March 4. 1647. to be publiſhed in anſwer to the Scots Commiſſioners Paper, that the opinion againſt the baptiſm of Infants is ſuch, as wherein in former ages as well as this learned men have differed both in opinion and practice, and that therein they held it fit that men ſhould be convinced by the Word of God, with gentleneſs and reaſon, and not beaten out of it by force and violence. But Mr. B. hath another fling at my ſpeech, that it is an eaſie point, and that the reaſon why ſo many Divines did not diſcern it, was their wilfulneſs or negligence, and this he imputes to want of humility, modeſty, conſcientiouſneſs, and that he ſhould tremble to paſs ſo high a cenſure, forgetting what a heavy cenſure he had paſt before on others of diſcovering a ſeared conſcience, either taking error for no ſin, or elſe daring to venture on ſin without fear, and betraying their own ſouls by their lazineſs, p. 6. Who ſhould be Antipædobaptiſts without reading, and ſtudying firſt

ſome books there named, calling others ignorant ſenſleſs wretches, with much more of this kinde over all his book, in which it is frequent with him to cenſure me, my anſwers and ſpeeches, as if they ſhewed ſome ſearfull ſpiritual judgment fallen on me, when his own miſtakes through heedleſneſs, or uncharitableneſs, are all the occaſion of ſuch a cenſure. But for my ſpeech here, I ſay ſtill, that I know not how to ſay otherwiſe, and yet deprehend not any ſuch pride, immodeſty, or want of conſcientiouſneſs in my ſpeech, nor any ſuch high cenſure as he ſhould tremble to paſs, but as humble and fair an anſwer as is to be given to the queſtion. Godly, learned, and humble men have differed in the points of Prelacy, Ceremonies, Ordinances, even in things that in themſelves were eaſie to be diſcerned. What cenſure is eaſier than this, when ſome of them have continued in an error eaſily diſcernible, to ſay it hath been through wilfulneſs or negligence? which things are incident to the beſt and ableſt, when they have a conceit of the point as of ſmall moment, ſpecially in compariſon of peace and unity, when prejudice by education, determinations of Councils, Schools, leading Writers, Magiſtrates cenſures, &c. prepoſſeſſing them, draw them from examining it, or if they do examine it, makes them willing to ſatisfie themſelves with imperfect and raw anſwers to their ſcruples, and moſt of all, when the loſs of Preferment, Friends, Eſtate, Liberty comes to be in queſtion, and pre-engagements make it grievous to retract. What I ſaid of this is manifeſt by the inſtance I gave about Lutheran Conſubſtantiation, which M. B. ſhould have ſhewed not to be appoſitely brought, and not carp and cavil at my words ſo often as he doth (though they were but in a ſpeech in private conference) that he may paint me out in as ugly ſhape as he can, ſpecially to thoſe of Bewdley, my dear Auditors heretofore, but now cauſleſly by his affrightments eſtranged from me; which if it be not a fruit of malevolence in him I know not what to call it. As for his talk of his own doubts and pains to reſolve himſelf, and the eaſineſs and plainneſs of the grounds of it, it ſatisfies not me, but ſtill I am ſuſpitious of his negligence in not conſidering better many of thoſe things he hath taken up. In which I am confirmed from his own confeſſions of prejudice, unwillingneſs to be put on this buſineſs, in that it diverted him from other enjoyments and ſtudies, and from his haſty printing, his indiſtinct handling ſpecially of his second argument, never clearly opening his terms, nor shewing the hypotheses on which he builds his second main argument, his disorderly placing his proofs, his heaping up impertinent Texts, his mistakes of my answers, his overly reading my writings out of contempt of them, his frivolous questions, and expostulations, &c. And for his inference about my wilfulness or negligence, it is but a further piece of petulancy to insinuate that of me, in which my Apology, Sect. 4. might have undeceived him, though it were not then so easie to discern that error as now, after so much debating of it, did not pride, prejudice, fear, or some other partial affection hinder. And for Mr. Bs. conceit of his grounds, though I neither finde them easie nor plain, yet it is no marvel others discern not how infant-baptism can be inferred from them, which can at most prove a reasonableness of the thing, as Mr. Bedford, Dr. Field, Dr. Hammond, and others speak, but not an institution of God, which must be gathered from precept or example in the N.T. and can onely warrant our practice as the minde of God in meer positives about worship in the New Testament. In the explication of his second Proposition, pag. 10. he again objects my speech, that Mr. Ms. Principle on which he establisheth his Proof from Circumcision for infant-baptism is one of the first condemned Heresies, by which I meant that Proposition which he hath in his Sermon, pag. 35. that all Gods commands and institutions about the Sacraments of the Jews binde us as much as they did them, in all things which belong to the substance of the Covenant, and were not accidental to them, in which thus much is maintained, that some part of the command of Circumcision, and the other Sacraments of the Jews, binde us as much as they did the Jews, which is expressly condemned, Acts 15. 24. as subverting the soules of the Gentiles, and is called, the heresie of the false Apostles, by the Century-writers, Cent. 1. lib. 2. cap. 5. and others rende.nn it under the title of Judaism. But then saith Mr. B. Mr. M. is an Heretick with me, and all the Divines in the world that go his way. To which I answer, This inference hath too much shew of Sycophancy, being urged so often, and to the People of Bewdley, my quondam Auditors. For, 1. though I say that Doctrine is such an Heresie, yet I do not say Mr. M. still holds it as his words did import; yea, I did acknowledg in my Apology, pag. 99. and in this writing Sect. 2. that Mr. M. doth deny that we are tied to any practise of the ritual part, which is indeed to retract his former speech in his Sermon. 2. But were it tru that he did still hold it, yet it would not follow, that he were an Heretick with me. For, 1. I should not take him to be an Heretick that holds that Doctrine which is Heresie, if it were not so directly, but onely by consequence not heeded, as this of his is. 2. Nor do I take him to be an Heretick that doth hold that which is Heresie directly, except he hold it in or with a party made to maintain it. And therefore I do once more protest against Mr. B's. calumniatory inference, and deny that I account Mr. M. an Heretick, and yet I account still his Principle mentioned, if it were held as the words in the Sermon did import, to contain one of the first condemned Heresies, to wit, Judaism. To this calumny Mr. B. adds another. Because I used the words of the Apostle, Acts 20.26,27. in a Sermon, he from the report of his Notary, and a multitude of my Auditors, likely his tale tellers, without sending to me about the truth of it, prints what he received from them, and thence infers, that the baptizing of persons of years, notwithstanding their infant-baptism, is taken by me for a fundamental point, which the salvation or damnation of men doth necessarily depend on. Or what I meant to say [their blood be on their own heads] he knows not. And yet he conceives me to contradict my self when I blame the Papists for making baptism of necessity to salvation.

To which I reply, that herein Mr. B. shews his inconsiderateness, or his minde to calumniate, or both. For, 1. he might have interpreted my words, as I think when I spake them they were meant, in reference to other duties which I had taught them, with that of Baptism. 2. If it were meant particularly of Baptism, yet the threatning I conceive was not to the bare omission, but to the omission joyned with opposition. 3. I am sure, if I did threaten, their blood should be on their head for omission of Baptism, it was not simply or barely for the omission, but for the omission after teaching, and upon supposition of conviction, by it of their duty: And this I think Mr. B. doth not stick to do to his hearers, in case after teaching and supposed conviction by it, they practise not a duty, though non-fundamental, as suppose reproving of their neighbours. For then they live presumptuously in sin, and such sinning consists not with sincerity and truth of Regeneration. And yet this doth not suppose the point in it self fundamental, that is, such as the meer ignorance of it, or the bare omission of it doth damn a person, or exclude out of the kingdom of God: in which sense I blame the Papists for maintaining a necessity of an infants being baptized to its entering into the kingdom of Heaven.

But Mr. B. doth not think God lays so great a stress on this point, as I and others do.

Answ. That which I hold is this, 1. that Baptism with Water is an Ordinance of Christ that bindes Christians now as well as in the Apostles days, Mat. 28.19. Mark 16.15,16. Act. 2.38. & 10. 47,48. Ephes. 4.5. And I detest the audacious impiety of Socinians, and those in our days, who count themselves above Ordinances, that is as Mr. B. well interprets it, Plain Scripture Proof, &c. pag. 24. above obedience to God, and so Gods, as being one of the most palpable delusions of unsound men in our days, who place their perfection in a manifest disobedience to Christs appointment, and some of them in an Antichristian presumption, as if they sate in the Temple of God, and shewed themselves as God, do most arrogantly of their own heads, without any allowance of God, make void the expres prime Ordinance of the Lord Jesus Christ, calling it a low dispensation, &c. I hope I shall have liberty hereafter to shew the frivolous allegations and pretences of these men. In the mean time they may see what Mr. Laurence, Mr. Bartlet, M. S. pag. 341. of this his Book, have written for these Ordinances. 2. I hold that every Minister of the Gospel is bound, as to preach the Gospel, so to baptize those that are made Disciples, Matth. 28. 19. 3. That every believing Christian is by necessity of precept tied to be baptized, that is, dipped in water, in testimony of his profession of Christ his Lord, upon his being made a Disciple of Christ, Mat. 28.19. Mark 16.15,16. Acts 2.38. & 22. 16. 4. That this is ordinarily where and when it may be had without unmercifulness, defect of water, or some other like reason, a necessary means of salvation, Mark 16.16. 1 Pet. 3.21. Tit. 3.4,5. Eph. 4.4,5. 5. That infant-baptism is not the performance of the duty of being

Mr. Blake, Vind. Sacr. cap. 6. That is the Covenant draught, terms of the Covenant we bride, He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned, Mark 16.16 baptized according to Christs appointment. 6. That in a regular and orderly way, persons, notwithstanding their pretended infant-baptism, are not to be admitted to the Lords Supper till they be baptized upon profession of their faith in Christ, Acts 2.41,42 1 *Cor.*10.2,3,4. & 12.13. These things I may hereafter have opportunity to debate more fully. As for that which Mr. B. saith, *pag.*10,11. It doth no whit overthrow this necessity which I assert, but rather confirm it: For Gods freeing us from the great burden of Jewish rites makes it the rather necessary for us to obey Christs appointment in those few Sacraments he hath ordained, which Mr. B. truly saith, As they are duties they are great, and so in themselves considered, and not onely in respect of the consequences of them. And he saith truly, *pag.*11. All Christs commands must be obeyed, both great and small, so far as we know them. Yea, Mr. *B. Scripture proof, pag.*342. saith, *Baptism with Water is Heb.*6.2. reckoned among the foundations or principles which are of standing use, and therefore it is so it self. Nor is his interpretation right, that the things ascribed to Baptism are ascribed to it without the external washing. In all these places, *Rom.*6.3,4. 1 Cor. 12.13. *Gal.*3.27. *Ephes.*5.25,27. 1 Peter 3.21. the outward use of Water is expressed, though the things ascribed to it do presuppose something more, as he himself allegeth them, *pag.*342. which is the meaning of that speech, 1 Pet, 3.21. Not the putting away of the filthiness of the flesh, that is, not it onely, but the answer of a good conscience towards God joyned with it. And whereas Mr. B. tells us, that we shall never be able to justifie it, if we lay out the hundredth part, or perhaps the thousand part of our time, study, talk or zeal upon this question, I confess this may be true at some times, in some persons: but if other tenets be clear, and other duties not neglected, and this becomes a doubt of conscience, and falls into frequent practice, so as that it concerns them much for themselves, people, and little ones to be resolved in it, else they shall sin either by omitting a duty, or by doing a thing with gain-saying or doubting conscience, it is justifiable, though they bestow more than a hundredth part of their time and study upon it. And especially if the person be a Minister called to be a Guide to the People, and by special providence and solemn covenant led forth to vindicate the truth in such a time, when otherwise it is likely to be suppressed, and

the Assertors of it oppressed. In these and such like cases it may be unjustifiable, if a person do not spend more than the hundredth part of his time about this question; else neither the Hussites will be justified in spending so much time in opposing the half-Communion, nor the Protestants in opposing Transubstantiation, nor the Non-Conformists in opposing the Ceremonies of Bishops. Mr. Tho. Goodwin preface to Mr. Cottons Dialogue for infant baptism, saith truly, The due application of baptism to all those persons Christ would have it administred unto, cannot but be apprehended by all that have any insight into the Controversies of these times, to be of very high importance. Not that I like their Carriage that neglect other necessary things, and spend all their time, study, talk, and zeal about this, such hypocrisy I should declaim against with him, remembring what our Saviour said in a like case, Matth. 23. 23. These things ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone.

As for M. Bs. third Proposition concerning the grounds on which the point of infant baptism stands, that they are of great moment, because what he saith, rests on the heap of consequences he infers from the denial of infant baptism (of which there is scarse any one true) and the shewing them to be but vain surmises, depends on the dispute it self, I shall therefore respite the vindicating the truth from them, till I come to examine in this Review the arguments from Scripture urged on both sides, after which shall come in those from humane testimony and reason, unto which I now apply my self.

The first argument from the institution, Mat. 28. 19. Mark 16. 16. and the practice in the New Testament against Infant baptism is urged.

MR. B. saith pag. 8. he will prove, 1. That it is the will of God that some infants should be baptized. 2. that it is the will of God that all infants of believers ordinarily should be baptized.

This

This latter doth better state the question, which is about the practice of those reformed Churches that baptize infants, whose doctrine is, that it is the privilege of a believers child. Yet Mr. B. and M. Baillee for some advantage chuse to undertake the proof of the former, whereas the true state of it is, as in my Examen s. 2. and Mr. Ms. Sermon, Whether the infants of believers are to be baptized with Christs baptism of Water by the lawful Minister according to ordinary rule? I hold the Negative, Mr. Marshall, Dr. Homes, Mr. Geree, Mr. Blake, Mr. Baillee, Mr. Cobbet, Mr. Baxter, &c. hold the Affirmative. My dispute is to this purpose.

The ordinary rule for baptizing is Christs institution, John the Baptists, and the Apostles appointment and practice: But neither according Christs institution, nor according to John Baptists, or the Apostles command or practice, or any other approved example in Scripture, is the baptizing of infants of believers; Therefore the baptizing of infants of believers by a lawfull Minister is not according to ordinary rule. The Major is confessed by all sorts, specially Protestants and Anti-Prelatists.

Mr. Bs. words are cited by me in my Præcursor, s. 16. and the force of his reason is shewed here before s. 4. to contain this Proposition, What in baptism we have no warrant for by word or example in all the New Testament (since the solemn institution of baptism Mat. 28.) we are not to do; and much more to like purpose may be gathered from other passages of his page 302, 303. and Mr. M. in his Sermon on 2 Chron. 15. 2. is very punctuall for Gods command to be observed in his worship. The 28 Article of the Church of England against reservation of the Bread &c. hath these words, The Sacrament of the Lords Supper was not by Christs Ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped, whereby it is apparent that reservation of the bread is condemned, because it is not by Christs Ordinance,

M. Collings Epi. to the Reader before his Vind. Minst. Evang. In things relating to the worship of God it is a general rule, in which our brethren and we have long since agreed, That nothing ought to be done without an express warrant in the Gospel.

Sic emendatum fuit, quod olim admittebatur, ut infantibus porrigeretur eucharistia: quoniam institutio habet, ut seipsum probet, qui de hoc pane sit esurus: similis omnino & communionis ratio; quandoquidem dictum, Accipite, edite.* Mr. Selden lib. 1. de Jyned. Modorum & temperamentorum ejusmodi ex arbitrio Humano accessione, ut id quod esset institutum aliquod Divinum novaretur aut ullatenus mutaretur, nunquam ritè permissum est. If all these testimonies satisfy not, the Apostle Pauls speech 1 Cor. 11. 22. yields us this truth, that the institution of Christ is that whereby an abuse in a sacrament is to be reformed, and therefore is the ordinary rule according to which the sacrament is to be administred. Whence the New Annot. on that place infer, The only way to reform any abuses in the Church, is to have recourse to the word of God and first institution. And even the Assembly it self Confession of faith chap. 20. make many things used by Papists, as private masses, half-communion, adoration, elevation, reservation of the bread, contrary to the nature of the Sacrament, and to the institution of Christ, and prove it only by these texts. 1 Cor. 10. 16. Mark 14. 23. 1 Cor. 11. 25, 26,

27,28,29. *Matth.*15.9. which are no proof without this Proposition, To vary from the institution in things appointed is evil, as being an humane invention, or worshipping of God after the commands of men, contrary to *Matth.*15.9. The Minor is confessed by Mr. Cawdrey Sab. Rediv. part. 4 *ch.*1. num. 59. We have not in Scripture either precept or example of children baptized. Mr. M. in his Sermon pag.35. that there is neither expresse command or example in the New Testament that children should be, or were baptized, and pag. 44. It is said indeed that they taught and baptized, and no expresse mention of any other, and a little after, both John and Christs disciples and Apostles did teach before they baptized, because then no other were capable of baptisme: But that we may not seem to beg what is to be proved, I further argue thus. The institution and practice of the Sacrament of Christian baptism is set down in the New Testament; But baptizing of infants of believers is neither according to the institution of Christ, nor any practice or example therein, Ergo. The Major is plain of it self: For Christian baptism being a Sacrament of the New Testament, must have its institution and example to regulate it, there or no where. It is frequently put into the definition of the Sacraments of the New Testament, that they are ordained by Christ himself, and for defect of Christs institution in the New Testament, sundry things are denyed to be Sacraments of the New Testament. The Minor is proved from the texts which speak of baptism, either of the institution or practise. From both which I argue thus. *Matth.*28.19. is Christs institution, Mr. B. calls it The solemn institution of baptisme: But the baptizing of infants of believers is not according to Christs institution of baptism *Matth.*28.19. Ergo. The Minor is proved, First from the Subjects appointed to be baptized, to wit disciples of all Nations. They that are not disciples of Christ are not appointed to be baptized. *Norton resp. ad Apollon. c.*2. *pag.*34. *non μαθηταὶ non sunt baptizandi: Matth.*28.19. discipulate baptizantes. But infants of believers are not disciples of Christ; Therefore they are not appointed to be baptized. That [disciples] included in the verb [μαθητεύσατε make disciples] as [πίστις] is Rom. 4. 4. in [ὀφείλημα] is the substantive to [αὐτῶν, them] is proved from the expression, John 4 1. where it is said [when the Pharisees heard that Jesus

ſus ποιεῖ μαθητὰς καὶ βαπτίζει, maketh diſciples and baptizeth] This the Evangeliſt ſaith was done by the Diſciples of Chriſt. Now what they did before in Judæa, they were after appointed to do among all Nations, Matth. 28. 19. Therefore no other were appointed to be baptized than were baptized before, Iohn 4. 1. (ſaving only with greater extent) that is, diſciples made of, or among, or in all Nations. Beza annot. in Mat. 28. 19. Diſcipulos facite, μαθητεύσατε, id eſt diſcipulos mihi facite ex omnibus gentibus, Make to me diſciples out of all Nations. Norton reſp. ad Apollon. c. 2. pag. 35. μαθητεύειν is to make diſciples, Joh. 4. 1. Cameron in his Lecture on Mat. 19. 3. προσηλυτεύειν, to make a proſelyte, is as Mat. 28. 19. μαθητεύειν is ſaid for [to make a diſciple]. This is confirmed in that what is ſaid of Joſeph Mat. 27. 57. ὃς καὶ αὐτὸς ἐμαθητεύθη τῷ Ἰησοῦ, rendred by the vulgar Latin, Beza, our Engliſh, &c. [who alſo himſelf was Ieſus diſciple] is Iohn 19. 38. ὢν μαθητὴς τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, being diſciple to Ieſus. Whereby it is apparent that in both places, in Matthew the Noun [diſciple] is included in the Verb, though in Matthew 28. 19. it be uſed actively [make diſciples] in the other Matthew 27. 57. it is uſed paſſively [he was himſelf a Diſciple] The ſame is to be conceived of the two other places where the word is uſed Matthew 13. 52. μαθητευθεὶς made a diſciple. Acts 14. 21. μαθητεύσαντες ἱκανοὺς had made many diſciples. And this is further proved from the parallel place Mark 16. 15 16. where [preach the Goſpel to every Creature] anſwers to [make diſciples all nations] and [he that believeth and is baptized] anſwers to [baptizing them] which plainly ſhews the ſub-

ject of baptism to be disciples, and those disciples to be believers, as Chamier proves panst: cath. tom. 3. l. 12. c. 9. s. 15. But such are not infants of believers. Ergo, they are not appointed to be baptized. 2. Those only Christ appointed to be baptized to whom the Gospel was preached, and the persons taught; But such are not infants, Ergo. The Major is plain both by the words, Mat. 28. 19. make disciples, which is by teaching, and more plainly from Mark 16. 15. Go preach the Gospel to every Creature, which answers to [disciple all nations] and this is to precede baptism. This is confirmed by the Apostles practice, which shews how they understood Christs words, and how we should understand them, for they baptized none till they were taught, Ergo neither should we. Conformable hereto is the constant exposition & observation of former and later writers and Expositors, of whom as they have occurred to me I shall set down their words. *Athanasius Orat. contra Arianos. And the like to Beda, Anselmus, Aquinas, Paschasius, Rabanus, Lucas Brugensis, Iansenius, and many others on Matth. 28. 19. which were it necessary might be produced: whence the Ancients deduced, that persons were first to be catechized, and then to be baptized: which was constantly observed, except in case of present danger of death towards children of believers, untill some later ages. But because later Protestant writers are of more esteem with most of my Antagonists, I will adde some of them. Calvin in Matthew 28. 19. *apud Marlor. Com. in Matt. 28. 19. Colligite mihi Ecclesiam inter omnes gentes, prædicatione vestra adducentes eos ad fidem. Alsted. Theol. polem. parte 3. pag. 251. Ut præcipitur ex coharentia sententiarum Matth. 28. docete omnes gentes (nempe prædicando Evangelium) baptizantes eos. Conferatur Marc. 16. Becm. Exercit. Th. 17. p. 259, 260. Doctrina præcedit, baptismus sequitur. Mr. Cotton, The way of the Churches in New England, chap. 4. sect. 6. And indeed the Commission which Christ gave his Apostles, holdeth it forth that they were by preaching to make disciples before they baptized them and their children. This later is his own addition, the rest is right and to my purpose. But sure Christ did not appoint to preach the Gospel to infants, therefore he did not appoint to baptize them. For Christ appointed his Disciples to baptize none but they who were first preached to, and consequently they do it without Commission from Christ, who baptize infants ordinarily without preaching the Gospel to them. I suppose no man will conceive Christ appointed infants of a day old to have the Gospel preached to them, it had been a ridiculous injunction; therefore neither did he appoint them to be baptized. For both commands are joined together concerning the same persons.

Piscator observ. in Matth. 28. 19. Docete omnes gentes (nempe prædicando Evangelium, ut declarat Marcus) baptizantes eos, volt ergo ut prius constet de alicujus fide, quam is baptizetur.

Collings vin. Min. Evang pag 36. It is the first act in ministerial Commission Mat. 28, 19. first preach, then baptize.

3. The institution is, To baptize into the name of the Father, Son, and holy Spirit, But the baptizing of infants is not into the name of the Father, Son and holy Spirit; Ergo their baptism is not according to the institution. The Minor is proved from the right understanding of the meaning of the phrase of baptizing into the name of the Father, Son and holy Ghost, Beza annot. in Matthew 28. 19. Into the name] that is the Father, Son and Holy Spirit being called upon. And this interpretation is confirmed from the words of Ananias to Paul Acts 22. 16. Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord, where is injoined calling on the name of the Lord with baptizing, which explaineth what Christ had appointed, Mat. 28.

28. 19. Of baptizing into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Or to be baptized into the name is to be baptized with the person baptized, his devoting himself to the Service of the Father, Son, and holy Spirit. This is gathered from the phrase 1 Cor. 1. 13. Were ye baptized into the name of Paul? Beza annot. in Acts 19. 3. Baptizari autem in ejus nomen dicimur, cui nos per baptismum dicamus ac consecramus: quamobrem recte Paulus negat se in nomen suum quemquam baptizâsse. Or to be baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Spirit, is to be baptized with profession of that doctrine, to wit, that Jesus is the Son of God, Act. 8. 37. testifyed by the Father, Son and Spirit, Mat. 3. 17. 1 John 5. 5, 6, 7. as to be baptized into Johns baptism, Acts 19. 3. whether the same with being baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus, verse 5. as those conceive that expound the words as spoken of what John did, or different, yet it was with profession of doctrine, as Beza annot. in Acts 19. 3. Baptizari in Ioannis baptisma significat doctrinam quam Ioannes annunciabat, ac baptismi symbolo obsignabat, profiteri, & baptismo adhibito amplecti. I will add the words of Grotius annot. in Matth. 28 9. εἰς τὸ ὄνομα] cum locutio, hac varias habeat ex Hebraismo significationes, eam his præferendam arbitror, quæ baptismo maximè propria est. Est autem baptizari in aliquem, vel in ejus nomen, se ei auctorare atq; devovere, & de ejus nomine appellari velle. Paulus 1 Cor. 10. 2. πάντες εἰς τὸν Μωσῆν ἐβαπτίσαντο, respiciens illud Exodi 14 31. Crediderunt in Deum & Mosen servum ejus, id est, Mosi tanquam Dei ministro cum bona fiducia regendos se commisisse, sic Paulus negat quenquam baptizatum in suum nomen, 1 Corinth. 1. 13, 15. hoc est, sibi velut novi dogmatis auctori mancipatum. Maimonides de bello capta טבילה בשם גירות: baptizet eam in nomen proselytarum, id est, in eam religionem quam profitentur proselytæ. Christiani igitur tres sui dogmatis auctores agnoscere jubebantur, Patrem, filium & spiritum sanctum, nihilq; ut necessarium admittere, quod non ab eis esset profectum, id est, quod non à patre ortum, à filio prodiisum, à spiritu verò esset partim explicatum apertius, partim obsignatum. Administratur enim baptismus, ut loquitur Hilarius, in confessione, & auctoris & unigeniti & dom. But infants of believers vers do neither call upon the Father, Son, and holy Spirit, nor devote themselves to their service, nor profess the doctrine of Christ, Therefore they are not baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and holy Spirit, according to Christs appointment.

Mr. M. Defence page 266. calls these petty reasonings, and saith, That baptizing into the name of the Father, Son, and holy Ghost shou'd be interpreted to be invocation of Gods name, and so to make baptism and prayer all one, is strange divinity.

I reply, My words are perverted by him: I said baptizing is to be with the party baptized his invocation of the name of the Lord, not that baptism and prayer are all one, but that they should be concomitants, and together in the use of baptism after Christs appointment. And this is no strange divinity to others, however it be to Mr. M. The words of Ananias Acts 22. 16. Beza on Matthew 28. 19. shew it to be no strange or forced Divinity. Becman Exercit. Theol. 17. p. 251. hath the like, In nomen hoc est invocato nomine Christi baptizamur. The New Annot. on 1 Cor. 1. 13. The third reason taken from the form and end of baptism, wherein we make a promise to Christ, calling on also the name of the Father, and the Holy Ghost. The words of Grotius a learned man, whatever his other qualities were, shew it to be old Divinity. Annot. on Matthew 28. 19. he speaks thus, Post has ergo stipulationes atq; responsiones, quas verba Sacramenti Tertullianus vocat ad militia morem alludens, sequebatur baptismus, cui accedebant preces in quibus nominabantur Pater, Filius, & Spiritus Sanctus. Orationem hanc proprie ad patrem directam indicare videtur Justinus, ἐπονομάζεται τῷ ἑλομένῳ ἀναγεννηθῆναι καὶ μετανοήσαντι ἐπὶ τοῖς ἡμαρτημένοις τὸ τοῦ παντὸς θεοῦ τῶν ὅλων, καὶ δεσπότου θεοῦ ὄνομα, αὐτὸ τοῦτο μόνον ἐπιλέγοντες. Deinde, καὶ ἐπὶ ὀνόματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ ἐπ' ὀνόματος πνεύματος ἁγίου ὀφωπίζομενος λέγεται. Solemne ejus invocationis verbum erat Abba Pater, ut notat Chrysostomus 8. ad Rom. 15. The words in Chrysostome hom. 10. ἐν ᾧ κράζομεν Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ τοῦτο ἦν ἴδιλικον ῥῆμα, ἴσασιν οἱ μύσται, καλῶς ἐπὶ τῆς εὐχῆς τῆς μυστικῆς τοῦτο πρῶτον κελευόμενοι τὸ ῥῆμα λέγειν. That is, by which we cry Abba Father. This holy Ministers know what it is, rightly commanding to say this word first at the mystical prayer, meaning at baptism. Grotius goes on thus. His si additus id quod Acts 22. 16. refertur ab Ananiâ dictum

Paule βαπτισθέντας ἐπικαλεσαμένους τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου, Videbis tum eum qui baptizabatur, tum eos qui baptismo aderant (neque enim in toto cœtu exercebatur primis temporibus, quod ostendunt, &c.) solitos orare Deum patrem ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Χριστοῦ, quomodo ipse orare nos docet, John 14.13,14. Ut fidem ejus qui baptizabatur, & liberam illam christianismi professionem muneraret spiritu suo sancto per gradus quosdam, quorum initium erat, ὁ φωτισμὸς. Grotius notes to like purpose on Luke 3.21. where it is said, Jesus being baptized, and praying, the Heaven was opened; which shews Christ prayed at his Baptism, and thereupon the Spirit descended; which the Ancients conceived as a Rule, and is at least recorded as an Example to be imitated.

Mr. Cobbet in his Just Vindic. pag. 182. cals this New Light, which if he mean Ironically, (as it is likely he doth) he may hereby perceive, that he is mistaken, and for what he excepts against this Exposition, that neither in the baptizing of the Samaritans, Acts 8. was that Rule observed, nor was it possible that the three thousand baptized in one day, Acts 2. should arise each of them, and call upon the Name of the Lord, as they were baptized; it proceeds upon a mistake, as if no calling on the Name of the Lord were sufficient, but that which was set and solemn before the publick Assembly, whereas neither is Baptism necessary to be administred before the publick Assembly: Grotius proves out of Justin Martyrs words, and otherwise, that it was administred not as they now do infant-sprinkling in the publick meeting place, but in some place without, aside from the publick Assembly, and the calling on the Name of the Lord was or might be ejaculatory, whether in the heart onely, or by words, praying to the Father by Christ for the Spirit.

Mr. M. makes this inference from my words; Then it seems if the party baptized call on the Name of the Lord by prayer, that's all that is intended by baptizing into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

But this is but another of his pervertings of my words: for in the same place I joyned with it, devoting themselves to the service of, and adherence to the Father, Son, and Spirit, which I proved out of 1 Cor. 1.13,15. which proves plainly that to be baptized into the Name of the Father, Son, and Spirit, notes not a Ministers Commission mission from the Father, Son, and Spirit, nor a Form of words to be used by him at Baptism, whether the party baptized understand it or no, but in baptizing, engaging the party baptized to acknowledg the Father, Son, and Spirit, as Lord and Teacher, Diod. Annot. in 1 Cor. 1.15. In mine own Name] as to binde them unto me to acknowledg me for their Head. Hence Johns Baptism is the Doctrine he preached, and the baptized by him professed, Mark 1.4. Acts 10.47. & 19.3. and the Pharisees therefore were not baptized of John, Luke 7.30. because they should have professed Johns Doctrine, which they were against, if they had been baptized of him, as their Disciples did their Doctrine, and Johns Disciples did his. Clear therefore it is, that [baptizing into the Name] doth note not onely the act of the Ministers of Baptism, but also the party baptized his act of invocating, addicting, profession of Service and Doctrine, and obediently testifying it by that sign: for that is plain from the command, Acts 2.38. Let every one of you be baptized in the Name of Jesus Christ, ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι, which is the requiring of a duty from them conjoyned with repentance, and herefore to be baptized is not meerly passive, but implies a voluntary yielding of a person to it. And it is further proved from the words to Paul, Acts 22.16. where he is commanded, ἀναστὰς βάπτισαι καὶ ἀπόλουσαι, Arise, baptise, and wash, which all require voluntary action on his part, as well as ministration on Ananias his part, out of which this argument is formed: They are not baptized into Christs Name, or his Fathers, and Spirits Name, who do not perform the acts required in that expression; But infants of believers do not perform the acts required in that expression; therefore they are not baptized into Christs Name, or his Fathers, or Spirits, according to the meaning of it in the institution. So that this argument is not a petty reasoning, but a solid reason, to prove infants baptism not such as Christ appointed. As for Mr. Ms. frivolous question, Were not the infants of the Jews devoted to God by Circumcision, though they could not actually devote themselves? Though I am not bound to answer his impertinent questions, yet I will tell him they were; yet this is nothing to the business in hand, about the meaning of the Phrase [to be baptized into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit] which manifestly implies the party baptized his act, which infants cannot do. Whereas no where there is such a command [Be ye circumcised in the Name of Jesus Christ] nor is it all one to be circimcised, as to be baptized; which is still supposed but never proved.

4. I further urged, Christ bids the Apostles presently after Baptism, Teach them to observe what ever he commanded; But this direction could not pertain to infants, they could not be taught to observe Christs commands; therefore neither were they appointed to be baptized: Mr. M. denies that they were enjoyned presently to teach them to observe what Christ commanded. But the Text knits these together, Baptizing and Teaching, so as that they that were baptized should be taught, & that by them that baptized them; which the Apostles could not do, being to go up and down from place to place, to plant the Churches in all Nations, if they had been to baptize infants; for then they must have staid many years till they came to understanding to be taught to observe what Christ commanded. No man me thinks should imagine Christs appointment to be thus, Make infants disciples, and baptize them, and then after five, six, or ten years, when they are grown to some understanding, come again and teach them to observe what I have commanded, but that Christ did appoint them to teach them presently after Baptism, that is, in so many hours or days after that Ordinance was administred, as it could be well done. Nor doth Mr. Cobbet avoid this objection by saying, pag. 179. then they must be presently taught the whole minde of Christ, which is impossible. For [presently] is not restained to an instant, but comprehends a just latitude of time for the doing of the thing, onely it notes that the beginning of it is to be not long after Baptism, but sooner by much than it could be done to infants. Mr. Baxter Plain Scripture Proof, pag. 341. argues thus, What Christ hath conjoyned, man must not separate; but Christ hath conjoyned Discipling and Baptizing, (I add, and Teaching) therefore we must not separate them.

5. The institution of Christ is best understood by the command of the Apostles, the resolution of Philip, the practice of John Baptist, the Apostles, and other men sent by God to baptize; but the Apostle Peter commanded first Repentance and then Baptism, Acts 2. 38. Philip resolved the Eunuch demanding, What hin-

dereth me to be baptised? If thou believest with all thy heart, ἔξεστι, thou maist, it is lawfull or allowed thee, Acts 8.36,37. John the Baptist, the Apostles, and other holy men sent by God to baptize, baptized none but Professors of Repentance, Faith, and being Disciples of Christ, as may appear by the Texts mentioning their baptizing, *Mat.*3.6. Mark 1.5. Luke 3.10. Acts 2.41. & 8.12,13,38. & 9.18. & 10.47. & 11.17,18. & 16.15,31,32,33. & 18.8. & 19.5. & 22.16. Therefore Christs institution is of baptizing only Professors of Repentance, Faith, and being Disciples of Christ, and therefore not infants of believers. The major cannot be denied by those that confess that Scripture best expounds Scripture, and that the Apostles knew Christs minde, and did observe it. The minor is manifest from the Texts alleged. And Mr. Rutherfords words are expres to that purpose, *Divine Right of Church-government, cap.*5 *q.*1. *pag.*257. We reade that John Baptist and the Apostles baptized none but such as confessed their sins, and professed faith in Christ Jesus.

To this Mr. *M. Defence, pag.*227. says, that it would be a hard task for me to prove that John baptized none but upon profession of Repentance.

I reply, 1. It is proved already and confessed by Mr. Rutherford. 2. I did think Mr. Ms. own words, *Sermon pag.*44. that John did teach before he baptized, because then no other were capable of Baptism, did amount to as much, till Mr. M. to help himself, referred [then] to the time untill Parents were converted not to the time of Johns and the Apostles ministry, of which the objection was, to which in those words he answered. For the objection was, that they always taught and made them Disciples, by teaching before they baptized any; and Mr. Ms. words in his answer were, John and Christs Disciples, and the Apostles, did teach before they baptized, because then no other were capable of Baptism, which if not understood of the time of their Ministery, it was an answer besides the objection. 3. Mr. M. hath not yet shewed any other, but such baptized by them, and therefore it is probable in the highest degree of probability that no other were baptized by them. 4. I think an argument in this matter from the Evangelists relation negatively is good proof, unless we will suppose John Baptist and the Apostles were defective in their duty, or the Evangeliſts in their narrations of that which frequently (if it had been their duty) would have occurred, and their ſtory lead them to mention, and it was of much concernment to the Churches of God in after Ages they ſhould.

2. He ſaith, It would be hard to prove that John did impoſe or require confeſſion of ſin before baptiſm.

Reply. I think not, 1. what they did, ſure was required of them, elſe it had not been an aceeptable thing, and by John, elſe he had failed in his duty, Luke 1.17. But they confeſſed ſin afore Baptiſm, *Matth.*3.6. Mark 1.5. Ergo. 2. He that preached repentance to them that came to be baptized, required confeſſion of ſins (which is a chief part of it) afore Baptiſm; But ſo did John, *Matth.*3.2. Ergo. 3. He that preached to them to prepare the way of the Lord, required confeſſion of ſins afore Baptiſm, for that was the preparing the way of the Lord by bringing perſons to confeſs ſins, and then to baptiſe them; But John did preach to prepare the way of the Lord, *Mat.*3.3. 4. He that preached the Baptiſm of repentance, required confeſſion of ſin to Baptiſm; But John did preach the Baptiſm of repentance, Mark 1.4. Luke 3.3. Acts 13.24. & 19.4.

To prevent this, ſaith Mr. M. It is ſaid, he baptized them εἰς μετάνοιαν, (unto repentance) not ἐν μετανοίᾳ, (in repentance) as ſtated in actual repentance.

But dare Mr. M. in good earneſt ſay that John Baptiſt did admit perſons to Baptiſm that were not in a ſtate of repentance? If he ſhould, I doubt not but to be able to prove the contrary from that which is ſaid of thoſe he baptized, *Matth.*3.6. They were baptized of him in Iordan, confeſſing their ſins; and Mark 1.5. They were all baptized of him in the River of Iordan, confeſſing their ſins; [all] muſt not be underſtood ſimply, for ſo it were not true, but, as the matter requires, with this limitation, all that were baptized were baptized confeſſing of ſins, which was a ſtate of repentance, *Matth.*21.32. the different ſtate of thoſe that believed Iohn, and thoſe that believed not, is expreſſed thus, the one repented that they might believe, and the other not. And by comparing it with Luke 7.29,30. it appears they onely were baptized that believed Iohn, and others not. But were it not Mr. M. had been minded to wrangle, there had been no need to have proved ed this, His own words, That there was a new Church to be constituted of those that should receive Christ, Sermon page 44. shews none were to be baptized but penitents, unless they were to be Church members who were not in a state of repentance. Would Iohn admit manifest impenitents? Then the new Church should consist of impenitents, and so no difference between the Church and the world, them that receive Christ and them that receive him not, all should be Church-members. Iohns baptism and Christs is by Protestants asserted to be all one, saving that the one pointed at Christ to come after, Acts 19. 4. the other as already manifested by name, neither did admit any but penitents, and believers in shew. As for Mr. Ms. quirk, that he baptiz.d εἰς μετάνοιαν Matthew 3. 11. unto repentance, not ἐν μετανοίᾳ in repentance. 1. I might urge Erasmus his reading ad pœnitentiam, at or upon their repentance, as the like is to be expounded Matthew 12. 41. εἰς τὸ κήρυγμα Ιωνᾶ not [unto] but [at the preaching of Ionas. 2. There is no need, for both are true, and may be proved out of the text, that he preached repentance to be before baptism and after. That he preached repentance to be before baptism is already proved, and Pareus in his Comment. on Matthew 3. 5. disputing against Maldonate the Iesuite, who applies this confession of sins to Auricular confession, urgeth the tense ἐξομολογούμενοι, it is in the present tense, referring to the time of baptism, having confessed their sins, or then confessing their sins when baptized, not confessing their sins after as in Auricular confession at the sacrament of Penance as they call it. Hereupon he urgeth, Non prius baptizabantur postea confitebantur ut inepte fingit Maldonatus, and concludes, that Iohn rejected the Pharisees when he saw their hypocrisy, v. 7. and infers that his auditors first in testimony of repentance confessed their sins, and then were baptized, and gathers this doctrine, To the Sacraments no impenitents are to be admitted.

Its true that he baptized them unto future repentance, that is so as that they were required and professed to repent and change their lives. Therefore he required that they should bring forth fruits meet for repentance, Luke 3. 8. and directed particularly wherein verse 11, 13, 14. Initial repentance is prerequired to baptism, and continued repentance is to follow after, and therefore Iohn

Baptists

Baptists calling for repentance and preaching the baptism of repentance shew not only that this was the lesson they were all to learn, but that also as Pareus proves, that they must all manifest that they repented afore he baptized them, and that all did and were tied to make confession of sins, notwithstanding Mr: M. saying.

Master M. sets down the judgement of very learned men who conceive their confession of sins was not because it is a necessary medium to all who should receive baptism, but to cleer his baptism from misconstruction, to thwart the opinion of justification by the works of the Law. To which I say.

1. That were this granted, yet it avoids not my argument, who bring the matter of fact onely, it is enough for me at present if it appear that Iohn baptized none but penitents.

2. Yet the judgement of those very learned men is but their own saying, nor can it be right. For if the end of Iohns requiring repentance was only to clear his baptism from misconstruction, because the men who came to be baptized of Iohn, were such as had been educated in an opinion of justification by works of the Law, & so more was required of them than of others, as it is usual to require more of an heretick for his admission into the bosome of the Church, then he had required such confession of sins and repentance only of Pharisees and their Scholars, whereas he required it also of Publicans, Harlots, Souldiers, as may be seen Luke 3. 10,11,12,13,14. And indeed he required it of all for both ends, that he might contradict the Pharisees doctrine, and because it was a necessary prerequisite to his baptism, because his baptism was contrary to the baptism that initiated proselytes into Iudaism, in the nature of it, that is the doctrine taught by the Baptist, and professed by the baptized, the Pharisees baptism requiring observance of the Law for righteousness, and Iohns baptism requiring repentance for remission of sins, and therefore the Pharisees rejected it, Luke 7. 29, 30. so that in truth this judgement of those learned men about the reason of Iohns baptism proves against Mr. M. that repentance is to antecede baptism, and his allegation thereof may be retorted upon him.

6. To strengthen this argument from the institution of Christ and practise Apostolical, there are many passages in the Epistles, which do prove that baptism was and ought to be with such profession and acts of the baptized, as do not nor can ordinarily be ascribed to infants of believers, and therefore they are not rightly baptized according to ordinary rule. *Ro.*6.3.4 Know ye not, saith the Apostle, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death, therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newnes of life, now to be baptized into death & Christs death is by baptism to engage our selves to dy with Christ to sin, with profession of purpose of newnes of life and hope of resurrection. Beeman. Exer. Theol. 17. pag. 257. Baptizari in mortem Christi dicimur quatenus stipulamur nos credere in Christum pro nobis mortuum & ipsius exemplo veluti enecare peccatum ne nobis dominetur. But this could not infants do, therfore no infants were then baptized, and consequently ought not to be now.

1 *Cor.*12.13. For even by or in one Spirit have we been baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether bond or free, and have been all made drink into one Spirit, or as some copies have it, have been all made to drink or drench into one drink into one Spirit. That here baptism with water and the drinking the cup in the Lords Supper are meant, is manifest, the Apostle arguing from the end of those two rites for the union and communication between all Christians, as 1 Cor. 10.16, 17. he had done in the Lords Supper, and *Eph.*4.4,5. he doth from baptism. And without that allusion the phrase is not intelligible. And the exception of the Antibaptists is vain, that it is Spirit baptism not water baptism, For it is indeed both, Spirit baptism from the Spirit as the cause, and water baptism together as the outward element. Now hence three Arguments arise against infant baptism.

1. All that were baptized into the body were baptized by one spirit as the Concurrent cause as Mr. B. saith rightly in his plain Scripture proof, &c. page 342. that is together with the word, as Ephes. 5. 26. is declared, by preaching of which the Spirit was given, Gal.3.2. and this was presumed of all, as 1 Thes. 1.2.4. and elsewhere. And Mr. B. truly saith in the same place, That it was all that were thus baptized into the body. But I subsume, infants were not thus baptized, Ergo, no infants were then baptized, and consequently ought not to be now.

2. All that were thus baptized were also made to drink, or did drink themselves, or were drencht by their own act in the receiving the cup in the Lords Supper unto one Spirit in communion and testification of one Spirit, as 1 Cor. 10. 16, 17. But infants did not thus drink, Ergo infants were not then baptized.

3. All that were counted members of the body of Christ, or the Church, were thus baptized, and made to drink. But infants were not thus baptized, and made to drink, for if so, they received the Lords Supper, therefore were not then visible Church members, and consequently ought not to be so counted now.

Gal. 3. 26. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. 27. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. Where the Apostle proving that they were all the children of God by faith in Christ, because they had put on Christ, must needs intimate that it was by faith in Christ Jesus that they had put on Christ, and then the Apostles speech is this, As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have by faith in Christ Jesus put on Christ, and consequently so many as were baptized were believers, and therefore no infants were baptized for want of faith.

Ephes. 4. 4, 5. There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism. Whence I argue,

1. They that have one baptism, have also one faith; But infants had not one faith; Ergo they had not one baptism, and consequently are not to have it now.

2. One faith is placed before one baptism, therefore faith went before baptism in the Apostles daies, and consequently infants were not baptized.

3. They that were counted of one body had one faith; But infants had not one faith; therefore they were not counted of one body, that is Church-members, Mr. Bs. words p. 342. confirm this Ephes. 4. 5. As the whole Church is one body, and hath one Lord, and one faith, so hath it one common baptism,

Eph. 5. 26. That he might sanctify it, cleansing it with the washing of water by the word, whence Mr. B Plain Script. proof, p. 342. inferres, the whole Church of Christ must in duty be washed with water. Now I argue, 1. They who were washed with water, were cleanſed with the waſhing of water by the word, which word is the word preached, as where mention is made of baptiſm, there mention is made of preaching of the word going before it, and [the word] doth no where ſignifie the covenant or promiſe of God taken preciſely or abſtractively from the narration of Chriſts comming and invitation to repentance, but altogether as it was preached, as may be ſeen in Peters ſpeech, Acts 10. 36, 37, 38, &c. But infants were not cleanſed by the word; therefore they were not cleanſed by the waſhing of water.

2. The whole Church was cleanſed with the waſhing of water by the word; But ſo were not infants; therefore they were not parts of the Church, and conſequently are not now.

Col. 2. 12. Buried with him in baptiſm, wherein ye have alſo been raiſed together through the faith of the operation of God who hath raiſed him from the dead. Whence I argue. They who were buried with Chriſt in baptiſm were alſo therein raiſed together through faith, and conſequently were believers; But infants were not in baptiſm raiſed together through faith; therefore they were not buried with Chriſt in baptiſm, that is, they were not baptized, and by conſequence ought not to be.

Tit. 3. 5. is uſually expounded of baptiſm, as by Mr. B. pag. 342. ſo by many others. But if the waſhing there be meant of baptiſm, it is ſuch as was with regeneration and receiving of the Holy Ghoſt; therfore not of infants whoſe regeneration and receiving was unknown.

Heb. 6. 1, 2. Where the foundation is mentioned, this order is obſerved, firſt repentance, then faith, then baptiſm, then laying on of hands, then reſurrection of the dead, and laſtly eternal judgement, now if the Apoſtle kept a right order here uſed in teaching, and according to the event of things (as he ſeems to have done) then repentance and faith went before baptiſm: and ſo no infants baptized.

1 Pet. 3. 21. The baptiſm that ſaves is accompanyed with the anſwer of a good conſcience towards God. This ſaith Beza in his annot. on that text alludes to the Cuſtome of ſtipulating or promiſing at baptiſm by the baptized: which if right (as is probable) then it is manifeſt that the baptized did anſwer at baptiſm, which infants could not, and therefore were not baptized.

SECT. VI.

Mr. Blakes exception against the Major, that such institution or example as I require for infant-baptism is unnecessary, is refelled.

AGainst these arguments (chiefly the two first) brought to prove that infants are not to be baptized, according to the institution Matth. 28. 19. and the practise of the Apostles (besides what is alleged and refuted already) many things are alleged. Mr. Blake Vindic. fœderis page 411. construes the objection, that infant-baptism wants an institution, as if the meaning were that it wants an institution with limit to infant-age, and then talks thus at randum, This Objection, if it have force in it, followed home, will overthrow all baptism at any age, and every other new Testament ordinance whatsoever: For according to this rule a person must bring a precept for one of his age to be baptized. But this is M. Blakes mistake of the objection; For in it an institution is not required with limit to infant age, but such an institution as comprehends by any description ordinarily infant age. - But then, saith he, upon the same account church-members in covenant of any age ought to be baptized, and so the institution is not in question (about that there is an agreement) but whether infants be in covenant, whether they be any church-members, is to be disputed, which already is satisfied.

Answ. It is false which he saith that there is an agreement about the institution, I deny that the institution is, Baptize persons in covenant, except he mean persons in covenant by their own profession and promise, or that it is all one to baptize disciples and to baptize persons to whom God hath promised, or covenanted Christ: For then the Jews yet uncalled should be baptized, to whom Gods covenant is, Romans 11. 27. It is false also that upon the same account upon which the institution of baptism with limit to infancy is waved, church-members in covenant of any age (in Mr. Blakes sense) ought to be baptized, and that the question is only whether infants be in covenant, whether they be any church- members. He knows well that I yield that infants are in the covenant of grace, in respect of Gods promise to as many of them as are elect, whether believers children or not, and that I grant that many of them are members of the invisible Church; yea he himself in his 43. chap. of Vindic. fœderis sect. 3. had disputed against my tenet, denying a connexion between the covenant and initial seal, and therefore this speech of his shews either his oscitancy, or his willingness to mislead.

He then repeats his arguments in his Birth privilege in the same words he then used to prove the institution to comprize infants, which were answered in my Examen sect. 13. and my answer there vindicated in my Postscript sect. 14, 15, 18. in answer to the 11 chapter of Mr. Blakes answer to my Letter. I will not here repeat what I then answered, but reply to what he excepts in his Vindic. Fœderis pag. 413. where he doth not shew insufficiency in what I say Apol. page 147. to answer his allegation of Isaiah 49. 22. But saies he doubts not I abuse my memory. Concerning which I yield it not unlikely my memory did fail me in that thing, of his alleging Isaiah 49. 22. as an argument by it self. I hope this may satisfy Mr. Blake, and the Reader, if he read the places in my writings here mentioned, may be satisfyed that it proves not any thing for Mr. Blakes purpose. Likewise for what I answered in my Postscript sect: 18. to his allegation of Mat. 18.5. & 10.42. Mark 9. 41. Luke 9. 47, 48. he refers to Mr. Baxters book page 22. I shall refer the Reader to my answer to Mr. B. here.

M. Blake only adds, that the denyal that infants are within the verge of the Commission, Mat. 28. 19. involves the Apostles and all that are imployed in their work in succession, in a contradiction. The nations are to be discipled: Infants bear a part of the nation: and yet infants are in an incapacity wholly of it. See Mr. Cooks answer to the Challenges of the Anabaptists of Stafford, pag. 14.

I reply, Mr. Blakes words are so obscure (as many of his speeches are) that I understand not his meaning when he saith, The denyal that infants are within the verge of that commission Matthew 28. 19. involves the Apostles, and all that are imployed in their work in succession, in a contradiction, whether he mean thus, my denial involves the Apostles in a contradiction to their own sayings, or to Christs words: either way understood, I discern not any truth or shew of truth in Mr. Blakes words. Christs words are a command, and not an enunciation, and therefore there can be according to exact expression no contradiction to them; and for any sayings of the Apostles which should be involved in a contradiction by my denial, it is beyond any art of divination of mine to ghesse which and where they should be. And for his syllogism it is false, consisting of four terms, 1. The nations, 2. to be disciples, 3. infants, 4. bear a part of the Nation. If it were good I might from the parallel place Mark 16. 15. argue in the same manner, Every creature is to have the Gospel preached to it; Infants bear a part of every creature; therefore to infants the Apostles were to preach the Gospel. Nor is there any contradiction in these two Propositions, The nations are to be discipled, and yet infants are in an incapacity of it, no more than in these, God hath granted repentance to the Nations, Acts 11. 18. yet not to infants, All nations and all people are exhorted to praise God, Rom. 15. 11. in him shall the nations trust, verse 12, yet not an infant meant. The speeches are so plain Acts 15. 3. declaring the conversion of the nations, verse 7. God made choice among us, that the nations by my mouth should hear the word of the Gospel and believe, verse 14. Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Nations to take out of them a people for his name, verse 17. That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Nations upon whom my name is called, verse 19. Wherefore my sentence is that we trouble not them which from among the Nations are turned to God. Acts 20. 25. As touching the Nations (for the word translated Gentiles and Nations is the same in all these places) which believe, we have written, and yet in no one of these places are infants meant under the term [Nations] And when our Lord Christ expresseth what he said Matthew 28. 19. Disciple all nations, by the words preach the Gospel to every creature, Mark. 16. 15. as the comparing the texts shews, and interpreters confess; I know not how to conceive with what Spirit Mr. Blake is moved, who doth so often seek to impose his stale allegations so often and so plainly refuted. Will any man conceive that Christ bid them preach to infants, and yet his bidding them to disciple all nations is as much as to bid them go preach to all nations? If men do swallow down such fancies, I can hardly judge but that they are willing to be deceived. In Mr. Cookes book in the place to which he refers me, I find no more then in Mr. Blakes, and therefore need give no other answer than what is given to him.

But Mr. Blake addes. 'For that part of the objection, that 'there is no example in the New Testament scripture of infant-bap-'tism, I answer, First, for an example of baptism with limit to 'any one precise number of years or daies, we have but one that 'I know (if that) in Scripture, and that is of Christ, who was '(as is computed) about the age of thirty when he was baptized, 'if this be prest and followed all must at that alone be for baptism, 'and no other of any age may be baptized. Mr. T. had many 'years above thirty over his head, when I heard him say, that he 'was satisfyed, that though an infant ought not to be baptized, 'yet being baptized in infancy, when in years he did make pro-'fession of the Gospel, this was valid, which he spake in justifica-'tion of his own baptism; though now (as errour is creeping) of 'an Antipædobaptist he is grown up to an Anabaptist, and is re-'baptized, and in his Præcursor glories in his shame of rebaptizing 'others.

Answ. The Objection as by me framed doth not intimate a pleading the necessity of an example with limit to any one precise number of years or daies, as a rule to be followed in baptism, but rests in the institution and examples in the new Testament as sufficient to direct whom to baptize, to wit disciples, repenting believers in Christ by profession, whatever be their age, nor did Mr. Bl. ever hear me press Christs age as the exact rule for the time in which Christians should be baptized; and therefore did not Mr. Bl. take occasion to vent his jerks and quips (in which he is frequent) he had forborn to recite my speech in that manner he doth. Concerning which I do not think I did then expresse my self, to wit in the year 1643. (for sure it was in that year that I spake with M. Blake now above nine years since) in the very words he sets down; I do rather conceive by the words in my Exercit. pag. 22. composed about that time, that I spake more cautelously. But had I said it, it only shews I received light by degrees, as in all reformations it hath been. Neither am I an Anabaptist, nor do I rebaptize, and though I glory not in any thing of mine, yet count it not my shame, but my honour, that God hath used me as an instrument to reform the superstitious opinion and prophane practice of infant-baptism, or rather (as now it is used) sprinkling or perfusion, and do bless God with rejoicing, that amidst so many temptations, reproaches and other sufferings, my heart hath been obedient to Christs command of being baptized, and baptizing, though to his own shame, he makes it my shame that I have done my duty in this particular.

Mr. Blake adds. There are many things of which we make no question, and yet we have no example of them. I instanced in the tryal of the suspected wife by the water of jealousie, there is no example for it in all the old Testament Scripture; and for womens receiving the Lords Supper, there is not a particular institution, or any particular precedent for it in the New Testament: See further instances in Mr. Cooks Treatise before mentioned, page 21. They cannot give us any instance of any one trayned up by believing parents for baptism, and assoon as he could give an account baptized, not one child of a believer brought up for covenant and not in covenant.

Answ. I may say also there are many things of which we make no question, and yet we have no example of them: It is enough if either precept or example approved could be brought of infant-baptism. Of the tryal by the water of jealousie there was no need of example to direct, when the rule was so plain. Mr. Cooks instances are to no more purpose than Mr. Blakes, being brought against them who deny proof by consequence, which I do not. Their need be no example brought according to my principles of a believers child catechized first and baptized after, it is enough to us that such a one is comprehended in the institution being a disciple, Christ never requiring us to enquire whose children they are, but what is their faith and profession, and to baptize disciples and believers in him. If Mr. Blake mean [by being brought up for covenant] to be taught the knowledge of the true God, Ishmael the child of a believer was brought up for covenant and not in covenant. Of womens, who are Christian believers or disciples, receiving the Lords Supper, my speech Examen pag. 112.

was right, there is institution and example of it in the New Testament, and this is justified in my Postscript s. 11. But Mr. Blake hath a fling at my instances, though his fellow Pædobaptists count them very plain, he is minded it seems to be ad oppositum to me in all I say in this argument. The particular command for womens receiving the Lords Supper I said was Δοκιμαζέτω δὲ ἄνθρωπος 1 Cor. 11. 28. Let a man examine himself, and so let him eate, this saies Mr. Coleman is as cleer for women as men; But then, saith Mr. Blake John 7. 22. is Moses his command, the Jewes practice with Christs approbation, in the same comprehensive latitude in regard of both sexes, as in Saint Paul for receiving the Sacrament of the Lords Supper. I answered, true, if the subject matter did not limit the word ἄνθρωπον to the male John 7. 22. it being a relation of the Jews practice, which was only to circumcise the male, which it doth not 1 Cor. 11. 28. But then saith Mr. Blake, my expres formal command is lost, they are not expressed but included only, and by consequence, which will not be denied either to Mr. Coleman, or Mr. Blake. Answ. This is enough for me which he grants, that women are included in that precept 1 Cor. 11. 28. though by consequence only, for then there is institution in the New Testament for their receiving the Lords Supper, and therefore this objection of Mr. Blake and others against my requiring either precept or example of infant-baptism in the New Testament in expres terms or by good consequence, by requiring me to shew a like precept or example for womens receiving the Lords Supper, is answered by his own grant, that there is such a precept for womens receiving the Lords Supper, as I deny to be for infant-baptism. Yet I still say it is more than by consequence, even an expres precept in formal terms for womens receiving the Lords Supper, which is 1 Cor. 11. 28. For I take that to be an expres command in formal terms, which is in the imperative mood, and in a word that

Mr. Fox in the Acts and Monuments of the Church relates how in the disputation at Oxf. 1554. with Mr. Latimer Dr. Weston objected this thing, and Mr. Latimer answered, he found a woman receiving the Lords Supper 1 Cor. 11. 28.

Mr. Will. Cook Pont. uncov. pag. 16. The word ἄνθρωπος notes the species or kind of man distinct from

according to Grammar construction comprehends both men and women, there being no circumstance restraining it to the male. And in this sense Mr. M. saith truly in his Sermon pag. 35. Express command there is that they should teach the heathen and the Jews, and make them disciples, and then baptize them, though Jews are only comprized under the general term [all nations.] other creatures, without difference of age or sex.

Mr. Blake goes on. He further saith, that 1 Cor. 10.17. is an express example in formal terms of womens receiving the Lords Supper; we being many are one bread and one body, for we are partakers of one bread. I demand of Mr. T. whether the Apostle speaks in the person of Christians or in the person of women? not of women sure, for he takes in himself, and he was a man, and then the formality of an express example falls. When it is said that the whole house of Israel is circumcised in the flesh, Mr. T: will not yield that there is a proof, not by any consequence, that women, though of the house of Israel were virtually circumcised: but all partaking of one bread, there is a proof formal and express that they were at the Lords Supper.

Answ. An expresse formal example is mentioned 1 Cor. 10.17. of womens receiving the Lords Supper, there being relation of partaking the bread in the indicative mood, and the term [we all] according to Grammar construction the matter not excluding them comprehending women as well as men. For the Apostle under [all we] expressly comprehends all the many that were one bread and one body, who are all Christians both Jewes and Gentiles, 1 1 Cor. 12. 13. Mr. Blakes demand makes a disjunction of members coincident, which is illogical; However to it as it is I say the Apostle speaks in his own person, not in anothers, yet he speaks of the persons of all Christians both men and women, and he takes in as expressly the women as the men, and the formality of the example is of one as well as the other. As for the other passage alleged by Mr. Blake the Predicate [circumcised in the flesh] being necessarily understood of actual circumcision, there is a necessity to understand the Subject [the whole house of Israel] synecdochically, else the speech would not be true. But tropes are not to be made but where there is a necessity to make good the speech, or to make make it agree with the ſcope, circumſtances and other expreſſions: of which there is no neceſſity 1 Cor. 10. 17. to verify the ſpeech of the Apoſtle, but that it is true of women as well as men, and muſt be ſo underſtood without a trope, and therefore there the ſpeech is to be expounded according to the plain Grammatical meaning as expreſſed formally without the like trope.

Mr. Blake ſaith of me. He brings Acts 20. 7. that the diſciples on the firſt day of the week came together to break bread. Here is an example as expreſs and formal. Mr. T. cannot infallibly prove by help of conſequence much leſs expreſsly that there was a woman there. As that night meeting there might be none but men, as at the firſt inſtitution. It can never be an expreſs example till it be made appear that none are diſciples but women.

Anſw. I had thought when it is ſaid, it is appointed unto men once to dy, Heb. 9. 27. death paſſed upon all men, in that all have ſinned, Rom. 5. 12. it had been expreſs and formal for womens and infants dying though there be other men than women and infants, and yet in both places [men] in Greek is in the maſculine gender, [Diſciples] in the Acts note all Chriſtians Acts 11. 26. Tabitha is named a diſciple Acts 9. 36. and therefore there being no reaſon to make a trope Acts 20. 7. in the word [Diſciples] Chriſtian women as well as men are comprehended. And by breaking bread, ſay the Aſſembly at Weſtminſter Anſwer to the reaſons of the diſſenting brethren page 67. Sacramental breaking of bread is underſtood generally by all, Acts 20. 7. The like is ſaid by Chamier Panſt. Catholicum. 4. l. 7. c. 6. ſ. 13. And it is confirmed, 1. from the text, the words importing that the breaking of bread is there meant which was the end of their cuſtomary meeting on the Lords day; But this was Sacramental, Ergo. 2. From 1 Cor. 10. 16, 17. where the Lords Supper is called breaking bread as the uſual known term among Chriſtians. This ſeems to me infallible proof, that women were there, or which is to my purpoſe, that uſually they did meet with other diſciples to break break. As for what Mr. Bl. addes, That if I had the texts in hand of a whole houſhold baptized, they would be ſufficiently formal for infant-baptiſm, I tell him no: for I could not have withſtood the clear light to the contrary, from the words Acts 16. & 18. and elsewhere, which limit the whole house to persons that did hear the word, believe, receive, fear God, &c. Amping. dialog. contra Anabap. page 206. Idem quoq; vobis responsum volumus ad loca illa, Act. 16. 34. 1 Cor. 16. 15. Tit. 1. 11. ubi quædam de totis familiis enuncian-tur, quæ nonnisi de adultis accipi possunt. It is false that the Commission Matthew 28. 19. is to baptize Nations, but disciples in or out of nations, as is proved above. Providence hath not ordered that nations including infants have been brought into the Church as Christ appointed, to wit by preaching the Gospel: but the national Churches are gathered (otherwise than Christ appointed) by human laws and infant-baptism. I value as much the Churches practice as ever, but it is false that in no controverted thing the Church is found so unanimous as in this of infant-baptism. It is more unanimous about Episcopacy Prelatical, use of the sign of the cross, and many other things, as may be seen in Mr. Sprint of Conformity pag. 85. &c. I shall in convenient time I hope shew the mistakes of Pædobaptists plea for Infant-baptism from antiquity.

The other speech of Mr. Blake, That which will speak for infants to receive them into Heaven, will speak also to receive them into the Church by baptism, is not true. For Election, the Covenant of Grace, a secret work of an initial, habitual, seminal or actual holiness or faith, being supposed, may speak to receive them into Heaven, yet not to baptism. Nor doth it follow that if want of faith exclude them from baptism, then by the text Mark 16. 16. the same want of faith excludes from salvation. For (as I answer in my Præcursor §. 6.) a want of faith dogmatical excludes from baptism, and yet excludes not infants from salvation.

Mr. Ms. exceptions, that Matthew 28. 19. is not the institution of baptism, that onely disciples are not appointed to be baptized, that this was a rule only for a Church to be constituted, are refelled.

THere are many other exceptions against the argument from the institution *Matth.*28.19. to be considered. Mr. M. in his Sermon page 44. saith, 1. That of matth. 28. is not the institution of baptism. 2. It was instituted long before to be the seal of the Covenant. 3. Its only an inlargement of their Commission. To which in my Examen I said,

1. If this be not the first institution, yet it is an institution, and the institution of baptism to us Gentiles, and therefore the rule by which Ministers are to baptize, there being no other institution that I know of to regulate our practice by; but such as is gathered from John Baptist, the Apostles, and some preachers in the Acts of the Apostles, their practice and sayings.

2. By requiring him to shew another institution, else Paedobaptism cannot be acquitted from will-worship. To this M. M. Defence page 225. having referred me to part 3. *s.*13. where he saith, all this is abundantly answered, saith, This inlargement of their Commission is very unfitly called by me an institution of baptism to us, their Commission at the same time was inlarged to preach to the Gentiles, will you call that an institution of preaching? And that the method of preaching to us Gentiles must be fetch out of this place? I know you will not.

Resat. 1. By institution I conceive is meant no other than commanding, ordaining, appointing, and I find the words used as equipollent so promiscuously in the Assemblies confession of faith *chap.*27, 28, 29. in the larger and shorter Catechism, in the Directory about baptism, that sure Mr. M. was either very forgetful of what past in the Assembly, or very much disposed to cavil when he excepted against my speech as unfit, in calling *Mat.*28.19.

the institution of baptism. The Assembly Confess. of faith ch. 27. art. 3. call it the word of institution, chap. 28. art. 7. allegeth no other text to prove the ordaining and appointment of baptism by Christ, but Mat. 28. 19, 20. Mr. B. calls it page 342. the solemn institution of baptism, yea in the disputes with Papists and others about the author, minister, form, use of baptism, it is so common a thing to call this the institution of baptism, yea the regulating institution, the words therein are called the words of institution even in the Directory, that I admire Mr. M. should put in this exception had he not a mind to wrangle or to find a knot in a bulrush. I will recite Chamiers words, Panstr. Cath. tom. 1. l. 9. c. 10. s. 39. Dico hanc ipsam formam baptizandi in nomine patris & filii & spiritus sancti & solam esse & optimam constare ex Evangelio: ubi nimirum institutionis est descriptio. Nam quis ignorat quaecunq; instituuntur à Christo non tantum optimè institui, sed etiam sic, ut non debeant aliter. But he tells me he knows I will not call that Matthew 28. 19. an institution of preaching, nor affirm that the method of preaching is to be fetcht out of this place. To which I reply, He is deceived, I do call it an institution of preaching, and therein follow his Collegue Mr. Rutherford Due right of Presbyteries pag. 454. That which we allege is an institution for preaching and baptizing, Matthew 28 19, 20. and before him Parens in his Comment. who intitles this part of the chapter, institutio ministerii, and from hence with the generality of Divines fetch the method of preaching. But saith he, This was only an inlargement of their Commission. Answ. I find that the Apostles had commission to preach, Mat. 10. 7. and that they did baptize, John 4. 1. which I doubt not they had Commission for: But be it so, yet however Mat. 28. 19. they had their Commission inlarged in the extent of the persons to whom they were to preach and baptize, and this Commission is an institution of those works: so that frivolously it is denyed to be an institution because it was an inlarged Commission, when the enlarged Commission was all one with a renewed institution, and must needs be a rule about preaching to, and baptizing of Gentiles, and therefore the institution of baptism to them. But it was instituted long before to be a seal of the Covenant. Answ. I deny not but John Baptist was appointed to baptize by God Mat. 21.25. John 1.6. and the Apostles by Christ: but where there is any institution of baptism so expressed as to regulate our practise afore that Mat. 28.19. I find not, and therefore know no solemn institution by which we are to be guided in the use of it afore this. But it was long before instituted to be the Seal of the Covenant: for this he refers us to that which he had said before. Answ. What ambiguity, uncertainty, and falsity there is in Pædobaptists speeches about the Covenant, being in Covenant, seal of the Covenant, connexion between the Covenant and seal, will be shewed in that which followes. For present I know no place assigned by Mr. M. in his Defence part. 3: f. 13. wherein he shews that baptism was institued long before the time of the speech Mat. 28.19. to be the seal of the Covenant. I have read over that section, and do aver that I find it so empty of any either proofs or answers to my Examen, that his words in my apprehension are meer trifling. If it be thought I wrong a man of such repute, let any man shew me a word in all that section (in which he saith he hath answered all this abundantly) in answer to what I say that Matthew 28 19. is the institution of baptism to us Gentiles, and the rule by which ministers are to baptize, and that there is no other institution, and I will forfeit my credit. He neither in all that section, nor elsewhere, that I know, shews either any other or foregoing institution of baptism to us Gentiles, or any other but this with John Baptists, the Apostles, and some forenamed their practice and sayings for a rule of baptizing: onely p. 212. he dictates thus. Sir, since it is apparent that here is no new Commission for any new method in their work, but only an enlargement of their Commission to apply their Ministery to new persons, how could they understand our Saviours meaning to proceed any other way to the Gentiles than among the Jews? &c. But to whom is it apparent? and when, either sleeping or waking? where is the old Commission that we must understand this by, so as to proceed the way to the Gentiles that was taken among the Jewes? Is it the Commission of circumcising Gen. 17? If that be it, then baptism is not a Sacrament of the New Testament onely but of the old, then it is not a new administration, then the Commission of baptizing is to any parent, though no minister, to baptize, then it must be done the eighth

day, to males only; were Christs words thus to be understood they had been a meer riddle: where or whence it is apparent that ever the Apostles conceived that in executing the Commission Mat. 28. 19. they were to proceed according to the Commission about circumcising? I have shewed Examen part. 3 sect. 14. that it rather follows to the contrary that they did and were to proceed clean otherwise. And therefore that the Apostles should understand the institution Mat. 28. 19. by the institution of circumcision Gen. 17. is so wild a conceit, that I cannot impute it to any thing but meer dotage in the asserter, there being no one word in the Commission or the executing of it throughout the Acts of the Apostles that doth shew that Christ had reference to it, or the Apostles so understood him. Yea if that of Circumcision Gent. 17. be an institution of baptism, by like reason that of the Passeover Exod. 12. must be an institution of the Lords Supper, and then the Lords Supper should be instituted afore the night in which Christ was betrayed, and the Lords Supper should be from Moses, and regulated by the Ordinances of the ceremonial Law &c. If Mr. M. mean by the foregoing institutution the manner of the Jewish Doctors in baptizing proselytes children with the parents, it shall be shewed hereafter, especially in answer to Dr. Hammond, that there is nothing therein for infant-baptism now, it being done to no Jewes or their infants many ages before Christs incarnation, and therefore not out of respect to the Covenant Gen. 17. nor as a privilege from thence, but meerly as a rite to purge them from the uncleanness of Gentilism, nor ever done to the infant posterity of the proselytes of righteousness after the first time of being made proselytes, nor ever used to proselytes of the gate. And yet had the use been such as that infants of Proselytes after their first entrance on the Jewish profession had been baptized, yet there is no commission in Scripture for it, though Rabbins would fetch it, some from Gen. 35. 2. some from Exod. 19. 10. some from the flood, nor is there any thing in the institution of Christ, or Acts and sayings of the Apostles, that shews that Christian baptism was conformed to the Jewish baptism in this, and therefore I conclude, that there is no other institution besides Mat. 28. 19. Mark 16. 15, 16. together with the Apostles, John Baptists, and others forenamed sayings and practice, that is a rule to us about baptizing, and if infant-baptism be not here appointed, it

But Mr. M. allegeth further, that it is not said that only disciples are to be baptized. To which I replyed Examen page 132. it is not said 1 Cor. 11. 28. Let him only eat that can examine himself, nor here only preachers in office are to baptize, nor only two to be one flesh, nor let only wine be drunk in the Eucharist, or water used in baptism, yet Divines make these speeches exclusive. M. Ball of the Covenant par. 2. c. 2. p. 252. when difference or distinction is contained in some term, the proposition is for sense exclusive no less than if it were expressly noted. Against this Mr. M. excepts Defence pag. 215. That the practice and example of Christ and John is sufficient to make a positive rule affirmative but not exclusive, and the reason is plain, they possibly might not meet with all persons and occasions, as though no proselyte of the gate were baptized till Acts 10. nor any till they made actual confession of their faith and repentance, nor any rule given that the receiving the extraordinary gifts of the holy Ghost should without any other confession be a sufficient warrant to baptize any, yet Peter upon the very pouring out of those gifts, without requiring any further confession either of faith or repentance, baptized Cornelius and all his Company.

Ref. 1. M. Ms. confessions are to be noted, that none till they made actual confession of their faith and repentance were baptized till Acts 10. nor any rule given that the receiving the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost should without any other confession be a sufficient warant to baptize any, which do grant that till then there was neither rule nor practice of baptising any without actual confession of their faith and repentance, which is in effect a grant of the Minor, in my argument, denying any institution or practice in the New Testament of infant-baptism, for there is no other rule or practice of infant-baptism after Acts 10. otherwise than that before.

2. It is to be observed, that Mr. M. deals not rightly with me in that he makes me to have framed the exclusive rule from practice, whereas I joined institution with practice, and shewed neither to be for infant-baptism.

3. If the non-including of persons or things in the institution or practise of baptism be not exclusive, then the institution is not our rule, rule, then there is no will-worship, or it is no sin to swerve from it, we may add to Gods worship infant-communion, and innumerable other things rejected may be lawful, then do preachers, especially Mr. M. unjustly urge the Parliament, and others, to reform invented ceremonies, and Protestants contend against Popish rites in baptism, mass, &c.

4. However Mr. M. conceive, yet men abler than Mr. M. do frequently assert negative arguments from institution. I will name one who hath few fellowes, Chamier Panst. cath. in the words lately by me here recited, and tom.4.l.5.c.9.s.24. Hæc testimonia sunt institutionis: quæ etsi non prohibent totidem verbis alios liquores: tamen eo ipso quod non ponat excludit. L.7. c.10.s.38. quamquam in hoc genere rerum quæ nihil sunt nisi ex institutione validissimam esse aportet argumentationem negativam si inde sumatur.

But Mr. M. saith, John the Baptist and the Apostles might not meet with all persons and occasions.

Answ. Tis true, they baptized no Emperours or Kings, because none were converted, yet they had a rule to baptize them if disciples: But this could not be the reason of their not baptizing infants, sith innumerable believers had infants in the times of the Gospel story, and Acts of the Apostles, and yet no mention of baptizing any. Do not Mr. M. and other Pædobaptists plead that the little children brought to Christ were infants of believers, and yet there's not a word of their being baptized? As for Mr. M. instance to prove no necessity of practice to warrant infant-baptism, though I grant if there were institution without practice it were enough, yet is it not rightly brought. It supposeth Peter baptized Cornelius and his household upon the very powring out of extraordinary gifts, without actual faith and repentance required; And I grant he required them not: but yet withal it is manifest he did not baptize meerly upon the powring out of extraordinary gifts without them. For the text Acts 10.46,47. expressly saith, they magnified God, ere he spake of their baptizing, and Acts 11. 17. that they had the like gift as themselves who believed on the Lord Jesus, and they gathered thence that the Gentiles had repentance unto life granted by God.

But it is objected by Mr. Cobbet, Just Vindic. part 2. cha. 3. sect.

sect. 2. that Mark 16.16. none but true believers are meant, then if the term be exclusive none but such are to be baptized. 2. that those believers had signs following them, verse 17.

Answ. The rule is, disciples by profession are to be baptized, to which is equipollent [believers by profession] I say not that believers only who are such as those Mark 16. 16. are to be baptized by us: But yet comparing Mark 16. 15. 16. with Mat. 28. 19. I gather that a disciple and believer are terms equipollent, and so it helps me to understand the term [disciple] as answerable to the term [believer] And though by reason of the matter predicated Mark 16. 16. the believer there is only a true believer, yet the term often is given to believers only by profession, and we find such warrantably baptized, and that is enough for our direction: though we are to require more, yet we are not to forbear baptism till we know there is more. We acknowledge only true believers have right before God to baptism: but in the face of the Church believers by profession have right to baptism, and are to be taken by us for true believers upon their profession, till they be discovered to be otherwise. As for verse 17. it doth not say these or some of these signs shall follow every of them that believe: but they are true if they followed some of them that believe, sith the terms being indefinite in matter contingent, the Proposition is true if onely particular. Indefinita propositio in materia contingenti æquipollet particulari, say Logicians.

But there is an objection ad hominem against my self, that I have said that if I knew an infant were actually sanctified, &c. I would baptize him, if so, then an infant is not excluded out of the institution.

Answ. I grant that an infant barely as an infant is not excluded out of the institution, but as ordinarily not known to be a disciple or believer. If an infant were known to be a disciple or believer, I would baptize him, as I would one who having his tongue cut out who is known to be a believer otherwaies. But then I have added that this would be upon extraordinary manifestation onely, and so not according to ordinary rule, and therefore justifies onely that extraordinary fact, not the ordinary practice of infant-baptism, which hath no rule ordinary or extraordinary.

But then saith Mr. M. page 215. shew us your extraordinary rule.

Answ. When I do thus, or challenge this, I shall: in the mean time it is enough that my concession doth not infringe my argument against baptizing infants ordinarily without ordinary rule.

Mr. M. hath yet another exception in his Sermon, page 44. That no other are mentioned to be baptized but disciples, or believers, because a new Church was to be constituted, and then all were to be baptized upon profession of faith, after the children came in by their right by vertue of the Covenant.

Ref. 1. when I come to examine Mr. Ms. Conclusions I shall shew, that there is no such Covenant as to give right to believers infants to be baptized; yea that title to the Covenant did not give right to Circumcision, and therefore this is a vain pretence.

2. He assigns that for a reason why no other were baptized, which was not a reason: For in the Jewish Church which was already constituted, and which Christ did join himself to, and to whose children they say did belong the Covenant, yet while other were baptized all the time of John and Christs Ministery on earth, no one infant was appointed to be baptized, no not those infants Mark 10. which Christ blessed, and which were (if Pædobaptists say true) believers infants in Covenant.

3. It is a vain pretence, that there is no mention of baptized infants; because they had no right till their parents were converted: For neither when they were converted is there any mention of the infants baptism.

4. The institution Mat. 28. 19. expounded by the practice of John Baptist &c. is the standing rule for Churches at first planting, and after increasings, nor can any other rule be produced distinct from this, and therefore neither at first conversion, nor after settlement of Churches, are any to be baptized according to ordinary rule till they be disciples of Christ, or believers by profession.

SECT. VIII.

The exceptions of Mr. Cobbet, Mr. Blake, &c. against the order of teaching afore baptizing, of Mr. M. Mr. Hussey, that baptizing is discipling, are refelled.

AGainst the argument from the order of teaching first and then baptizing, it was excepted that it is said Mark 1. 4. John did baptize and preach, which objection in my Examen was removed by the words of Beza par. 4. f. 1. To which I add, that the reason is manifest from the text why the one was put after the other, not because he did baptize any afore he had preached, but because Mark having expressed his baptism, it was needful he should shew the difference between Johns baptism and the Jewish or Phasaical baptism.

To this Mr. M. returns thus much. Christs order is (say you) teaching should go before baptizing; is not that the same with this; That men must be made disciples by preaching before they be baptized? To which I only say,

1. That the arguments are not the same as I made them, the first being taken from the term [αὐτὸς them] the other from the order of teaching afore baptizing.

2. However I take that which Mr. M. grants, that it is the same to teach, and to make disciples by preaching before baptizing. But Mr. Cobbet jnst vindic. part 2. ch. 3. sect. 2. allegeth something against this argument. He grants some things in this order of Christ are perpetual, but he will not have all to be presidentiall to all Churches and times, because it is said Mar. 16. 17. in the same speech, that miraculous signs should follow them that believe.

But if this were good, then the rule should only hold while such gifts remain, which no churches now have, and so he must fall into the opinion that makes water-baptism a temporary ordinance, and those things which he grants perpetual, as viz. preaching the Gospel before baptism is to be administred by such as preach, discipled inchurched persons are to be baptized, that in founding churches the first members are to be visible professors of the faith in reference to church estate, that baptism is with water applyed to the persons baptized, and that into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, must be temporary as well as teaching before baptizing: If the one be perpetual notwithstanding this reason so is the other, and presidential to all churches and times.

But saith Mr. Cobbet, there is a distinction to be made in baptizing at the gathering of Churches, and when they are gathered: the order must be observed at the former, not the later.

Answ. 1. If it was to be so at first gathering of churches, why did not those in New England observe it then when they first gathered their churches? surely they were not rightly gathered for want of baptism if this be the rule at gathering of churches. Nor can they plead their baptism they had in the National and Parochial churches of England; For by their principles, baptism belongs to the children of believers, not as such, but as in church-covenant, and church-members, and therefore they baptize not any but the children of church-members in covenant, and yet most of them had their baptism in the churches of England, and their parents no church-members and so neither they nor others that gather churches in Old England do keep to their principles in the gathering of their churches.

2. But besides what I said before to this objection, Mat. 28. 19. there is no such distinction made, and we are not to distinguish where the law doth not, yea all the institution, and every thing in it was to be observed in the churches of Christ in gathering and gathered at all times, as is manifest from the promise annexed of being with them alwaies to the end of the world, which shewes that he would have that rule continued to the end of the world, and to encourage them therein he promiseth to be with them. To say with Mr. Saltmarsh in his Sparkles of glory and some others, it is to be read [to the end of the age] is frivolous, [Matthew] 13. 39, 40, 49. Matth. 24. 3. the very words shew it to be meant of the last time at Christs comming to Judgement.

Be it so, that that appointment of the sign of a gift of miraculous cure now ceaseth, yet it doth not follow that the institution Mat. 28. 19. in which a sign of a perpetual duty is instituted, is temporary.

But saith Mr. Cobbet, There are variations in the mention of Christs last Commission about the Lords Supper, and therefore another analogy of faith and comparing Scriptures with Scriptures is to regulate us in this point of Sacramental order, and so in the other.

To which I answer, 1. That the variations Mr. Cobbet sets down are none of them about the order of the actions appointed by Christ pertaining to the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and therefore not pertinent to the present business.

2. If Mr. Cobbet will not have the order in the institution to be moral and perpetual about the Lords Supper, then they do ill in his Judgement that contend against Papists, Prelates and others to have the Lords Supper reduced exactly to the first pattern as a constant rule, there being such variations as disable it from being a rule.

3. I grant that analogy of faith and comparing Scriptures with Scriptures is to regulate us in this point of Sacramental order: But till Mr. Cobbet shew that in any other Scripture or analogy of faith there is a rule that persons should be baptized afore they be taught, his reasoning is not to the present purpose.

But then saith he, If order must be observed so strictly, baptizing must go before salvation, Mark 16. 16. repentance may be before faith, Mark 1. 5. confession before faith, Romans 10. 9. if the place in Mark must be so closely stuck to without comparing it with the Scriptures of the old Testament, then we must preach the Gospel to Dogs, Cats, &c. since it is expresly said preach the Gospel to every creature.

Answ. 1. That if it follow not that every thing set before is first in order of time or nature, yet what is first appointed to be done in the solemn institution of Sacraments, is to be done first, as taking, blessing, breaking bread, before eating, so teaching the baptized afore baptizing as the Apostles practice shews, who best understood Christs appointment. As believing upon preaching is to go before salvation, so baptizing ordinarily and regularly ly (for which I now contend) and yet in special cases as persons may be saved without personal actual believing upon preaching, so without baptism. To avoid the inference of preaching to Beasts, we need not go to the old Testament Mat. 28.19. Col. 1.23.&c. yield sufficient light to shew, that by [every creature] is meant all nations of men, or Gentiles, as well as Jews.

But (saith Mr. Cobbet) if it be absurd to say the Gospel is preached to little ones, what shall we say of Christs speech Mat. 19.14. Deut.30.6. Acts 2.38,39. Luke 1.76?

I answer, This may be said, that all these are frivolously alleged to prove that Christ should appoint the Gospel to be preached to infants (which were to make Christ as ridiculous as the Legends do Francis the Fryer) sith none of them mention any speech or preaching to little infants, though some of the speeches are of or concerning infants. As for what he further adds, It was no absurdity that infants were circumcised, Christ laid his hands on infants, Peters feet were washed, though these acts were not then understood. I grant it, and say, if Christ appointed infants to be baptized, I should not count it an absurdity, but sith his express institution is, that teaching should go before baptizing, till that order be shewed to be altered, it is a prophane abuse of the ordinance of baptism to baptize those who are not taught.

Mr. Blake Vindic. fœderis page 243. speaks thus, This is the weakest of all arguments, to reason for a precedency of one before another from the order in which they are placed in Scripture, so we may say John baptized before he preached the baptism of repentance, for his baptizing is mentioned before preaching of baptism Mark 1.4. So we may say we must have glory first and vertue after, for so they are placed by the Apostle, 2 Peter 1.3.

Answ. Though in Histories of facts sometimes things are set down last which were done first, yet in setting down institutions, order and every circumstance is observed, so as thence to conclude it irregular not to observe the order used in the primitive institution, 1 *Cor.*10.16. the cup of blessing is mentioned before the bread we break, and yet it would be counted a disorder and sinful to administer the wine before the bread, because in the mention of the institution the three Evangelists and Paul observe exactly the order order as well as the use of the elements, as delivered by the Lord. In like manner when Christ appoints, and the constant practice of the Apostles expounds his words thus, that first persons be made disciples and believers, and then be baptized, sure it is an act of transgression of Christs command to do it otherwise, especially considering that by so doing the prime and chief end of baptism, to wit, to signify the baptized persons engagement to repentance and faith in Christ, is thereby evacuated.

Mr. Blake saith Vindic. fœderis pag. 136. God is a God of order, and he will have order observed, & p. 164 God will not suffer that disorder that the leading Sacrament should come after.

I may more truly say, God will not suffer the disorder of Mr. Bl. to have baptism go before and faith follow, when by necessity of precept, as he speaks there, Christ having instituted it and commanded it, discipleship and believing are put before baptism Mat. 28.19. Mark 16.15,16. and the Apostles so taught and practised Acts 2. 38. 41. & 8. 12. 37. & 10 47, 48. & 11. 17. & 16. 15, 33, 34. & 18. 8. Glory is put before Vertue 2 Peter 1.3. without disorder, if either the meaning be as Heinsius in his Preface to his Aristarchus sacer on Nonnus conceives, he hath called us by his glorious power, or if the ordinary reading be retained, though Vertue be before glory, yet we are called to glory first as the end, and then to vertue as the means, the end being first in intention, though last in execution.

There is another exception which I counted in my Examen p. 126. a very absurd one, and such as I presumed none that had any wit would entertain it, to wit that making disciples Matth. 28. 19. is to be by baptizing them, and yet Mr. M. in his Defence pag. 212. goes about to maintain that the Jewes children were discipled when circumcised, & pag. 213. that baptizing may be well rendred discipling, and allegeth Spanheimius for it. Mr. Hussey vents it as very remarkable and advantagious to prove infant-baptism. But against this toy I argued in my Examen page 131. 127.

1. No Lexicon, nor I thought expositor do expound [μαθητεύσατε make disciples] that is circumcise or baptize them.

2. That the word plainly signifies so to teach as that the persons taught taught do learn and accordingly professe the things taught.

To this Mr. M. replies, 1. That better Criticks than my self say that μαθητὰς ποιεῖν is a Rabbinick phrase, and from their use of it it is best to be understood, and that with them it signifies to admit scholars, not because they were taught, but that they might be taught.

Answ. But Mr. M. neither names the Criticks, nor brings proof for what they say, nor if it were all granted would serve his purpose to prove that ever [disciple ye] is as much as [circumcise ye, baptize ye] I grant there is great use to be made of the Talmuds and Rabbins in expounding many passages in the New Testament, but in expounding this term there is no need of using them, when the use of it in other places, and comparing it with other Scriptures are sufficient to cleer it, yet if Mr. Ms. Criticks look over all the Talmuds and Rabbins I presume they will not find one passage wherein the making of a disciple or admitting of a Scholar was ever applyed to an infant. And though Mr. Hussey ridiculously tell us of taking children to School, and counting them for Scholars, who carry a hornbook to School, though they be put there only to play and keep them from harm, yet neither do any so admit as Scholars infants of a day or eight days old, nor is [a Scholar] all one with [a disciple] the latter word being from learning, the other from vacation from other imployment that he may learn, nor is making a disciple all one with admitting a Scholar.

Rightly saith Beeman: Exercit. Theol. 17. pag. 260. verbum μαθητεύειν (quod omnes libenter admittunt) ex nativa origine est discipulos facere μαθητὰς. Atqui hoc ipsum non nisi accedente doctrina fit. Qui enim discit tanquam μαθητὴς ab alio ex ratione τῶν πρός τι dicitur itaq; discipuli sunt qui docentur & discunt. pag. 261. nec ulli discipuli sunt nisi qui docentur. Dum igitur Christus Apostolos jubet μαθητεύειν ante omnia & quidem de necessitate jubet docere.

But 3. Mr. M. refers me with a blind direction to Spanheimius to consult with, which however I have done, as I find his words Dub. Evang. part. 3. dub. 27. and I say as in my Apology page 100. besides the mention of his words there need no other refutation.

For

For 1. it is false, that [to make disciples] signifies the end of their sending, and not the act they were to do, whereas it plainly notes the first act they were to do: and if it had been the end of the act of baptizing and teaching, it should have been thus [baptize and teach them all things, ἵνα that ye may make all nations disciples.]

2. Spanheimius there makes [μαθητεύσατε make disciples] to answer to [ποιεῖ μαθητὰς he maketh disciples, John 4. 1.] But there it is another thing than baptizing, for making disciples and baptizing are knit together as two distinct things, and the making disciples there was by preaching, as the story of the Evangelist shews, therefore making disciples Matthew 28. 19. is by preaching, and is not barely baptizing.

3. His own words do refute the reason of his analysis. For he allegeth this reason, because if τὸ μαθητεύειν should simply signify only to teach, there would be found a tautology in Christs words thus; Go teach all Nations, baptizing them, teaching them. But this absurdity is not avoided by his own exposition. For he himself saith, non significat solum docere, sed & discipulos facere, now if it signifie at all to teach the tautology is alike, if we say, Go, not only teach, but also make disciples baptizing them, teaching them, for by his own words teaching is twice commanded. Nevertheless in my exposition (commonly received) there is no tautology, Go, make by teaching or preaching the Gospel (that Jesus is the Christ) disciples, so as that they learn him to be the Messias, and profess him, as Mr. M. expounds John 9. 27. will ye be his disciples? and then baptize them, and after teach them to observe all that I have commanded. So that here is a double teaching injoined, one to preach or teach them the Gospel, that Jesus is the Christ, as Philip did the Eunuch, Acts 8. 36, 37. and then baptize, and then teach duties commanded by Christ. And for what Spanheimius saith, That this may in its manner be fitted to infants. For when parents do give their names to Christ for themselves and their families, their whole house is discipled, their children as well as themselves, it is false. For then if a parent give his name to Christ for himself and his family, and the whole house is discipled, thereby it will follow, that the wife, child, servant, though infidels, are discipled, and so infidels should be Christs disciples. But no where is in Scripture any made a disciple but by his own act of learning. As for what Mr. M. adds to shew that without teaching first, by initiating into a Master a person may become a disciple, it is insufficient to that end. For 1 Cor. 10. 2. though all our Fathers be said to be baptized into Moses, yet not to be discipled, and the term ἐμαθητευσα was discipled, Matth. 27. 57. doth not note a bare entring into Christs School without teaching or hearing of Christ, much less such an initiating as they give to infants without any act of their own, and John 9. 27. Mr. M. himself paraphaseth thus, will ye be his disciples, will ye profess him? which is an act of their own, of which infants are not ordinarily capable, and it supposeth some teaching and learning, at least this, that Jesus is the Christ.

2. I argued from Mark 16. 15. to which our Translators refer in the margin at Matthew 28. 19. as clearing the meaning of it, and generally interpreters shew thence how they were appointed to make disciples, to wit, by preaching the Gospel, and so Mr. M. Sermon page 35. Express command there is that they should teach the heathen and the Jews, and make them disciples, and then baptize them, and Defence page 210. Their commission was to preach and baptize, and hereupon from Matth. 28. 19. is gathered, that none are to baptize but preachers. Whence I argue, If the making disciples were to be by preaching the Gospel to them who were made disciples, then by making disciples is not meant baptizing, nor baptizing to be rendered discipling. For baptizing and preaching the Gospel are not all one; But the making disciples is appointed to be and was by preaching the Gospel to them who were made disciples; Ergo discipling is not by baptizing.

3. I argued from John 4. 1. in which it is confessed by the New Annot. edit. 1. on Mat. 28. 19. [made disciples and baptized] answer to [make disciples baptizing them Mat. 28. 19.] now John 4. 1. making disciples is one thing, and baptizing is another thing, though coupled with it; therefore the making disciples is not baptizing, but a distinct thing.

4. The Commission of Christ is to be understood according to the Apostles practice, unless we will say that either they understood not, or followed not Christs appointment; But their practice was to make disciples first by preaching, and then to baptize, and no other mentioned, as Mr. M. grants in his Sermon page 44. Ergo. I truly said, nor need Mr. M. wonder at it, or call it a wild consequence, as he doth Defence page 214. that if the Apostles had understood Christs Commission as Mr. M. doth, baptize according to the rule of circumcising, they might have saved a great deal of labour in preaching to the baptized afore they baptized them, and in baptizing females, sith the rule of circumcising did not require either. And though I grant it to be true, that male and female are all one, yet in the rule of circumcising a difference is made, and if that be the rule of baptizing infants, then in baptizing them male infants should be baptized and not female.

5. If making disciples be by baptizing without preaching before to the baptized, then non-preaching ministers may and do baptize rightly though they preach not the Gospel; But this I suppose will be denyed by Mr. M. Ergo.

6. If making disciples be by baptizing without preaching to them, then the Spaniards in America who drove the Indians into the water to be baptized, without teaching them or preaching the Gospel to them, did rightly, For they followed Christs rule thus expounded; But that is absurd; Ergo.

7. Mr. M. and other Pædobaptists say that the commission Mat. 28. 19. was the commission for first constituting the Churches of the Gentiles: If then the Comission be to be understood, make ye disciples by baptizing them, without first preaching to them, then he had appointed them to constitute or plant the first Churches without preaching, and then the Apostles gifts of tongues &c. were unnecessary, they might have constituted Churches by hands, baptizing them only without the use of those gifts; but these things are absurd, besides other absurd consequences w^ch follow on the exposition that discipling is baptizing, or baptizing discipling, Mat. 28. 19.

Lastly many of their own grants and expositions before recited do so cross this conceit, that as I said before, I thought none that had any wit would embrace it, so now I wonder that such men as have taken it up did not better make use of their wit, to decline so witlesse a shift. Onely I perceive any thing will serve turn to keep up the credit of Infant sprinkling.

SECT. IX.

The exception of Mr. M. Mr. Blake, Mr. Cobbet, nations are appointed to be baptized Matthew 28. 19. and so infants, is refelled.

But there is yet another exception against my argument from Matthew 28. 19. followed by many, that Christ bids them make nations disciples and baptize nations, & consequently infants at least the species.

Against this I opposed, that all nations simply are not appointed to be baptized, but disciples of all nations. So Beza annot. on Matthew 28. 19. Make to me disciples out of all nations. The New Annotations on the Bible on Matth. 28. 19. first edition, teach] Gr. make disciples of, as John 4. 1. all Nations, not Jews alone but Gentiles also, Acts 10. 34, 35, 47. Mr. Baxter plain scripture proof &c. pag. 327. when Christ saith [make me disciples of all nations baptizing them] he means [sincere disciples] Georg. Pasor Lexic. ad verbum μαθητεύω Matthew 28. verse 19. μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, docete omnes gentes, h.e. colligite mihi discipulos ex omnibus gentibus.

Mr. Blake himself saith, Answer to my letter ch. 11. sect. 1. he is ready to subscribe to this interpretation as I lay it down in words by preaching the Gospel to all nations make them disciples, and baptize those that do become disciples of all nations. As for his exceptions, that the verb is transitive, that ἔθνη nations is in the accusative case, that it is boldness to put it into the Genitive, that then the whole of the nation should not be appointed to be baptized, and so not infants, I have answered them in my Postscript sect. 14. And I further prove that the nation entirely is not appointed to be baptized.

1. For then the infidels of the nation should be to be baptized, for they are a part of the nation.

2. Then the Apostles were not to baptize regularly till they baptized a whole nation, yea all nations together, for so it is construed by them who make nations entirely the subject of baptism according to Christs institution.

3. The Apostles practice is an infallible comment on our Lord Christs words. As they practised, so Christ meant; But they baptized not any entire Nation, Countrey, City, or Tribe, but believers or disciples out of them; therefore no other were appointed to be baptized. 4. If the baptizing of all the parts of a nation, or a nation entirely, were appointed by Christ, then there might be some rule to know when a nation is discipled, chosen, so as that it ought to be entirely baptized; But there is no such rule, Ergo.

To none of these do I find any thing replyed by Mr. M. but by telling me I fall to my old artifice of framing many senses (which yet in this point were but two) for which he blames me, as if it were blameable: whereas it is the only way to cleer truth to shew the divers senses of a speech, for avoiding of ambiguity, according to that saying, Qui benè distinguit benè docet, he that distinguisheth well teacheth well, and his not distinctly answering by shewing in what sense his speech is meant tends to nothing but the hiding of truth.

Then he tells me, That I vent my Criticisms, and undertake to shew that μαθητεύσατε signifies to teach cum effectu, or to teach till they were made Scholars (my word was disciples) and that they were not to baptize till they were disciples, and then saith, But Sir, what need all these things? The meaning is plain that other nations should be taken in likewise as the Jewes according to Isaiah 19. 24. when other nations should by receiving and professing the Gospel come under Gods wing, they should partake of the same Covenant which the Jews had before enjoyed, he would henceforth be the God of them and their seed.

Whereto I reply, 1. That in his upbraiding me with venting my Criticisms, as he calls them, about the word [disciple ye] he excepts against me for doing that which was necessary to be done, to wit, to cleer the meaning of the word, by which the sense of the text is manifested.

2. When he should answer the thing I alleged and proved, that nations are not appointed to be baptized without any other circumscription, but disciples or believers in them, he repeats his dictates as obscurely as before, bringing a text impertinently, which doth not at all say, that all the nation of Egypt, that is, every man, woman, and child, that is an Egyptian, shall be his people, but such as know the Lord, do sacrifise, vow a vow, return to the Lord, verse 21, 22. which was fulfilled either when after the return from captivity, in Babylon, many of the Egyptians became Jewish proselytes, who were very probably many when Ptolomy Philadelphus appointed the Bible to be translated into Greek, as Josephus l. 12. Antiq. c. 2. relates, or if it were fulfilled in the time of the Gospel, the stories of the Church refute that conceit, that the whole nation of Egypt were a national Christian Church, as the Jews before Christs comming, so as that all the people, men, women and children were Christians, though it be true that God had his Church at Alexandria in Egypt somewhat early, of which Mark is said to have been Bishop (of which more may be seen in Selden on Eutychius) and if that passage 1 Pet. 5. 13. The Church that is at Babylon elect together with you, be meant of Babylon in Egypt, it is plain that the Church there was an elect company chosen out from the rest, and therefore not the whole City, men, women and children, and consequently not a nation entirely; nor is there a word either in Matthew 28. 19. or in the places Mr. M. compares with it Mark 16. 15. Gal. 3. 8, 9. Rom. 1. 16, 17. or Acts 11. 18. to prove that any other of the nations should partake of the Covenant the Jewes before had enjoyed, than those that receive the Gospel, believe and repent, or that they that believe should partake of the promises of the Covenant as it was national, and contained the promises made to Abrahams natural seed, or that he would henceforth be the God of the Nations professing the Gospel, and their seed: But the texts all of them prove plainly that the term [nations Mat. 28. 19.] is limited to those of the nations, that were disciples, or did believe, Mark 16. 16. that did repent, Acts 11. 18. that believe, Romans 1. 16, 17. As for Gal. 3. 8. I admire that not only Mr. M. but also the Assembly at Westminster in their Confession of faith chap. 28. art. 4. to prove the infants of one or both believing parents are to be baptized, should

cite Geneſis 17. 7, 9. with Gal. 3. 9, 14. which if it were alleged any thing to their purpoſe to include infants as Geneſis 17. 7, 9. then [nations] muſt be taken to comprehend all of the nation, and [the bleſſing of Abraham] meant of viſible Church-membership: wheras the text expreſly expounds [all nations] to be meant of them [which be of faith] and [the bleſſing] to be [juſtification, and the promiſe of the Spirit through faith] inferring from thence, that God would juſtifie the heathen through faith. Yea it is ſo frequent to underſtand the term [nations] ſynecdochically for a part of nations, that I find no fewer than eighty times, and of theſe at leaſt eight in Matthews Goſpel, the word [ἔθνη nations or Gentiles] in the New Teſtament, taken ſo as not to include infants, in the ſpeeches in which it is uſed. But of this I have ſaid enough in my Præcurſor ſect. 22. in my Poſtſcript to M. Bl. f. 14. M. B. in his Præſeſt. Morat. f. 22. ſaith, that my ſpeech he excepts againſt [that no one Countrey were diſcipled] was meant by me not onely of a paſt event, but alſo of a duty, that it is not the Miniſters duty to endeavour the diſcipling of any whole nation (for then he muſt endeavour to diſciple infants) nor a part of the work of that commiſſion; and this I confeſs is true, and I ſtill think it; yea if it were as Mr. B. would have it, that Chriſt had bid them diſciple the whole nations, even infants, then he had bid them preach the Goſpel to infants, which had been a command of a man not in his wits, and which the Apoſtles never obeyed, and therefore I muſt blaſpheme Chriſt if I expound the words as Mr. B. doth; nor doth any promiſe of Chriſt foretel that he will make the whole of a nation, even the infants, diſciples. What is in his addition page 339, 340. I know not: I had thought I had all his addition to his third edition when I had his Friendly accommodation, and his Præſeſtinantis morator; what the reaſon is I know not, but I cannot yet get his additions: yet I conceive in his addition there is but a greater heap of impertinent texts.

He ſaith of me, As for what he ſaith of Moſes and Magiſtrates, if you peruſe what I have ſaid to that already, I think it will appear that he is no where more vertiginous than in this.

To which I anſwer, I ſaid that if Chriſt would have had a whole whole nation made his Church as the nation of the Jews was, comprehending old and young he had used Emperours and Kings to gather his Church as he did Moses to gather the Jewish Church in the Wilderneſſe by his authority, not Apoſtles and Preachers by perſwaſion. What he ſaith to it in his firſt edition, ſhall be (God aſſiſting) in its place fully anſwered, I may more truly ſay that in this conceit of his, that Chriſt ſhould bid the Apoſtles diſciple infants, there is giddineſs, if not an higher degree of folly. And my ſpeech is ſo agreeable to reaſon, that if I be vertiginous in it, I ſhall then begin to turn Sceptique, and queſtion whether any thing be certain.

As for what Mr. Blake ſaith about the rule of knowing a choſen believing nation, giving title to infants of that nation to be baptized as the Jewiſh infants were circumciſed, I think there is no need to add any more to what I ſay in the Poſtſcript ſ. 15. ſith he confeſſeth page 67. as the nations are diſcipled, ſo they are to be baptized, and the infants of a nation are baptized by vertue of a privilege from their parents, not from the nation: Though Mr. Rutherfords words Temperate plea ch. 12. concl. 1. arg. 7. Due right of Presbyteries ch. 4. ſect. 6. p. 1. 260, 261. do intimate that the children in a choſen nation are holy with the holineſs of the choſen nation, though father and mother be as wicked as the Jewes that ſlew Chriſt, who were certainly unbelievers, and they muſt ſtand to this if either they will juſtify the ordinary practice of baptizing any infants of any Atheiſtical, profane Scoffers, Perſecutors, & Blaſphemers of God and Religion, if they were baptized in infancy and are called Chriſtians, or ſtand to their principle, that the commiſſion is to baptize all nations in the ſame latitude that the Jewes infants were to be circumciſed, which was and ought to be done, though the parents were ſuch as Ahab and Jezabel. But however thoſe of the Congregational way, who ſay we are freed from the pædagogy of the Jewes, and deny that now there are national Churches by inſtitution as the Jews were, and that it is ſufficient now to make a member of the Church becauſe one is by birth of this or any other nation, as then it was, becauſe one was born of the nation of the Jewes, as Mr. Burroughs vindic. againſt Mr. Edwards aſperſions pag. 23. me thinks ſhould reject the interpretation of making disciples all nations, in like wise as the one nation of the Jews were circumcised, which was by vertue of their birth, according to Gods appointment, as descended from Abraham, or as joined to that people.

Yet Mr. Cobbet Just vindic. part 2. ch. 3. s. 4. argues thus. All nations are the subject to be discipled and baptized by commission, and therefore at least all the specifical parts of the nations, all sorts of persons in the nations, but not all of every sort.

To which I reply, The consequence is not of any validity, all nations, therefore all sorts of the nations, It follows not, all nations shall serve him, therefore all sorts of the nations, all nations compassed me about, therefore every sort of persons in a nation.

But, saith Mr. Cobbet, I would know then why the collective nations are mentioned under that title of nations rather than that of grown persons of the nations.

To which I answer, the reason is because the thing said, sufficiently shews who of the nations are meant, and it is very frequent to restrain the extent of speeches pro subjecta materia, as the matter spoken of will bear it with truth and sense. And that this is usual in the use of the term [nations] is shewed before.

As for what Mr. William Cook saith in his Font uncovered page 14. children are not to be excluded Mat. 28. 19. because children are a very considerable and essential part of a nation, it is frivolous, For

1. If he mean by children infants, it is false that infants are an essential part of a nation, it is possible there may be a nation which may have for some time never an infant in it.

2. If it were true, yet it is not to his purpose till he proves that [nations Mat. 28. 19.] is not taken synecdochically for a part of the nations, those that are of age to understand preaching of the Gospel, but that it must comprehend every essential part in its full latitude.

And in like sort Mr. Nathanael Stephens his reasons taken not from the text, but from his own conceit, That [nations] must be taken as [nation] was in the application of it to the Jewish Church, and that otherwise there should be a shortning of the Covenant, they have been often answered and shewed to proceed upon such mistakes as these, that the Church of Christians was to be modelized after the fashion of the Jewes, and the use of baptiſm was to ſeal ſuch a national Covenant, and that title to a Covenant made by God gives right to baptiſm. And for his inſtances page 9. of his Precept for infant-baptiſm, to infringe our argument from John 4. 1. to prove that Mat. 28. 19. only diſciples actually made are the ſubject appointed to be baptized, they all proceed upon a miſtake of the reaſon, as if from the example there were gathered an univerſal rule, whereas it is onely brought, Firſt to explain the meaning of the phraſes Mat. 28. 19. of making diſciples and baptizing them. Secondly, that example is brought not by it ſelf alone (as Mr. Stephens brings it) but together with the inſtitution, and all the examples in the New Teſtament to prove infant-baptiſm irregular, but his ſingle inſtances do not infer. And whereas page 10, 11. he takes on him to ſhew a certain rule to know a diſcipled nation, he ſhould have added initiating infants of that nacion to baptiſm, and ſets down their publique profeſſion, he cleers not the difficulty, except he tell what profeſſion and whoſe makes it a publique profeſſion, whether when the repreſentative of it profeſſeth, or the King, or the Major part, or every perſon of underſtanding, and if he mean theſe wayes or any other, how he can acquit the Apoſtles from ſwerving from Chriſts rule, never looking after any other than perſonal profeſſion, nor baptizing any infant upon his imagined rule, and if as he ſpeaks, as the parents do now receive the faith, ſo far they and theirs muſt go under the account of a diſcipled nation, if they profeſs to bring up theirs in the faith, then though the children and ſervants be profeſſed infidels, yet the parents and maſters being believers, and promiſing to educate theirs in Chriſtianity, theſe ſhall be baptizable becauſe part of a diſcipled nation; And when he ſaith, Not only the families of thoſe that truly believe, but the families of others alſo that are willing to yield to the Chriſtian education, and to live under the tuition of a Godly Magiſtracy in the Commonwealth, and the inſtruction of a powerful Miniſtery in the Church; ſo far forth as they are willing to be guided by the Lawes, and the Government of the Church of Chriſt, and are no worſe, ſo far they muſt go under the notion of a diſcipled nation: and parents and children both be the lawful ſubjects of baptiſm. He ſpeaks nothing but riddles leaving it to his Reader to ſtudy what he means by ſo many [ſo fars] whether

he thinks all these do amount to a profession of the faith, whether these do make a man a Christian compleat, or onely an half Christian, what he means by [and are no worse] and how such a submission, as for ought I can perceive may stand with grosse ignorance of Christ, and at some times, as in Constantines and Theodosius his times was in Pagans, afore the Inquisition in Spain in many Jews and Saracens, and is at this day in Spain, yea and England in many that know nothing of Christianity, nor have any savour of the faith of Christ, can make a discipled nation, and entitle to baptism, not shewing any Scripture for what he saith, but Abrahams circumcising, Gen. 17. 12, 17. which how impertinent it is to this point of baptism, is, and shall be more fully shewed hereafter.

But I am necessitated yet to say something more to my teasing, and eager Antagonist Mr. Blake, who speaks thus Vindic. fœd. pag. 194. Mr. T. in his Apology sect. 14. pag. 143. would fain fasten another interpretation on these words, and make the Commission not to sound according to the Letter of the words, nor yet according to the successe by grace attained, but to his liking and therefore is put to it to change the word μαθητεύσατε into ποιεῖτε μαθητὰς, & then all nations must either be put by apposition ποιεῖτε μαθητὰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, or with the preposition ποιεῖτε μαθητὰς ἐν πάντων τῶν ἐθνῶν, and so instead of disciple all nations, it will be make disciples in all nations. This he thinks is very tolerable, because to disciple and to make disciples is all one. But though they may be one in themselves, yet it makes a main difference in the phrase, and with the additions of his preposition inverts the whole meaning of the words, as to the thing in controversie, which is such a violence offered to the Text, that is not to be endured in him, that is about to draw a Logical argument for his advantage against his adversary.

Answ. What I do in expounding Christs words is not onely tolerable, but necessary to be done to cleer the meaning of them. I do no more than Beza, the New Annot. and others. Mr. Blake me thinks allowes my exposition in these words a little before. The Apostles were to make disciples, to bring men into Covenant with God, and being discipled to baptize them, sealing them as Gods in Covenant; So John 4. 1, 2. when the Lord knew that the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than Iohn, though Iesus baptized not, but his disciples. Here John made disciples & baptized them being made, the disciples of Jesus made disciples, and baptized them being made; an outward work then to make profession of the faith is sufficient to make one a disciple and to bring him into the verge of the Covenant. In which he plainly asserts, that Christ appointed and the Apostles practised the making disciples by an outward work to make profession of faith, and baptized them so made. Now if this be the meaning of Mr. Blake, I see not wherein there needs be difference between us. For whether we read make disciples all nations, or make disciples of or in all nations, and this making disciples by an outward work, and profession of faith upon that outward work are that which makes one a disciple, and these are to be baptized that are thus made disciples, I shall not stick to yield that Christ appointed, and the Apostles practised by the outward work of preaching to make disciples by the outward work of profession of faith, the whole of all nations, and baptized them wholly being made disciples by profession of faith. And I mean this as Pareus on Mat. 28.19. Tertium mandatum est de baptizandis omnibus gentibus, hoc est sacramento baptismi initiandis & consecrandis omnibus iis qui Christo nomen darent. And herein I make the Commission to sound according to the letter, and according to the success by grace attained, without the least interverting the whole meaning of the words, without any violence offered to the text. Nor do I expect any thing in this matter to be indured in me but what I find agreeable to speeches of Beza, Pareus, the New Annot. and M. Blake himself.

Yea but the text is to be expounded so as to comprehend every age of men, and the term [all nations] is to comprehend the whole of every nation.

Answ. It is clear by comparing Mat. 28.19. with Mark 16.15. that [make disciples all nations] answers to [preach the Gospel to every creature] which later term is in shew more comprehensive then [make disciples all nations] But I suppose Mr. Bl. will not be so absurd as to conceive that any other than of humane kind are meant thereby, nor that any other of them are meant thereby than those that were capable of hearing and understanding it, me thinks he should not conceive Christ bid them preach the Gos-

Gospel to every deaf man, every natural fool, or mad man that have at no time use of reason, or men that wilfully would not hear: yea methinks Mr. Bl. should yield further, that when Christ bids them preach the Gospel to every man that is fit to hear, he did not intend to charge them, that they must preach the Gospel so as that every intelligent person of mankind in the world must hear it from their mouth: For then it had bin their sin being a breach of Christs cõmand, if every person of natural understanding, whether of Jews or Gentiles, did not hear the Gospel from them; which must have tied them either to sin, or else to search out every Countrey, Continent, or Island be it never so small, every house in every City, village, wilderness, and to preach Christ to them, wherever they were, which had been according to the course of ordinary humane abilities altogether impossible for them to do. I conceive Mr. Bl. will yield that in what sense it is meant Col. 1.23. the Gospel was preached to every creature under heaven, that is it was preached to all sorts of persons that were hearers without difference of Jews or Gentiles, in the same sense Christ bids them [preach the Gospel to every creature] & [make disciples all nations] being the same command as the comparing the texts shews. If [every creature] be not meant of every creature universally and distributively, but of any sort or number of men indefinitely, to whom they might and it was fit to preach, in like manner in the same command thus expressed [disciple all nations] by [all nations] are not meant omnes gentes totaliter totæ, all nations whole and wholly, but any persons indifferently in any nation whom they might, and were fit to be made disciples by preaching, and to baptize them that were professing disciples of Christ so made, which is the only sense that the success by grace attained to makes good. Neither did the Apostles in the event preach the Gospel to every humane person capable of hearing and understanding, they came not to every Village, Isle, civil or barbarous, sure not to every house, yea sometimes they were restrained, as Paul from preaching in Asia, Bithynia, Acts 16. 6, 7. nor was there ever by the Apostles or any other the Gospel preached so successfully as that there was ever one whole nation, I mean totaliter totæ, comprehending every individual humane person of that nation, discipled thereby, so as that every one of the nation, not one excepted, did

upon hearing the Gospel, freely, or of their own accord, soberly, or in their right wits, seriously, or not in jest, understandingly, or knowing what they spake, become disciples of Jesus, confessing him to be the Christ the Son of the living God.

But Mr. Blake goes on Vindic. fœderis pag. 195. [" And as it is against the letter of the text, so it is plainly against our Saviours scope and end in giving this Commission. Mr. T. Examen page 130. saith, This enlargement unto all nations in this place was in opposition to the restriction Mat. 10. 5. now in that nation to which there they were limited, the whole of the nation was in covenant, all the Land was the Land of Immanuel, Isa. 8. 8. And consequently so it was to be in other nations by vertue of this happy inlargement, or else the opposition is utterly taken away, the meaning of the words clouded, and the Apostles at a losse for understanding of them; for having spent their pains before in a nation all disciples, and now having a commission for the discipling of all nations, how shall they understand the words, unlesse the whole of the nation where they come are to be discipled? "]

Answ. The nation in which the Apostles according to the commission Mat. 10. 5, 6. before spent their pains, were the people of Israel, and to say that nation were all disciples, understanding it of disciples of Christ, and of every person of that nation, is to say the snow is black; For the contrary is manifest by expresse Scripture John 1. 11. & 7. 5, 48. & 9. 28, 29. & 10. 20. & 12. 37, 38. But, saith he, The whole of the nation was in Covenant, I grant that the whole of the nation were in the Covenants at Horeb, Exodus 19. and in the plains of Moab by Moses his edicts from God Deu. 29. But what is this to prove that the Apostles spent their pains in a nation all disciples, every person or persons, even the infants of that nation were disciples of Christ. Were all of the Jewish nation when the Apostles preached to them, disciples of Christ, because in Moses his time many hundreds of years before all were engaged in the covenants at Horeb, and the plains of Moab by Moses authority? It is but a new non-sense gibberish to make these terms synonimous to be disciples of Christ, and to be in covenant according to the manner of the Jewes being in covenant. And the reason of

Mr. Blake is as frivolous, All the Land was the Land of Immanuel, Isaiah 8.8. therefore The whole of the nation were in covenant, that nation were all disciples of Christ.

For first it is plain that [the Land of Immanuel] there is not the people, but the ground or earth they inhabited, because it is that, The breadth of which the King of Assyria did fill with his wings, that is his forces, and did pass through.

2. How doth Mr. Blake prove that it was called The Land of Immanuel, because the whole of the nation was in Covenant? It might be called Immanuels land, when the Assyrians, Chaldaans, and other strangers inhabited it, Israel being expelled, because of Gods title to it, and the people might and shall be in covenant when they shall not be in the Land.

3. But it is in my apprehension a meer whimzy, to infer the whole of the nation was in covenant in Isaiahs days, therefore the nation of the Jewes were all disciples of Christ when the Apostles spent their pains in preaching according to the commission Mat. 10.5,6.

4. There is no less dotage in the rest of his frivolous speech, that it ["is plainly against out Saviours scope and end in giving the commission Mat. 28. 19. to understand, make disciples in (I said of) all nations, that if the whole of the nation be not in covenant in other nations as in the Land of Immanuel by vertue of this happy enlargement, the opposition is utterly taken away, the meaning of the words clouded, and the Apostles at a losse for the understanding of them. "]

All which are but vain words. The meaning is plain enough, as I conceive, it was understood so by the Apostles, and hath been so by Expositors, as I have shewed; even by the chiefest of the Pædobaptists, without any such construction as Mr. Blake makes.

Mr. Blake goes on thus. ["And hereto accord the prophecies of the Scripture, for the calling of the nations of the Gentiles, God shall enlarge Iaphet, and he shall dwell in the tents of Sem, *Gen.*9.27. Sem was wholly in covenant not by pieces and parcells, but universally in covenant, Iaphet is to come in succession into covenant in like latitude; *Psal.*28. Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost most parts of the Earth for thy possession. It is not some among the nations of the heathen that are to be the inheritance of Christ, but the heathen. To which agrees Revel. 11. 15. The Kingdomes of the Earth shall become the Kingdomes of the Lord and of his Christ; Immanuel of old had one, now he shall have more Kingdomes; And they become his no other way, than by discipling; Gods Ministers are his men of War for subduing and captivating them, 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5. and Kingdoms are promised them, not some in a Kingdom. Alexander would not sit down with such a conquest, neither would Jesus Christ. If to possess some in a Kingdome be to possess a Kingdom, then Antichrist of long time hath had his Kingdom; All Kings shall bow down before him, all Nations shall serve him, Psal. 72. 11. All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee O Lord, and shall glorify thy name, Psal. 86. 9. Thou shalt call a nation which thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee, Isaiah 55. 5. There God calls the nation, and the nation doth answer Gods call. In that day Israel shall be a third with Egypt, and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the Land, whom the Lord shall blesse, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel my inheritance. There Egypt and Assyria are in equipage with Israel, all three sister-Churches; Israel without any prehemінence, either Israel then was not a nation of Disciples, a nation wholly within covenant, or else there are to be national Churches, the whole of the nation to be discipled and brought into Covenant. ,,]

Answ. Mr. Blake saith, The prophecies of Scripture accord hereto, that Mat. 28. 19. they were to make all in a nation disciples, the whole of the nation was to be discipled, and that the words were not otherwise to be understood. If this reason were of force, where any thing is said of the nation it must be understood of the whole of the nation, of every person in it or of it, even the infants. Which how monstrous and wild a conceit it is will appear by multitudes of instances. Matth. 21. 43. The Kingdom of God shall be given to a nation (contradistinguished to the Jews) bringing forth the fruits of it: If Mr. Blake say right, there is a prophecy of a nation, the whole whereof every particular particular, even infans ſhould bring forth the fruits of the Kingdome of God, *Mat.*24.9. Ye ſhall be hated of all nations for my name ſake, that is, the whole of all the nations, and if ſo, then of the Chriſtians even themſelves, who are a part of the nations. Beſides, if this were the meaning, the prophecy of Chriſt would be contradictory to the prophecies Mr. Blake brings, in the latitude in which he expounds the word [nations] Mat.24.7. Nation ſhall riſe up againſt Nation, and Kingdom againſt Kingdom, that is, if Mr. Blakes futile dictates were ought worth, the whole of the Nation and Kingdom, even the infants, ſhould riſe up againſt the whole of another Nation and Kingdom, even the infants. Acts 11.18. God hath given repentance to the Gentiles, or nations, that is, according to the rate of Mr. Blakes expoſitions, the whole of the nations, even the infants. Acts 15.3. The converſion of the Nations, that is, of the whole of the nations, even the infants, ver. 17. All the nations upon whom my name is called, that is, the whole of the nations, even the infants. The inſtances are ſo many to ſhew the futility of Mr. Blakes reaſoning, that I hope either he himſelf will diſcern his folly, and thoſe that magnify him, his weakneſs herein, or elſe me thinks the impudence of ſuch reaſoning ſhould be exploded.

But to ſhew further the vanity of his dictating, rather than diſputing, He mentions Gen. 9. 27. as a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles, but he takes it as preſuppoſed, but proves it not; and what exceptions ly againſt it will appear in that which follows in anſwer to Mr. Cobbet. And then he ſaith, Sem was wholly in Covenant, not by pieces and parcels, univerſally in Covenant, if he mean it of the Jews, in the ſenſe wherein being in covenant is as much as being diſciples of Chriſt by profeſſion, it is moſt palpably falſe: for they diſclaimed it, John 9. 28. But were it granted that they were in Covenant wholly, yet where is there a word to prove that Japhet is to come in ſucceſſion into covenant in like latitude.

Again he ſaith, Pſal. 2.8. It is not ſome among the Nations of the heathen, that are to be the inheritance of Chriſt, but the heathen.

In which ſpeech either he deals deceitfully or unskilfully. For whereas to [it is not ſome among the nations] he oppoſeth [but the hea- heathen] he should, if he would speak congruous sense, have said [all of the heathen] for [all] is opposed to [some] But instead thereof he saith [but the heathen] which is either to delude the unwary Reader in that indefinite expression, as if it were all one with an universal, or to trifle, sith [some of the heathen] may be called [the heathen] it being but an indefinite term, and doth not stand by any rule of Logick necessarily for [all heathen] and therefore it is all one as if he had said, It is not among some of the nations, but among some of the nations. Besides, what sense is there in these words [some of the nations of the heathen]? What are the heathen but the nations? Heathen, Gentiles, the Nations, are all terms of the same sense, answering to the same words in Greek ἔθνη, ἐθνικοὶ, and therefore to say [some of the nations of the heathen] is all one as to say [some of the nations of the nations] which is to trifle. Then Revel. 11. 15. is brought in, which prophecy is not to be fulfilled till the seventh Angel sounds, till then he shews not That Gods Ministers have Kingdoms promised them, not some in Kingdoms. And even then The nations were angry, and the Wrath of God was come, and the time of the dead to be judged, vers. 18. which sure was not in Johns daies, nor is it to be imagined to be fulfilled in our daies. His talk of Christ as emulating Alexander the Great, is most vain. Christ conquers those whom his Father hath given him, be they fewer or more, and sits down with that conquest, untill his foes be made his footstool, but it is most false that there is any Scripture that tells us, that all the Kingdomes of the world shall be Christs, so as that the whole of each nation shall be disciples of Christ, or willing subjects to him. For then at his comming he should have no enemies to put down, none to condemn. No doubt Antichrist, yea and the Devil too, hath had of long time a Kingdom, some its likely in most or every Kingdom, yea even where Christs Kingdom hath been. Doth not Christ say, The Angel of the Church of Pergamus dwelt where Satans throne was? Neither Psal. 72. 11. nor Psal. 86. 9. nor Isai. 55. 5. saith, That the whole of the nation shall be disciples of Christ, and if the prophecies were understood in that latitude, they were most palpably false. Nor is Isa. 19. 24, 25. certain to be a prophecy of the call of those people in the times of the Messiah, but may be understood of the succession of Proselytes thence after the return from the Captivity, and if it were, yet there is not so much as the term [nation] nor is it absurd to deny Israel to be a nation of disciples, or a nation wholly within covenant, as being within covenant is equipollent to being disciples of Christ; nor can national Churches, consisting of the whole of a nation, even the infants, be proved thence, or by any History. The whole of the nation to be discipled, and brought into covenant, is a meer phantastick dream.

M. Bl. yet ads, These prophecies or a great part of them I produc'd in my Answer of Mr. T. passing by other in silence (as having nothing to reply) he marvels that I am not ashamed to produce Psalm 72. ver. 11. Psalm. 86. ver. 9. to prove that the whole of the nations, even infants, must be included, Matth. 28. 19. As if it were foretold that the whole nation, even infants, should come before God and worship. It is strange if Mr. T. be ignorant, that prophecies in the old Testament of the glory of New Testament times, are in Old Testament phrases by way of allusion to the worship of those times, set forth to us. Now it was the practice of the people of the Jews, for their males of growth and strength to appear before the Lord, and neither females nor infants, as Ainsworth on Exod. 23. 17. observes, yet they appeared in the name of females, and their females and children were in Covenant together with them, Deut. 29. 11. so that as the rest of the prophecies to which Mr. T. hath nothing to say, so these two prophecies (against which he excepts) speak fully for the discipling of nations in the New Testament times.

Answ. Mr. Blake construes my omitting to except against the allegation of the other prophecies besides Psalm 72. 11. Psalm 86. 9. as if I had nothing to reply, whereas being indeed in that writing necessitated to be brief, I thought best to answer those that seemed to have most shew for him: But now he is answered in all. I said I marvelled he was not ashamed to produce them as he did: but he seems past shame.

He saith Vindic. fœd. pag. 329. That an eminently learned man lately observed that I had donum impudentiæ. Who that eminently learned man is I know not, nor do I care. Till there be given a reason of this censure it cannot better me, but will have a shew of malignancy to me, if not vanity also in the Censurer and Relator. And ill will seldome speaks well: He may bestow his censure more rightly elsewhere. I say still, it is a shameful thing to abuse Scriptures as Mr. Blake doth to understand by nations the whole of the nation, even infants, when, if they be so understood the Scripture should in that sense be most palpably false; for it should foretell a thing that neither was nor will be. I conceive my self not ignorant of what Mr. Blake saith, and though I grant all he saith, yet it covers no part of his shame in abusing the text. For even in his allusion, the whole of the nation, females and infants, did not appear before the Lord, and therefore were the extent of the prophecies as large as that they are conceived to allude to, yet the whole of the nation, even infants, were not included. And this is enough to shew the futility of his talk about discipling nations, which in his sense never was. Nor is there one reason given by Mr. Blake for his exposition, and reasons sufficient are given for mine, and I may retort Mr. Bls. words upon him, All indifferent men may challenge their reason that heed him, and when I am taken with such frivolous dictates as his are, I expect my friends should conclude that I doat.

That infants of believers are not disciples appointed to be baptized, Mat. 28.19.

THe last exception against the minor in my Argument [that infants of believers are not disciples of Christ appointed to be baptized Mat. 28.19.] is by denying it, and asserting on the contrary that they are disciples and appointed there to be baptized. But this is so sorry a shift, so contrary to the notation and use of the word in the New Testament in the text, to the Apostles practice which best expounds Christs commission, to their own or fellows confession elsewhere, that it looks like the putting a face on a thing when there is small hope to hold it.

you doubt not of a warrant for baptizing children who are not disciples; For then the Apostles from this place had no warrant to baptize the infants of believers.

Nevertheless because such men as Mr. Cotton, and Mr. Baxter have put this text in the front to prove infant-baptism by it, I shall lay down sundry arguments against that abuse of the text, and then examine what they say about this. That our Lord Christ did not mean by [disciples to be baptized Matth. 28. 19.] infants either of believers or unbelievers, I prove.

1. from the notation of the word μαθητὴς a verbal noun, which comes from μεμάθηται hath learned. Mr. B. Plain Scrip. proof &c. pag. 92. acknowledgeth it to have denomination from the act of learning. Mr. Blake Vindic. fœderis pag. 205. They are still stiled in New Testament-Scriptures, Believers from the faith that they profess, Saints from the holiness to which they stand engaged, Disciples from the doctrine which they profess to learn, and Christians from him whose they are, whom they serve, and from whom they expect salvation.

Whence I argue. They are not disciples as Mat. 28. 19. who do not learn or profess the learning of Christs doctrine; But infants do not learn Christs doctrine; Ergo they are not disciples. The major is proved from the notation and use of the word before confessed, and intimated in that speech of the Apostle Eph. 4. 20. which shews, that to be a Disciple is to be one that learns Christ. The minor is manifest, from the want of capacity to learn, and from sense, to which it is apparent that they regard not, heed not, understand not any thing of Christ, as by other signs, so by the difficulty to teach them when they come to years.

To this what Mr. M. replies is answered before: Mr. B. part 1. chap. 2. saith You must understand that one may be called a disciple, 1. in a large sense relatively, as being of the number of those that belong to Christ as Master and King of the Church, and destinated or devoted to his oversight and rule, and teaching, for the future: thus believers infants are disciples, of which I shall give you proof anone.

2. Sometimes the word is taken in a narrower sense for those who are actually learners. But commonly applied to men at age it includeth both relation and subordination, and also actual learning ning, but the former principally: but applied to infants it intendeth the relation at present and actual learning, as one end of it intended for the future.

To which I reply, 1. I take it for granted that it is sometimes taken for those who are actually learners.

2. That the term [disciple] commonly applied to men of age includes actual learning.

3. That applyed to infants it intendeth the relation as present, and actual learning as one end of it intended for the future.

Wherein letting passe the uncouth expression that [the word intendeth an end] and taking his meaning, I observe,

First, that he makes the term [disciples] to be meant in one manner, when it is said of men of age, and another when of infants. Which me thinks is as absurd as that he chargeth Mr. Bedford with pag. 300. that he made one end of baptism in the aged, another in infants, one covenant to parents, and another to infants, as if the aged were one sort of disciples meant Mat. 28. 19. and yet the same word includes another sort of disciples in a clean different sense. It would be known of which sort of disciples he understands it, for certainly there is but one sort of disciples there mentioned: and if he will stand to his words in that place, he must understand it of disciples upon instruction.

Secondly, That he sets down the sense of a word, and yet produceth no place for the present where the distinction is put, but refers us to another place, which his Reader must seek, and when he hath sought all his book he shall find but one text Acts 15. 10. and that miserably abused by him. Of which in its place.

Thirdly, That he acknowledgeth page 92. and here, that the denomination is from the disciples act of learning, yet will have it imagined that an infant may be a disciple without his own actual learning, onely from his belonging to Christ by Gods covenant, and mens destination and devoting to learn hereafter. But it is to me unconceivable that the denomination which is from the act inherent in the person should be without the act inherent in the person from some acts of another, and those acts not putting the form denominating in actual being, yea when oftentimes the form denominating is never in act. For by Mr. Bs. doctrine, Gods covenant, and mans devoting make a disciple, and yet I think notwithstanding withstanding the covenant, and mans devoting, many thousands, yea the most part of infants whom he would have baptized never actually learn by reason of death or disaffection, yea many expresly renounce it. Were Gods covenant absolute to every true believers infant that he shall be a disciple, yet for the present it doth put nothing actually in the person to whom the promise is made, no more than election doth put actually any thing in the elected. Prædestinatio nil ponit in prædestinato, Aq. p. 1. q. 23. art. 2. Gods purpose of a thing doth not put it in being, Mr. Bl. Vindic. fœd. pag. 89. Most truly Mr. Cobbet Just Vindic. part. 2. cap. 2. Election doth neither make a man holy, but only intentionally, nor give him actual Church right. And this may in like manner be said concerning Gods promise or covenant, by it self considered, it doth assure something for the future, but put nothing in present being. The covenant is to a person afore he is born, as to Isaac and Jacob, shall it be said, that afore they were born they were actually disciples, and had actual Church right? I confesse they might be called disciples or believers in possibility, but not actually. Gods election and promise denominate a man elected and a child of the promise (which are terms of the same extent, Rom. 9. 8.) but not justifyed, converted, regenerated, or actually a believer, disciple, or visible Church member. But this is yet more inconsistent with Mr. Bs. hypotheses, who when he assigns the covenant which he will have to make an infant actually a disciple, makes it onely the conditional covenant of grace (as I shall shew hereafter) and that covenant is upon condition of faith, and this he will have to belong to all men whether believers or unbelievers, and me thinks he should not say all men are actually disciples, visible Church members, though God hath made that covenant with them which he seals in baptism, which he often saies to be only the conditional covenant, and reckons it my prime errour that misleads me in the point of baptism, that I make baptism seal the absolute covenant of grace. And yet he chargeth Mr. Bedford p. 300. 301. as with an absurdity following his tenet that baptism should seal one covenãt to the Father, another to the son. If then the covenant make not others actually disciples, then neither infants. Idem quà idem semper facit idem. Again, a conditional covenant cannot make an actual disciple, till the condition which is actual faith be put. Conditionale nihil ponit in esse. Therfore the cõditional covenant sealed in baptism cannot make an actual disciple. Nor is it to be said, the parents faith is the condition of the covenant for the child.

For 1. it being not the condition of the covenant to the parent that another should believe for him, neither is it the condition for the child, except Mr. B. will fall into the absurdity he chargeth on Mr. Bedford, that one covenant should be to the Father, and another to the child, sealed in baptism.

2. A child, the father believing, shall be actually a disciple before it is born, for a conditional proposition, the condition being put, becomes absolute. Now it is his child, and he believing afore it is born; Ergo.

In like manner it may be said of anothers devoting or destinating an infant to be a disciple, that is no act of the person denominated, it can only make a disciple intentionally; a persons devoting is but his wish, or desire, or promise, and shall that make a child actually a disciple? yea destinating and devoting is before the child is conceived or born, as Hannah did devote Samuel, was Samuel therefore actually a disciple and visible Church-member afore he was born? many of those whom the parents destinate and devote to be actual learners in after time, yet never are such: yea many of them are expres disclaimers and opposers of that doctrine; shall these be called actual disciples, from their parents wish, or hopes, or promise?

Again, he makes the term [disciple] applied to an infant to note a relation present, actual learning as one end of it intended for the future. I confess that [disciple] notes a relation between the teacher and person taught, yet it seems to note a passion as its form or quiddity, so that if any should ask who is a disciple, I should say, one that hath learned, and what it is to be discipled, it is to be taught or learned, and so doth import a passion, and is to be put in that predicament, and the relation is as they say secundùm dici, not secundùm esse. But were it granted that the whole essence of a disciple did consist in relation, I would fain know what shall be the foundation of his relation. Logicians say, To relation there is requisite a foundation, as begetting, two terms, as Father and Son, and a respect arising between them from that foundation, as fatherhood. It is an unheard-of thing that a relation should be without a foundation, a Father without begetting, an actual Father without actual begetting. It is true, a man may be potentially a Father without actual begetting, but to make an actual Father without actual begetting, is oppositum in opposito. Mr. B. Saints everlasting rest, part 1. ch. 8. sect. 2. To be the people of God without regeneration is as impossible as to be the natural children of men without generation. Now what should be the foundation of the relation of a Disciple of Christ but learning of Christ, of an actual Disciple but actual learning, I know not. Future learning, being acording to Mr. B. the end intended, is not in being, perhaps will never be, and therefore it is in my apprehension a most illogical and absurd conceit which Mr. B. hath hatched, to obtrude upon us such a notion of a Disciple, as supposeth a relation without a foundation, and contrary to Grammar, to call a person a Disciple who hath learned nothing, no not so much as to know or own his Teacher. To say a person may be a Scholar afore he learns, serves not turn, to avoyd the force of this Reason: For the term [Scholar] coming from σχολὴ, leasure or vacation from other exercise, may be without actual learning, but μαθητὴς is a Verbal Noun from μεμάθηκα, hath learned, and Disciple à discendo, from Learning; and therefore as it is absurd to call one learned, or a Learner, without Learning, so it is absurd to call one a Disciple without actual learning. But I rest not on the notation alone, but proceed to the use of the word μαθητὴς, a Disciple.

2. I argue thus. The word [Disciple] Matth. 28. 19. is to be understood as it is understood all along the New Testament; But all along the New Testament it is applied to those that addicted themselves to some as Teachers, followed them, learned of them, no where to an infant, who doth none of these. Ergo, Infants are not Disciples, meant Matth. 28. 19. The major is plain from the rule of understanding words, that it is to be according to the use of them. The minor is proved thus. The Disciples of Christ are understood as the Disciples of John, and the Pharisees, Luke 5. 33. as the Disciples of Moses, John 9. 28. of the perverters, Acts 20. 30. But in all these places, and in all the rest, they are termed Disciples of John, the Pharisees, Moses, and the perverters, who addicted themselves to them, followed them, learned of them, no where an infant, who doth none of these; Therefore the term [Disciples of Christ] notes onely such, and no where an infant.

3. I argue thus. They that are not termed believers, are not Disciples; But infants of believers are not termed believers; Therefore they are not termed Disciples. The Major is proved from the equipollence of the term [Disciple] and [believers] in the New Testament. Calvin institut. lib.3. cap.2. sect.6. Cui respondet quod passim Evangelistæ fideles & discipulos ponunt tanquam synonyma, ac præsertim Lucas in Actis Apostolorum sapius, Acts 6.1,2,7. & 9.1,10,19,25,26,38. & 11.26,29. & 13.52. & 14. 20,22,28. Which thing is strongly disputed by Chamier, 2. Panst. Cath. tom.3. l.12 c.9. s.15. against the Papists implicite faith, that none are believers but disciples who learn and know. Which he confirms from Matth.28.19. in these words, *Nimirum diserte mandatum erat Christi mandatum, Matth.*18. μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη. Docete, sive discipulos facite omnes gentes. The minor needs not proof, believing being an act of the intellectual part, supposing the use of reason which infants ordinarily have not, at least in such things they cannot be sayd ordinarily to be believers; nor is the term believer any where in Scripture applied to them. Rightly saith the same Chamier, Panstr. Cat. tom.4. l.12.c.9. sect.53. Infantes potentia tantùm fideles sunt, actu nemo nisi adultus.

4. This is further confirmed by comparing Matth.28.19. with Mark 16.15,16. where the same Commission is expressed, given at the same time, in somwhat different words, which therefore without all contradiction the one expound the other. Now what is sayd *Matth.*28.19. [Make Disciples of all Nations] is in Mark 16.15. [Preach the Gospel to every creature] and what is sayd *Matth.*28.19. [baptizing them] is Mark 16.16. [Whosoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved] which apparently shews that [them or Disciples] are the same with [believers] and consequently not infants.

5. Which is further confirmed by Philips answer to the Eunuch, telling him, that if he did believe, he might be baptized, Acts 8.37. which shews that Philip understood Christs Commission to be to baptize believers and none else; But infants are not such ordinarily; Therefore they are not ordinarily to be baptized.

Mr.

Mr. B. himself *pag.*300. saith, Now for the aged a Disciple and believer are all one, Mark 16.16. what Mr. Blake speakes Vindic. fœd: pag 453. of infants being Disciples as to the participation of Ordinances, and elsewhere of being believers virtually, though not formally, is without Scripture proof, which terms none Disciples barely from right to participate of ordinances, but from Learning, nor any believers who are not so formaly, nor do I know in what sense infants may be called virtually believers, Then a thing is sayd to be virtually such, though not formally, when it hath, though not the quality in its kinde, yet hath it ability to produce it, as the sun they say is not hot in its self formally, yet it is hot virtually, because it can produce it in another; But I presume he will not say this of an infant that he is virtually a believer because he can produce it in another. If he mean it in another, sense, he should shew how an infant may be said to be virtually a believer; and prove that sense out of Scripture, and not abuse men with a nonsense distinction, if he mean to cleer truth. I shall need no better proof against him, to shew infants are not to be termed Disciples and believers, than his own words, *Vindic. Fœd. p.*205. All visible Professors that except the terms of the Covenant are believers, Saints, Disciples, Christians; so they are stiled in New Testament Scriptures, believers from the faith that they profess, Saints from the holiness to which they stand engaged, Disciples from the Doctrine which they profess to learn, and Christians from him whose they are, whom they serve, and from whom they expect salvation: of which terms according to his own explication none can be attributed to infants of believers.

6. That infants of believers are not Disciples appointed to be baptized, *Matth.*28.19. is proved from the means of making Disciples, to wit, by preaching the Gospel to them, as appears by Mark 16.15. For what is *Matth.*28.19. Make Disciples of all Nations, is Mark 16.15. Preach the Gospel to every creature. Whence I argue, Those Disciples which Christ hath ordinarily appointed to be baptized, are such as are made such by preaching of the Gospel to them. Rightly saith Mr. *Collings Vindic Vindic. pag.*145. How is one made a disciple, but by conversion? and when is a man converted, but when he is brought to believe?

But infants of believers are not made disciples by preaching of the Gospel, as is of it self manifest, and acknowledged by the adverse party, who make them Disciples by an imaginary Covenant, and their parents profession; Ergo, they are not Disciples appointed by Christ ordinarily to be baptized.

7. Those are appointed to be baptized, and no other, whom the Apostles did baptize, for the Apostles practice shews how they understood Christs Commission, and rightly saith Mr. Norton, respon. ad Apollon. c. 2. pag. 34. 35. Religio est nobis judicare Apostolos in baptizando observâsse regulam à Christo latam Matth. 28. 16. religion binds us to judge the Apostles to have observed in baptizing the rule made by Christ: Matth. 28. 19. But they baptized no other than repenting and believing Disciples of Christ, no infants, Ergo.

To say that in Christs and the Apostles daies there were no infants which they might baptize, is neither true, nor consistent with their own allegations of Mat. 19. 13, 14. Acts 2. 39. & 16. 15. To say that at first gathering the Church they were not to do it, but after, is to make them faulty in not observing the commission of Christ, as they expound it, that even in the first planting of the Church they were to baptize disciples immediately and remotely such, as Mr. Baxter speaks; and to hold that the Apostles practice is not our pattern, and that the first Church was not best ordered, though it was indeed the purest reformed Church, and therefore the solemn covenant ties us to endeavour the establishing the worship of God according to it. To say, infants were baptized by them but not recorded, is without proof, or any likelyhood of truth, and tends to derogate from the fulness and perfection of the Scriptures.

Out of all which I conclude, that infants, even of believers, are not disciples appointed Matth. 28. 19. ordinarily to be baptized.

Sect.

SECT. XI.

Mr. Cottons allegations in his Dialogue, the first chapter, to prove infants Disciples, are shewed to be insufficient.

AGainst this Mr. John Cotton in his Dialogue, intituled, The Grounds and Ends of Baptism, &c. chapter 1. disputes thus.

That all the children of the faithful (or which is all one, all the children of the Church, for the Church is a congregation of the faithfull) that they are all of them disciples, may appear by the testimony of the Prophet Esay, who speaking of the times of the Church in the New Testament, All thy children (saith he) shall be taught of God, Esa. 54. 13. and if they be taught of God then are they disciples, for that is the meaning of the word disciples. Disciples are taught or learnt of God.

Answ. 1. It is supposed but not proved that the text Isa. 54. 11. is meant of the Church of the N. T. and not of the people of the Jews after the Captivity.

2. The phrase of [children of the Church] is not a Scripture-phrase, nor that I know is the Church made a mother; though Jerusalem, which is above be called the Mother of us all, Gal. 4. 26. which seems to be meant of the Evangelical Covenant.

3. It is supposed that to be children of the Church, and to be children of the faithful, are one, yet Mr. Cobbet in his Just Vindic. makes them only the Church seed, who are children of persons inchurched, otherwise, though the parents be faithful, yet they are not the Church seed. Besides to be [children of the Church] is not all one with to be natural children of believers. For the Church doth not beget or bring forth by natural seed, but by spiritual, to wit, the word of God, 1 Peter 1. 23. and children are begotten in the womb of the Church by the Spirit, and therefore said to be born after the Spirit, Gal. 4. 29. by the promise or covenant of the free woman, v. 30. And indeed the New Annotations on Isaiah 54. 13. hath thus, And thy Children shall be taught of the Lord] By the outward Ministery of the word, and inward inward co-operation of the Spirit, Jerem.31.34. John 6.45. 2 Cor.13.3. 1 Cor.2.10. 1 John 2.20,27. Calvin Instit. lib.3. cap.2.§.6. Denique non frustrà Deus apud Isaiam hâc notâ discernit filios Ecclesiæ ab extraneis, quod omnes erudiet [verbo] ut sint ab ipso edocti.

4. It is supposed that the Church whose children those are is the visible church as such.

Whereas 1. in Scripture no Church is called the Mother but Hierusalem above, Gal.4.26. which is the mother of us all, and that is either the Evangelical covenant, or the invisible Church. The Churches children are Christs seed, and they are those whom his Father hath given him, Heb. 2.13. made disciples by his Word and Spirit. Our Lord Christ where he cites this passage of the Prophet, John 6.45. applies it to those that are drawn of the Father, and whom he will raise up at the last day, ver.44. who are only the children of the invisible Church. Diodati annot. on John 6.45. all] not all and every particular person, as it appears by ver.44. & 65. but all the elect and children of God. Not is Mr. Cotton's shift, rather than answer, of any moment, when he saith, For look what promises are made to the invisible Church, they are for their sakes offered to all the members of the visible Churches, whereof the lively members are the chief.

For 1. He doth alter the term in the objection, which was [made] not [offered] wherein both he, and Mr. George Philips before him, deal not rightly, so speaking as that it may be taken, that to be in covenant, to have the covenant made, is all one with to have it offered: Whereas it is offered not only to the children of the visible Church, but to many professed unbelievers, as Acts 13.46. Now this answering is a way to delude Readers, when the objection is, that the promise is made only to the children of the invisible Church, to answer the promises are also offered to the members of the visible, and when it is expected that it should be proved the promise is made to conclude that it is offered.

2. Mr. Cotton dare not say that promise to be made to any but those that are children of the invisible Church, and therefore it can be meant of no other, and so no other taught of the Lord and disciples, which will not reach to the natural children of visible inchurched believers.

3. [Thy children] is not all one with [thy infants] Mr. Cotton denies not, that the meaning in part may be of men of years, and if so no necessity to understand it of infants, and then his argument falls, which is to prove infants to be disciples.

4. Besides, our Lord Christ, where he cites John 6.45. the prophet, leaves out the word [children] and applies the teaching of God onely to true believers. Omnes, saith Grotius, quibus sermo Evangelii annuntiatur.

5. Were it granted Mr. Cotton that all believers infants were taught of God by secret indiscernable teaching, yet this being such, cannot be applyed to the disciples meant Mat. 28.19. who are disciples by preaching the Gospel, and known to be such by their profession.

But Mr. Cotton tells us, The infants or children of the faithful are not to be excluded from the number of the children of the Church. For the same Prophet speaking of the same Church, fetcheth in infants among the blessed ones of the Church, and blessed with such spiritual light and life from Christ, as if they had lived an hundred years in the Church Esa. 65.20. There shall be no more (saith he) thenceforth an infant of daies, nor an old man that hath not filled his daies. For the child shall dy an hundred years old, but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed. How shall the child dy as at an hundred years old, but that he is so well instructed, and inlightned by Christ, and thereby as capable of enterance into heavenly glory, as a grown disciple of an hundred years old?

Anſ. 1. Were M. Cottons paraphraſe granted, yet the concluſion followes not thence, that therefore infants are diſciples to be baptized according to Mat. 28.19. or as he ſpeaks, children of the Church. For to be ſo well inſtructed, and enlightned by Chriſt, and thereby as capable of entrance into heavenly glory as a grown diſciple of an hundred years old, may agree by extraordinary inſpiration to one that is only of the inviſible Church, and not of the viſible Church as diſciples meant Mat. 28.19.

2. Mr. Cotton, when he ſaith, [how ſhall the child dy as at an hundred years old] doth ſlily intimate as if [as] were in the text: whereas it is not ſo, but יָמוּת the child or boy ſhall dy an hundred years old, or the ſon of an hundred years. Which without any allegory hath a plain sense as the New Annotations expresse it, He that is now a child shall attain to those years ere he dy. Which was accomplished in the return from the captivity according to the prophecy of Zechariah ch. 8. 4. and therefore we need not run to any allegorical interpretation, nor refer it to the times of the Messiah, either after the resurrection or afore, of which Hieronym. in Locum. Vide Grotium annot. in Zec. 8. 4.

3. Were an allegory allowed, yet not only in Hieron, but also in Calvin, Piscator, and others, there are variety of senses different from Mr. Cotton, so that in alleging these texts he trifled more than became so grave a man. But he goes on thus.

'The Apostle Peter reckoneth infants of the Church for disciples Acts 15.10. If the infants of the Church had not been disciples, the false Apostles could have pretended no power to have put that ordinance upon them.

Answ. 1. [infants of the Church] is a phrase the Scripture useth not, and it serves only to possess the unwary reader with this conceit, as if the children of believers inchurched, as they speak, were children of the Church; whereas none is a child of the Church till taught the Gospel and made a believer.

2. It is untruly suggested, as "if the false Apostles pretended power to circumcise infants of Christian disciples from this that the infants were disciples": But ver. 1. 5. shew plainly that they alleged that the Gentile disciples were tied to observe the law of Moses, and so to be circumcised; both they and their children.

But, saith he, 'Peter acknowlegeth them disciples, but the yoke of circumcision was too heavy for them; as drawing upon them the yoke of the Ceremonial Law.

Answ. There is not a word of Peter acknowledging the infants disciples, but the believing parents; nor is the yoke of circumcision said to be too heavy for them now, as if it were not so formerly, but it is said to be such as neither the Apostles, nor their Fathers were able to bear, much less Gentiles.

But, saith Mr. Cotton, 'Christ Mark 10. 14. Luke 18. 16. 'Of such (little children) is the Kingdome of God, which 'argueth

'argueth that even little children are members of the Church 'here.

Answ. It is proved in my Postscript f. 20. that Matth. 19. 14. the Kingdom of heaven, in Mark 10. 14. Luke 18. 16. the Kingdom of God, is meant of the Kingdom of Glory: But it follows not that therefore infants are members of the Church here, many belonging to the invisible Church, which belong not to the visible, and vice versâ, as abortives, still born infants, converts at the point of death, &c. are of the Kingdom of Glory, who are never members of the visible Church here.

But, saith he, 'Whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of 'God, as a little child (to wit, as a little child receiveth it, for so 'much the Grammer construction requireth) he shall in no wise 'enter therein.

Answ. It is untrue, that the Grammar construction requireth, that it should be understood thus, that a little child receiveth the Kingdom of God, but only this is meant, that none shall enter into the Kingdom of God, but such as have such an humble mind, free from ambition, as a little child hath, as our Lord himself expounds it, Mat. 18. 3, 4.

But, saith he, 'Christs testimony of them and his carriage to-'wards them, shew that little children born in the Church are ac-'counted disciples of Christ, and therefore commanded to be bap-'tized with their believing parents.

Answ. Mr. Cotton himself confesseth, that it doth not appear that their Fathers, who brought them, were baptized themselves; how are they then said to be children born in the Church, or to be baptized according to rule? wherefore his own words shew it to be uncertainly, and therefore insufficiently alleged to prove that the infants of believers are among the blessed ones of Christ, such as of whom his Church and and Kingdom consisteth, and so come under the fellowship of his disciples, whom Christ commandeth to be baptized. And in very truth in that there is nothing apparent, whether the parents brought them or others, whether the parents were disciples or not: nor is any thing at all ascribed to the parents but to Christs indulgence in this action, and it appears Christ did not command them to be baptized, nor spake any thing as intituling them to discipleship and baptism, though he

he said, Of such is the Kingdom of God, this text is not only impertinently brought to prove the discipleship and baptizability of believers infants, but also makes to the contrary, that infants are not disciples nor baptizable, sith if they had been so Christ would have so declared on this occasion, which was opportune for it.

But there is yet another argument in that chapter of Mr. Cottons, and it is to this effect, 'That the Commission Mat. 28. 19. ap-'points believing parents to be baptized, and would infer, that in 'Gods account, and in Scripture phrase, parents themselves are 'not reputed of God to be baptized, if their children remain un-'baptized.

Answ. But will any man believe Mr. Cotton in this, that 'in 'Scripture phrase parents are not reputed of God to be baptized if 'their children remain unbaptized? Scripture speaks of thousands baptized, and mentions not the baptizing of any of their children under that relation as their children, shall we believe Mr. Cotton that those phrases of Scripture, that say they were baptized, speak false? and that they were not reputed of God to be baptized, because there is no mention of their childrens baptism? many believers were baptized their children being infidels, Mat. 10. 35. were not the parents reputed in Gods account baptized because the children were against it? But let us hear Mr. Cottons goodly proof in his own words.

"Surely, saith he, in the old Testament a man was accounted of God as uncircumcised himself, if his children were uncircumcised: for so it is written in Exod. 12. 48. that if a man will come and keep the Passeover, all the males in his house must be circumcised: and the reason given, is, for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof, which plainly argueth, that a man is uncircumcised himself, and (as an uncircumcised person) is to be debarred from the Passeover, until all his males be circumcised. If then our Lords Supper come in the room of the Passeover, and our baptism in the room of circumcision, look as he that had not circumcised his males was accounted as one uncircumcised himself, and so to be debarred from the Passeover, so he who hath not baptized his children is accounted of God as not baptized himself, and so to be debarred from the Lords Supper.

Answ. That baptism and the Lords Supper come in the room of Circumcision, and the Passeover, is often said, but never proved. But if it were granted (though I still deny it) yet Mr. Cottons inference is not good, till it be also yielded, that every rule of Circumcision, and the Passeover is a rule to us about Baptism and the Lords Supper, which me thinks he should not maintain. Nor do I think he can give any reason why in this the rule should bind more than in others. Yea did he consider it, he might have perceived, that if the proportion be stretched according to this rule, no parent must be counted baptized, nor to eat the Lords Supper, except he had not only all his children baptized, but also all his Servants. For the males to be circumcised were not only children, but servants also, and so those must be baptized who are out of covenant, and a national church must be formed like to the Jews, which I think were hated of him as the blind and the lame were of Davids soul. And methinks it should follow, that if it happen (as it may happen many waies, especially in new England, where many baptized persons may not have their children baptized, because the parents are not Church-members) the infants be unbaptized the parent is to be baptized again, because counted of God, and according to Scripture phrase, if Mr. Cottons dictates hold, unbaptized.

Which being absurd, I count his inference ("If therefore you forbid baptism to children, you evacuate the baptism of their parents, and so make the Commandment of God, and the Commission of the Apostles, and the baptism of believers, of none effect, together with that other passage of his pag. 4. If godly parents do withdraw their children from the covenant, and the seal of the Covenant, they do make void (as much as in them lyeth) the Covenant, both to themselves, and to their children also. And then will the Lord cut off such souls from his people, Gen. 17.14.) to be meer Mormoes or bugbears to fright children, though I am afraid they are used for a further evil end to incite Magistrates against Antipædobaptists, and to justify their hard dealing with them in new England.

That which Mr. Cotton addes, "That if we gather no infants are disciples from Mark 16. 16. compared with Matth. 28. 19. because believer and disciple are terms of the same sense, and in-

That which he speaks of the Gospel, That the promise of being God to believers and their seed is to be preached as Gospel according to Mark 16.15. and if his allegations of Acts 16.31. Luke 19.9. Gal. 3.16,17. be right, and his words true p. 22. God hath promised salvation to believers, and their seed, and house also, is so palpably false, that Mr. Marshal and Mr. Geree do both disclaim it as contrary to Protestant doctrine, as I shew in my Apology §.9.

That which he saith pag. 24. ("That the expounding baptizing into the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost Mat. 28 19. thus, baptize them into the true and orderly profession of that which they have been taught and believed, is to assert that we are to be baptized into the name of Creatures for profession is an act of our own and so a creature, which he counteth an effect of Gods judgement taking men in their own wilines, while they turn the glorious name of the blessed Trinity into the weak performance of a Christian duty, is a frivolous quillet unfit for so grave a man, James ch. 5.14. To anoint with oyl in the name of the Lord, id est, saith Beza, invocato nomine Domini, the New Annot. by calling on the name of the Lord, which is a work of their own: Do they therein turn the name of the glorious God into a Creature? But enough of this childish chapter of Mr. Cotton, in which I find so little worth answering, that were it not for the esteem he had, and his acquainting me with this piece in his letter to me, I should have chosen to have let it passe as not worth the labour bestowed in answering it.

Mr. William Cook in his Font uncovered pag. 13. brings Acts 21.4,5. To prove that infants in their mothers arms were reckoned among disciples, and makes the enumeration there to answer Deut. 29. 10,11,12. Ezra 8. 21. And whereas it might be said that the children are distinguished from the disciples, he prevents this by retortion their wives are distinguished from disciples, yet might be disciples, so the children.

Answ. 1. The places are no way parralel in the matter, not exactly in the enumeration made, in the former there is mention of servants, none here, all were of duty there to enter into covenant the whole nation together, not so here, in the later place no mention of wives, and the business was a solemn humiliation for them upon their return from captivity, but here only a courteous accompanying of Paul to the ship.

2. I grant the wives are not necessarily excluded from being disciples, nor children by the enumeration Acts 21. 5. nor are they necessary to be included: but how doth Mr. Cook prove the the children, babes carried in armes, or such little ones as had not abilities of understanding? More likely, this thing being done by common consent, the wives and children were of years to conceive what they did, whether already baptized disciples or persons catechized and expectants it is uncertain.

I shall now, finding nothing needing more answer in Mr Cobbet part 2. ch. 3. s. 4. but what will fitly come in when I answer Mr. Baxter, pass on to the answering Mr. Baxters third chapter of the first part of his plain Scripture proof, &c. where he thus argues.

SECT. XII.

Mr. Bs. allegation of Acts 15.10. to prove infants disciples is fully answered & his arguments retorted.

ALL that are Christs disciples ordinarily ought to be baptized; But some infants are Christs disciples; Therefore some infants ordinarily ought to be baptized. He tells us how he means by [disciples] which meaning of his is before proved not to be the meaning of the text, and then saith, His major is evident in the text from the conjunction of the two commands: Go make me disciples, baptizing them. If any shall be so quarrelsome against the plain text to say, It is not all disciples that they were commanded to baptize, but only all that were made disciples, and this making was onely by teaching.

I answer, 1. If I prove infants Disciples, I sure prove therby they were made so, or else they they had never been so.

2. By teaching the parents and children were both made disciples, the parents directly, the infants remotely or mediately: if they be proved once to be disciples, it will easily follow it is by this way. He that converteth the parent, maketh both him and his infants disciples incompleat or in title; This therefore lies on the proof of the Minor.

3. But I would say more to this, but that Mr.T. (as I understand) hath in his Sermons professed, That if we will prove that infants are Christs Disciples, he will acknowledge that they ought to be baptized: the like he granted to me; and well he may.

Answ. 1. It is well Mr.B. grants that to go make disciples, baptizing them, are two Commands, and that there is a conjunction of them, whence it follows, that he appoints not baptizing till the making of disciples, nor of any but disciples made as Christ appointed.

2. It is no quarrel against the plain text, but the very plain doctrine of the text to say, It is not all disciples (visibly or invisibly, directly or remotely, compleatly, or incompleatly, in reality or in title) that they were commanded to baptize, but only all that were made disciples, and this making was only by teaching or preaching the Gospel to them Mark 16.15.

3. It is true, I have often granted, that if it be proved infants are Christs disciples made by preaching to them the Gospel, they ought to be baptized. But when I granted this, it did not come into my thoughts, that Mr.B. would ever have hatched, much lesse have printed such wild nonsense fancies as here he doth, of a disciple by title without learning, like a King of Jerusalem without reigning, or the Popes Bishop of Chalcedon without overseeing, of teaching remotely in the Parents conversion without any personal teaching in themselves. For which fancies he neither brings a text of Scripture, nor any approved Author, nor any other besides himself thus speaking. Such distinctions are but meer abuses as are without any instance of such an use of terms. And to shew the grossnesse of this foppery of Mr.B. which a School-boy may easily discern that hath gone no further than Qui mihi discipulus. I argue thus, then either because the infant is an infant, and then every infant should be made a disciple by that conversion; or because his child, and then every child is made a disciple, yea though he be a professed infidel; or both, and then it would be shewed what grant there is to the child while infant, which ceaseth when grown up: where the relation of a disciple in his sense is appropriated only to infant child. Yea all the plea is, by teaching the parents and children were both made disciples, therefore this relation comes from being a child of such a one: But the professed infidel child is the child of the Father; therefore also a disciple in title, and to be baptized after Mr. Bs. doctrine.

2. If children be made disciples remotely and mediately according to the command Matth. 28.19. in that the parent is converted, and that the teaching of the parent is the teaching of the child, then it follows, he that teacheth the Father hath done his duty of teaching, though he teach not the child himself, and so a preacher need not at all go and catechize each child but only preach to parents. It would be ill with Kederminster if it should be so there. But this follows according to Mr. Bs. exposition of Christs command Mat. 28.19.

3. It will follow as well, that he that baptizeth the Father baptizeth the child, for there is a conjunction of these commands, and the baptizing is to be correspondent to the teaching; if then the teaching the parent is the teaching the child, then is the baptizing the parent the baptizing the child according to the command, and so the command is only to baptize in another him who is taught in another, and it is a gross transgression of Christs command to baptize him in himself, who is only a disciple in another.

4. Forasmuch as Mr. B. doth not limit the childs being a disciple or teaching remotely to the next parents being converted, he that shall teach the Grandfather, great Grandfather, &c. teacheth the child, makes him a disciple, yea according to his doctrine pag. 101. he that converts the Master of the house makes his servants, and those that are at his dispose, though not his children, (whom he would have baptized) disciples, for sure he would not have them baptized that are not disciples. Now I appeal to any man of understanding whether this be not as gross and pernicious a deluſion as Hart the Jeſuit held (ſo much exagitated in the conference by Dr. Raynold ch. 2. diviſ. 7.) That the Pope preacheth by another, to ſay he that teacheth the parent teacheth the child. Aſſuredly had I ever dreamed that Mr. B. had ſuch phantaſtick, if not frantick notions, I had denyed his major, and do now expreſly deny it in his ſenſe, All that are Chriſts diſciples incompleatly, in title only, remotely by the parents converſion without their own ordinarily ought to be baptized, and expect it to be proved by him ad Græcas Calendas. Nor would I have laid the ſtreſs of the argument on the proof of his Minor, if I had underſtood his deceitful gibberiſh, by which he deteſtably abuſed many people, and perverted Chriſts words. But it is my lot to anſwer ſuch a writer and I follow him.

He next goes about to prove his minor thus, [" That ſome infants are Chriſts diſciples, and ſo called by the Holy Ghoſt is moſt evident to any that will not groſly pervert the text or overlook it, in Acts 15.10. why tempt ye God to put a yoke on the neck of the diſciples, which neither our Fathers nor we were able to bear? now who were theſe diſciples? no doubt thoſe on whom the falſe Teachers would have laid the yoke. And what was that yoke? It is plain it was Circumciſion, as neceſſary and as engaging them to keep the Law. And whom would they have perſwaded thus to be circumciſed? Why both the Parents and Children in that Age, and only the Children in all following Ages ordinarily. So that thus I argu, Thoſe on whoſe necks the falſe Teachers would have laid this yoke, were Diſciples: But ſome, yea moſt of thoſe were infants on whoſe necks they would have laid this yoke: Therefore ſome Infants are Diſciples, and ſo called here. The major is plain in the Text. "]

Anſw. The minor of Mr. Bs. Argument, that Infants are Chriſts Diſciples, ſhould not be underſtood of Diſciples in that ſenſe, that Chriſt appoints Diſciples to be baptized, Matth. 28.19. Diſcipleſhip in Mr. Bs. ſenſe in title without learning, by remote teaching in the Parents converſion, being a ſenſe unknown to the Scripture, and a meer figment of Mr. Bs. brain, is falſly ſaid to be aſcribed to infants by the Holy Ghoſt, or to have any evidence in Scripture for it: nor do I think any do more groſly pervert the Text, Acts 15.10. or overlook it more than Mr. B.

But

But let us look a little nearer on Mr. Bs. arguings: he premiseth three Questions, and answers them; concerning which I grant his answer to the first, that those were Disciples on whom the false Teachers would have laid the yoke. In his second Question and the Answer ly sundry fallacies, 1. in that he puts the Question about the yoke what it was; whereas the Question that should have cleared the difficulty had been, what was the putting on of the yoke, (which Mr. B. doth I fear sophistically omit) the point in question being who are meant by [Disciples] and it being resolved by Mr. B. Those on whom the false Teachers would have laid the yoke, the Resolution must be not by knowing barely what the term [yoke] imported, but by knowing how they would lay the yoke, or what the act was of the false Teachers, termed, laying a yoke on their necks. Were the act effected or attempted, or intended onely, it's that we must know what act it was, whether such as Infants were the passive subjects of, or whether such onely as persons of age were capable of? And here I conceive two ways they might be said to lay the yoke, one by cutting with their own hand off the little skin of the privy member, either of Parents or Children, or both, according to the rite of Moses Law; the other by teaching, perswading, charging Parents that they and their Children should be circumcised, or else they should not be saved; the former had been an act of their hands, this latter of their tongues; the former onely can prove infants to be meant by [Disciples] if this latter be meant, then infants are not meant by [Disciples] for they were not subjects capable of that act. There was no act either effected or attempted on infants but onely the act of the hand using an instrument to cut off the skin. If they had attempted to act on infants the later way, by telling sucking children, you are to be circumcised, and to keep Moses Law, they had done rather like mad men than cunning Seducers. Mr. B. himself, when in the next words [And whom would they perswade to be circumcised?] and when after he confesseth, that which the false Teachers did, was Teaching, doth plainly intimate that the false Teachers act, in putting on the yoke, was onely of the tongue, not of the hand, and therefore not infants the passive subject of it, and so not meant by Disciples. Yea, the Text it self clears what their act was, when it says, v.1. They taught the brethren, v.24. They troubled them with words, subverting their souls, saying. And this is enough to shew the foppery of Mr. Bs. and others, arguings hence to prove infants Disciples, had they any minde to heed what is spoken. Those onely are meant by Disciples who were Patients or passive subjects of the act of laying on the yoke: that is Mr. Bs. own major in effect: but infants were not such, for they were not taught, nor troubled with words, nor had their souls subverted by the sayings of false Teachers; therefore they were not the Disciples meant Acts 15.10. 2. Concerning the Answer to the Question, as he lays it down, [That the yoke was Circumcision, as necessary, and as engaging them to keep the Law,] it may be meant either of the command concerning Circumcision, and so it is granted that the yoke was Circumcision, that is, the command of Circumcision propounded, and taught as necessary to the Disciples, that they might be saved, and engaging them to keep Moses Law; or by Circumcision is meant Circumcision in act, or actual Circumcision, as passively received in the flesh, and this it seems Mr. B. understands, sith it was it which was to be put on infants, and it onely, in which sense it is not meant Acts 15.10. as I have shewed. 3. The terms [as necessary, and ingaging them to keep Moses Law] may be understood variously, either as necessary and ingaging them in the opinion of the circumcised, so that the sense is, they would have laid the yoke on the necks of the Disciples, so as that the Disciples should have received circumcision with this opinion that thereby they were ingaged to keep Moses his Law, and in this sense it is true, the yoke was the command of Circumcision to beget this opinion, or else in the opinion of the Teachers or Circumcisers onely, and so it is false, that the yoke was actual Circumcision as necessary, and ingaging to keep Moses Law, they did not onely teach or circumcise, so as to have an opinion of this necessity, but so as to indeavour to possess those they would lay the yoke on, that it was necessary, and they were ingaged to keep Moses Law. As for his Answer to the third Question, according to the plain sense of the words, it is false, that they would have perswaded the children, I mean infant children, to be circumcised: For though they would perswade the Parents to be circumcised, and then to circumcise their children, yet that they would have perswaded the children, that is, that any of them went to an infant

and would have perſwaded him to be circumciſed, is falſe, and the thing would have been ridiculous.

As for the argument from Acts 15.10. as it was framed by Mr. M. I did Exam. pag. 135. deny the major, and gave my reaſon, it is not ſaid, they would put it onely on Diſciples, it is more probable they endeavoured to put it on the necks of all, whether Diſciples or others, as a thing univerſally neceſſary to ſalvation, *v.*1. which Mr. M. in his Defence overthrows not, but puts it off without anſwer, onely imagines that then I cannot evince from Matth. 3 5,6. Acts 2.42, &c. that John and Chriſts Diſciples baptized onely penitent believers. But I preſume Mr. M. will be better adviſed than to make it alike argumentative to prove all were Diſciples on whom the falſe Teachers would have put the yoke, from Acts 15 10. and to prove that there was Baptiſm in the New Teſtament but of penitent believers, from the perpetual courſe of the hiſtory thereof, in the former Diſciples being onely mentioned occaſionaly in condemning a fact done to them, in the other are ſet narrations of Acts done in the Church of God, and therefore there would have been a defect in the narration if there had been any other than penitent believers then Baptized,

But Mr. B. pleads thus, If any will ſay, that it is not all, but ſome of thoſe on whom they would have laid the yoke that are here called diſciples, that is onely them at age, I anſwer, Then it is but ſome onely whoſe Circumciſion the Apoſtle and the Synod doth conclude againſt, that is thoſe of age. For he ſpeaks againſt Laying the yoke on none but Diſciples, And then for any thing the Apoſtle ſaith, or this Synod, all infants might be circumciſed ſtill: which is a moſt groſſe abſurdity, when the very buſineſs of this Synod was to decree againſt the neceſſity of Circumciſion and the Law. To which I replied, I denied the major as expreſſed by Mr. M. thus [all they upon whoſe necks thoſe falſe Teachers would have put the yoke of Circumciſion are called Diſciples and to be called Diſciples] becauſe I conceived they would by their teaching put a neceſſity of circumciſion even on unconverted Jews who are no Diſciples, yea upon all perſons whatſoeuer, holding of all ſorts of perſons that except they were circumciſed and kept the Law of Moſes they could not be ſaved. And in like ſort I deny the major of Mr. Bs.

Argument if it be universal, all those on whose necks the false Teachers would have laid the yoke mentioned Acts 15.10. were Disciples. Nor is it plain in the Text, there is no more plain in the Text but this, that the persons expressed Acts 15.10. on whom the false Teachers would have layd the yoke were Disciples. but it doth not follow that they would have layd the yoke on none other than are there expressed, as when it is sayd, Christ would have gathered the children of Jerusalem, Matth. 23.37. though none but the children of Jerusalem are there expressed, yet it follows not all are the children of Jerusalem whom he would have gathered. Nor doth that imaginary grosse absurdity follow which Mr. B. would fasten on this deniall of his major. For 1. there are in the Syneds letter both v. 24. Condemning the false Teachers Doctrine, and v. 28. 29. laying no other burden on them to whom they wrot, plain passages exempting old and yong from Circumcision, though v. 10. were left out. 2. Even in that, v. 10 Peter reproves their putting a yoke on the neck of the aged, he doth determine parents not bound to circumcise their children, and this is a conclusion against Circumcision of infants, as A canon against Priests marriage is a Law against their wives living with them; and the concluding against a practise in some upon a common reason, to others is a general prohibition, as the Apostles determination Acts 6.2. is a determination against the like in others. But however, this is enough to answer Mr. Bs. Argument; and some perhaps would yield his minor, yet I deny it, and doubt not to shew that in the thing wherein he is most confident, in so much that in his Epistle before his Saints Everlasting Rest, he makes me with others play the Devil in accusing my own children as no Disciples, when God saith the contrary, (O utinam!) Acts 15. 10. he is an egregious Trifler.

To prove his minor, he thus argues, I prove it was the Infants also, thus, If it were Infants also whom the false Teachers would have had to be circumcised as necessary, and as engaging to Moses Law, then it was infants also on whom they would have laid the yoke; but it was infants also whom they would have had circumcised, &c. Therefore, &c. The Antecedent is undeniable. But it is the Consequence Mr. T. denieth; for he saith, It is not Circumcision as necessary, and as engaging to Mo:s Law, which was

Answ. 1. Should the Conclusion be granted him, that they were infants also whom the false Teachers would have had to be circumcised, &c. yet sith he grants, that they would have had the Fathers circumcised, they onely may be meant by [Disciples] though Circumcision were yielded to be the yoke. 2. Circumcision is no way necessary, that I know, but as commanded, nor engaging to keep Moses Law, but as taught, and yielded to: And therefore I know not what sense Mr. Bs. words have, that it was infants also whom the false Teachers would have had to be circumcised as necessary, and as engaging to Moses Law, but one of these, they would have them circumcised, having this opinion, that it was necessary, and did engage, or that they taught Circumcision as a necessary command, and as engaging to Moses Law, and in this latter sense I should not have sayd, (if I did say it) that it is not Circumcision as necessary, and as engaging to Moses Law, which was the yoke, but it was the Doctrine of those Teachers; but rather have sayd, it was Circumcision as necessary, and engaging to Moses Law, which was the yoke, that is, the Doctrine of those Teachers. But because Mr. Bs. expression is dubious, or nonsense, and that which he mainly bends himself to prove, is, that it was not the Doctrine which was the yoke to be put on Disciples, (for then there would have been no colour to expound [Disciples] of infants) but Circumcision in act, or acted on the flesh, though as a blinde he add those words, as necessary and engaging to Moses Law, therefore I denied the Consequence, as if those words were left out, which indeed he himself leaves out in the proof of his Antecedent, proving onely they would have had them circumcised, without saying any thing, to prove they would have had them circumcised under this formal consideration or respect, as yielding to the necessity of it, and engaging themselves thereby to keep Moses Law. But if he put in those words in the minor, in this sense, I deny it also. As for the Consequence there is no proof brought for it to confirm it, but by overthrowing the reason I gave of denying it, so that had I given no reason of denying it, there had been brought no proof. But as yet I do not apprehend, though I had granted him, that Circumcision was the yoke, and not the Doctrine, (which I do not) that yet it would have followed, that if the false Teachers would have had the infants circumcised they were those also on whom they would have layd the yoke, for they might have attempted to lay the yoke of Circumcision on the Parents, and so the laying on of the yoke might be onely the circumcising the Parents, though they would have also the infants circumcised. But it being true, that I gave that reason of my denial of Mr. Bs. Consequence, that I may the more abundantly shew the futility of his foolishly magnified dispute, I will engage with him even upon that point also. And to clear my meaning, it is true, Exam. pag. 101. I said, the yoke, Acts 15.10. was Circumcision, as Mr. M. himself declared, pag. 39. of his Sermon, and all the legal Ceremonies, and the reason why I used that expression was, because I alleged Mr. Ms. words. But that I meant not Circumcision in act, or as acted on the flesh to be the yoke, but Circumcision in command, as commanded and imposed on the conscience, appears by the words following: if it be a privilege to be free from Circumcision it is a privilege to be free from any Ordinance in the room and use of it, it was the Ordinance then, I made the yoke. And my minde is expressed thus, pag. 135. The putting the yoke of Circumcision is not actual Circumcision in their flesh, for that they were able to bear for many Ages, but the necessity of it on mens consciences to salvation. In my Antidote, sect. 6. I deny it to be actual Circumcision, but sometimes call it the doctrine or opinion of the necessity of it. In my Book of Scandalizing I call it the Ordinances of the Jews. In my Præcursor, pag. 10. the doctrines and commands: but most plainly I express my self in my Præcursor, pag. 74. in my Answer to the 27*th* absurdity Mr. B. chargeth me with, pag. 208. of his Plain Scripture Proof, &c. where I make it the yoke of Doctrine, or the command of Circumcision, and shew, that not onely Grotius, but also Pareus, Piscator, Diodati, the new Annot. so expressed it. This then is my constant judgment, 1. That the Yoke, Acts 15.10. is not actual Circumcision or Circumcision in act, that is, as acted on the flesh,

which alone serves for Mr. Bs. turn to prove infants Disciples, for no more would they have done to infants. 2. That the putting the yoke is teaching the necessity of it, or the command of God still binding their consciences, of which act the infants were not subjects recipient. 3. That the yoke as from the false Teachers was the Doctrine, or command of Circumcision and other Precepts of the Law, which sundry learned men in their notes on Matth. 11.29. gather to be meant by the yoke, comparing these places with 1 John 5.3. what is Matth. 11.29. called Christs yoke, is 1 John 5.3. called his Commandments, and doctrinal commands, or as the expression is, Matth. 15.9. Doctrines, commands, are called Burdens, Matth. 23. Luke 11.46. Rev. 2.24. As it is taken passively, that is, to be received by the person yoked or taught is the opinion of the necessity of these unto salvation, or as Mr. B. himself after cals it the judgment of it. 4. That by the Disciples are meant the converted Christians of the Gentiles called *the Brethren, v.*1. those *that from the Gentiles turn to God, v.*19. *The brethren of the Gentiles, v.*23. Mr. *Blake Vindic. Fœderis, pag.*208. Complaint is made, Acts 15.10. that those that urged the necessity of Circumcision put a yoke on the necks of the Disciples, which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear; they urged it upon all in visible profession, and not upon regenerate ones alone. 5. That by their necks is meant not their flesh or skin, but their consciences. Let's now see what Mr. B. brings to prove the yoke Acts 15.10. to be actual Circumcision, or in act, that is, acted on their flesh, and not the doctrine or command of Circumcision, or that the putting the yoke was in their flesh by cutting off the skin, not in their consciences by teaching.

*Paulr. Cob. tom.*3. *l.*11. *c.*15. spends a whole Chapter to prove against the Papists that the yoke there is the Moral as well as the Ceremonial Law. Yea, Mr. B. himself *Direct.*10. *for peace, pag.*71. hath these words, They were therefore said to be in bondage to the Law, and the Law was said to be a yoke, which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear, Acts 15.10. *Vide Pareum Bell. Castig de Justific. l.*5. *c.*14. is the common Doctrine of Protestants to interpret the yoke of the whole Law, intolerable, because of the curse.

1. Saith he, The Text saith so three times over, [that it was Circumcision as necessary and engaging to Moses Law, that was that yoke] *v.*1. They taught the brethren, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses ye cannot be saved: and *v.*5. They taught, it was needfull to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the Law of Moses: and *v.*24. saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the Law.

Answ. There's not a word in either of the three Verses, that says so expresly, or by any good consequence, that the *yoke v.*10. is Circumcision actual or in act, that is, acted or to be acted on the flesh. Mr. B. me thinks if he could have made any good inference from thence, for his Conclusion, should have formed it, being not ignorant that in my Antidote I bring these very verses and words to prove the contrary.

2. Saith he, *It appears evidently from the same, v.*10. the yoke which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear, that which neither their fathers nor they were able to bear, was the yoke there meant: but it was Circumcision as necessary, and engaging to keep the Law, and not the Doctrine of the false Apostles, which their fathers and they were not able to bear, therefore, &c. The major is in the Text; the minor is plain; 1. In that there is no mention in the Scripture of the Fathers being so burdened with that false doctrine; but that there is mention enough of their being burdened with the Law, and Circumcision as engaging to it. 2. It was true and good Doctrine before Christ which these false Apostles taught, viz. that except they were circumcised, and kept the Law, they could not be saved: I mean as to the Jews it was true, (for I will not now meddle with that great controversie whether the Gentiles were bound to keep Moses Law, I know not what Grotius, Franzius, &c. say on one side, and Cloppenburgius, and many more on the other.)

Answer. This passage I also allege against Mr. Bs. opinion, in my *Antidote sect.*6. to prove that it is not Circumcision in act but in command or doctrine that is there meant by the yoke. But that we may determine the thing it is to be considered: 1. Who [We and our Father] are: 2. In what part or respect, and how it was intolerable. Doubtless by [we] the Apostle means the modern Jews, and by [our Fathers] the Jewes of former times. The intolerableness was not to their flesh, as Diodati speaks, for the labour in observing it, for though it be true that it was very irksom ſom to obſerve Circumciſion, and the Rites of Moſes Law, yet Circumciſion was poſſible to be born, eſpecially by an infant, though, in the end and intent of the circumciſers it was done as neceſſary and engaging to keep Moſes Law, yet the infants being not ſenſible thereof, it was not intolerable to them. And the Apoſtle Paul, Phil. 3.6. ſpeaks of himſelf, as touching the righteouſneſs of the Law, blameleſs. But it was intolerable to their mindes and conſciences, by reaſon of the imperfection of it to quiet the conſcience, and the condemnation it bound to for not keeping it in, ſaith Diodati locum. And therefore it was the Command and Doctrine that was intolerable to perſons on whoſe conſciences the Law was impoſed, not the acting Circumciſion, or Circumciſion acted, which alone was put on infants, and conſequently the yoke is not what was impoſed on infants, but on perſons taught and commanded. As for Mr. *B*s. reaſons, the firſt he himſelf anſwers by his ſecond. For he ſaith that doctrine was true to the Jews before Chriſt, therefore ſure the Fathers were acquainted with it, it was doctrine known among them whether the Scripture mention it or no; and whether it were true or falſe if it were received by them it muſt needs be burdenſome to them. And for his ſecond: 1. That it was true doctrine to the Jews before Chriſt that except they were circumciſed after the maner of Moſes they could not be ſaved, and that it was needfull to circumciſe them, and to Command them to keep the Law, v. 1. 5. is in my apprehenſion diametrally oppoſite to Pauls doctrine, Gal. 2. & 3. & 4. & 5. Rom. 3. & 4. & 10. Phil. 3. concerning the non-neceſſity of obſerving the Law for juſtification, juſtification by faith without the works of the Law both in Abrahams, Davids, Moſes his time. 2. If the doctrine were true to the Jews, it was the more intolerable, it would ly the more heavy on their conſciences, finding themſelves unable to obſerve it; therefore this reaſon is againſt Mr. B. and proves the doctrine was the yoke.

But he adds, Mr. T. ſaith it was the Phariſees doctrine of being juſtified by the Law which was the yoke. But I anſwer, 1. the Phariſees were not of ſo long continuance as to be the burden of the Fathers by their doctrine. 2. theſe in the Text taught but a neceſſity that thoſe who believed in Chriſt ſhould be circumciſed and keep the Law: ſo did not the Phariſees.

Answ. 1. Those in the Text taught not onely a necessity that those who believed in Christ should be circumcised, and keep the Law, by way of Precept, but also of means, that except they did so, they could not be saved, and that was still taken by the Apostle in the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, Philippians, as the Doctrine of Justification by the Law. And that this was the yoke which was so intolerable, Acts 15. 10. appears by the next words, ver. 11. But we trust or believe to be saved by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, even as also they. The term [ἀλλὰ, but] being adversative, shews the Apostles assertion, v. 11. to contain an Antithesis to their Thesis or Doctrine, that is, whereas they impose this intolerable yoke of Doctrine, that without Circumcision, and keeping the Law, Disciples cannot be saved, We believe they may be saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, purifying their hearts by faith, v 9. without the observation of Moses Law. 2. It is not true, that they taught onely a necessity that those who believed in Christ should be circumcised, and keep the Law; as if they exempted others. For though there is mention onely of their teaching the Brethren, yet doubtless they held a like necessity of it, or rather a greater, for Jews. whether converted or unconverted, as for Christian Gentiles. 3. But were it true, that they taught but a necessity that those who believed in Christ should be circumcised, and keep the Law; yet the Doctrine might be an intolerable yoke both to Disciples, and to the Ancestors from whomsoever they learn'd it. Whose Doctrine soever it were, yet it was a yoke intolerable to present Disciples and the Predecessors of former Generations. 4. The antiquity of the Pharisees is variously conceived by Writers; it is conceived that Sect began three hundred years before the birth of Christ, by some higher; sure they were ancient enough to burden the Fathers, that is, the Ancestours of the modern Jews, when Peter spake those words. 5. Were it that others spake that Doctrine, and burdened the Fathers with it, yet it might be well called by me the Pharisees Doctrine, who taught it afterwards. 6. That Mr. Bs. willingness to cavil may appear, let v. 5. be read, and there it is said, The false Teachers were of the Sect of the Pharisees. 3. Saith Mr. B. The Doctrine is no further a yoke than as it hath reference to Circumcision, and keeping the Law, in practice, and as it prevaileth vaileth to bring them to the belief and practice; therefore it is evident, that the Doctrine is not the yoke; but the judgment and practice which that Doctrine did teach them; else it would be in the power of men to yoke and burden us at their pleasure: But till we obey it we are free from the yoke; therefore the yoke lieth not in the Doctrine, but the obeying.

Answ. This Argument however faulty, yet it plainly crosseth Mr. Bs. purpose; for his aim is to expound the yoke, so as that it may be said, to be laid on infants, and so they be reckoned for Disciples; but if it be that the judgment and practice which the Doctrine did teach were the yoke, if the yoke did ly in obeying, as he here saith, then the yoke was not put or endeavoured to be put on infants, the false Teachers neither did put nor endeavoured to put any thing on the judgment or practice of infants, nor to have brought them to obeying. What was to be done to them was not to be done by false Teachers, but the Parents; there was no act to be done on the infants mindes, consciences, judgments, but on their flesh, nor were they to be active in practice, or willing in obedience, but meerly passive, and likely very unwillingly. And therefore I infer from Mr. Bs. own Argument, If the Doctrine were no further a yoke, than as it hath reference to Circumcision, and keeping the Law, in practice, and as it prevaileth to bring them to the belief and practice, that the yoke is the judgment and practice, which the doctrine did teach, that it lieth in the obeying, then it is no yoke to infants, then it is not Circumcision as acted but as taught and yielded to, then it was not to be put on infants, and consequently no infants are meant by the Disciples, Acts 15.10. But for the thing objected, as I have sayd before, the doctrine may be considered either in se, in it self, as it came from the Teachers, or in the event to the persons taught, being yielded to by them: It is true, the doctrine was not a yoke to the Disciples eventually, till the Disciples yielded to it, but it was in it self a yoke, and might so be called before, as the truth of Christ is the Gospel or glad tidings in it self, and may be, and is often so called, though it prove not so to all that hear it. Wherefore I have sometimes called the yoke the command, sometimes the doctrine, sometimes the necessity of observation, sometimes the opinion of the necessity, and all these in different respects are rightly made the Yoke: in respect of God the command and necessity of observance, of the Teachers the doctrine, of the persons yoked the opinion and judgment, when it becomes such in the event, not onely in fieri, but in facto esse, yet no way barely Circumcision acted on infants, and consequently they not Disciples, Acts 15.10. which conceit is plainly overthrown by Mr. Bs. own Argument.

4. Saith Mr. B. [" That which this Synod did decree against, and Peter here spoke against, that was the yoke here meant. But it was Circumcision as needfull, and engaging to keep the Law, which this Synod decreed against, and Peter here spoke against: therefore this Circumcision was the yoke. The minor is evident in the the three verses before named, and in the whole Chapter. Who dare say that this Synod did not decree against Circumcision and keeping the Law? And the major is as plain; And yet the very sum and strength of all that Mr. T. hath to say against this Text is here, which seems apparently to me to be but a meer cavilling with the plain Scripture. "]

Answ. All this may be justly retorted. That which this Synod did decree against, and Peter here spake against, that was the yoke here meant: but it was not barely Circumcision as acted on infants, but Circumcision as taught, the command, doctrine, obligation, necessity of it to salvation, & opinion of that necessity urged on Disciples by teaching, which this Synod decreed against, and Peter here spoke against: therefore this doctrine, command, obligation, necessity, opinion of Circumcision and keeping the Law urged on persons taught was the yoke, & not barely Circumcision as acted on infants by parents, after the manner, and by virtue of Moses Law. The minor is evident in the three verses before named, and in the whole Chapter. Who dare say that this Synod did not decree against the command, doctrine, obligation, necessity, opinion of Circumcision, and and keeping the Law? And yet the very sum and strength of all Mr. B. hath to say against this Text is here, which seems apparently to me to be but a meer cavilling with the plain Scripture.

But he adds of me, [" He saith that the Synod decreed against Circumcision but by consequence, and not expresly; and that the thing they directly and expresly decreed against, and Peter spoke against, was not the yoke it self, but the putting the yoke on them, which was the act of the false Teachers in Teaching. "]

Answ.

Answ. That which the Synod decreed against, and Peter spake against, I say was not barely Circumcision as acted on infants, nor Circumcision acted on infants immediately, but the command, doctrine, obligation, necessity and opinion of necessity of Circumcision, and keeping the Law to salvation, and consequently the infants Circumcision, which how or in what sense they are the yoke, and what the putting on of the yoke is, hath already been often shewed.

But saith Mr. B. ["1. If this were granted, yet neither directly nor consequently do they decree against the circumcising of any but Disciples, and therefore infants must needs be part of those Disciples. "]

Answer. That which Peter spoke against was the practise of the false Teachers, *v.*10. The decree of the Synod was expresly, 1. a condemnation of the false Teachers practice, *v.*24. 2. A release to Gentile Disciples of other commands called burdens save onely some excepted, *v.*28,29. Acts 21.25. And it is true that these decrees are directed onely to the Disciples of the Gentiles for the freeing of their consciences. But it is false that they decree against the circumcising of none but Disciples. It is true the decree is not for the release of burdens to any but Disciples: But he that releaseth the burden that is the command of Circumcision to the Father who is a Disciple, doth withall by plain consequence free the childe from Circumcision, and yet the childe no Disciple.

Answ. And it expresseth also keeping the Law, doth it therefore follow that the yoke, Acts 15.10. is the actual keeping the Law, and that this might be put on infants.

3. Saith he, [" It is undeniable in the 28,29. v. that it was matter of their practice, as directly as the false Apostles teaching, and much more which was decreed against. It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, to lay upon you no greater burdens than these necessary things: that ye abstain from meats offered to Idols, &c. Mark 1. their practice is the thing decreed upon expresly, and not the doctrine of the false Teacher (though that is implied) they do not say we do not decree, that they preach so no more, but that you abstain, &c.

Answ. 1. Mr. Bs. speeches seem to enterfer, when he saith, *v.*28 29. It was the matter of their practice as directly as the false Apostles teaching, and much more, which was here decreed against, Doth he not confess that the false Apostles teaching was directly decreed against, though not so much? yet presently he bids, Mark, that it is not the Doctrine of the false Teachers that is decreed upon expresly [though that is implied] yet by [directly and expresly] he seems to mean the same. 2. What if v. 8, 29. decree not expresly against the Doctrine of the false Teachers, yet if it were implied it was decreed against. 3. If it were not expresly decreed upon, *v.*28, 29. Is it not enough that it was expresly decreed against, *v.*24.? 4. Though they do not say *v.*28. we decree that they preach so no more, yet when they say, It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us to lay upon you no greater burdens than these necessary things, this is an expres decree against the Doctrine of those false Teachers, *v.*1. Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses *ye cannot be saved, and v.*5. that it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the Law of Moses.

2. Saith Mr. B. "This is it also which is here called [the burden] in the sense, no doubt, with that which before was called the yoke, no greater burden or yoke. And can any impartial mans conscience tell him that the onely chief question here debated and determined was, whether the false Apostles should any more preach such doctrine. and not rather whether the Disciples ought to be circumcised and keep the Law of Moses."

Answ. If the burden and yoke be the same, then the yoke *v.*10. is not that which was put on infants. For the burden *v.*28. is called [Command] *v.*24. and this was opposit to the false Teachers saying to command them to keep the Law of Moses *v.*5. and by burdens elsewhere are meant Commands or Doctrines or Doctrinal Commands Matth. 23 4. Luke 11.46. Revel. 2.24. now Commands were not attempted to be put on infants who could not understand them. 2. If the practise were the yoke, then it was not on infants who were not urged to practise but to suffer, specially taking in what Mr. B. before said, it was the judgment and practice which the Doctrine did Teach which was the yoke. And to his questions I say, the false Teachers Doctrine and the Disciples practise were both in question, and both determined in the Synod, and therefore both decreed against, and so the doctrine is the yoke in respect of the yoakers, and the judgment and practise in respect of the yoaked.

4. Saith Mr. B. "It was the Church of Antioch and not the false Teachers that sent to Jerusalem for resolution. 5. And it was to the brethren, and not to the false Teachers that the Synod did direct their letters, and decrees: therefore it was the Disciples practise that is more directly decreed against (or at least as much) than the Doctrine of the Teachers."

Answ. Be the Conclusion granted, yet the Doctrine is decreed against, and consequently is meant by the yoke *v.*10. even according to Mr. Bs. argument, That which the Synod did decree against was the yoke here meant. But doth not Mr. B. in these words plainly intimate that Disciples are the same with brethren, to whom the letters were directed, which sure were not infants? It is true the Church of Antioch, and not the false Teachers, sent to Jerusalem for resolution, and that the letters were directed not to the false Teachers, but brethren called believers, Acts 21.25. yet they sent about the false Teachers Doctrine, and the decree and speech were against that Doctrine: even as the decrees or Canons of Councils are against the doctrine of Heretikes though sent to the Churches. From all which I infer that Mr. Bs. reasoning is frivolous, and while he oppose h it, his own arguments prove, that the Doctrine of the false Teachers is the yoke. But he hath not yet done.

6. Saith he, "If it were granted as Mr. T. would have it, that it is onely putting on the yoke that is here expressely decreed against, and the yoke or practise it self but onely by consequence, then he would make this Synod so weak as to leave the matter imperfect and obscure, which they were to determine expressly: and perhaps it might put him hard to it to prove that consequence: For it will not alway follow that what may not be taught may not be practised, as I could shew in several cases."

Answ. I hold the Synod to decree expressely against the yoke, understanding by it the Doctrine of the necessity of Circumcision, the obligation and opinion of its necessity, and the putting of the yoke, that is the Teaching this Doctrine to Disciples, and by consequence sequence against the Gentiles believing Parents practice of circumcising their Infants as of duty, nor do I know how any other way Mr. B. can gather it from the Epistle of the Synod than as I do; sure in all the Epistle I finde not any other way to prove Gentile believers are not bound to circumcise their children, but by urging the words v. 24, 28. 29 in which parents are not discharged of circumcising infants expresly in so many words, But by consequence. And yet the matter is not left imperfect or obscure, but there is an expres determination against that which was the occasion of the Synod, to wit the Doctrine of the false Teachers, v. 24. nor is the consequence hard to infer, if the Apostles give no command to the Gentile parents to be circumcised. and to keep the Law, then parents are not tied to circumcise their infants, there being no necessity or duty to them who have no command or burden put on them. Mr. B. misttakes in conceivng I framed the consequence thus: What the false Apostles might not teach, the parents might not practice. And therefore though he could shew in many more cases than he can, that it will not alway follow that what may not be taught may not be practiced, the consequence as I frame it may be clear, & the determination of the Synod expres and perfect.

But he adds: 7. And me thinks we may be allowed to prove baptism of infants by consequence: if this Synod assembled of purpose about Circumcision and the Law did yet leave them nothing but consequence against it.

Answ. I never said, that the Synod left nothing but consequence against Circumcision and the Law; nor did I disallow at any time the proving of infants baptism by consequence, but have often declared the contrary, though Mr. M. most unbrotherly charged me with it, pag. 3. of his Defence, but absolved me of it, pag. 205. as I shew in my Apology, sect. 11. and in my Præcursor, sect. 8. But having so long expected some proof by consequence for infant-baptism, and finding upon trial in so many Authors as have occurred nothing worth the name of a proof, I conclude there is no such thing, but that Pædobaptists, and none more than Mr. B. do onely gull the world, and which is more to be detested, the godly, and of those, many that are teachers of others, with flourishes and shews, instead of proof, in so much as some who are of able parts magnifie his book about infants baptism as excellent, whether it be out of rashness, or for advantage sake to themselves, finde it upon strictest examination to be but a meer cheat.

But Mr. B. hath one string more to his Bowe. 5. Further, saith he, that it was Circumcision it self as needfull, and as engaging to Moses Law, which is here meant, is plain in Gal. 5.1,2,3. No doubt either those that mis-taught the Galatians were the same with those or their companions teaching the same Doctrine, and therefore Paul there decideth the same cause; and mark what he cals the yoke, Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. For I testifie again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to the whole Law. Is not he wilfull that yet will say, the yoke is onely the Doctrine of the false Teachers, and not Circumcision as engaging to keep the Law.

Answ. 1. Mr. B. before *p.*17. said, that it is evident the doctrine is not the yoke; here when he saith, Is not he wilfull that yet will say that the yoke is onely the doctrine of the false Teachers? He doth plainly intimate that he excepts not against the holding the yoke to be the Doctrine, but the holding it to be onely the Doctrine of the false Teachers, which is me thinks to contradict himself, and to overthrow what he contends for, to wit, the yoke is that which was put on infants: but the Doctrine was not put on infants, and therefore if the Doctrine were in part the yoke, and this not put on infants, then the yoke was not put on infants, then it is not absurd for me to expound the yoke of the Doctrine of the false Teachers, and his Arguments against that Exposition are answered by his own concession. 2. If it be true, that either those that mis-taught the Galatians were the same with these false Teachers, Acts 15.1. or their companions teaching the same Doctrine, then it is most false which Mr. B. teacheth, *pag.*16. It was true, and good doctrine before Christ, which these false Apostles taught, viz. that except they were circumcised, and kept the Law, they could not be saved; I mean as to the Jews it was true. Now the Doctrine of those that mis-taught the Galatians, was justification by the Law, as appears by the Apostles opposition, *Gal.*2.16,21. & 3.5 11,18,21. & 4.21. & 5.4. and this was the same with the Doctrine of the false Teachers, as appears from Acts 15.1,9,10,11. and Mr. B. confesseth it to be the same. But that Doctrine the Apostle denies to have been true and good before Christ to the Jews, Gal. 3. & 4. and elsewhere, and therefore Mr. B. contradicts the Apostle, and his speech overthrows the Gospel, and avows keeping of the Law necessary to justification and salvation, to have been true and good Doctrine to the Jews afore Christ. 3. He is not wilfull but considerate, that by the yoke of bondage, Gal. 5.1. understands not Circumcision as acted on infants, that is the bare passive reception of Circumcision, of which onely infants are capable, no nor perhaps (for that is disputed) all willing receiving of Circumcision as the Habassine Christians do, but the willing subjecting to Circumcision according to the command of Moses, and the Doctrine of the Teachers that urged it as necessary for justification and salvation. For herein, 1. they have many of the best sort of Protestant Writers on their side. 2. They have these Reasons for them, 1. Because the exhortation, Gal. 5.1. is inferred from his determination in the precedent Chapter, from v. 21. to the end, to wit, that the Covenant of the Law did beget to bondage, and that they were children of the free woman, and therefore the yoke of bondage is not simply Circumcision as acted, but as Mr. Dickson expresseth it, the yoke of the Covenant of Works and legal Ceremonies. 2. Because [if ye be circumcised, v. 2.] is expounded rightly, if ye be willingly circumcised, upon the opinion, and according to the Doctrine of the false Teachers to seek justification thereby, as the reasons of the Apostle, v. 3,4 do evidently shew. 3. Otherwise Timothy might be said to be entanged with the yoke of bondage when he was circumcised, Acts 16.3. which being so, this Argument (as all the rest of Mr. Bs. Arguments) is against him. For if the false Teachers were the same, and the yoke the same, Acts 15. 10. Gal. 5.1. and the yoke, Gal. 5.1. be not Circumcision as acted on infants, but the Covenant of Works, and Circumcision as taught and yielded to by the circumcised under the notion of necessity for justification, and obligation thereby to keep the whole Law, then the yoke was not that which is put on infants, nor any infants meant by Disciples, Acts 15.10.

The Arguments are vindicated, which are brought to prove infants not meant by Disciples, Acts 15.10.

BUt Mr. B. proceeds, Well, but Mr. T. hath one argument for his conceit, and but one that I have heard, and that is like the conceit it self. If (saith he) putting on the yoke be onely by teaching, then the yoke it self is onely the Doctrine, and consequently it was to be put on none but those that could be taught. Answ. 1. I deny both the Consequences, and he will never prove them. For, 1. by [putting] he confesseth is meant [an endeavour to put] therefore it must be more than bare Doctrine. And if by Doctrine they perswade the People of the necessity of practice in so doing, they put on them both the mis-belief and the practice.

Answ. Mr. B. it seems either did not reade, or not heed, or forgot what was in Examen. pag. 135. when he saith, he had heard but of one Argument for my conceit, though it be his meer ignorance that makes him call it my conceit, as if it were my peculiar conceit; whereas his own conceit is scarce any thing older than himself, and mine agreeable to the Exposition of the best and elder Interpreters. And however when Mr. B. wrote this he might know of no more Arguments against his conceit, yet there are more in my Antidote, sect. 6. to which with this here I shall review his Answers. My Argument in form is this, They onely are meant by Disciples, Acts 15 10. who were to be the subjects passive or recipient of the act of the false Teachers whether effected or attempted, that is of that which they would have done to them. But no infants were to be the subjects passive or recipient of the act of the false Teachers, whether effected or attempted, that is of that which they would have done to them. Ergo. The major is plain to common understanding, according to all Rules of Logick and Grammar. So we argue, they must be meant by all men, John 12.32. when Christ saith, I will draw all men to me, who were the subjects recipient of the act of drawing. Every particular man is not the subject of Christs drawing, therefore [all men] doth not note every particular man. Innumerable such Arguments are among Writers Ecclesiastical and Civil, nor is there any thing more plain to common understanding The minor is proved thus: the onely act of the false Teachers by which the yoke was to be put on Disciples was teaching, or that which they would have done to them was onely teaching. But of this act no infant was the passive subject: Ergo. The former is confessed by himself in calling it perswading, and if it were not, the Text proves it, v. 1. 5, 24 The minor is manifest, they were neither capable of it, nor were the false Teachers so sensless as to endeavour it. But let's view Mr. Bs. Answer. He denies this consequence, if the putting on the yoke be onely by teaching, then the yoke it self is onely the Doctrine. But this is not my consequence, but this, if their act of putting on the yoke were onely Teaching then the terminus, at least immediate, must be Doctrine in respect of the agent, and in respect of the patient learning, as if the act of the Sun be Teaching, the immediate terminus is heat, although other effects follow, as dryness or the like; so if the false Teachers did put the yoke on the Disciples by Teaching they did put Doctrine on them, and if they received it they learned that Doctrine, although other effects followed, as disquietnes of minde, &c. which may be comprehended under the metaphor of a yoke. By Teaching parents, an infant is not cut or circumcised, no not though the parents receive the Doctrine, he may have no childe to circumcise, or no strength, or the like: no though it come to pass that the childe be circumcised, yet this is not done by the false Teacher, but by the parent. If then their act was onely teaching, then the product result or terminus must be Doctrine, though there were other consequents to follow. But Mr. B. denies also this consequence, that if the yoke were onely doctrine, it was put on none but those that could be taught. Whereto I reply, he may as well deny the Snow to be white, as deny it: Can any put Doctrine but on Persons that can be taught? What is this but to hold that a Person may have Doctrine put on him, that cannot be taught, which is a meer contradiction, all one as to say, He may be taught that cannot be taught. But he will forsooth give us some Reason of his denial as wise as the rest. For, 1. by [putting] he confesseth is meant [an endeavour to put] therefore it must be more than the bare doctrine. Answ. 1. I confess not by [putting] is meant [an endeavour to put] though I confeſs that Peter accuſeth them onely of their endeavour to put the yoke. 2. If I had confeſſed it, yet Mr. Bs. Reaſon is fooliſh, for it would rather follow, that it is leſs than bare Doctrine, the endeavour to put being leſs than putting. Yet it is not true that I ſaid, The yoke notes bare Doctrine, without any other effect, but that the yoke notes doctrine, command, opinion of obligation, and neceſſity, and perhaps diſquietneſs, trouble, care, fear conſequent. However they that put the yoke by teaching did put doctrine on whom they put the yoke, the putting the yoke being nothing but teaching. That which follows, And if by doctrine they prevail to perſwade the people of the neceſſity of practice in ſo doing, they put on them the both the miſ-belief and miſ-practice, is as little to purpoſe. For, 1. to put on them the misbelief is to put on them the doctrine, for doctrine is put on by being learned or believed.

2. They that do prevail do put on the miſpractice it may be in the event, but not barely by their putting on their doctrine, for it may be they may both teach, and that effectually, ſo as that the perſon do learn or miſ-believe, and yet not miſ-practice through many intervenient impediments, yea though he do miſ-practice, yet the miſ-practice is not the terminus of his teaching, nor is he the miſ-practicer, it is not his act logically or phyſically, though it be his morally, that is, the fault of it be imputed to him, as ariſing from the Doctrine he taught. However if it be by perſwading and by producing miſ-belief and miſ-practice, they onely are the ſubjects of it who miſ-believe and miſ practice, which being not verified of infants, they are not meant by Diſciples, on whom the yoke is put.

But Mr. B. gives a Reaſon of his denial of the latter conſequence, and it is this, 2. The latter conſequence is as falſe; For he that perſwadeth a parent to circumciſe himſelf, and his childe, doth as properly put that burden of Circumciſion on the childe as on the parent. Though he teach onely the parent, yet by teaching the parent he puts the burden on both.

Anſw. 1. If the putting the yoke be Teaching or perſwading, ſure he onely is the ſubject of his putting the yoke, who is the ſubject of his Teaching, (as if we ſay the killing there was wounding by the ſword, it folows he was not there ſaid to be killed who was not wounded by the sword) though it may be true also that another agent by another act may put the burden on one not taught. 2. But were Mr. Bs. speech true, yet it is nothing to his wilful denial of the later consequence, for the consequence is thus, if the yoke were onely Doctrine it was put on none but those that could be taught, which may be undeniable, though it be granted, that he that Teacheth onely the parents, yet puts the burden both on parent and child. 3. Yea Mr. B. doth grant it by supposing that he Teacheth onely the parent, that Doctrine is put onely on the parent. For what is it to put Doctrine on any but to Teach him? And therefore if the yoke were onely Doctrine, sure it was put on none but such as could be taught, unless we imagine that Doctrine can be put on those that cannot be taught, which is all one in my apprehension as to say they may be taught who cannot be taught. And therefore if there be any silly wranglings in the dispute between us, sure Mr. B. doth wrangle here either as a silly man or as a most perverse man in denying this consequence, and in his whole arguings about this Text, when confessing the yoke to be not onely the Doctrine but the judgment and practise also of Circumcision, and that the false Teachers would put it onely by Teaching, yet doth imagine he can perswade his reader to be so silly as to conceive that they did any thing to infants or that infants are any of those Disciples mentioned Acts 15.10.

And here I shall inforce the arguments of my Antidote sect. 6. The first is ad hominem. He counts it a heinous offence that I take the word [holy 1 Cor. 7.14.] in a different sense than it is used six hundred times in the Scripture, and yet he takes the word [Disciple] used three hundred times in the New Testament, and of those about one hundred in Lukes writings for one that is a Disciple by owning a Teacher and his Doctrine, in another sense or rather nonsense acception for one that is a Disciple in title, incompleat, without actual learning for present, that is for a meer relative without a foundation, and brings no place in any Author for this sense but this, and therefore I may more justly use his conjuring speech p. 83. requiring men that are not of desperat resolutions and prostituted consciences to consider faithfully how they can answer the Lord Christ for perverting so solemn an institution as

that is Matth. 28.19. by their baby ſprinkling, when the very words of Chriſt, practiſe of the Apoſtles, conſtant uſe of the word [Diſciples] throughout the New Teſtament, common conſent of Interpreters ſhews Chriſt appointed Diſciples onely to be baptized ordinarily, who were made ſuch by preaching the Goſpel, upon pretence that infants are called [Diſciples. Acts 15.10] in a ſenſe different from what Luke uſeth it elſewhere even in the precedent and following chapters, and that ſenſe or rather nonſenſe ſelf-contradicting acception deviſed of late by Mr. B. without any ancient Author I know, or any reaſon from the Text. That which Mr. B. replies is as frivolous. 1. He ſaith infants are called Diſciples Acts. 11.26. They are there part of Chriſtians and Diſciples; but this is falſe theres not a word in the Text that ſoundes to this ſenſe, that infants are any part of the Chriſtians or Diſciples there mentioned, yea there is that which is plainly to the contrary *v.*29. Then the Diſciples, every man according to his ability, determined to ſend relief to the brethren. If every one of the Diſciples determined to ſend, and no infants determined to ſend relief, then no infants are part of the Diſciples. 2 Saith he, the caſe is not alike, In 1.*Cor.*7.14. I argued about the meaning of the word [holy] here we are agreed about the ſenſe, that it ſignifieth one ſo related to Chriſt as their maſter, the difference is about the application of this term. But this is falſe that I agree with him about the ſignification and ſenſe of the word [Diſciple of Chriſt] as it notes a relation to Chriſt as Teacher, yea I utterly deny it notes ſuch a relation as Mr. B. fancies in title without actual learning or owning Chriſt as Teacher, in which ſenſe it is no where taken in Scripture or any Ancient Author I know. 3. Saith he, However I am certain, if we have not the name elſewhere, yet we have the deſcription and names of the ſame ſignification, they are Church members, Gods people, his ſervants, and therefore Diſciples. Anſw. 1. This doth not at all avoyd his owne charge of proſtituted conſciences, &c. in another caſe, he charged theſe things on me for uſing the word [holy] in a different ſenſe from what elſewhere it is uſed, though I brought a term of the ſame ſignification Mal. 2.15. and cogent reaſon out of the Text for my interpretation, and therefore by his own Law to me, he is to be charged as he chargeth me for doing the ſame, though it were true

he had the description and names of the same signification. 2. It is not proved, no nor can be proved, the terms [Churchmembers, Gods people, Gods servants] to be of the same signification with [Disciples of Christ] 3. There is no: so much as one Text in the New Testament, which alone is written in Greek by the Holy Pen-men, and therefore the fittest if not the onely way to shew the meaning of a New Testament term, brought to prove infants under the New Testament to be caled Churchmembers, Gods people, Gods servants.

4. The consequence shall be examined in that which follows.

Besides I argued from the Text, the putting the yoke on the necks of the Disciples is the same with that which is mentioned v.1. they taught the brethren, and v.5. they said it was needfull to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the Law of Moses, and v.24. certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying ye must be circumcised and keep the Law. Now is any man so sensless as to think they did these things to infants? Again the Text v.1.23. calls the Disciples v.10. brethren, saith v.9. their hearts were purified by faith upon the hearing of the word, which none but those that are resolved to outface a plain truth would aver to be meant of infants, therefore neither the term Disciples, v.10. sith what is said of the brethren is meant of the Disciples v.10. To this all the reply I finde in Mr. B. is this pag 252. And your bringing some passages of the chapter not applicable to infants doth not prove that therefore the rest is not, no more than several passages in Deut.29. applicable onely to the aged, will prove little ones were not taken in to be Gods people.

Answ. It is true, the bringing some passages of the chapter not applicable to infants doth not prove that therefore the rest is not: if I had made such an Argument I would give him leave to use his Rhetorick of silly insipid arguing. But my arguing is this, The same thing which is expressed, v.10. by putting the yoke on the necks of the Disciples, is expressed v.1. by teaching the brethren, v.5. by saying to them it was needfull to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the Law of Moses, v 24. by troubling with words, subverting their souls, saying, ye must be circumcised

cumcised and keep the Law, and the same persons which are expressed by Disciples, *v.*10. are termed *v.*1. Brethren, are said *v.*9. to have their hearts purified by faith, *v.*19. those of the Gentiles that were turned to God, *v.*23. Brethren of the Gentiles; But these things were not done to infants, nor infants comprehended under these persons, in these places, which express the same thing, and the same person, which is apparent by the narration, Peter reprehends the same thing in the same persons, *v.*10. which is related *v.*1,5,23,24. the occasion of his speech was the same fact, the drift of his speech is to condemn the same fact, the determination of the Council is against the same practice, the same persons are in all these places spoken of, and this is proved by Mr. Bs. first Argument, who brings *v.*1,5,24. to prove Circumcision to be the yoke, *v.*10. which Argument supposeth the same persons and things meant, *v.*10. which are meant, *v.*1,5,24. But not one of the things said there is applicable to infants. How then can any man imagine that the same act being meant in all the places, it should be meant of the act of Circumcision, *v.*10. and not *v.*1,5,24. and the same persons meant, they should be infants meant, *v.*10. and not *v.*1,5,24? Is not this to make the same act and the same persons not the same, which is a contradiction? I know not how men conceive of my intellectuals: But I am still possessed of this to be so good proof, that I should as soon doubt of other common notions as of this, and as soon believe that the Moon is made of green Cheese, as believe Mr. B. affirming that Peter meant infants by Disciples, Acts 15.10.

I added further, if the putting on the yoke had been Circumcision, it had been to be done not on their necks but elsewhere, the yoke was put not on their flesh, but on their consciences, their souls are said to be subverted, their mindes troubled, *v.*24. not their flesh pained by the putting on the yoke, it was done by words, *v.*24. not by a knife or such like instrument. Again, the *yoke v.*10. was such as neither the present Jews nor their fathers were able to bear: but Circumcision put on infants was tolerable. I argued also that Christs doctrine is called his yoke, *Matth.*11.29. I alleged the testimonies of Piscat. on Acts 15.10. Grot. Annot. in Acts 15.10. calling it the Law and Doctrine, that the yoke of bondage, *Gal.*5.1. is the Doctrine or Covenant of the Law, which genders to bondage, Gal. 4. 21, 24. That Circumcision is not the yoke without subjection of minde or opinion to it, which are not verified of infants. These things he saith are answered already, but where I know not: if he mean in his Argument before, he may see his Cannon turned against himself.

I said, all the colour Mr. B. hath from this Text to prove infants disciples, is by conceiving the yoke to note barely and precisely the cutting off a little skin. To this he answers, I must say it is but one of your fictions. Did you ever hear me talk of such a thing? Cutting that skin is not Circumcision, as the word is used for a Sacrament. The end, signification, and engagement go into the definition of Circumcision. And if from hence you would infer, that it is onely the aged that are capable of signification and engagement, you may strait conclude that no infant was ever circumcised.

I reply, it is no fiction of mine, but a truth, whether Mr. B. talked or thought of it or no, that all the colour, that is shew of reason Mr. B. hath from this Text to prove infants Disciples, is in taking the yoke for the cutting off a little skin. For his proof is from what was done or endeavored to be done to infants; but that was onely the cutting the little skin. Mr. B. would have the yoke to be actual Circumcision, or Circumcision as acted, and that was nothing but the cutting off the litle skin. It is true, Circumcision in the users is more than the cutting off the little skin, there is the end, signification, and intended engagement, but as infants receive it, as it is acted on infants, the yoke can be no more than the loss of the skin and the soreness following, they neither are taught, nor discern the end, signification or engagment, and Circumcision as it includes these is as I say in my Antidote Circumcision not as acted on infants, but taught persons of years; nor was it my objection that Circumcision as a Sacrament was onely the cutting off a little skin, but as it was acted on infants, and the imagined yoke endeavored to be put on infants Acts 15. 10. which sure Peter never blamed them for, and therefore it is not the yoke there meant. Mr. B. talk of Circumcision as a Sacrament, and what is the definition of it as a Sacrament, as it leades to a dispute about the notion of a word not found in Scripture, so being besides the present business, I shall let it pass.

Lastly

Lastly I added, that if it were granted that the term [Disciples Acts 15.10] noted infants, then onely male infants, for they onely were to be circumcised, therefore female infants should not be thence proved Disciples, nor to be baptized. To this he answers, That is as much as I needed, when my position was that some infants are Disciples and to be baptized. I reply, It is not as much as he needed, unless he understood his position onely of some male infants. 2. Saith he, I should hence prove, that if males are Disciples, then certainly females, both being Church-members till Christ, though but one circumcised. I reply, 1. It is more than he can prove that those who were Church-members in the Jewish Church are Disciples of Christ in the New Testament to be baptized. 2. If he could prove it, yet not from Acts 15.10. it being certain no more can be proved thence to be Disciples, than are there called Disciples, which Mr. B. himself will not say of female infants. I conclude still, that in this arguing of Mr. B. I finde nothing but froward, and, I had almost said, impudent wrangling against a plain truth, that the Disciples Acts 15.10. were onely the brethren converted, and the yoke the Doctrine the false Teachers would have put upon them, and the reader, of whosoever education or tutelage, if he be not otherwise blinded, may perceive with his own eys the slightiness of Mr. Bs. arguings, and how superficially he hath handled this business. I go on to review the next, which is no better.

Infants discipleship is not proved by Mr. B. from Lev. 25 41,42. which speaks of the Israelites being Gods servants.

MY second Argument, saith Mr. B. to prove that some infants are Disciples, is this, If no infants are Disciples, then it is either because they are not capable, or else because God will not shew them such a mercy; But neither of these can be the cause; Therefore that no infants are Disciples is false Doctrine. Mr. T. to this gave this Answer

[that the reason why they are not Disciples is because they have not learned.]

Answ. It is true, in the dispute at Bewdley finding Mr. B's. vein of disputing to run upon a captious way of endeavouring to bring me to such absurdities in appearance as would stir up passions in hearers against me as lessening Gods mercy to their infants, and then aggravating these imagined absurdities, turning to the people with his wonted exclamations, and other Rhetorick (whereby he hath befooled not onely those parts, but a great number of shallow heads throughout the Land) which I found to be his course in his first argument in ch.6. now printed to prove his Ordinance of visible Church-membership of infants unrepealed, with which he began, when he should have first proved such an Ordinance and its continuing in force out of Scripture, it being an indirect way, though popular and taking, to prove a thing done by God, because we conceive it fit to be done, and having been tired with answering three or four hours his long hypothetical Syllogisms, and those sometimes brought to prove an hypothetical proposition, contrary to the use of schools, not allowing me to ask a question for clearing his termes, neither allowing me time to consider of his reasonings, nor at first liberty of repeating, I did thus answer to this argument, hoping though in vain to reduce him to a proof of infants of Discipleship from the notation or use of the word, which is the onely genuine and clear way of proving infants to be Disciples, ordinarily to be baptized, according to the institution *Matth.*28.19.

But, alas, saith Mr. B. that such an answer should satisfy such a man! I reply, Alas, that such an answer should not satisfy such a man! Is this any third cause saith Mr. B.

Answ. What need any man assigne any cause at all why infants are not Disciples, but because the term [Disciple] agrees not to them? If Mr. B. should prove in like manner infants to be believers, what need the respondent shew any other cause than this, that they have not faith? so even sith Mr. B. himself acknowledgeth the term Disciple pag. 92. to have its denomination from the act of learning, it is a sufficient, yea the most direct and proper way to shew infants not Disciples, because they have not the act of learning, which Mr. B. should have overthrown if he would have proved proved, as he ſhould, infants to be Diſciples. But then he might have been hindered in his vagaries and popular diſcourſes, which with his Rhetorical exclamations were that he moſt minded to uſe, and been brought to diſcover his nonſenſe acception of the word [Diſciple.] But ſaith he, or is it not evidently reducible to one of the former? For if their unlearnedneſs hinder them from being Diſciples, either it muſt be becauſe it maketh them or ſheweth them uncapable, or becauſe God will not ſhew the unlearned ſo great mercy.

Anſw. It is neither becauſe unlearnedneſs maketh or ſheweth them uncapable, nor becauſe God will not ſhew them that mercy: But becauſe what ever their capacity be, or Gods intent toward them, they have not yet that which alone denominates Diſciples. If his disjunction were good he ſhould prove that capacity of a title, or Gods intention of ſhewing mercy, without actual learning or profeſſing Chriſt, is enough to denominate a perſon a Diſciple of Chriſt, which is ſo manifeſtly contrary to all the uſe of the word in the new Teſtament, and to expoſitors of Matth. 28. 29. that I am now bold to ſay, that it is no better than height of impudence after ſo evident proof to maintain ſo groſs an abſurdity. But I am neceſſitated to follow Mr. B. in his vagaries.

1. "If infants, ſaith Mr. B. are capable of being Gods ſervants, then they are capable of being Diſciples. For as they ſignify here the ſame thing and denote the ſame ſort of perſons, ſo there is the ſame capacity requiſite to both: or if you will make a difference, there is more required to a ſervant than to a Diſciple. But infants are capable of being Gods ſervants: this is plain; For the Lord God himſelf doth call them his ſervants, Levit. 25. 41. 42. they are commanded in the year of Jubile to let their brother that was ſold to them, and his children, depart; and the reaſon is added [for they are my ſervants] that infants are here included among [his children] cannot be denied or doubted of (Mr. T. began to deny it, but he quickly recalled it) Is not here then direction enough to help us to judg of the minde of God, whether infants are his ſervants and Diſciples or no? Doth not God call them his ſervants himſelf? what more ſhould a man expect to warrant him to do ſo? men call for plain Scripture, and when they have it they will not receive it; ſo hard is it to inform a forestalled mindе. It may be some may say, They were then capable of being Gods servants, but they are not so now. But this were a wretched answer. For their capacity was the same then and now: Infants then were like infants now.

Answ. It is certain that the term [servants of God] is not always equipollent to [a Disciple of Christ.] For *Jer.*43.10. Nebuchadnezzar is called Gods servant, and the heavens, *Psal.*119.91. But then when it is taken in the sense the Apostle useth it, Rom. 6.16. His servants ye are to whom ye obey, and therefore unless he means by [servants of God] men voluntarily obeying the Gospel, yea and visibly appearing so to do, I shall deny his consequence, and his dictates, that either *Acts*15.10. or *Matth.*28.19. a Disciple and a servant of God in his sense signify the same thing, or denote the same sort of persons. And if more be required to a servant than a Disciple, it follows that a person may be a Disciple and yet not a servant of God, and so the terms are not reciprocal, and his consequence so much the more infirm. As for his minor it is denied, understanding it of capacity of infants while infants in an ordinary way, and of being Gods servants in the sense used *Rom.*6 16. in which alone it is equipollent to a Disciple. As for the Text *Levit.*25.41,42. though it be plain Scripture, yet there is nothing plain or obscure in it for Mr. Bs. purpose, to prove that the infants of believers of the Gentiles now are Gods servants in a sense equipollent to a Disciple, *Matth.*28.19. For. 1. the passage is meant onely of Hebrews, as *Exod.*21.2. is expressed, and the Text it self shews it. 1. From *v.*55. where it is said, unto me the children of Israel are servants, they are my servants whom I brought out of the Land of Egypt, in which are two discriminating notes differencing them from others, 1. That they were the children of Israel descended from Iacob by natural generation, 2. that they were brought out of the Land of Egypt by God. 2. *v.*44.45. do explain it, where God allows them to take Bond-slaves of the heathen that were round about them, and of the children of the strangers that did sojourn among them, which is the description of Proselytes of the Gate, that is, such as acknowledged the God of Israel, but did not submit to Circumcision, and the observation of Moses Law, of which which sort was Cornelius, Acts 10.2. Such an ones children were not Gods servants in the sense there meant. Yea, Ainsworth in his Annot. on *v.*42. citeth Maimony resolving that an Israelites children begotten on a Canaanitish bond-woman are but Canaanites in every respect, not Gods servants in the sense there meant. 2. What is said there is said not onely of Infants but also of Parents, yea though they were idolaters, as those that worshipped the golden Calf, or joyned themselves to Baal Peor, or who hardened their hearts, and could not enter into Canaan for unbelief, Heb. 3.18,19. even the worst of them with whom God was not well pleased, which were not true of servants of God in a sense equipollent to a Disciple of Christ, *Matth.*28.19. 3. Diodati expresseth in his Annot. on *Lev.*25.42. in what sense they are called Gods servants, to wit, in as much as none could get Sovereign Dominion over them to prejudice his, therefore they are there called Gods servants in this respect onely, in that they were to be disposed of not as men would, but as he would, who had right to them by his purchase, in bringing them out of Egypt. So that they are called Servants of God, in that place, not out of any either voluntary obedience to his Precepts, or peculiar right to visible Church-membership, but in respect of Gods sovereignty over them to dispose of them as Hebrews, which was not belonging to believers or their children, or other Nations not joyned to the policy of the Hebrews. And therefore I still say, Mr. B. doth but trifle as a man that superficially looks over a Text, when he talks so vainly as he doth of direction enough to help us to judg of Gods minde, whether Infants are his Servants and Disciples or no. Nor is it tru which he saith, that the capacity is the same then and now. For though infants then were like infants now, yet the judicial Laws of Moses, and the peculiar condition of the Hebrews is not now as then.

But he goes on. May I not make this a third Argument of it self? If God call Infants his Servants, though they can do him no service, then we may call them so too: for we may speak as God doth: but God doth call them so; therefore we may.

Answ. The Conclusion is granted: he may call Hebrew infants Gods servants in the sense meant, *Lev.*25.41. But if he cal the children of Gentile-believers Servants of God in a sense equipollent to a Disciple, *Matth.*28.19. He must bring better warrant

than that Text, or else I shall deny it, slighting his vain censure of a forestalled minde, and conceiving rather it verified of himself. As the Man thinketh, so the Bell tinketh.

Again, saith Mr. B. If God call Infants his Servants, though they are uncapable at present of doing him service, then we may call them Disciples, though at present they are uncapable of learning. But God doth so call them; therefore we may, &c.

Answ. If God call infants his servants according to the Apostles description of a servant, *Rom.*6.16. then I confess infants may be called Christs Disciples, but not if onely according to the sense of *Lev.*25.41.

Mr. B. goes on. Hath he a good wit now or a bad minde, that can raise a dust for the darkning of so express and plain a Text? and yet still call for Scripture proof? I will deal faithfully in telling you Mr. T. his answer to this, and that upon deliberation, in his Sermon after the Dispute. 1. He distinguisheth of Servants of God de jure & de facto. 2. Between Servants actively and passively; and saith, that here the term Servant is meant passively and not actively, that is, such as God useth: and that they are called Servants here in no other sense than the Heavens and the Earth are, Psalm 119.89,90. They are thy Servants; Are they therefore Disciples? (saith he) what ridiculous arguing is this? So Mr. T. O what cause have we all to look to the tenderness of our consciences in time, before engagement in a sinfull cause hath benummed them, and made the Word of God to be of no force to us? I know shallow brains are uncapable to discern the weakness of the silliest Answer; they go that way as their affection doth byas them: their approbation of an Argument or Answer is no credit to it. But let any man of a tolerable understanding, and conscience not seared, but weigh seriously this Answer, and I dare warrant he will think it a bad cause that must be underprapt by such palpable abuse of Scripture.

Answ. I loath to take notice of such base insinuations, far unworthy of a christian brother or an ingenuous scholar, but that thereby Mr. B. hath more prevailed to hinder the entertainment of the truth I maintain, than by any arguments he hath brought. And were it not that the Law of Charity forbids me to put the worst construction on things, I see so much as might move me to retort upon himself his insinuations against me, as if I had a bad minde, and a seared conscience, and a bad cause, and that I darken so expres and plain a Text, and so palpably abuse Scripture because of my answer about this Text: I will not deny him to have a good wit, nor impute to him a shallow brain, I wish his judgment were as good as his fancy, & that with his quickness of apprehension he had more consideratenes in his determinations, and especially about the meaning of Scripture; if it were so, the Church of God might have much more benefit by his laboures than it hath, nor would his polemick writings especially, have so many crudities in them as there are. As for this present busines, I think that intemperate zeal to the cause he thinks good hath so transported him that he shews much want both of ingenuity of spirit, and clearnes of understanding, which he hath in other writings, and that however he doth often pretend love to me, yet his gall doth so overflow when ever he speakes of me, that he can neither give aright interpretation of what I do, nor of what I say. But to the matter. I had sayd in my Sermon, and in my *Antidot sect.*4. that what is sayd *Levit.*25.41. is nothing to our children, it being spoken peculiarly of Hebrew children. To this in his *reply pag.*182. 248. he tells me. 1. The Iewes infants were infants, and our dispute you know was of the species.

Answ. The Jews infants were infants its true, and so were the Canaanites infants, yet not servants of God, as *Levit.*25.41. is meant. 2. The dispute was not as it was first managed between me and Mr. M. nor as it was by Mr. Bs first argument brought to an issue, of the species, whether any infants indefinitely or any ones infants whatsoever were to be called Disciples of Christ and to be baptized, but whether the infants of believers, of whom his meaning is in his first argument, however he make his position, that some infants are to be baptized. 3. whatever his position were, yet his wordes in his Epistle to the people of Kederminster were that God saith our children are Gods servants, which is palpably false, he saying it of the Hebrews children as such; and not of ours.

2. saith he, I have proved that our privileges are greater than theirs (and you deny it not) and that this was not perculiar to them.

Answ. if it be granted that our privileges are greater than theirs, yet it is but in some respects, and therefore there is no good argument, if it be confessed God shews more mercy to our children therefore he gives them every such privilege as the Jews had. God shews mercy to ministers of the Gospel more than to the Priests of the Jews, yet it follows not, our children must have such privileges of continuance in office, inheritance &c. as they had. That what is sayd *Levit.*25.41. was peculiar to the Hebrews, is so clearly proved, that it hath a shew of impudence to deny it. 3. saith he, it proves that there is nothing in the age to make them uncapable, or else the Jews infants would have been uncapable.

Answ. It proves that there is nothing in the age to make them uncapable of being Gods servants in the sense of *Levit.*25.41. But it proves not that they are capable of being Gods servants ordinarily as the title is used, *Rom.*6.16. and is equipollent to a Disciple, *Matth.*28.19.

But saith he, How have the believing Jews lost this privilege or Proselytes of the Gentiles?

Answ. 1. This privilege was belonging to the unbelieving Jews while it continued, as well as the believing. 2. If it be lost (as I think it is) it is lost by the dissolving the judicial Laws of Moses, and the national policy the Jews had.

But saith he, where you talk of servants in this sense and that sense, they were so servants as to be visible Church-members, and that is all that I contest for. They were reckoned among Moses Disciples, and so are ours to be among Christs Disciples or Christians (as Moses Disciples also in some sort were Christs Disciples.)

Answ. The sense in which the Jews children were called Gods servants is not all one with to be visible Church-members, nor Moses Diciples, as is proved above where the genuine sense is shewed. But to the distinctions I used in my Sermon and Antidote, I deny not that I used both distinctions, and they are usual in schools. The former is used by the Author of the New annot. on *Deut.*22.24. the later is common, in the differencing of active and passive scandal, Conversion taken actively and passively, Mr. B. himself, *p.*81. distinguisheth of being sanctified actively and passively.

But he thinks the application to be a palpable abuse of Scripture. For, 1. He (meaning me) saith they were servants of God de jure, but not de facto, in right, but not in deed. But a servant is a relation, that is the form of it, servus est Domini servus. And have they only a right to this relation? who then or what hindreth them from possessing the relation which they have right to? Is it not God that giveth them right to this relation? And is not that to give them the relation it self? I would he would tell us what more he giveth them that have the relation it self de facto, (for I suppose he dare not interpret it of a future right.)

Answ. I said in my Sermon as Mr. B. hath printed it pag. 181. that the meaning is not that infants are actually servants, but in right, to me, he doth not speak what they did, but of Gods right and interest he had in them: which is so plain a truth that I supposed he could not have found any matter of exception. But Mr. B. is so quarelsome with me that he will either finde or make a Knot in a Bulrush. 1. He renders de facto in deed, as if I had said, they had relation of right, but not in deed, that is not in possession: whereas my meaning was plainly expresst, they were not actually servants in respect of what they did, or in respect of the act or fact of service. 2. he misunderstands it as if I spake of their being servants of right, that they had the right of being Gods servants so as to claim it as a privilege on their part, whereas I meant it and expressed it in respect of Gods right and interest in them, though I deny not the other to follow. To his questions I answer. They have a right and possession of that relation, and it is given them by God with the relation, and to those that have the relation in fact, or as I spake actually in respect of what they did. God gives this more to them that are his servants by reason of his right in them, that they have actual obedience to him, according to that of the Apostle, Rom. 6. 16. His servants ye are to whom ye obey.

2. Saith Mr. B. whether they are servants actively or passively is nothing to the being or form of the relation; they are servants of God still. And it seems by this answer, that if God had called infants Disciples never so oft Mr. T. would have put God off with this distinction, and said, they are Disciples passively, but not actively. For 3. What reason can he give why they may not be called Disciples in a passive sense as well as servants? 4. Doth not God bid his Apostles baptize those that were Disciples without distinguishing? or doth he bid them baptize active Disciples, but not passive ones? Where is that distinction in the command?

Answ. Mr. B. is so inured to his spitefull language, that my giving him an answer to his objection and clearing the words Lev. 25.41. is termed by him putting off God with a distinction, as if I answered God, and not Mr. B. But to the matter. 1. Though servants actively and passively may be both called servants, as a slave bought with money, but sick and weak, who never did service actually, may be called his Lords servant, because at his dispose, yet not univocally, as they speak in Logick, in comparison of him that doth actually service, because he is a servant but in one respect, whereas he that is a servant not onely by being at his Lords dispose for his Lord to assign what he will for him, because of his propriety in him, but also doth service actively for his Lord, is in a double respect a servant, of which the later is that which is principal, and from which the denomination is primarily and principally taken, as the relation of a son is principally from generation, though analogically in some respect an adopted son have that title. 2. But were it supposed the term did univocally agree to both, yet the question being whether Infants be Disciples, and the argument being brought from the title of Gods servants to prove them Disciples, the term [Servants of God] passively taken for one that doth not voluntarily any service to God, but onely is at Gods dispose, is not as much as [a Disciple of Christ] which signifies one that hath learned Christ, and professeth himself to follow his teaching: And so it is a clear answer, that infants are not proved to be Christs Disciples by being proved to be passively Gods servants, except they be also proved to be actively such, and that in obeying the Gospel, and professing that obedience. What ever seems to Mr. B. (whose imaginations of me are still to the worst) If I had found God call once Infants Disciples in the sense, Matth. 28.19. I should quickly have yielded there is no need of such a distinction of active or passive Disciple, sith I finde the title given to none but such as are actual learners, and that is a reason why Infants may not be called Disciples in a passive sense as well as Gods servants.

For

For use is the rule of understanding words, and Christ bids us baptize onely Disciples that are actual learners, and profess Christ their Master, as appears both by Christs words, Mark 16.16. in which he expresseth that by [he that believeth] which he did *Matth.*28.19. by [a Disciple] and by the practice of the Apostles, who best understood Christs precept, and by the constant use of the word [Disciple] in the New Testament, as is proved above. Nor needs there be any such distinction of active and passive Disciple in the command, because the word [Disciple] is not used passively, though [Servant of God] be.

5. Saith Mr. *B. But I shall be bold to take it for one of Mr.*T. *his fictions, and a meer falshood, that Infants are here called Servants passively onely, till he have done somewhat to prove it; to which end he hath not spoken one word, as thinking it seems that he spake to men that will take his word. Why may they not be called Servants from the meer interest of Dominion that God hath to them? and authority over them? Are Infants the Kings Subjects or Servants in a passive sense onely? Is it not foundation enough for the relation of a servant, if God will own them so, and number them with his family of meer grace, though he should make no use of them at all? or if there must be more: may they not be called so, as being destinated to his service for the future? And so they may have the relation before the service; which is common with those men that buy children with their parents for their future service. So Eccl.*2.7. reade it.

Answ. How egregiously doth Mr. B. trifle, who expects I should prove, who was but the Respondent, and that also which is apparent to common sense, that infants are not servants of God actively in obeying his precepts, or as I sayd in my Sermon, in freely and voluntarily giving service to God and doing what he bids, who neither know nor hear Gods precepts, and looks I should prove what he agrees with me in! For when I said infants are servants from Gods right and interest in them, though they do no service, Mr. B. as if I said no such thing puts many impertinent questions to me, as if he would by them know my minde in that which I had plainly though more briefly expressed, to wit that the Jews infants were Gods servants. 1. Of right, because God had a right, propriety or perculiar interest in them, he had purchased them otherwise than he had done other people. 2. Passively, so as that their bodies and liberties were at his disposé, not allowing men to dispose of them, as he did to dispose of others. As for the question may they not be so called as destinated to his service for the future? I conceive not; destination to his service for the future doth not either there or any where else that I know, give denomination to a servant as actually such: nor doth I think any thing in the Text lead us to such a reason of the denomination, but to that which I have set down. And to his question, Are infants the Kings Subjects or servants in a passive sense onely? I answer, yes, while they are infants, and should question his intellectuals that should deny it; and when he cals it my fiction and meer falshood, that infants are here called servants passively only, it seems prejudice against me makes him count that a fiction and falshood in my mouth, which is current enough when it comes from his own pen. But Mr. B. is not yet reconciled to me, theres more anger yet behinde. For thus he speaks.

6. But the grossest is yet behinde, (as the worst errour is still at last, and the further a man goes out of his way the further he goes amiss) would any man think that such a man as Mr. T. can possibly believe that infants are called Goas servants in no other sense than the Heavens and Earth are?

Answ. May I not take up the Poets words, Tantæne animis cœlestibus iræ? Is Mr. B. so waspish as to be still humming and buzzing about my ears, and flinging me with his mis-representations. Tis true, to shew that the term [servant of God] is not equipollent to [a Disciple of Christ] I instanced in Psal. 119.91. where the Heaven and the earth are called Gods servants in a passive sense, but my words (as he himself printed them) are not, infants are called Gods servants in no other sense than the Heavens and earth are: yea I mentioned Nebuchadnezzar called Gods servant Jerem. 43.10. after the allegation of Psal. 119.91. And yet if I had said so I know no errour in it, much less gross erour, or grossest of all. But Mr. B. asks placet. Well! room for Mr. B. Let me a little reason this case, saith he, 1. Are the Heavens onely passive servants of God? Is that good Philosophy? Answ. Sith Mr. B. is either in his reasoning or posing vein, I shall enforce my self with what patience I can to reade his chiding Lecture, ſture, and to anſwer his queſtions, though he would not anſwer mine at the Diſpute, when he ſhould. To his firſt and ſecond I anſwer affirmatively. It is not good Philoſophy to ſay, the Heavens onely ſuffer, and act nothing: but it is very good Philoſophy, and Divinity too, that the Heavens are onely paſſive ſervants of God, when they do Gods will, they do it not with conſent of will, as when the ſtormy windes fulfill Gods word, Pſal. 148.8. they do act, but not actively obey God. Herod and Pontius Pilate did what Gods counſel determined, Acts 4.27,28. yet were not active ſervants of God, but paſſive, the doing of Gods will was beſides their intentions. So Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. 43.10. Sennacherib, Iſai 10.5,6,7. Joſephs brethren, Shimei, Abſolom, &c. are ſervants of God in this ſenſe. And in this ſenſe the Heavens are Gods ſervants, as Mr. B. might have perceived by the joyning the earth with them, which moves not, or rather in this paſſive ſenſe, becauſe they are at Gods diſpoſing.

2. Saith he, What if the Earth and Inſ nts were both c lled Gods Servants onely in a paſſive ſenſe, becauſe God maketh uſe of them? Is it therefore in the ſame ſenſe? Anſw. Yes. Mr. B. Is it the ſame uſe that God maketh of both? Anſw. No, and yet it is the ſame ſenſe. Again, Mr. B. What if Chriſt were called Gods ſervant for his ſuffering? Shall we ſay it were in no other ſenſe than the Earth is ſo called? when the uſe and ſufferings are ſo unlike?

Anſw. No, for if Chriſt were called Gods ſervant for his ſuffering, I would call him an active ſervant of God, not a paſſive. For though he in his ſuffering were paſſive, and Divines call it paſſive obedience, yet he did not obey paſſively, that is, againſt his will, or without conſent of will, as the Earth doth, but actively, out of his free and voluntary intention, and conſent of will. Be the uſe and ſuffering never ſo unlike, thoſe perſons or things may be in the ſame ſenſe paſſive ſervan s of God, whoſe ſufferings c ruſe accompliſheth Gods will without their intention, and they active ſervants in the ſame ſenſe whoſe uſe or ſufferings are with intention and conſent to accompliſh the will of God, though their uſe or ſufferings are much unlike. But he hath not yet done poſing or chiding me.

«What if I prove, ſaith he, (as me thinks with Mr. T. I might eaſily do) that the Heavens are Gods ſervants actively, and Chriſt alſo is called his ſervant actively? Doth it follow that they are servants in the same sense, when the action is so unlike?"

Answ. Yes, for I never took the identity of sense to presuppose necessarily likeness in the actions. The same sense is when words signifie a like meaning, whatever likeness or unlikeness there be in the actions of the subjects to which the Predicate is attributed. And I pity Mr. Bs. oscitancy that doth not observe such obvious things, but troubles others with such frivolous questions. But yet there are more of these demands to be answered.

3. Saith Mr. B. Hath not God prevented all these Cavils by joyning Parents and Children together in the same title? He saith of Parents and Children both together, they are my servants: where it is evident that both therefore have the same kinde of relation. And will he say that the Parents are onely passive servants?

Answ. Yes, in that place, according to the explication before given; and I conceive that God hath prevented all Mr. Bs. Cavils against this exposition, even in that he joyns Parents and Children, (who can be no other ways servants of God) together, in the same title; besides other passages of the Text do shew it, as I have alleged above.

4. Saith Mr. B. Or if all this be not enough, yet look further, where God himself tels you the reason why he cals them his servants, (who knows better than Mr. T.) They are my servants which I brought out of Egypt, &c. Gods interest and merciful choice of them, and separation to himself, is the reason. When God cals us his servants, it oftner signifieth the honor and priviledges of that relation, which in mercy he cals us to, than any service we do him therein. Are the Heavens Gods servants, because he brought them out of Egypt, and separated them to himself as a peculiar People?

Answ. Mr. B. is a strange man, most shamefully dealing with me, who suggests to the world of me as if I took no notice of that in the Text, which in my Sermon as it is printed by himself, pag. 181. was observed in the first place with advice to my hearers to mark it, and urged it to that end that I might shew this was peculiar to the Hebrew children, and therefore impertinently brought by Mr. B. to prove our infants Gods servants as there it is meant much leſs as [Gods ſervants] is a term equipollent to [a Diſciple Matth. 28.19.] all which he ſeems not to take notice of, but in ſtead thereof after a dictate or two without proof, he puts to me this frivolous queſtion, Are the Heavens Gods ſervants becauſe he brought them out of Egypt, and ſeparated them to himſelf as a peculiar people? To which I anſwer no, but what then? cannot therefore the Heavens be ſaid to be Gods ſervants paſſively, that is, at Gods diſpoſe, becauſe they were not brought out of Egypt as the infants, Levit. 25.41.? The reaſon is given there in reſpect of the ſubject, why they were Gods ſervants when other people were not, not on the part of the predicate, as if none were ſervants but they that were brought out of Egypt. Nebuchadnezzar is called Gods ſervant, Jer. 43.10. for going into Egypt there executing Gods will on the Egyptians; though he had no intention of doing any thing for God.

5. Saith Mr. B. "yet if all this be not enough, he that will ſee may be convinced from this. The Jews and their infants are called Gods ſervants in a ſenſe peculiar as choſen and ſeparated from all other: the Gentiles at age were not ſo Gods ſervants as the Jews infants were. If God call theſe infants his ſervants in no other ſenſe than the Heavens and the earth, then it ſeems in the year of Jubilee men muſt releaſe the earth from its ſervice to them: But Mr. T. knows that even the Gentile ſervants that were actively ſo were not to be releaſed in the year of Jubilee: and therefore the Jews and their infants are called Gods ſervants in another ſenſe than the Heavens or the heathens either; even as the choſen ſeparated people of God and members of his family. or elſe how could it be a reaſon for releaſing them in the year of Jubilee any more than for releaſing any other? But no Scripture can be ſo plain, but a man that hath a minde ſo diſpoſed may finde ſome words of contradiction.

Anſw. It is true, and Mr. Bs. cavils about this Text apparently prove it. But this with all the reſt is not enough to convince me that the infants of the Jews are called Gods ſervants actively, as the term [Gods ſervant] is equipollent to [a Diſciple Matth. 28.19.] though I would ſee it, yet I cannot, no not by Mr. Bs. ſpectacles, even by this laſt reaſon. I confeſs that the Jews infants were Gods ſervants in a peculiar manner, other than the Gentiles at years, yea though godly, as Cornelius, Acts 10.2. that God for this reason required their release from bondage at the Jubilee, and yet why it should follow, that if the Earth be called Gods servant passively, as the Jews infants, it must be released by men from service at the year of Jubilee, I see not. If it were formed into an Argument, it would rest on this or the like Proposition, They to whom the same thing is predicated, in the same sense must have all other things predicated on them alike: which is so absurd a thing, that me thinks Mr. B. should disclaim it, and yet his reason turns on that hinge. To shew its absurdity, Magistrates are called Gods, Jehovah is called God in one sense in respect of rule, else the term [God] should signifie nothing common to both. Doth it therefore follow that what is said of Magistrates must be said of Jehovah, that he must dy like men, or else the term [God] cannot predicate on both in the same sense in which [God] is taken for one that rules? This and such like mistakes of Mr. B. even then when he runs with full curreer shew his heedlesness, and overlines in handling controversies, which require a man of more insight in the meaning of the Scripture, and more circumspect in observing the consequents on his sayings and reasonings than I finde him. But I follow him, not doubting to overtake him in long running, κιχάνει τοὶ βραδὺς ὠκὺν.

SECT. XV.

That Infants are not proved to be Christs Disciples, from being Subjects to Christ, Christians, belonging to Christ, Luke 9. 47,48. Matth. 18.5. Mark 9.41.

THe sum of the next Argument is, Infants are capable of being Subjects of Christs kingdom, therefore of being his Disciples. The reason of the Consequence is, that Christs Church is as properly called his Kingdom as his School, all Subjects of Christ in his visible Kingdom are Christians, all Christians Disciples, according to Acts 11.26. Infants are capable of being Subjects in any Kingdom on Earth, nothing can be shewed to prove them uncapable, they were actually Subjects of Christs Kingdom before his coming in the flesh.

To all which I answer, Its enough to deny the consequence sith infants may be subjects which imports onely somthing passive, whereas [Disciple] imports action, which agrees not to infants. But I distinguish, subjects of Christs Kingdom may be so called from active or passive subjection, visibly or invisibly, by extraordinary or ordinary operation. I deny infants to be subjects of Christs Kingdom actively, visibly, by ordinary operation through Preaching the word in which sense alone the term [subject of Christs Kingdom] is equipollent to [a Disciple Matth. 28.19.] and in which sense alone the consequence is true. Though in common speech arising from the fond conceit as if baby-sprinkling made them Christians, infants are called Christians, yet in Scripture none are called Christians till they believe. Christiani non nascuntur sed fiunt. Our Infants are children of Christians, But not themselves Christians till they beleive in Christ. Acts 11.26. is so far from proving infants called Christians, or Disciples, that both v. 26. & 29. prove the contrary, as was shewed above. Though infants be reckoned as parts of human Kingdoms, yet it follows not they are parts of Christs visible Kingdom or Church. For then natural fools, yea the most ungodly professed unbelievers, must be subjects of Christs visible Kingdom or Church, because such are subjects of human kingdoms. I have seen Ephes. 5.24. and see nothing there for Mr. Bs. purpose, but against him, there being no subjection there meant but what is willing, which infants have not, except by extraordinary operation unknown. Infants whether of believers or unbelievers are capable of being Christs subjects passively, or actively by extraordinary secret invisible, and unknown operation, but not actively, visibly by ordinary means for want of the use of reason. This consequence will never be proved by Mr. B. Infants were members of the Jewish Church, therefore visible Church members of the Christian Church. To this argument, Infants were Disciples in the Jewish Church, Ergo, God will shew the like mercy now, I answer by denying his antecedent, which he would prove from John 9.28. we are Moses Disciples in opposition to Jesus Disciples, But infants were Moses his Disciples. This proposition I deny, and Mr. B. hath brought nothing to prove it. The Text mentions none as Moſes Diſciples but perſons of years, and therefore theres no need of further anſwer to his argument.

3. "My third argument ſaith Mr. B. to prove ſome infants are Diſciples, is this from Chriſts own words. If Chriſt would have ſome children received as Diſciples, then they are Diſciples; But Chriſt would have ſome ſuch received as Diſciples; Therefore ſome ſuch are Diſciples. All the queſtion is of the antecedent and that is plain in Luke 9.47,48. compared which Matth. 18. 5. and Mark 9.41. He that receiveth this childe in my name receiveth me. Here obſerve. 1. It was the childe himſelf that Chriſt would have received. 2. He would have him received [in his name] now that can mean no leſs than as a Diſciple: when they are baptized it is into his Name: And that which in Luke is called [receiving in Chriſts name] is expreſſed in Mark [one that belongeth to Chriſt] and in Matthew [in the name of a Diſciple] though ſome of theſe places ſpeak of infants, ſome of others: yet compared, they plainly tell you this; that to receive [in Chriſts Name] and [as belonging to Chriſt] and [as a Diſciple of Chriſt] in Chriſts language is all one, for they plainly expreſs the ſame thing intended in all. So that Chriſt hath encouraged me to receive children [in his Name] Luke 9.47. And he expoundeth it to me, that this is to receive them [as belonging] to him, and as [Diſciples] I know ſome frivolous anſwers are made to this: but they are not worth the ſtanding on. Mr. Blakes Argument hence remaineth as good as unanſwered."

Anſw. What Mr. Blake alleged in his Birth privilege, *p.*21: about theſe Texts was anſwered in my Examen, *pag.*134. and what he replied in his Anſwer to my Letter, *cap.*11. *ſect.*5. was refelled in my Poſtſcript, *pag.*145,146. all which I have reviewed with what Mr. Blake refers to in his Repulſe of Mr. Blackwood, *pag.*16,17,18,19,20. and do not finde wherein my anſwer in my Poſtſcript is deficient, and therefore ſee no reaſon to be moved by Mr. Bs. vain talk that Mr. Blakes Argument hence remains as good as unanſwered, and do conceive it more abundantly anſwered than ſuch a far-fetch'd argument deſerved. Yet Mr. B. brings it again into the field, and Mr. Blake Vindic. Fœderis, *pag.*414. ſays, he will forbear to make any rejoynder to the Reply of my Apology, pag.145. because Mr. B. hath here done it for him. Now what saith Mr. B. He saith, I know some frrivolous answers are made to this; but they are not worth the standing on.

To which I reply, if the Answers be more frivolous than the Argument they are not indeed worth standing on. But let us see what kinde of Argument it is. 1. Mr. B. should have concluded that Some Infants are Disciples, and he concludes that Some Children are Disciples, or else he means by [some such] in the minor and conclusion others than by [some Children] in the major, now some Infants and some Children are not all one. 2. The phrase in the middle term [received as Disciples] may be understood two ways, 1. thus, that Christ would have them received as being Disciples, and in this sense I grant the Consequence, but deny the minor, understood of some infants. 2. That he would have them received with such tenderness and love as is given to Disciples, though they be not Disciples. And in this sense I might grant the minor, and deny the Consequence of the major, though I think the minor is not true in that sense.

And to Mr. Bs. proof of this, I say, 1. the word παιδιον, Luke 9.47. doth not note an infant always. For Jairus his Daughter though twelve years old, is called παιδιον, a little childe, Mark 5.41.42. And yet that age might be a patern of humility, seldom are children of that age ambitious, though they be impatient. And that the little childe Matth. 18.2. was not an infant but a person of some years, is made probable, in that Christ is said to call him, and to set him, or make him stand in the midst of them. 2. Beza saith, Perhaps it should be read τοιοῦτο, such a little childe. So the Syriack Interpreter reades, and it is very probable by comparing it with Matth. 18.5. where the words of Christ are related, and there it is παιδιον τοιοῦτον ἕν, one such little childe, and Mark 9.37. ἓν τῶν τοιούτων παιδίων, one of such children. 3. But if the reading be allowed as the Copies now have it, yet it is not unusual that [οὗτος, this] is all one with [τοιοῦτος, such] as on the other side τοιοῦτος is 2 Cor. 2.6. all one with τοσοῦτος. So in the same Chapter οὗτον, Luke 9.26. is not meant of one particular person, but of one so qualified, and in like manner 2 Tim. 3.5.

ἀπ' τέτες ἀποστάτε, from these turn away, that is, as our Translators well render it, from such turn away, and v.6. ἐκ τέτων, is rendered [of this sort] There are more of the like, 2 Thess. 3.14. 2 John 7. 1 John 2.22. Luke 8.14,15,21, &c. So Grotius in Luc. 9.48. τῦτο, id est, τοιῦτο, Ut apud Matthæum, quomodo & hic Syrus interpretatur. And this may be confirmed by reason thus, If τῦτο τὸ παιδίον, Luke 9.48. must be expounded of this little childe, then the speech of Christ is to be understood onely of that one individual little childe and no other, for in that sense it is a Pronoun demonstrative, and so notes a demonstrative individual, as Logicians speak, and so it shall note not onely the childe himself, as Mr. B. observes, but even that particular little childe then present, and it would onely import a privilege appropriate to that little childe, and agreeing to no other, whereas the sense is manifest from the words there, and other places, Matth. 10.40. Luke 10.16. John 13.20. to be this, whosoever shall receive any one that comes in my Name, though he be as mean and as inconsiderable as this little childe, receiveth me; and therefore it is added presently, For he that is least among you all, the same shall be great, which shews that by [this] or [such a little childe] he meant the Apostles, whosoever receiveth any of you, though as mean as this little childe, or such a little childe, receiveth me. 4. There are sundry things in the Text, and in parallel places, which do evince, that the receiving the little childe, neither is nor can be meant of a little childe in respect of age, much less an infant.

As, 1. that it is supposed that the little childe here meant may be received in Christs name, but that agrees not with the meaning of the speech as there is meant to understand it of a little childe in age. For receiving in Christs name presupposeth coming in Christs name, as John 5.43. 2 John 10. &c. that is either professing Christs name or Preaching or acting in Christs name. And that this is presupposed here, Luke 9.48. appears partly by the phrase receiveth him that sent him, which intimateth this to be the force of the speech, he that receiveth one such little childe sent by me receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me, and partly from the very next *v.*49. where John is said to answer and say taking occasion, as it seems by the relation from Christs words, Master we saw one casting out Devils in thy name, which words intimate that he underſtood, receiving in Chriſts name to be meant of one acting or ſpeaking in Chriſts name, and thus is the phraſe [in my name, in the name of the Lord] often uſed *Matth.*7 22. & 21.9. & 23.39 & 24.5. which thing is more fully confirmed by Mr. Bs. parallel place. Mark 9.37,41. It is plain that Mark ſets down Chriſts words upon the ſame occaſion of their contention for preheminence which Luke doth, and the ſame words *v.*37. and there expreſſeth it, whoſoever ſhall receive one of ſuch little ones in my name, which cannot be meant of that little one then ſet before them, but of his Apoſtles and others who ſhould be as mean as ſuch a little one, and *v.*39. expounds [in my name] of acting in my name, and *v.*41. whoſoever ſhall give you a cup of cold water in my name becauſe ye are Chriſts, that is, ye are ſent by Chriſt, or act for Chriſt, which ſhews *v.*37. to be meant of the Apoſtles not little children in age, but ſuch as did act for Chriſt though mean as little children. The ſame may be proved from Matth. 10.40,41,42. 2. Again, the receiving of the little childe proves it is not meant of a little childe in age. For what is the receiving? It is, 1. by hearing Luke 10.16. 2. By entertaining upon travayl, as Luke 9.52,53. they did not receive him by making ready for him, and Mark 9.41. by giving a cup of cold water, which was no ſmall kindneſs to a travailer in thoſe dry and hot Countreys. But what kindneſs had this been to a little childe in age as an infant, that travayls not? On the contrary, not receiving is expreſſed *Matth.*10.14. Mark 6.11. by not entertaining them into their houſe nor hearing their words. ſo the New Annot. on *Matth.*10.42. [he that receiveth you] Luke 10.16. John 13.20. that heareth your Doctrine willingly, and entertaineth you, which receiving agrees not to infants, nor any other receiving mentioned in the Goſpels that hath ſuch a bleſſing aſſured to it as here. 3. The reward annexed, to wit, the receiving of Chriſt ſhews the receiving of a little one in Chriſts name, to be another thing than the receiving of a little infant in Chriſts name, that is, after Mr. Bs. ſilly conceit, the receiving into the viſible Church by baptizing it. For then the greateſt bleſſing, that is, of receiving Chriſt and his Father ſhould be annexed to ſo poor a thing as may be done by every poor Presbyter, or Curate, how ill mannerd ſoever

he be; the baptizing, that is, as now its used and defended, the sprinkling of a little holy water on an infant. 4. It appears that a little infant is not meant Luke 9.48. from the description of the little childe there meant. For Mr. B. himself compares that speech in Luke with the like, Matth. 18.5. Now such a little childe Matth. 18.5. is expressed *v.*6. one of these little ones which believe in me, (not as Mr. Cobbet in his Just Vindication, pag. 117. fondly conceives without any other Author that ever I heard of besides himself, one of those little ones, who are the little ones of them that believe in me. For then it should be either τῶν πιστευόντων, or τέκνων, or some such supply, and it would be ridiculous to imagine the scandalizing to be of infants, the penalty of which is heavier than to have a milstone tied about the neck, and to be cast into the Sea, that little infants are those not to be despised, whose Angels behold the face of Christs Father, v. 10. The little ones Matth. 18.6. are called Christs brethren, Matth. 25.40. answering to them that believe) *and v.*3. one that becomes as a little childe, *v.*4. one that humbles himself as this little childe, which it is meer dotage to expound of little infants. Again Mr. B. referrs to Matth. 10.41. and there the little childe received is a Prophet, and a righteous man. Hereto I add the expressions of many writers. Piscator (to whom Mr. Blake refers) Analys. Luc. 9.48. innuit amorem suum erga demissos animo in exemplo pueruli præsentis. Schol. in Matth. 18.5. propter nomen meum, propterea quod in me credit, Beza annot. in Matth. 18.5. puerulum talem παιδίον τοιοῦτο, id est, quempiam ita se demittentem ut puerum referat: nec enim proprie de pueris agit. Parens in Matth. 18.5. dicit, qui susceperit unum ex parvulis talibus, hoc est, unum ex vobis pueri instar humiliatum. Diodati on Matth. 18.5. [one such] "namely, a true Christian that shall have layd aside all worldly pride, whereby he is become abject in the sight of the world. New Annot. in Matth. 10.42. [one of these little ones] who newly made profession of religion: on Matth 18.5. one like such a childe in the qualities before mentioned. " Mr. B. himself confesseth that some of these places speak of infants some of others: yet saith he, compared they plainly tell you this; That to receive [in Christs name] and [as belonging to Christ] and [as a Disciple of Christ] in Christs language is all

one; for they plainly expreſs the ſame thing intended in all. From whence I infer, that if the ſame thing be intended in all, and all expreſs the ſame thing, then is no other thing intended or expreſſed, Luke 9.48. than what is expreſſed and intended *Matth.*18.5. Mark 9.41. Matth. 10.42. and then, it is certain that Luke 9.48. is not meant of a little infant in age, nor the receiving ſuch as agrees to ſuch an infant, ſith it is certain that Matth. 18.5. Marke 9 41. *Matth.*10.42. are not underſtood of either of theſe, and it follows upon Mr. Bs. confeſſion that ſome of theſe Texts ſpeak not of infants, that none of them ſpeak of infants, ſith they all expreſs and intend the ſame thing; and thus Mr. Bs. own obſervation refutes himſelf. But ſaith he, when they are baptized it is into his name.

Anſw. Mr. B. it ſeems would have this the ſenſe: whoſoever receiveth to Baptiſm in my name one little childe receiveth me to Baptiſm, which ſhould imply it to be a gratefull office to receive him to Baptiſm, and *the offending Matth.*18.6. and *deſpiſing v.*10. ſhould be not admitting to Baptiſm, and when it is ſayd [whoſoever] ſhall receive one ſuch little one, it would imply it to be a gratefull work for any perſon though no Miniſter to receive to Baptiſm, and an ungrateful work for any to refuſe to baptize. I grant that in the places named *to be ſuch a little one, Matth.*18. 5. to belong to Chriſt, Mark 9.41. *to be a Diſciple of Chriſt, Matth.*10 42. note the ſame ſort of perſons, yet I deny that propoſition, which is the hinge of Mr. Bs. proof, [every one that belongs to Chriſt is a Diſciple of Chriſt] For the holy Angels, thoſe yet uncalled whom his Father hath given him, John 17.10. belong to Chriſt, and yet are not to be called Diſciples of Chriſt. And therefore I infer, that Mr. B. hath no encouragement from Chriſts expoſition of theſe Texts to account infants Diſciples, and what he collects in his own fancy without the Text is frivolous and ſelf contradicting, ſo little worth the ſtanding on, that for my part I think this ſheet of his Book, what ever be ſaid of the reſt, worth no more than a ſheet that is made thuris piperiſque cucullus, yet he cannot forbear but muſt add more of this frivolous ſtuff.

In anſwer to this objection, Infants cannot learn, and therefore cannot be Diſciples, he adds thus much more. 1. They can partake of the protection and provision of their Master (as the children of those that the Israelites bought) and enjoy the privileges of the family and school, and be under his charge and dominion, and that is enough to make them capable of being Disciples.

Answ. What privileges of Christs family and school, infants enjoy, I know not, what ever they be what ever protection, provision, rule, care is for them, yet this is not enough to make them Disciples, as Christ meant, Mat. 28.19. till they have learnt, or profess learning of this Lesson, that Jesus is the Christ; all that is said here of Children may be said of slaves bought with money, they are all then with him Disciples of Christ, though professed infidels.

2. They are, saith he, devoted to learning, if they live: however they are consecrated to him as their Master, who can teach them hereafter, and that is yet more.

Answ. I may add, they may cry, as Cyprian, and his sixty six Bishops alleged for their Baptism, and suck, and smile, and play with the mother, and that is more than this, but neither the one nor the other any thing to the denomination of a Disciple of Christ.

3. Saith he, I wonder you should be more rigorous with Christ in this case than you are with men. Is it not common to call the whole nation of the Turks both old and young by the name of Mahometans, or Disciples of Mahomet?

Answ. What a pretty passage is this to set out a man as rigorous with Christ, who expounds his words Matth. 28.19. according to his constant language in all the Evangelists, because he allows not infants to be called Disciples, as if Christ forsooth did plead for infants discipleship, and I were so stiff, as that I would not yield to him. But he thinks I will allow Mahometans children to be called Mahomets disciples, for it is the common use, and why not then we and our children by the name of Christians and Disciples of Christ. Answ. I confess I think the common use now is to call the Turks young and old Mahometans, and in Chorographical relations, English, French, &c. are called Christian Nations, old and young, termed Christians: but neither do I finde the common use to be to call infants either Mahomets or Christs Disciples, nor if I did, should this sway me at all to allow low infants discipleship according to *Matth.*28.19. till Scripture use of the term [Disciple] applicable to that sense can be shewed.

But Mr. B. hath more of this childish arguing. And when a man hired a Philosopher to teach him and all his children, were they not all then Disciples of that Philosopher? They are entered under him as their Master for future teaching, are at present in the relation of Disciples.

Answ. It is no such strange thing to hear of a Physician taking a stipend to cure a man and all his children, but to hear of a Philosopher hired to teach a man, and all his children, even his infant children, and counting them Disciples, and entering them under him as their master, is so strange to me that it seems to me somewhat like a tale of a man of Gotham. Yet if there were any such thing acted by wise men in sober sadness, it is nothing to prove infants Disciples in Christs or his Apostles language. But the prettiest part of this Comedy or poppet play of Mr. B. is yet behinde.

4. Saith he. "And truly I wonder also that it should go so currant that infants are not capable of learning, the mother is a Preacher to the infant, partly by her action and gesture and partly by voice. "Answ. And why not by smiles, and kisses and whipping? But what then? They can dishearten and take off from vices and teach them obedience. Answ. Tis true they can still them from crying: but how they can take them off from vices and teach them obedience to Gods Command I am yet to learn, it may be nurses may better inform me than Mr. B. Me thinks saith he, we should not make an infant less docible than some brutes. What doth Mr. B. mean by this? Doth he think they that deny infants to be Disciples allow brutes to be Disciples? A parret I think will sooner learn some words of Christs than an infant, yet I think neither learn any thing of the Doctrine of Christ till they understand it. But I am referred to nurses, who he saith, will tell me more in this than he can, It may be so; yet sure nothing to shew that any have made their infants learn the Doctrine of Christ. He adds. And what if they cannot at first learn to know Christ? even with men of years that is not the first Lesson: if they may be taught any of the duty of a rational creature it is somewhat. Answ. If they do not learn to know Christ they learn not that which should make them Disciples of Christ. It is somewhat indeed that they can learn to kiss the mother, stroke her breasts, &c. but whats this to make them Disciples of Christ? And if they can learn nothing of the parents either by action or voyce; yet Christ hath other ways of teaching than by men even by the immediate working of his Spirit.

Answ. 'Tis true, and he may make infants Disciples, nor do I deny it to be done invisibly, but it would be a greater wonder than yet Mr. B. hath had for all his wonderments, a very prodigy that any of them should become a visible Disciple. 'Tis true they may learn something of God very young and are to be bred up in the nurture of the Lord. But that in their infancy at two or three dayes old they are learners of the things of God, of the admonition of the Lord from mothers and nurses is a fiction like Galilæus his New World in the Moon, or Copernicus his Circumgyration of the earth.

Mr. B. tels us he might argue further, All that are saved are Christs Disciples, some infants are saved, Ergo. And I might answer him, that they may be saved, and yet no visible Disciples according to the meaning of Christ Matth. 28. 19. But sith he hath put this off to another time I shall take a little breathing from Mr. B. and set him aside a little while till I have heard what his seniors say further for their baby-baptism.

SECT. XVI.

Dr. Featley and Mr. Stephens arguings from John 3. 5. for Infant-baptism are answered, and Baptism shewed not be a cause of Regeneration, and Mr. Cranfords words considered.

THere are some other Texts brought to prove an institution of infant-baptism out of the New Testament which I shall take in though the Assembly and the chiefest I have to do with in this controversie do omit them. The Ancients were wont to allege Joh. 3. 5. to prove infants are to be baptized after Christs appointment, or rather the reasonableness and necessity of the Churches appointment. Augustine in his writings often joyns Rom. 5. 12, and John 3. 5.

as the reason of infant baptism Lumb. Sent.4. Dist.3. allegeth some as making the institution of baptism to be John 3.5. The Papists commonly allege John 3.5. for the necessity of infant-baptism, *Becan. Manual.l.4.c.2. Mandatum habemus, Joan.*3.5. They are refuted by the Protestants, as Chamier tom.4.l.5.de bapt. c.9. yet *Vossius thes. Th. de pædobapt. thes.*7. brings it, to which being in Latin I have answered in Latin in my Refutation of Dr. Savage his supposition, though contrary to my expectation not yet printed, Dr. Featley in his Dipper dipt, p.10.43. makes it one of his prime arguments for infant-baptism, p.10. he thus argues. If none can enter into the Kingdom of God but those that are born of Water and the Spirit; that is, those that are baptized with Water and regenerated by the Spirit, then there is a necessity of baptizing children, or else they cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, (that is ordinarily) for we must not tie God to outward means. But the former is true. Ergo, the latter. And *pag.*43. none ought to exclude the children of the faithfull out of the Kingdom of Heaven. But by denying them baptism (as much as in us lieth) we exclude them out of the Kingdom of Heaven. For as Christ affirmed to Nicodemus, and confirmed it with a double oath or most vehement asseveration, Amen, Amen; or verily, verily (I say unto thee) except a man be born of Water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, Ergo, we ought not to deny them baptism.

Answ. This arguing is the same in effect notwithstanding the Doctors mincing it (which is but a little) with that which the Papists bring for their horrid tenet of Exclusion out of the Kingdom of Heaven of infants dying unbaptized. For he holds that there is a necessity of baptizing children or else they cannot enter into the Kingdom of God ordinarily. In which assertion he denies any infants enterance into the kingdom of God ordinarily without water-baptism. And no more is said as I conceive by the more moderate Papists, such as Biel, Cajetan, Gerson, cited by Perkins in his preparative to the demonstration of the probleme. But no marvail the Doctor; who was addicted to the Common Prayer Book, concurred thus far with the Papists: For in it the Doctrine of Augustin, and others is retained, of asserting the necessity of infant-baptism because of original sin and Christs words, *Ioh.*3.5.

as appears by the Preface appointed to be used before the solemnity of Baptism. But Protestant Divines do generally refute this opinion, as e.g. Chamier Panstr. Cath. tom. 4. l. 5. de Bapt. c. 8. &c. teaching that infants of believers are ordinarily holy, and admitted into the Kingdom of Heaven, though dying unbaptized? But to answer his Arguments, 1. It's known that Calvin, Piscator, and many more do take [water] metaphorically, and the conjunction [&, and] to be exegetical not coupling differing things, but expounding what is meant by [water] as if he had said, that water which is the Spirit, as when it is said Mat. 3. 11. He shall baptize with you the Holy Ghost and with fire, that is, with the Holy Ghost, which is as fire. And this they conceive as necessary, that the speech of Christ may be verified. For simply understood it is false, sith the Thief on the Cross, sundry Martyrs and others have entered into the Kingdom of Heaven unbaptized. And this Exposition Chamier Panstrat. Cath. tom. 4. lib. 5. cap. 9. hath taken upon him to maintain against the opposites to it, and if true the objection of Dr. Featley fals, which rests on this, that there a necessity of water-baptism is imposed on all that shall enter into the Kingdom of God. Nevertheless I confess my self unsatisfied in this Exposition. 1: Because I do not think that Matth. 3. 11. by [fire] is meant the Holy Ghost as being like fire in his operation on every sanctified person: but that the words are an express prophesie of what Christ also foretold, Acts 1. 5. and was accomplished at Pentecost, Acts 2. 3. when the Holy Ghost filled them, and fiery cloven tongues sate upon each of them. 2. Because if it were parallel to that place, and [water] were used metaphorically, (as is said by them) and exegetically added [water] should be after, and [spirit] before, as Matth. 3. 11. [spirit] is first, and [fire] after, and after the usual manner of speaking, it should run thus, except a man be born of the spirit and water, if it were to be expounded of the spirit which is as water. Dr. Homes anim. adv. on my Exercit: pag. 30. allegeth Bullinger, saying, Omnes penè de baptismo, Ioh. 3. 5. interpretantur, to which he adjoyns Bullingers, and his own consent.. For these reasons I am much inclined to expound it of the Element of Water. Yet, 2. am very apt to conceive, that forasmuch as Mr. Selden de jure nat. & Gent. juxta discipl. Heb. lib. 2. cap. 4. tels us that when the Iews did initiate Proselytes by

baptizing them with water, they called it Regenerating, and that Christ, when he taunts Nicodemus with dulneſs in being a Maſter in Iſrael, and yet not knowing of Regeneration, but by imagining a natural New-birth, when Regeneration was frequent in baptizing Proſelytes among the Iews, inſomuch that by it they taught a perſon loſt his natural relations of kinred as he ſhews, lib. 5. *c.*18. and hath theſe words in the place above cited, [tametſi de eâ quæ ſpiritu ſit non ſolùm aquâ loqueretur Chriſtus] our Saviour meant baptiſm of water, not according to his Apoſtles practice, but the Iews, and that the ſenſe is this, Except a man be born of water, and of the ſpirit, that is, Except a man be not onely born again by water, as ye Phariſees regenerate, when ye make Proſelytes, but alſo by the ſpirit, as I do beget again he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, although he may enter into the Commonwealth or policy of Iſrael: which ſenſe nevertheleſs doth not aſſert a neceſſity of their water-regeneration, but onely of Chriſts ſpiritual regeneration, and the inſufficiency of the other by it ſelf, which is ſo much the more probable, becauſe I finde καὶ uſed for ἀλλὰ, that is, and for but, *Matth.*11.19. & 12.39. Acts 10.28. and καὶ ἐν ὀλίγῳ καὶ ἐν πολλῷ, Acts 26.29. ſeems to anſwer to [not onely but alſo] yet becauſe I finde not a place every way parallel, I onely propound it to be examined. But 3. it being granted that it is meant of Chriſts water-baptiſm, yet Papiſts themſelves make not ſuch a neceſſity of it as is without limitation and exception, and therefore they put in ſome one, ſome another reſtriction, which Chamier in the place alleged reduceth to four: 1. Unleſs the perſon be baptized either with the baptiſm of water, or ſome other thing inſtead of it, as the baptiſm of blood and ſpirit. 2. If they may be baptized, and they deſpiſe it. 3. If they be not baptized with that Regeneration which is by water, though it may be otherwiſe alſo. 4. If they be neither baptized in deed nor deſire. Why may not then this limitation be added, Except a man be born again of water, that is, except ſuch a perſon of whom baptiſm is required, according to my inſtitution, be born of water, when he may have it, and its cleared to him to be his duty, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. And indeed this and ſuch like ſpeeches Mark 16.16. John 3.18,36, &c. that require faith as well as baptiſm, are to be underſtood of perſons to whom the Go-

ſpel is preached, and do or may hear it, and ſpeak not of infants, whom w efinde not that God enters into the Kingdom of Heaven any other way than by his inviſible election and operation of his Spirit. And it is obſervable, that whereas Iohn 3.5. our Saviour joyns water and ſpirit as means of Regeneration, yet v.6. he names onely the ſpirit, omitting water; whence may be gathered, that water is not of ſuch univerſal unreſtrained neceſſity, that in no caſe a perſon is not born again without it, nor admiſſible into the Kingdom of God, yet ſuch as is neceſſary ordinarily to thoſe to whom the Goſpel is preached, and their duty made known. Whence in anſwer to the Doctors argument I ſay, that his ſpeeches are to be thus limited at leaſt, none can enter into the Kingdom of God ordinarily without baptiſm, to wit, of thoſe to whom the Goſpel is preached, their duty made known, and Baptiſm may be had; and to his later Argument I anſwer, by denying that children are excluded out of the Kingdom of Heaven by denying them Baptiſm, ſith thoſe unbaptized perſons onely are excluded who are appointed to be baptized, to whom the Goſpel is preached, the duty of Baptiſm made known, and they may have it adminiſtred to them, which cannot be ſaid of infants.

Mr. Nathaniel Stephens in his Book intituled, A Precept for the Baptiſm of Infants out of the New Teſtament, having premiſed ſome thing about the Text, Iohn 3.5. pag. 18.19,20,21,22. about the neceſſity of baptiſm of water, and the efficacy of it, in which many things are meerly dictated, and very ſlightly handled, he would infer *pag.23,&c.* a Precept for infant-baptiſm from Iohn 3.5. becauſe infants are guilty of original ſin, where the diſeaſe is there is need of the remedy, when Chriſt doth preſs a neceſſity of waſhing both by water and the ſpirit, he doth not this ſo immediately in reference to actual ſin, as in reference to birth-ſin, and to the natural pollution in which infants are born. The ſame is the plea of Mr. Thomas Fuller in his Infants Advocate, *c.*13.

Anſw. That either baptiſm of water or Circumciſion are made the remedy of original ſin is more than I finde in Scripture, though it go as currant among many of former and later times. It is true our Lord Chriſt ſaith, Except a man be born of Water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, John 3.5.

3.5. and he assigns this as a reason thereof, v.6. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, but that either thereby he intended to make baptism as the remedy of sin, or of original sin rather than actual is more than appears, For though our Lord Christ v.5. make regeneration to be by Water and Spirit yet I conceive regeneration is by the Spirit onely as the cause, by baptism of water onely as the sign, whereby the person baptized testifies that he is born again by the Spirit. Now a remedy is a cause and not a sign onely: no man calls that which is onely a sign of cure a remedy, but that which doth operate for healing. That baptism of water is not the cause of regeneration appears. 1. Because v.6. our Saviour giving the reason of the necessity of regeneration and the effect of regeneration, leaves out [water] and mentions onely [the Spirit] 2. Because the person baptized is supposed to be born again, to be a repenting and believing person afore he is baptized: But if baptism were the cause it should be before regeneration, (for the cause is before the effect) and so men should be baptized afore they are believers, or repenting persons, which is absurd, and contrary to the Scripture, Mark 16.16. Acts 2.38. &c. and contrary to the order of Christ that persons should be made Disciples afore they were baptized Matth. 28 19. 3. Because it is altogether inexplicable how the use of water can be a cause either principal or instrumental to work a new birth or inward change on the soul; If it be sayd, that it is by virtue of Gods promise, it is meet that promise should be shewed, that at, by or upon the use of baptism, God hath promised to regenerate persons. That it is a sign of regeneration will not be I suppose denyed; for it is made the sign of repentance (which is all one with regeneration) and therefore called the baptism of repentance Acts 19.4. because as Beza on *v.*3. baptism was symbolum resipiscentiæ, the token of repentance. And so in like manner it was the sign of faith, and therefore the Apostle *Gal.*3.27. saith, That as many as were baptized into Christ had put on Christ, that is, had by the sign of baptism testified their putting on Christ by faith. And in this sense it is termed the washing of regeneration (if baptism be meant by it) *Tit.*3.5. because by that washing the person baptized testifies his regeneration. And *Rom.*6.4. We are buried with him by baptism into death, that is, we by being under water testifie our dying to sin conformably to Christs death and burial. And in this sense Paul is bid Acts 22.16. to wash away his sins, that is, by baptism to testifie his purging from his sins. And so Christ is said to sanctifie and cleanse his Church with washing of water, *Ephes.*5.26. that is, as Beza Annot. in locum, as representing what he entirely doth effect within. Mr. Iames Cranford in his Epistle to Mr. Thomas Bedford printed at the end of the Friendly Accommodation between Mr. Bedford and Mr. Baxter, saith, that he conceives the ground of Anabaptism to have been the erroneous Doctrine de nudis signis, *in which he is more confirmed by what I answered once to an Argument drawn by him from Ephes.*5. from the efficacy of baptism to inforce the baptizing of infants, that if that Tenent could be clearly proved, I would no longer oppose that practice. Concerning which I say, I remember not all that passed from me in the Dispute he mentions, I did think that which I put down in my *Exercit. sect.*11. had been his Argument. But this I still say, that could it be clearly proved that Christ ever appointed baptism of water taken severedly from the preaching of the Word to be the cause of Regeneration, or that God had assured that by outward baptism with water he would confer regenerating grace to an infant, I should not oppose the practice of Pædobaptism. What Mr. Bedford hath produced for the efficacy of baptism, hath been answered by Mr. Baxter in his Appendix to his Plain Scripture, &c. Nor doth it appear to me that Mr. B. is of his minde, notwithstanding what Letters have past between them now printed, and the syncretism yielded to in the printing of the Friendly Accommodation, and leaving out the Appendix. Dr. Burges his Treatise of Baptismal Regeneration, hath been freely censured by many. Dr. Ieremiah Taylour in his Discourse of baptism hath like an Orator rather than a Disputant pleaded for infant-baptism from the efficacy of baptism, more from speeches of the Fathers than from the Scripture. Sure I am, baptism was appointed by Christ, and used in the examples of the Scripture, as a testimony of Repentance, of faith in Christ, no cause of either. And therefore I deny baptism to be the remedy of original sin, or the cause of Regeneration, or that Christ intended to assign the use to baptism to heal original sin, or to testifie the freedom from it without actual. These things have been delivered by Auguſtine, and taught by the Romaniſts and Lutherans, but by many other Proteſtants diſclaimed and refuted; and therefore Mr. Stephens, Mr. Cranford, Mr. Bedford, &c. in uſing this Argument do but ſymbolize with the Papiſts, and revive what many Proteſtants of beſt note have exploded.

Augustine,

SECT. XVII.

The 31. Chapter of Mr. Bs. Plain Scripture Proof, &c. is anſwered, and Mark 10.13,14,15,16. is ſhewed to make nothing for infants viſible Church-memberſhip and baptiſm, and his deſcription of viſible Church-memberſhip is conſidered, and his Argument from Deut. 29. ſhewed to be inſufficient.

THere are yet ſome other Texts which are brought by Pædobaptiſts out of the New Teſtament, for an inſtitution and practice of infant-baptiſm. Mr. B. Plain Scripture Proof of infant-baptiſm, part. 1. cap. 31. brings Mark 9. 36,37. to prove that, Chriſt hath expreſly aſſured us that he hath not repealed the privilege of infants viſible Church-memberſhip, and upon it fals to his Rhetorick, and tels us of his boldneſs in adventuring on this rule. All which I judg frivolous; nor needs it any further anſwer, there being no new Argument, and what he before ſpake of that Scripture is anſwered before Sect. 15. where it is ſhewed that Mark 9.37. by [little childe] is not meant one that is ſo in reſpect of age, but in reſpect of quality, and that the receiving is not meant of baptiſm, but entertainment in receiving the Doctrine brought, and ſhewing kindneſs to their perſons.

But he adds, "And it is not once but oft that he hath thus manifeſted his will: in the very next Chapter he doth it more fully yet, Mark 10.14,15,16. And they brought young children to him that he ſhould touch them; and his Diſciples rebuked thoſe that brought them: but when Jeſus ſaw it, he was much diſpleaſed, and ſaid to them, Suffer ye little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of ſuch is the Kingdom of God. Verily I ſay unto you, whoſoever ſhall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little childe he ſhall not enter therein: and he took them up in his arms, put his hands on them, and blessed them. And is not here enough to satisfie us yet, that he doth not cast all infants in the world out of his visible Kingdom or Church? but that it is his will they should be admitted? Will any say that it was not infants in the former Text and this that Christ speaks of? Did he take any but infants into his arms? Was it not plainly them that he did bid them receive (in the former Chapter) and was it not them that he would not have to be kept from him? And was it not them that he bid should be suffered to come (that is to be brought) and was it not them that he blessed?

Answ. Mr. M. in his Sermon had alleged this Tex to prove, that the infants of believers even while they are infants do receive the inward grace as well as grown men. I answered, 1. It is doubtfull whether those little children Mark 10.14. were infants. 2. Whether it be said of them, Is the Kingdom of Heaven. 3. Whether they were believers infants. 4. Whether the Kingdom of Heaven be said to be of them in their present estate or their future. 5. The reason why of them is the Kingdom of Heaven may be referred to Christs blessing, not to their Parents faith. 6. That Christs action in this was proper to him, as the great Prophet, and extraordinary, and therefore not fit to make a constant rule for an ordinance, and if it be to that use it is more apposite to establish confirmation than baptism, sith Christ did neither baptize, nor appoint them to be baptized, though he said of them is the Kingdom of Heaven. In all likelihood, if infant-baptism had been according to Christs minde he would have taken this occasion to appoint it, which he not doing, it is very probable that he would not have it done.

To all which Mr. M. in his Defence pag. 221, 222. replied onely this, that they were dictates and brought in to little purpose, whereas there is nothing sayd by me without reason and some proof, and yet I being a respondent it was more than my business necessitated me to produce so much, a denial being sufficient for the respondent. And whereas he saith I grant enough to serve his turn, that the Kingdom of Heaven did belong to those infants and concludes that their infants in their infantile age are capable of inward grace, and some of them actually partakers of it, and this is enough for him, and that more than this cannot be said of grown men who are visible professors. To it I say, Though I should grant that the Kingdom of Heaven did belong to these infants, yet it serves not his turn to prove thence that the infants of believers are visible Church-members, and that believers infants have right to baptism, except it be proved that their parents were believers, that the Kingdom of Heaven for that reason did belong to them, and in this thing was intended by Christ, the establishing a settled rule for infants interest in the Church and baptism. Capacity of inward grace is not denied to infants, no not to Turks infants: whether any of them be partakers actually of inward grace is not determined: nor is it true that no more can be sayd of grown men: for the making of visible profession may be said of grown men, which cannot be said of infants.

But Mr. B. is eager for infant-baptism as concludible hence, lets see what he saies. First he begins with his Rhetorick, which commonly supplies the want of proof. Then he heaps up seven or eight interrogations, and takes all for granted which he demands. But to them I say.

To the first, 1. I except against his expression which insinuates as if by denying that infants are visible Church-members they were cast out of Christs visible Church, whereas it is one thing not to reckon them in and another to cast them out, which is but once used in Scripture 3 Iohn 10. and this phrase serves onely to provoke passion. 2. It is so far from being true that there is enough in those Texts to satisfy that Christ would have infants admitted into his visible Church, that it is rather true on the contrary that there is enough against it. To his other questions, I answer. 1. By denying that they were infants he would have received Mark 9.37. 2. whether they were infants he took in his arms, whom he would not to be kept from him, but suffered to come to him, and whom he blessed, it is uncertain. Piscator, Estius, &c. conceive they were young ones that could come of themselves being called. But be it granted they were infants, lets see what Mr. B. gathers thence.

Hence, saith he, I argue thus. 1. If Christ would have us receive infants in his name, then we must receive them as belonging to him and his Church. But he would have us to receive them in his name; therefore &c. 2. If he that receiveth an infant in his name receiveth himself, then some infants are to be received in his name; and those that refuse them sin: But the former is true, therefore the later.

Answ. 1. Both the conclusions might be granted and yet Mr. Bs. cause not gained, the former, because infants may belong to Christ and his Church, to wit, the invisible, and yet it not be proved thence they are visible Church-members; the later, because they may be received in Christs name as by harbouring, feeding them, and yet not be admitted to baptism. 2. The minor in both Syllogismes is false: For the Text Mark 9.37. speaks not of infants in age to be received, but of believers that are humble, and low in condition as infants, particularly of his Apostles.

3. Saith Mr. B. if Christ was much displeased with those that kept particular infants from visible access to him, then (though they could not keep them from his visible grace) I think he will be much more displeased with those that keep all the infants in the world from visible access to him in his Church now (though they cannot keep them from the invisible Church:) But the former is true: Therefore the later.

Answ. The conclusion is granted. For what visible access to Christ in his Church now can be but by profession of faith I know not. If Mr. B. know of any that keep infants from professing faith let him threaten them, and spare not. But that which he tels us that we keep infants from visible access to Christ, because we baptize them not for want of profession of faith, is but a squib that may affright women and children, when intelligent persons laugh at it.

4. Saith he, "If Christ command us to suffer them to come, and not to forbid them, then those sin against his express Command that will not suffer them to come but do forbid them, (for it is a standing Command and speaks of infants, and not of these individuals onely; and there is now no other visible admittance to Christ but by admitting into his Church and to be his Disciples) But &c. therefore &c.

Answ. The conclusion is granted without any detriment to our cause: we forbid not any to come to Christ. There's no coming to Christ now as those little children came, that is, to come to his person for blessing, cure, or teaching by himself in the flesh. There's no coming to Christ now but by hearing his word, and believing in him, as John 6.35. is expressed. If any forbid infants to do so let him bear the blame. But we forbid infants to be baptized till they come to Christ, that is, till they believe, and we are sure we have the Scripture for us, Matth. 28.19. Mark 16.16. Acts 8.37. Ephes. 5.4. Gal. 3.26,27. A thing so known that all that heretofore baptized infants did take this as unquestionable, that believers onely are to be baptized, and therefore to justifie infant-baptism they run into wilde fancies, as that they believe in the Church, in their Parents, in their sureties, in their being baptized. But Mr. Bs. hold is in his Parenthesis, against which I except, 1. that his speech of [admitting into his Church, and to be his Disciples] supposeth that a person is first admitted into Christs Church, and then to be his Disciple, whereas no man is rightly admitted into Christs Church, who is not first a Disciple. 2. That he saith, This Luke 18.16. is a standing Commandment. But this we must take on Mr. Bs. word, theres nothing in the Text, or in Mr. Bs. writing to prove it. Nor is it likely. For if so, me thinks the Apostles and the Writers of the New Testament should not have been so negligent as neither to observe this command after this time, nor to have recorded any act done by the Apostles according to that command. 3. That Christs speech is of the species of infants, and not of these individuals onely. 1. Is said without proof, yea it is more probable that ἄφετε τὰ παιδία, is as much as, Suffer these little children to come to me, and that because, as Pædobaptists urge, τοιούτων, of such is the Kingdom of Heaven, (which is the reason of Christs injunction) is meant of those infants. 2. Were it granted not to be meant of those individuals onely, yet this is all that can be thence proved, that if after that time other infants were brought to Christ in that manner to be touched by him, they should be suffered. It may be granted, that there is now no other visible admittance to Christ but by admitting into his Church. But this is enough to prove that there is now no such visible admittance to Christ as those Mark 10.14. had, who were admitted to Christs person to be touched by him, and not into his visible Church by baptism.

5. Saith Mr. B. If of such be the Kingdom of God, then of such is the visible Church: but the former is true. Therefore, &c. Answ.

Answ. The consequence is denied. Of infants in the mothers womb, as Jacob, John Baptist, &c. is the Kingdom of God, and yet the visible Church is not of such.

But saith Mr. B. "Here they have two cavils against the plain sense of the Text, 1. By [such] is meant [such for docibleness and humility] To which I answer, 1. Then it seems they are so docible and humble, that the Kingdom belongs to them. For if it belong to others, because they are such as them, then it must needs belong to others also.

Answ. Mr. Bs. censure of the Answers I gave as cavils is as the rest of this his Dispute rash and inconsiderate. For the very words Mark 10.15. do directly lead to that sense I give, and the words of Christ *Matth.*18.3,4. plainly expound wherein they that enter into the Kingdom of God must be like children. But to the matter of his Answer, 1. The conclusion is granted, nor was it ever denyed by me, that of some infants is the Kingdom of God, and particularly of those whom Christ blessed, but yet not because of their docibleness and humility, but because of Christs blessing. Nor do I allow Mr. Bs. consequence, that if the Kingdom did belong to others, because they are such as them, then it must needs belong to them also. For the Kingdom of Heaven did belong to others, because they are such as them in the properities common to them with other children: But the Kingdom of Heaven did belong to them as blessed by Christ, not in respect of docibleness and humility. It may be it will be said, that then little children have those properties for which of them may be the Kingdom of God. I answer, it doth not follow: but this onely follows that there is such teachableness and humility in little children in other respects, which other men imitating and expressing in spiritual things, and so becoming such as they are by analogy and resemblance, in that respect belong to the Kingdom of God.

2. Saith Mr. B. "Doth Christ say, To such as them in this or that respect onely, and not to them, (or saith he) not in general, To such? even to such as he took in his arms and blessed? He would not have taken up, and blessed any, for a meer Emblem of such as were blessed; he would not have taken up and blessed a Lamb or a Dove as Emblems of humility and innocency. If Christ say, [of such] is the Kingdom, I am bound to take Scripture in the most extensive sense, till there be a plain reason to necessitate me to restrain it. And therefore must understand it [to such] both of that age, or any other age. Who dare think that the word [to such] is not rather inclusive as to them than exclusive? If I love humble poor men, and my servants keep them from my house because they are poor, and if I chide them for it, and say, Suffer such to come to me, and forbid them not, for my delight is in such: who would so interpret this speech as to think I would exclude them, while I command their admittance? And that I meant other humble ones, and not these? "

Answ. Doth Mr. B. say, To such in general in respect of age onely belongs the Kingdom of God. If he do say so (as his words seem to import) then it follows, that to every infant, whether of believers or unbelievers, elect or reprobate, belongs the Kingdom of God: If not, then he must say as I say, if he will speak truth, that 1. To those infants belonged the Kingdom in this respect onely as they were blessed by Christ, or elect. 2. If it be applied to other infants, it can be applied to no others but such as are blessed by Christ, or elect. 3. And for other persons, that under the term [of such] are meant also persons of age like them in humility and teachableness is so manifest from *v.*15. *Matth.*18.3.4.5. that it is nothing but cavilling in Mr. B. thus to carp at my plain and clear exposition of the words agreeable to the most approved expositors, as *Beza Annot. ad Matth.*19.14. talium τοιούτων] id est, horum & similium ut supra 18. Piscat: sch: in Matth. 19.14. talium] τῶν τοιούτων, quales scilicet sunt isti pueruli, nempe credentes in me & demissè de se sentientes. confer. supra, c. 18. 2. & seq. that I omit others. Neither do I, nor need I say, that Christ took them, or blessed the little ones for a meer Emblem of such as were blessed, or that he might, by like reason with mine, have taken up and blessed a Lamb or a Dove as Emblems of humility. And though Mr. Bs. rule may be questioned, whether a man be bound to take Scripture in the most extensive sense till there be a plain reason to necessitate him to restrain it, yet I gainsay it not, to understand [to such] both of that age or any other, and I allow that Christ meant those, and other humble ones, and that the term [of such] is both inclusive, including more than those particular little ones; and exclusive, of those that are not elect or blessed by Christ. And though I maintain by firm Arguments in my Postscript to Mr. Blake, sect. 20. that by the Kingdom of Heaven, as in Matth. 19.14. or of God, as Mark 10.14. Luke 18.16. is meant the Kingdom of Glory, (which Mr. B. denies not) yet were it allowed Mr. B. that it is meant of the visible Church, it is not true of all infants of believers, that of them is the visible Church, for infants in the womb, as Jacob, are of the Kingdom of God, that is the invisible Church, yet not of the visible, much less of the species of infants, as Mr. B. speaks. For then every individual infant should be of the visible Church, though the Parents be unbelievers, which Mr. B. me thinks should gainsay: and therefore there is plain reason necessitating to restrain the speech of Christ, as I do.

3. Saith Mr. B. When Mr. T. maketh their docibleness the thing intended by Christ, he forgot that he judged them uncapable of being Disciples. Why may not those be Disciples who are not onely docible, but exemplary for their teachableness.

Answ. Mr. T. tels Mr. B. he did not forget, but thinks Mr. B. did not heed. The docibleness allowed to infants was in things natural, such as are to know the Nurse, imitate gestures, to be stilled from crying when rebuked, &c. but not in things spiritual, to know Christ to be the Son of God, the Messiah, &c. which are necessary to denominate them Disciples of Christ. Yet such teachableness, and humility onely negative, in not ambitiously affecting preheminence are sufficient for Christ to propound them as examples or similitudes rather, to direct his Disciples to imitate in another kinde.

« Their second Objection, saith Mr. B. is that by [the Kingdom of God] is meant the Kingdom of Heaven. And I think so too: but then if the Kingdom of Heaven belong to such, much more a standing as members in the visible Church: For what is it to be a member of the Church visible, but to be one that in seeming or appearance, or to the judgment of man, doth belong to the invisible Church or the Kingdom of Heaven? For the Church is but one, and the difference respective as I shewed before: therefore both visible and invisible, both military and triumphant are called in Scripture [the Kingdom of Heaven or of God] If a man be known (or any sort of men) to belong to the Church invisible, then they visibly belong to it; and then they are visible members of the Church: so that this proof is more full for infants Church-membership, than if it had been said, they may be visible Church-members. For it saith much more of them which includeth that."

Answ. Mr. B. thinks it seems with me that by the Kingdom of God is meant the Kingdom of Heaven, that is, of Glory, or the invisible Church; which if true, then of no infants but elect is the Kingdom of God, for no other are of the invisible Church, or enter into the Kingdom of Glory. And if so, not the the very species of infants but particular persons, and of these not all perhaps but a few of the infants of believers, perhaps more of the infants of unbelievers are of the Kingdom of God. But however he thinks it will follow à majori, that if of infants is the Kingdom of God, that is the invisible Church or Kingdom of Glory, then much more they have a standing in the visible Church. To which I say, 1. If this Argument were good, it could onely prove those infants to be of the visible Church who are elect. 2. It can prove it onely of those who in seeming or appearance, or to the judgment of men do belong to the invisible Church, or be known to belong to the invisible Church. But no infants in particular are known to belong to the invisible Church, nor is there any note whereby any infant in particular may be discerned to be of the invisible Church, which may make it seem or appear to the judgment of man, Ergo, there is no infant, no not according to Mr. Bs. own description, hath a standing in the visible Church. The minor of this Argument I expect should be denied, but it will concern them that do deny it, to shew us out of Scripture, where God hath given us any sign, though but probable, to judg such an infant to be of the invisible Church of the elect, such a one not. If any say Gods covenant and the Parents faith. I reply, God hath plainly declared Rom. 9. 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 18. that he hath not made any promise to the natural seed of Abraham, that he will be their God in respect of saving grace, much less to the natural seed of every or any believer of this time, but that notwithstanding any covenant he hath made, he takes the seed of unbelievers to be his children, and leaves the seed of believers to be hardened: and this appeared plainly in Jacob and Esau of the same Parents believers, born together, yet one loved, the other hated, and the Gentiles called, when the Jews were rejected. We say truly the book of life is a secret which belongs to God, who hath hidden it, yea hath so ordered it by the strange variations of his calling, that his judgments should be unsearchable, and his paths past finding out, Rom. 11.33. And therefore no man hath warrant from Gods Word to frame any judgment concerning this or that infant to be of the invisible Church. But because Mr. B. says somewhat to prove his consequence, let us consider what he brings. That which he sayth is, 1. The Church is but one, and the difference respective. 2. He that saith that they belong to the invisible, saith much more, even that which includeth that they are visible, (if I understand his obscure expressions) Church-members. 3. That to be a member of the Church visible, is to be one that in seeming or appearance, or to the judgment of man, doth belong to the invisible Church, or the Kingdom of Heaven.

Answ. 1. It is true, the universal Church of the elect is but one, and the difference respective, yet the difference such, that all the invisible are not of the visible Church, nor all the visible of the invisible; nor by any good consequence can it be made good, they that are of the invisible are much more of the visible, no not when they are known to be of the invisible Church. The first is manifest by instances, the spirits of the just made perfect, elect persons yet unbegotten, yet uncalled, called, but not yet shewing it are of the invisible Church, but not of the visible: on the other side, secret hypocrites are of the visible, but not of the invisible. And the last Assertion is manifest, in that though it is more to be of the invisible Church than of the visible, yet that which denominates a person of the visible Church doth not agree always to a member of the invisible Church. But Mr. B. thinks the contrary to be true, and accordingly frames an explication of what it is to be a member of the Church visible, which I must not call a definition, for that is excepted against by him, Præfat in: Morator, sect. 11. as if in Logick any descriptions or explications of words or things were not usually called definitions, though imperfect. Let's examine it however. He tels us here what it is to be a visible Church-member, which because he doth elsewhere more fully express, I shall have an eye on the writings elsewhere, and so much the rather, because in this mistake of his lieth much of the fallacy of Mr. Bs. second Argument. In his Præfat. Morator, sect. 11. He saith, when he distinguisheth the Church into visible and invisible, He doth not divide the genus into the species, sed æquivocum in sua æquivocata: but I think he is mistaken in this; for then a term is equivocal, as Arist. Categ. in the beginning tels us, When the name is onely common, but not the reason of being, or the definition according to that name; but the definition of the Church of Christ, even that which Mr. B. himself saith, All Divines are agreed on plain Scripture, &c. pag. 82. that it is a Society of persons separated from the world to God, or called out of the world, doth agree to the visible Church, and therefore the term [Church of Christ] is not an equivocal term, but a genus, whether univocal, or analogum. And I add, saith he, that the reason of the appellation given to the visible body is, its seeming to be the same with the mystical; or that the name is given secondarily, borrowedly from the mystical to the visible.

Answ. I grant that the Church invisible is famosius or primarium Analogatum, that is, the invisible Church is more truly, or in a greater degree of propriety Christs Church than the visible, yet do not think the name of the Church is given secondarily, borrowedly, from the mystical to the visible. For the original meaning of the word] [ἐκκλησία, translated Church] being [an assembly, or meeting, or congregation of people in one place] (who are an object visible) I conceive that the term [Church first agrees to the visible Church, and secondarily to the invisible, yea in exact speech the invisible Church now are called [the Church] in order to their meeting, or πανήγυεις, or General assembly at the last day, for Heb. 12. 23. these are joined together, πανηγύρει καὶ ἐκκλησία, the General assembly and Church, or as it is termed 2 Thess. 2. 1. ἡμῶν ἐπισυναγωγῆς ἐπ' αὐτὸν, our gathering together unto Christ, at which time the visible Church and invisible will be all one visible company, μία ποίμνη, εἷς ποιμὴν one sheepfold one Shepheard, John 10. 16. nor do I conceive the reason of the appellation given to the visible body is its seeming to be the same with the mystical, but because by their words and actions discernible by sense they own Christ as their Lord without any consideration of their election or reprobation, sincerity or hypocrisy,

Christs approbation, or non-approbation of them. And that the seeming to other men to be of the invisible Church, is not the reason of the appellation of a visible Church or Church-member, I gather hence, becaus a person may seem to be of the invisible Church, yea may be known to be of the invisible Church of Gods elect, as for instance, Jacob and John Baptist in their mothers womb seemed, yea were known to be of the invisible Church of Gods elect, Luke 1.15. yet no: of the visible. For sure they were not visible Church-members, when they were not visible men. Yea there may be many visible men who may seem, with great probability upon signs of their conversion wrought on them, to be of the invisible Church, and not of the visible as a number of Indians hearing Mr. Eliat, or Mr. Mayhew preach, and shewing affection by tears, smiting of their breasts, lifting up their eys to Heaven and such like actions, have seemed, from these sensible expressions, of their own, to be elect persons, such as God intended to save, and yet I think no man will say that at that time they were visible Church-members till they afterwards made profession of faith in Christ. Mr. B. goeth on thus, So that if you ask me, whether it be certain or onely probable, that infants are members of the visible Church? I say, certain. Answ. If Mr. B. mean it of the sorts or as he cals it species of infants, it may easily appear by this Review that it is so far from being certain [that infants are members of the visible Church Christian] that it hath scarse a shew of probability. If he mean it of the individuals, I say that according to Mr. Bs. own sayings, there is no certainty that any infant is a visible Church-member. For according to him to be a member of the Church visible is to be one that in seeming, or appearance, or to the judgment of man, doth belong to the invisible Church, or the Kingdom of Heaven, But this belonging in seeming appearance, or to the judgment of man is uncertain, its but a judgment of probability which any man, hath of any mans belonging to the invisible Church, Mr. B. himself *plain Scripture &c. p.*73. sayth, Therefore even Cardinal Cusanus calleth the visible Church Ecclesia conjecturalis, as receiving its members on conjectural signs. Therefore there is no certainty of it that any particular infant is a visible Church-member. If it be sayd that the seeming is certain, though it be not certain that they belong to the invisible

Church,

Church, I reply, so it may be sayd that if Turks infants seem to be of the visible Church, though to a fool or frantick man, the seeming is certain. But I suppose Mr. B. means that it is certain and not onely probable to considerate men to whom things are not certain of which they have not certain evidence, that infants are visible Church-members. But this (understanding it of particulars) is not certain upon any good evidence that they are members of the Church invisible, and therefore it is not certain they are visible church-members sith by Mr. Bs. description, to be a visible Church-member is to seem to be of the invisible Church, and therefore as the seeming to be of the invisible Church is, so is the visibility, both uncertain and at most probable, and so all baptizing of infants is upon uncertain grounds and therefore a man cannot do it in faith he being uncertain he doth his duty: which thing is also made good elsewhere from Mr. Bs. concessions Antipedobapt. part. 1. sect. 35. But Mr. B. thinks he hath sure grounds, and therefore he added! If you ask me, what is it that directly or immediatly constituteth them such members. I answer, their visible or audible, that is their external engagement by Covenant to Christ: This (performed by the parent for them) is it on their part; supposing Christs title to them, and the offer of himself in Covenant.

Answ. I grant that the visible or audible that is their external engagement by Covenant to Christ doth make the persons so ingaging freely, seriously, soberly, and understandingly, visible Church-members. But that the parents performing this for the childe doth make the infants such directly and immediately, is an assertion not proved by Mr. B. nor is it true, nor consistent with the descriptions of the visible Church and sayings about it, which Protestants of note give, nor doth it as here and elsewhere set down by Mr. B. yield any sure ground to know certainly any particular infant to be a visible Church-member. That I may make good these in their order. Two things are supposed and one thing named as directly and immediately constituting infants visible Church-members. The things supposed are, 1. Christs title to them. 2. The offer of himself in Covenant to them. But there is nothing but ambiguity in these expressions. For 1. it is uncertain whether he mean that these are supposed when the parent doth perform the engagement for the childe that Christ hath a title to them, and that he doth offer himself in Covenant to them: or whether he mean that the parents engagement doth constitute the childe a visible Church member, if Christ have a title to it and offer himself in Covenant to it. If in the former sense, then it had been enough to have mentioned the parents act without that supposition; if in the later, then what ever the parents act be yet no man is certain of the childes visible Church-membership by it alone without the other two. 2. What title of Christ to them he means whether by election and gift of his Father to him, or by his Spirit, which he that hath not is none of his, Rom. 8. 9. or what other title he means I am uncertain. 3. What Covenant he means whether the absolute Covenant of grace belonging to the elect, or the conditional Covenant to all upon condition of faith, or the national Covenant made to Abraham, and the people of Israel, or what other besides I cannot tell how to determine. 4. How the Covenant is offered except by Preaching to them or by some secret work of the Spirit I cannot imagine. 5. It is somewhat uncertain whether the external engagement that may make the infant a visible Church-member must not be of a parent that is a real and sincere believer, or whether a dogmatical faith serves turn. Sure in his plain Scrip. &c. chap. 29. part. 1. He makes a real faith necessary in the parent to that sanctification without which the childe is not holy, that is a visible Church-member. 6. Whether he make the parents engagement to constitute immediately infants born or unborn also visible Church-members is uncertain. Lets see what we can gather elsewhere I cannot for present find a place where he more fully expresseth himself than in his plain scrip. &c. pag. 336. of the first edition, whereas saith he, some stick at it that I make the condition of the infants Church-membership and justification to be wholly without him in the faith of the parent; I answer them. 1. That it is evident in all the Scripture that God putteth a very great difference between the children of the faithfull and other mens. Which I grant, but withall that this is true onely of the sincerely faithfull and not onely in external profession, and yet not so as to count any a visible Church-member in the Christian Church for the parents faith. 2. Saith he, that he maketh such promises to them, and giveth them such privileges as I have expres-

in this Book. But if he mean by the promises those of the Covenant of grace, I say, they are made onely to elect and true believers, if other promises of temporal blessings they are not made to the children of meer seeming believers but true believers, nor do they at all reach to visible Church-membership or Justification of children. These privileges are no where promised to the children of believing Christians though sincere meerly because of their parents faith. And therefore that which he adds. 3. That this is to them as they are the children of the people who believe, is false, And when he saith. 4. And that he never requireth any condition inherent in the infant, that I finde in Scripture, yet others conceive an inherent condition required in an infant *Heb.*12.14. and elsewhere. But he adds, And doth not this plainly tell us, that the parents faith is the condition? if the parent be a believer, the childe is entered the Covenant, the father entering it for him, and his Deut.29. If the parent be not a believer, the childe is left out: And what other condition can be imagined?

Answ. If the Scripture had required no inherent condition in the infant, yet it had not followed that the parents faith is the condition of the infants Church-membership and justification. For there are other ways, to wit, their election, Christs death for them, which are avouched as sufficient to their justification without the consideration either of any inherent condition in the infant, or the parents faith. Nor is it true, that if the parent be a believer the childe is entered the Covenant, the Father entering it for him and his, and that if the parent be not a believer, the childe is left out. For if it be meant of the Covenant of grace it is most false, that if the parent be a believer the childe is entered the Covenant. Esau was the childe of Isaac a believer, Ishmael of Abraham, yet neither entered into the Covenant of grace, neither justified by the parents faith? if it were so then they were entered into the Covenant of grace and justified, and after outed, which infers falling from grace. Nor is there any such Covenant of visible Church-membership which if the parent be a believer the childe is entered in. Nor is there a word *Deut.*29. to prove it. There is nothing there set down but a narration of Moses his renewing the Covenant with the children of Israel in the Land of Moab, beside the Covenant which he made with them in Horeb. It is true it is said *v.*10,11,12,13. They ſtood all before the Lord, the Commanders and the men, then the litle ones, wives, ſtrangers, hewers of wood drawers of water, that they might enter into Covenant, but that, 1. The parents peculiarly as parents did enter into Covenant for their children appears not: but rather that the entering of the Covenant was by the Rulers in behalf of the ſubject, as the league with the Gibeonites was by the Princes in behalf of Iſrael, whereto they were bound *Joſh.*9.15,19. nor is there any conſideration of a Father entering into Covenant for his childe more than of a Husbands entering into covenant for his wife, or a Maſters entering into Covenant for his ſervant, and therefore if this fact were good to prove, if the parent be a believer the childe is entered the Covenant, the Father entering for him and his: it is good to prove that if the Husband, or Maſter be a believer, the wife, and ſervant are entered into Covenant, the Husband and Maſter entering it for them and theirs, and ſo wives, and ſervants ſhall be viſible Church-members, as well as infants of believers, by the faith of Husbands and Maſters. 2. If the parents faith procure this privilege for the child then either becauſe it is his childe, and then it procures it for the childe while it is his childe though the childe be at years and an infidel, for then it is his childe, or elſe upon condition the childe agree to it, but then the privilege belongs not to infants, and there is an inherent condition required, to wit, the childes conſent beſides the parents faith: if it be ſaid that it procures it to the childe while an infant, but not when it comes to years how can this be true that the parents faith or covenanting ſhould immediately and directly conſtitute them viſible Church-members when infants becauſe they are their children, and the covenant is made with them and their children (as they ſay) and yet they not viſible Church-members while they are children? ſurely, the immediate cauſe continuing, the effect continues, and therefore if the parents faith with the covenant make the childe in infancy a viſible Church-member it muſt alſo make it a viſible Church-member at years though an infidel. 3. Whereas it is ſuppoſed by Mr. B. that the parents as believers entered the covenant *Deut.*29. it rather appears by Moſes his preface *v.*2,3,4. that Moſes did therefore draw them into this ſolemn Covenant, becauſe they were to that day unbelievers,

4. It

4. It is false, that this entering into covenant did make them Church-members. For. 1. The end of it was to prevent them from backsliding *v.*18. to Idolatry, and to prevent Gods forsaking them thereupon, *v.*13. 2. They were Church-members before both by Gods special separating of the whole nation to be his people, and the solemn Covenant at mount Horeb, and so were members of that Church as part of that nation. 3. If this entering into covenant made them there Church-members visible then it made their posterity also then visible Church-members, for with them also was that covenant made, *v.*14.15. and so persons should be made visible Church-members after they are born. 5. If it were true, that that covenanting made them visible, Church-members of that Church, yet it advantageth no whit to prove infants now visible members of the Christian Church, which is not national as that was, nor gathered by the chief Magistrate as that was, nor injoyned such a national Covenant as that, but consisting of particular believers of all nations, gathered by the Preaching of the Gospel and voluntary personal covenanting for themselves onely testified by their being baptized into Christ. If any ask whether a national covenant or a covenant of parents for children be now allowable? I answer, I deny not but such a national or parental covenant may be allowed, and in some cases convenient, yet I say that it makes not all the subjects and children Church-members, nor bindes them without their consent any farther than the matter of the covenant it self bindes. As for that which Mr. B. saith, if the parent be not a believer the childe is left out, it is false, if we understand it in respect of Church-membership of children at years they may be in the Church visible though their parents were unbelievers and left out of the Church though believers; if of justification, it is false both of infants and children of years. And it is utterly untrue that in the Christian Church children are made visible Church-members by parents faith, or left out because of their unbelief. For, 1. There is no word of Scripture that saith so. The three Texs Acts 2.39. Rom. 11.16 17. &c. 1 *Cor.*7.14 are fully discussed already in the first part of this review, and what Mr. Blake hath replied shall be examined (God willing) in that which follows. 2. No one passage of the New Testament doth shew that any infant was reckoned for a visible Church-member of the Christian Church in the New Testament, but many shew they were not. 3. If the infant children of the faithfull had been accounted in the Apostles times visible members of the Christian Church there had been some thing done by the Apostles and other holy men to have preserved their right, but no practise of baptism on them, nor any other act can be produced that the Apostles or other holy men did to preserve such a right, Ergo. 4. The Covenant of the Gospel is with particular persons made believers out of all nations, their gathering by Preaching the Gospel to them, which evidently shew that God intended to take in persons into the Christian Church upon their own faith, and not in a national way as he did the Church of the Jews. 5. The Texts (besides the three forenamed) brought by the Assembly Confess. of faith, ch. 25. art. 2. to wit, Ezek. 16.20,21. Gen. 3.15. Gen. 17.7. and the Texts brought by Mr. B. (not here examined) to wit, Matth. 23.37,38, 39. Revel. 11.15. Heb. 8.6. & 7.22. Rom. 4.11. Exod 20.6. Josh. 7.25,26. Deut 13.12,13,14. Psal. 37.26. Num. 31.17. Dan. 6.24. Deut. 20.16,17. Deut. 28.4,18,32,41. Mal. 2.15. are so palpably impertinent to prove the visible Church-membership of infants now, that I am in a demur with my self, whether it be fit for me to bestow any more pains in shewing the impertinency of them. 6. The speeches of Protestants of note do make the persons own profession that sign whereby they are judged, and from whence they are termed of the visible Church. Synops. Profess. Leydens. Disp. 40. sect. 32. Ecclesia visibilis appellatur, non tam quia homines ipsi visibiles sunt, sed quia ipsorum ordo, professio & communio sensibus exponuntur. Dr. Prideaux Lect. 9. sect. 3. visibilis dicitur Ecclesia ratione communionis sensibilis membrorum inter se. Mr. Marshall himself in the Sermon at the Spittle, April 1652. stiled by Mr. B. that late excellent, honest solid Sermon for unity, pag. 25. hath these words. Secondly, that part of the Church which is upon the earth in regard that the very life and being of it and of all the members of it ly in internal grace, which cannot be seen, in that respect the Church of Christ is called an invisible Church: but now as the same Church and members doth make a profession of their faith and obedience sensibly to the eys and ears of others in that respect it is called a visible Church; but the visible is not one Church and the invisible another Church, but meerly the same Church under several denominations, the one from their constituting graces, the other from the external profession of them.

There was lately a printed sheet brought to my hands intituled, The profession of the Church, &c. which is owned by Mr. Richard Baxter in his Christian concord, in the Preface of which are these words. And because Ministers cannot well know who are members of the Churches, and who not, and so must be ignorant of the extent of their charges and duties without an expression of their peoples consent. Hence I argue, 1. If Ministers cannot know who are members of the Churches and who not without an expression of their peoples consent, then they cannot know infants to be members of the Churches, who expresse no consent. 2. Then the parents faith upon which they were baptized without their own consent expressed doth not make them visible Church-members, for if it did they might know them by their memory and registers that they were Church-members. 3. Then they are not rightly baptized by him without their consent. 4. Then it is not true which Mr. B. writeth plain Scripture &c. pag. 280. And do you not see it fulfilled before your eys? Are not Bewdley, Kederminster (meaning all the people elder and yonger) &c. and England (till of late) as fully Christs Disciples and so Church-members, as the Jews were in Covenant with God and so Church-members? which if true Mr. B. may know who at Kederminster are Church-members without their expressed consent, even all the inhabitants, and that his charge is extended to all. 5. Then the gift of visible Church-membership is repealed sith in the Common wealth of Israel all the posterity of Israel were Church-members. 6. By his new course of distinguishing the professing and subscribing parioshiners of Kederminster as Church-members from the rest as not his Church-members, he gathers a Church out of a Church and separates some Disciples from others, and doth himself make a like division in his Church (though not in so justifiable a way as he chargeth so fiercely on me and others. Which I conceive to be little less than a retractation of his own tenet about infants visibe Church-membership, and clearing of his opposites. Lastly, by Mr. Bs. determinations there is no certain way to know a particular infant to be a visible Church-member. For in his determinations there is no resolution, nor according to his grounds do I think can be given a certain resolution whether the parent be such a one to whom the Covenant is, whether he have that faith which may intitle his childe to visible Church-membership, whether the immediate parents engagement be necessary or a remote parents engagement be sufficient, whether the engagement must be open in the face of the Congregation, or it be sufficient that it be done privately, when it must be, at Baptism, or at some other time, whether it need not be as oft as he hath children to be admitted visible Church-members, whether the baptizer may account him a visible Church-member, whose parents are dead, absent, unable to come, or to express their engagement and so baptize him, which with many other doubts would retard the course of Ministers and people in their profane infant sprinkling, if they did not with a blinde obedience rest on Mr. Bs. unproved dictates, but searched after the truth considerately and impartially. But I pass on.

6. Saith Mr. B. hence I further argue thus: If Christ were much displeased with his Disciples for keeping infants from him, then he took it as a part of their revealed duty that they should not forbid them: But the former is true, therefore the later. Whence I further argue: if it were the Disciples known or revealed duty not to forbid them to come to Christ, then they must needs take it also for a revealed truth that infants in specie (and not those numerical onely) should not be forbidden to come, (for they could not know that those individuals should be admitted but by knowing that infants should be admitted) But &c.

Answ. The conclusion of the former argument may be granted, and yet the sequele of the later argument denied. For they might know it either by some particular sign from Christ or some particular instinct of the Spirit, that it was their duty to permit those infants to come to Christ, and yet not permit any more.

But saith Mr. B. Yea further. 7. If it were the Disciples revealed duty to admit infants to come to Christ for this very reason, because of such is the Kingdom of Heaven, then it was no secret but a revealed truth, that of such was the Kingdom of Heaven: But the former is true. For Christ would not be angry

so much with them for not knowing that which was never revealed, or for not admitting them when they had no means to know them to have right of admittance. The consequence is evident therefore, and so it follows: that if it were then a revealed truth, that of such is the Kingdom of Heaven; then they were visible members of the Church. For that sort of men that are known to belong to Heaven (though it be not known of the individuals) do visibly belong to the Church; (as I think none dare deny.)

Answ. 1. According to their exposition who understand [of such] onely those that are like little children in affection, and disposition, and not of those particular little children then brought, much more according to their exposition who by [of such] understand these individual infants and no other, they might know those infants were to be admitted, and yet have no knowledg of an universal rule for admitting other infants at other times. 2. But be it granted that not onely of those individuals, but also of other infants is the Kingdom of Heaven, yet I deny they were visible Church-members. And for his proof, I dare deny that which he fondly thinks none dare deny, that they that are known to belong to Heaven do visibly belong to the Church. Abraham and Isaak and Jacob are known to belong to Heaven, yet I do not conceive do visibly belong to the Church. And the same is true of all the spirits of the Just made perfect, of elect infants unborn, Jews uncalled &c. I know none belong to the visible Church but such as sensibly have professed faith in Christ. Amel. Ecclesia aliquando denominatur ab iis quæ sunt externa, quæq; in sensum incurrunt. Piscat. aphor. loc.19. 10. visibilis appellatur quatenus certas habet notas in oculos hominum incurrentes. Mr. B. himself Præfatin. Morator, sect.11. By [visible] I mean that which is discernible by the understanding, mediante sensu. Therefore that sort of men that are known to belong to Heaven do not visibly belong to the Church, unless they are known so by some sensible expression, yea of their own, which is not true of infants, much less of the sort of them, or any sort of being, no sort of beings being visible, but onely singulars.

Mr. B. goes on thus, 8. But the chief evidence in the Text lieth here; if because that of such is the Kingdom; therefore it was the Disciples sin to keep them back; then it must needs be the very species of infants that Christ means, are of the Kingdom, (and not onely the aged humble) but therefore it was the Disciples sin to keep them back, (and their duty to admit them, or else Christ would not have been much displeased with them) because that of such is the Kingdom; therefore it must needs be infants themselves that are of the Kingdom. The reason of the consequence lieth here; It would be no sin in the Disciples to keep away from Christ those that were but meer Emblems of the saved. For else it would have been the Disciples sin to have forbidden all the Sheep or Doves in the country to have been brought to Christ to lay hands on. This is plain and convincing to me.

Answ. The conclusion is granted, that it was the infants, if they were infants that were brought to Christ themselves, and not onely the aged humble resembled by them, that are of the Kingdom. Mr. B. needed not to have cast away so much pains in proving it against me, who do in my Postscrip. sect. 20. say, I stick not to that Exposition of not including those infants. But I think Mr. B. would prove, that not onely Christ said of those infants, but of the very species of infants is the Kingdom of God. Which speech of his hath in it sundry absurdities. 1. He seems to make infants a distinct species from the aged; whereas in Logick [homo, mankinde] is species ima, the lowest kinde in the Predicament of substance; and it is a Rule in that Art, that Sex and Age non variant speciem, do not vary the kinde. 2. When he saith, the very species are of the Kingdom, sith he grants, that by the Kingdom is meant the invisible Church, his words seem to aver, that all infants are of the invisible Church. For the very species comprehends all the individuals, and then he must hold all infants are elect, (for onely the elect are of the invisible Church) and if after they be reprobate then election is revocable, and the elect may not be saved. But if he mean it onely of some of that sort, and particularly all the infants of believers, neither is that true, sith the contrary is manifest in Esau. But if he mean no more than this, that of some elect infants, yea and of others than those particular infants is the Kingdom dom of God, I should not stick to grant it, nor need Mr. B. thus trouble himself to prove it, though I think his consequence is not good. For it might be their sin to keep back those infants from Christ, if Christ did by any sign discover his minde to have them brought, though it were not to declare their title, or any other infants title to the Kingdom of Heaven, bu: onely to use them as Emblems. Nor is Mr. Bs. reason forcible, that then it might have been their sin to have forbidden Sheep and Doves to be brought to Christ. For it may be granted, that this might have been their sin, if Christ had in like manner declared his minde by any sign concerning such Sheep, that they should be brought to him. Mr. Bs. arguing runs upon this supposition, that the Apostles might know it was their duty at all times to permit infants to come to Christ from a general truth, that of all infants (at least of believers) is the Kingdom of God, (which he neither proves, nor can prove) whereas the Apostles fault might be in not heeding some particular thing he had then by some words or other sign made known of those infants then brought, or not considering Christs Office, and constant practice of doing good to all, specially to infirm and diseased persons, such as those infants might be, and as some conceive were, and accordingly brought to be cured by Christ. But Mr. B. is not yet come to that he would have.

9. Saith he, Those that Christ took in his arms, laid his hands on, and blessed, were visible members of his Church, and not meer resemblances of such: but some infants Christ took in his arms, laid his hands on, and blessed: therefore some infants were members of the visible Church, (and consequently Christ hath not repealed the Church-membership of infants) and they were not meer resemblances of such. For would Christ have blessed so a Sheep or Dove? or are they blessed of Christ, and yet not so much as visible members of his Church? Sure there are none visibly blest without the visible Church. And it was not these onely; for I have proved, it was the Disciples duty to admit others to the like blessing.

Answ. I do not say, that the infants Christ took in his arms were meer resemblances of visible Church-members, and therefore Mr. B. in seeking to prove it still follows a false sent, proving what is not denied. But the other part of the conclusion is denied by me [to wit, that some infants were members of the visible Church] and that part of the major, [those that Christ took in his arms, laid his hands on, and blessed, were visible members of his Church] and for his proof, that [none are visibly blest without the visible Church] I deny it, nor doth he bring any thing to prove it but his own words, sure it is so. But I count it false. For Jacob visibly blessed Pharaoh, *Gen.*47.10. and yet Pharaoh was not of the visible Church. When Christ did raise Jairus daughter, heal the daughter of the Syrophœnician, I conceive they had a visible blessing, and yet were not of the visible Church. And if it were the Disciples duty to admit others to the like blessing, yet there is neither in the Text nor elsewhere a word to prove, it was their duty to admit them to the like blessing by any other than Christ himself, and his own laying hands on them. Or if it were imagined, that Christ intended this should be a Rule to the Disciples for their conferring a like blessing on infants, yet that it must be a Rule to successors, and if to successors, to all Ministers to do it, or that they must do it by baptism, and not rather as the Bishops did it in Confirmation, by laying on of hands, hath not the least shadow of proof; but rather the contrary is more likely. And accordingly Jansenius, & Concilium Senonense, as *Chamier tom.*4. *Panstr. Cath. lib.*4. *cap.*9. *sect.*3. the composers of the Interim, as *Osiander Epit. Hist. Eccl. Cent.*16. *lib.*2. *cap.*68. *pag.*451. relate, gathered the institution of Confirmation from thence.

But Mr. B. adds, *And it is yet more considerable, that all the three former Evangelists make full mention of these passages of Christ; and therefore it is evident that they were not taken for small circumstantials, but Doctrines of moment for the Churches information. They are recorded also in Matth.*18.2, 3,4, &c. *Matth.*19.13,14. Luke 9.47. Luke 18.16,17. I desire any tender conscienced Christian, that is in doubt whether infants should be admitted members of the visible Church, and would fain know what is the pleasure of Christ in this thing, to reade over the Texts impartially, and considerately, and then bethink himself, whether it be more likely that it will please Christ better to bring or solemnly admit infants into the Church, or to shut them out; and whether these words of Christ so plain and earnest will not be a better plea at Judgment for our admitting infants, infants, than any that ever the Anabaptists brought will be to them for refusing them.

Answ. Mr. B. wanting proof fals here to his Rhetorick, which elsewhere he falsly chargeth on me as my fault, but is indeed the chief part of his Book, and prevails much with the most of Readers. But it is the property of childish persons to be affrighted with such mormo's. I grant that the passages of Christ were by the Evangelists taken not for small circumstantials, but Doctrines of moment for the Churches information: yet not teaching infants visible Church-membership and baptism. What ever Christian I be, I have read over the Texts impartially, and considerately as I think this and other writings shew, and I do declare in the presence of God that these passages do confirm me in this truth, that it is not the will of Christ that infants should be baptized, because he neither baptized, nor appointed these to be baptized, and that the words of Christ here are so impertinent that they are more likely to be a plea against infant baptizers who on such weak conjectures go against the plain institution of Christ *Matth.*28.19. Mark 16.15.16. and the constant use of the Apostles and first ages. And I do further declare that on my most serious studies I do resolve notwithstanding the evasions they bring, that the plea they make hence for infant baptism, and that which is alleaged of their being Disciples, visible Church-members, in the Covenant, doth as well tie them to admit them to the Lords supper as to baptism, and that in refusing to admit them to baptism we have as good a plea and better at Judgment then they have in refusing to admit them to the Lords Supper. Nor is it to me any other than a sad sign either of injudiciousness or slothfulnes in searching after the truth, or prejudice, or adhering to mens sayings out of reverence of their persons, or faction or some such like evil quality both in Ministers and people even those of tender consciences that they still retain so gross an abuse as infant baptism is upon such weak reasons as they do, and neglect yea and oppose the baptism of believers so manifestly Commanded by Christ and practised by his Apostles. But I must follow Mr. B.

But what saith Mr. T. against this? why. 1. *He saith, it was some extraordinary blessing to them that Christ intended Apol.p.*149. Answ. 1. it was a discovery of their title to the Kingdom of Heaven. It was such an extraordinary blessing that included the ordinary. If extraordinary blessing then much more ordinary. 2 It was such as the Disciples should have known that these should be admitted to, or else Christ would not have been displeased.

Answ. It is true I give this reason why I conceive that [of such] included those infants as conceiving from the circumstances of the thing that Christ intended some extraordinary blessing to them, and declaration concerning them. And in my Examen pag. 147. I say, Christs action in this business is proper to him as the great Prophet of the Church and extraordinary, and therfore yeilds no ground for an ordinary rule of baptizing infants by the ordinary Ministery, no more than Christs whipping buyers out of the Temple, though related by the four Evangelists, for an ordinary practise answerable thereto. Now this is not denied by Mr. B. But he says, it was such an extraordinary blessing as included the ordinary: if extraordinary blessing, then much more ordinary. But 1. these things are said without proof. 2. Their falshood is shewed, and the rest is answered before.

He adds, "But Mr. T. saith, Apol. pag. 151. That [the reason of Christs anger was their hindring him in his design, not the knowledg they had of their present visible Title; this is but a dream.] To which I answer, 1. Mr. T. is as bold to speak of Christs thoughts without Book, and to search the Searcher of hearts, as if he were resolved to make Christs meaning be what he would have it. 2. What Design was it that Christ had in hand? Was it any other than the discovery of his mercy to the species of infants, and to those among others? and a presenting them as a Patern to his followers, and to teach his Church humility and renovation, and to leave them an assurance against Anabaptists, that it is his pleasure, that infants should not be kept from him."

Answ. 1. There was no such boldness in my speech as Mr. B. rashly, and like a calumniator chargeth me with, but such as must be granted true, if we conceive Christ to have acted as a rational being that propounds an end or design in his actings. 2. The last of the designs Mr. B. mentions, assuring that it is his pleasure that infants should not be kept from him; meaning by not baptizing zing them, is his figment. His design I knew without searching Christs heart immediately by reading his facts, which shew his ends to be 1. the blessing those infants. 2. Teaching Doctrine concerning such. 3. Shewing himself thereby the great Prophet of his Church, and bestower of blessings.

3. Saith Mr. B. "How did the Disciples hinder Christs design? Not by hindring him immediately, but by rebuking those that brought the infants. 4. If this were no fault in them, why should Christ be displeased, and much displeased at it? And how could it be their fault to hinder people from bringing infants to Christ, if they might not know that they ought to be admitted? And could they know of Christs private intents and designs? Were there but this one consideration hence to be urged, I durst challenge Mr. T. to answer (as far as modesty would permit a challenge) that is, if Christ had intended onely that humility or docibleness should be commended from these infants as an Emblem to his Disciples, then it could be none of their fault to forbid bringing of them to Christ; for how could they know what use Christ would make of them? or by what Emblem he would teach them? or when he would do it? All the creatures in the world may be Emblems of some good; and must they therefore permit the bringing of all to Christ? Christ had not told them his design before hand to teach them by these Emblems; and when they knew his minde they desisted."

Answ. They might know Prophets did bless persons even little ones, they knew that Matth. 18. 2. Christ had before familiarly used a little childe, and so was not averse from them, they knew or might know that Christ was the great Prophet that was to come into the world, that he made it his work to do good, that he did permit all sorts of persons that came for healing or other blessings to come to him, and therefore it was their fault to hinder Christ in this design, and to hinder any that came to him for his blessing. I neither say that his design was onely to teach humility by these as an Emblem, nor that they knew or might know what use Christ would make of these infants. Mr. Bs. challenge is upon a mistake, as if I affirmed, that Christ would have those infants brought onely to teach humility by them, when the very words he cites are to the contrary. I am weary with answering such meer cavils of a man, who if he were not set on wrangling, might by heeding my words answer himself.

5. Saith he, "If it had been onely for the present design, then Christ would have spoke but of those individual infants, and have said, Suffer those now to come: But it appears from the Text, 1. that it was not those individuals more than others that the Disciples were offended at, or disliked should be brought; but the species, or those infants because infants. 2. And that Christ doth not onely speak against their hindring those individuals, but the species, and lays them down a rule and command for the future as well as for the present that they should suffer little children to come to him, and not forbid them."

Answ. It is in all the Evangelists ἄφετε τὰ παιδία, which notes the children then brought, and no other, though I deny not but this fact and the reason thereof were a rule for the future as well as for the present, yet not either for the Apostles or any Successors to lay hands on them, or baptize them; but for them, if any more infants were thus brought to Christs person, that his own hands might be layd on them, that they should permit it.

6. Saith Mr. B. And he doth not command this upon the reason of any private design, but because of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.

Answ. Mr. B. still mistakes me, as if I had said [private design] that is a design proper to those infants onely; whereas my words were [present design] which I shew before what it was, and thereby it may be easily conceived I meant such a design as tended to shew his Office, readiness to do good, and interest that infants and such as were like them might have to the Kingdom of Heaven.

7. Saith he, "And where Mr. T. saith, It was not from any knowledg they had of their present visible title; I answer, Who said it was? Did Mr. Blake? No; but it was a thing the Disciples ought to have known, that infants are welcom to Christ, and that of such is the Kingdom, and therefore because of such is his Kingdom, they should not be kept from him? God will not be much displeased with men for being ignorant of that which they ought not to know."

Answ. Mr. Blake in his Answer to my letter had said pag. 90.

they (the infants brought to Christ) had a present visible title such as the Apostles ought to have known, and this he gives as the reason why Christ was so much displeased with the Disciples forbidding them to be brought. To which my words are rightly opposed. Nor is any thing put on Mr. Blake But his own words. If Mr. B. will not say that Christs anger was from any knowleg the Apostles had of the infants present visible title, then he must acknowleg the Apostles had no knowleg of the visible Church-membership of infants then, or visible title to one Church privilege which shews that in Christs Church no infants were then counted visible Church members, else these could not but know it. Nor is there any thing in the Text that shews that Christ was angry with them for not knowing this, nor did this teaching inform them in this, nor did Christ admit them as Mr. Blake saith, to a Church privilege, nor if it were true that the blessing were a Church privilege common to all Church-members, yet infants were as capable of baptism as of it, sith the institution of baptism is otherwise. To me it is a strong presumption that the Apostles understood not Christs words and deeds as importing Church privilege conferred on those infants which did infer a title to baptism, as Mr. Blake imagins, in that the Apostles did not baptize them, which is confessed by some pædobaptists, and appears both in that no such thing is enjoyned them by Christ, or related as done by them, and what was done to them is related as done by Christ himself who did not baptize John 4.2. and it is said Matth. 19.15. when he had put his hands on them he departed thence, and with him his Disciples, as appears by the speeches of them upon occasion of the yong mans conference with Christ, which presently followed. Now if the Apostles knew not such baptizability of infants there is no likelihood that Christs words or blessing proved such baptizability. If they did know it, and yet did them not right, no doubt Christ would have been more angry for their not baptizing them, then for rebuking those that brought them. And whereas Mr. B. blesseth Christ for his discovery concerning infants as he construes it, I bless God that hath shewed me the frivolousnes of Mr. Bs. arguings, and I say of such as are led away with such trifling reasons, as the Apostles sayd 1 Cor 14.38. If any man be ignorant let him be ignorant. As for his observation in the close

5. Saith he, "If it had been onely for the present design, then Christ would have spoke but of those individual infants, and have said, Suffer those now to come: But it appears from the Text, 1. that it was not those individuals more than others that the Disciples were offended at, or disliked should be brought; but the species, or those infants because infants. 2. Answ. Mr. Blake in his Answer to my letter had said pag. 90.

They (the infants brought to Christ) had a present visible title such as the Apostles ought to have known, and this he gives as the reason why Christ was so much displeased with the Disciples forbidding them to be brought. To which my words are rightly opposed. Nor is any thing put on Mr. Blake But his own words. of

of the chapter its like the reſt. For Chriſts calling his Diſciples little children and the Apoſtles ſo calling Chriſtians ſhews love and tenderneſs, but not that infants are viſible Church-members, no more then Chriſts calling the ſame his Lambs and ſheep, John 21.15,16,&c. ſhews that ſheep and Lambs are viſible Church-members. Thus much for anſwer of that chapter of M. B.

SECT. XVIII.

The 41. Chapter of Mr. Blakes Vindic. Fœd. *about Chriſts ſpeech of little children, Matth.*19.14. is anſwered, and my ſayings in my Poſtſcript vindicated.

MR. Blake ſince the publiſhing of my Poſtſcript to my Apology in reply to his Anſwer to my letter in his Book intituled *Vindic. fœd. c.*41,43. *ſect.*1. hath publiſhed ſomewhatthat is to be further examined. He ſaith, They looked upon Chriſt (as it ſeems) as a great Prophet highly in favour with God, and ſuch were wont to bleſs in the name of God, and their bleſſing was highly prized, and hands were uſed to be impoſed on perſons in bleſſing, Gen. 48.14. which I allow. He ſets down ſix poſitions, the firſt of which having confirmed, he ſpeaks thus of me. Mr. *T. brought his reaſons againſt this, to have nipt all in the bud, but thoſe he hath quit, and is brought to confeſs that he contradicted himſelf in them, and hath not a word to excuſe his falſe quotation out of Mark, concerning ſcandalizing, onely excuſing himſelf that he delivered himſelf doubtfully in them. Apol.*149.

Anſw. It is true I brought in my *Examen p.*146. Piſcators reaſons in his *Obſerv.*11. on *Matth.*19.14. to prove the little children *Matth.*19 13.14. not to have been infants, but boyes who were capable of inſtruction, which it is true I ſay in my *Apol p.*149. I did not ſtick to, nor need I ſith at firſt I ſaid *Examen pag.*145. onely, It is doubtfull whether theſe were infants or no. Nor is it truely ſaid by Mr. Bl. that I excuſed my ſelf, as if I had been in a fault. For it is true which I alleged, not onely Piſcator conceiving they were not infants, but Eſtius alſo Annot. ad Marc. 10.13. ſaying it is not certain that they were infants which could

neither speak nor go. Which very doubtfulness doth weaken the argument thence for infant baptism, yet I had no reason to stick to that, there being other answers sufficient besides. Nor is it true which he saith, that I am brought to confess I contradicted my self in the reasons brought, and that they were my reasons, for I expressly said they were Piscators reasons, and therefore though Piscator should contradict my exposition of *Matth.*18.5. in those reasons I need not own it, much less do I confess that I contradict my self in them, as Mr. Blake falsely chargeth me as one that cares not what he prints so he may sully me with a black coal. Nor was any false quotation out of Mark used by me, I onely brought Piscators words & de quali non scandalizando ibidem monet, which if he misapplied to infants, and thereby crossed my interpretation of *Matth.*18.5,6. he opposed himself, though I think neither Piscator nor my self, were guilty of any self-contradiction, but Mr. Bl. of mistake and calumny. Mr. Bl. saith he knows not that any in print hath maintained it that little children brought to Christ were diseased so as to have need of cure. But there is now a Book in folio written by Mr. Samuel Fisher intituled Baby baptism meer babism, in which *p.*134: are these words, *that he should touch them, and put his hands on them and pray, no question 'twas in order to healing, for 'twas at a time when he healed many others, if you compare this passage as 'tis in Matth.*19. *with the first and second verses of the chapter: yea v.*15. 'tis plainly expressed what he did, i. e. he laid his hands upon them and departed thence; besides Luke says, they brought little children to him also that he should touch them: which [also] shews that others were brought too, as sick folks commonly were, because virtue went out of him, so that as many as touched him were made perfectly whole. Nor do I think Mr. Blakes reasons sufficient to countervail the other: For though the Disciples well knew that it was usual with Christ to cure those that laboured under infirmities of all ages, yet they sometimes shewed their unwillingness to have persons trouble Christ about diseased persons as *Matth.*15.23. Luke 10.39. and whereas Mr. Bl. saith, the Evangelist would never have concealed this reason and mentioned another. if he mean it of the reason why the Disciples rebuked the bringers of the little children, the truth is the Evangelists mention no reason at all of the Disciples rebuke, if he mean it of the reason why Christ would have them brought, such reason stands well with this, that the children were diseased, brought to Christ to be cured, and cured by Christ.

I had said, there is no certainty onely conjecture that they were the children of believers, Mr. Bl. sets down his third position thus, These were infants of such parents that were in Covenant with God, which he proves Matth. 19.2. & 15.24,26. Rom. 15. 8. This farther appears by that which they requested for these infants: This Mr. T. seems to yeild; they came (saith he) to Christ upon the conceit that he was a Prophet, and so they might bring children to him to be blessed; And farther says, if this reason prove any thing, it is that the childrens parents were Jews, Apol. pag. 150. which is all that we contend for; the Jews as yet were in Covenant.

Answ. 1. The reasons of Mr. Bl. some of them prove rather the bringers to be Jews than the parents. 2. The proving the parents to be Jews (if any do prove it) is not a proof that they were believers, for there were a great part, if not the greatest part by much of the Jews unbelievers, John 12.37,38. And what he sayes, The Jews as yet were in Covenant, if he mean it of all the Jews, and of the covenant of grace in Christ it is palpably false, contradictory to the Apostles determination Rom. 9.7,8. where it is expressly resolved that all the natural children of Abraham and Israel were not at any time children of the promise: If he mean it of any other covenant, or promise of God, or of some of the Jews, it would nothing avail him for his purpose, though his Proposition were granted him.

His fourth Proposition is thus expresst, "These infants themselves were in covenant, and stood in relation to Christ, bearing his name, and being of his people; and were not as Heathens in their present state without Christ, aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise. This is evident by their free admission by Christ, and the reason by him given. When this was prest upon Mr. T. in solemn disputation, he took time to consider, and after more than two years in his Examen, we have an answer which shame will not suffer him to own. But in his Apology doth disclaim, yet not convinced by Mr. M. my self, or any other it is enough with me, if the truth is confest, if the truth may have the honor, I am satisfied. "

Answ. Were I nor sufficiently acquainted with Mr. Bls. charges without cause, I should be jealous of my self that there is some thing done by me which might occasion this imputation. What was prest on me in the disputation in London, Anno 1643. and what time or for what reason I took time to answer after 10. years elapsed, I cannot trust in my memory to inform me. What answer I gave in my Examen which in my Apology I disclaim, and shame will not now suffer me to own, concerning this proposition of Mr. Bl. and its proof, it is such a riddle to me that I cannot yet tell how to understand it, except I have Mr. Bls. heifer to plough with. Sure I am, this kinde of crimination which Mr. Bl. useth, is very unsuitable to a clear and solid disputant thus by dark flirts, and quips to abuse me; But I think it best to slight his charge, presuming intelligent men will be little moved with it. As for his position, the terms being ambiguous, and especially the term [in covenant] being used (as I often complain) in such variety of senses or rather sometimes non-sense by Pædobaptists, that it seems to be used by them to elude rather than to inform, it may be either granted or denied as the terms are explained, and if this did occasion me to take time to answer it I did therein prudently, and if after two or ten years my answers be various they are so upon due considerations; For present I grant, those infants (if they were infants) mentioned Matth. 19.14. were in the covenant of saving grace, stood in relation to Christ as chosen in him, and in that respect bare his name as his bretheren, were of his invisible people, not as heathens in their present state without Christ being given to him, nor aliens from the Common-wealth of the Israel of God the invisible Church of the elect, nor strangers from the covenant of promise, that is, the covenant of promise commensurate with election of grace, and this I grant to be evident of those particular persons if not by their free admission to Christ, yet by the reason by him given, it being supposed that [τοιούτων, of such] is meant of them as well as of those that were like them in humility. But if the position be understood of being in covenant either by their own act of covenanting, or that which is called by Pædobaptists in their non-sense or proper gibberish the outward covenant, or that it be meant that they stood in relation to Christ as visible members of the Christian church in their present state while they were infants, I deny it to be true, or that it is evident by their free admission by Christ, and the reason by him given.

Mr. Bls. fifth position is, They were admitted upon a common right, equally belonging to all infants of covenanting parents, and not by virtue of any extraordinary privilege, peculiar to them, and not common to other. This is plain, saith he, 1. By the general admission which he gives to infants on this occasion; Suffer little children come to me, and (as Mr. T. more than once observes) Extraordinarium non facit regulam communem, here is a general Rule, all have admission, and therefore there is nothing extraordinary. 2. It was such a right that the Disciples of Christ ought to have understood, as plainly appears by Christs sore displeasure conceived against them, for forbidding their admission to him, and that must be a known right, and not secret.

Answ. 1. There is not a word in the Text to prove that they were admitted upon any right to their admission as due to them, and which might be claimed for them, but they were admitted out of grace. 2. There is nothing in the Text to prove they were the children of covenanting parents, or that they were admitted out of any respect at all to their parents state, whatever it were. As for Mr. Bls. reasons. To the 1. I say, The words are a Command onely for those little children, ἄφετε τὰ παιδία, Suffer the little children, to wit them brought to come to me; nor doth it appear by any after instance of Christ or his Apostles that this was understood as a general rule, that all should have admission. 2. Were it granted that this rule of Christ did reach to others besides those then brought, yet there is nothing in the Text to prove this rule of admission to be onely of infants of covenanting parents or to these or any other by reason of right from their covenanting parents. Yea rather if any right be intimated it is the personal right of the infants, for of such is the Kingdom of God. 2. It is true, the Disciples of Christ ought to have understood they were to be admitted, But that this was the reason why they ought to know they were to be admitted because of their known right is imagined but not proved. And how or for what reasons they might know they were to be admitted is shewed above in answer to Mr. B.

Mr.

Mr. Bl. adds, Mr. T. indeed says, They were not admitted out of any known right common to others, but a perculiar privilege as being elected, for which he quotes Piscator; when as he hath heard (and replies nothing) that Piscator syllogistically concludes the contrary.

Answ. I said not, they were admitted out of a peculiar privilege as being elected, nor for this did I quote Piscator, and therefore in my animadversions in my postscript I made no reply to Mr. Bl. in this thing. My words in my Examen pag. 146, 147. were these. 4. Let it be granted they were the infants of believers and that it is said, of these is the Kingdom of God, it may be as Piscator observes referred not to their present estate, as if for the present they were in the Kingdom of God that is believers and justified; but that they were elect persons, and so in time of them should be the Kingdom of God: In which I do not at all assign the reason why the little children were to be admitted to come to Christ, nor do I quote Piscator for it, and therefore Mr. Bl. misrecites my words, but shew how it might be true that of those infants was the Kingdom of God, yet in their present estate they neither believers nor justified. Against which Piscator is so far from concluding syllogistically (as Mr. Bl. says) that disputing against the Lutherans affirming infants to be believers because of Christs words, *Matth.*19.14. in his Observe 11. out of that v. he sayth thus, Deinde etsamsi ponatur, sermonem hic de infantibus esse: tamen non potest hinc certo concludi illos praditos esse fide. Etenim infantium potest esse regnum cœlorum, etiamsi non credant, dummodo sint electi: which are the effect of my words. And for the rest that follows in Mr. Bl. about Christs design, and the Disciples duty to know it, and their sin in being ignorant of it: there is answer before in the answer to Mr. B. Nor is there a word in my writing that tends to this, that either they knew or were bound to know the election of those infants, or that Christ was angry with them for not knowing it: I have often said, it was either because they heeded not some particular intimation of his minde concerning those infants, or some general truth concerning Christs Office, and his readiness to do good to all sorts of persons, as there was opportunity offered, from which he ought not to be hindered by them. I do not confess, as Mr. Bl.

saith of me, that elect infants might be baptized, were they known: but that elect infants being actual believers, if they were known might be baptized, and therefore I need not fear Christs displeasure for not admitting elect infants to baptism, no not though they were known to be elect, except they were known to be believers, much less for not admitting to baptism those that are neither known to be elect nor believers; But Mr. Bl. hath just cause to fear the displeasure of Christ for admitting to baptism those that are neither known to be elect, nor believers, but infants of Parents who are manifestly children of the Devil, covenant-breakers, &c. according to his Doctrine in opposition to Mr. Firmin Vindic. Fœd. cap. 47. which is a higher degree of profanation of the Ordinance of Baptism, than many Pædobaptists fall into.

Mr. Bls. sixth Position is, "They are here admitted by our Saviour Christ to a Church-privilege. This appears Numb. 6. 22, 23, &c. to the end of the Chapter. The Israel of God are under the blessing, little ones are ordered to be received to this blessing, little ones therefore are of his Israel, Deut. 32. 9. These are the blessed of the Lord upon this account, Jer. 31. 23. children are within this number, they are the inheritage of the Lord, Psal. 127. 3. and consequently admitted by our Saviour Christ to this privilege of a blessing."

Answ. 1. Mr. Bls. Position is ambiguous, 1. It is uncertain whether he mean it of Christs laying on hands, or his prayer also, and blessing with it, which is the Church-privilege, 2. Whether he make it a privilege of the visible or invisible Church. 3. Whether he will have these to be a constant Church-privilege. 4. To whom he will have it a Church-privilege. 5. By whom it is to be done since Christs ascension, whether by Apostles onely, or Bishops, or Presbyters. All the proof he brings for blessing, as a Church-privilege, is the prayer of Aaron and his sons, for the whole congregation of the children of Israel, which how it proves Christs laying on of hands, and praying or blessing of a few little children, (when Christ was neither Aaron nor any of his sons) to be a Church-privilege, such as was Aaron and his sons blessing, which belonged to the Levitical Priesthood, I see not. Mr. Bls. arguing is like as if his wits went a wool-gathering. This, saith he, appears Numb. 6. 22, 23, &c. What is that which he saith appears?

pears? It should be his sixth Position, They are here admitted by our Saviour Christ to a Church-privilege: but his conclusion is, Little ones therefore are of his Israel; and this is proved by a syllogism that is either faulty in that there are four terms, or else it is in the second figure of all Affirmatives. If it be said that Mr. Bl. infers from that and the rest his Position, neither is that true: for his conclusion is this, and consequently admitted by our Saviour Christ to this privilege of a blessing; which though not denied by me, yet is neither his sixth Position, nor any thing in the Texts he brings proves it, which are all impertinently alleged by him, and the last especially, which he seems to understand, as if they were said to be the heritage of the Lord, as if they were the Lords peculiar possession, whereas the meaning is Psalm 127. 3. that children are such a blessing to parents, that they are an heritage given by the Lord; as Ainsworth rightly expounds it; and so an house-privilege rather than a Church-privilege is there meant, as the words following shew.

Mr. Bl. had said, pag. 91. of his answer to my Letter, there is no direct precedent for baptism in particular, but for Church-privileges of which infants are capable, on which I inferred, if [but] be adversative, (which must be granted if Mr. Bl. speaks sense) then Mr. Bl. grants that infants are capable of Church-privileges, not of baptism. To this Mr. Bl. replies, 1. that I make a great triumph of his speech. 2. That I leave out that which would fully explain his meaning. 3. That his meaning is, this act of Christ is no direct precept for baptism, but of Church-priledges in general. 4. If I can make it good that baptism is no Church-privilege I have wrested this Argument out of his hand, and that this Text as to the Argument fails, otherwise it is of force and an undeniable consequence.

Answ. 1. I said truly, that grant which Mr. Bl. words (if he understand himself) implies, overthrows all his dispute, and is a triumph (if it be to be so called) on a victory. 2. I left out nothing which being put in would have hindered the inference I make: but Mr. Bl. as if he were ashamed of his own words, leaves out in his explication the words [of which infants are capable] from whence I made my inference. 3. His own explication makes the matter worse. For, 1. if this act of Christ be a direct precept of Church-privileges in general, then it is of baptism in particular, being a Church-privilege, that which is said of the Genus being true (as Logicians say) of the species, Quicquid prædicatur de genere prædicatur de specie. Whence it follows Mr. Bl. speaks inconsistencies. 2. It follows also, that if it be a direct precept for to admit infants to Church-privileges in general, then it is to admit them to the Lords Supper, to Ordination, for these are Church-privileges. If he mean no more than this, that they are to be admitted to prayer for them, and that is the Church-privilege he means, I should grant it, and accordingly when desired I do both publish the names, days of infants birth, and pray for them. 4. What he would gather from hence, by necessary consequence I wrest out of his hands, I think easily, without gratifying Socinians, Antibaptists, (who if they triumph over Antipædobaptists, and beat them down with their own weapons in the parts where Mr. Bl. lives, the more shame for them, who betray by their unskilfulness so good a cause) with this, that baptism is no Church-privilege. His Arguments are thus formed, cap. 43. sect. 1. They which are admitted to Church-privileges have right to baptism, the leading privilege; but infants are admitted to Church-privileges, Mark 10. 14. Matth. 19. 14. Luke 18. 16. Infants therefore have right to baptism.

To which I answer, if he mean by [Church-privileges] any other than prayer, and the laying of hands on them by Christ; I deny the minor; if he meant it of them I deny the major. And whereas he makes baptism the leading Church-privilege, I grant it is so in order to the Lords Supper, yet to be among the catechized, commended to God in prayer, may be antecedent Church-privileges to baptism.

His other Argument is this, The children of the Kingdom, that with others make up the Kingdom of God, have right to baptism; but infants are the children of the Kingdom that with others make up the Kingdom of God, Mark 10. 14. Matth. 19. 14. Luke 18. 16. Infants therefore have right to baptism.

To which I answer, The phrase [Children of the Kingdom] I finde diversly used, (Matth. 8. 12. it is appropriated to the Jews, and it is spoken of them which shall be cast out into utter darkness. But Matth. 13. 38. it is meant of the elect, who shall be

ſaved. In the former ſenſe the major is manifeſtly falſe, and the minor can be onely true of Jews infants: in the later ſenſe the major Propoſition is true of children of the Kingdom who are viſibly ſuch by their profeſſion of faith in Chriſt; and the minor is falſe; if it be meant of ſuch as are inviſibly children of the Kingdom, the major is denied, and the minor is granted.

Mr. Bl. adds ſomewhat more about the meaning of the words of Chriſt, [of ſuch is the Kingdom of Heaven] And firſt he ſaith, The particle [ſuch] cannot here have reference to their qualification, that thoſe that were qualified as theſe (in humility and meekneſs) had their intereſt; ſo are Sheep and Doves as well as infants, not proud nor revengefull.

Anſw. This reaſon is not of force to prove that [ſuch] cannot here have reference to the qualification of meekneſs and humility. For being ſo expounded [ſuch] notes others than the infants, to wit, men that are humble and meek poſitively, as infants are negatively, and this cannot be ſayd of Doves or ſheep, yet infants may be included as Beza doth *Annot: in Matth.*19.14. *talium τοιούτων, id eſt, horum & ſimilium, ut ſupra.*18. which is plainly proved by our Lord Chriſts own words Mark 10.15. where [*of ſuch v.*14.] is [*whoſoever receiveth the Kingdom of God as a little childe v.*15.] and ſo it is meant *Matth.*18.5.as I have proved above. Nor is Mr.Bls. reaſoning of force, That which the Diſciples took to be an impediment of force to hinder infants, and a juſt ground of thoſe that brought them, is that which Chriſt underſtands in this reproof of the Diſciples and admiſſion of their infants; But it was their want of growth, their littleneſs, which the Diſciples took to be a juſt impedinent, and which occaſioned their reproof, Ergo. For the concluſion may be granted, yet this proves not that by [of ſuch] is meant in reſpect of quantity onely, not of quality, but onely that in the words before [ſuffer little children to come to me] quantity is meant not quality, for in thoſe words onely is the reproof of the Diſciples, and Chriſts admiſſion of infants. The other are a reaſon of his command, which is good if by [ſuch] be meant likeneſs in quality as well as agreement in quantity. And for Mr. Bls. paraphraſe, it is but his own conceit, that the little children had no need of cure, or that the Diſciples rebuke was after his model. But enough of this before.

Mr. Bl. excepts against me for saying, the Kingdom of Heaven is meant of the Kingdom of glory, and that on this hinge the answer to the whole argument turns. He saith, I had six exceptions against the orthodox interpretation of this scripture in my Examen, being hunted out of all the rest I think to finde some shelter there. But this is his figment, for though I of mine own accord expressed some onely as doubtfull, and let pass others for more ample conviction of the invalidity of the vain arguing, called falsely Orthodox interpretation of this Text by pædobaptists, yet I did not so much as relinquish one of the exceptions, much less have been hunted from them, as Mr. Bl. after his pedantique fashion talks. But in opposition to me he first saith, That all hangs not on this, appears, in that our Saviour had said enough in his order for admission of these infants on which we can build our conclusion. And then brings his argument, which being answered before there is no need of any more reply to this. Yet I add, that of the argument drawn by Mr. *Bl. pag.*91. of his answer to my letter none that are interessed in the Church of Christ which is his Kingdom may be denied an admission to it by baptism, but infants have their interests in the Church of Christ which is his Kingdom, and therefore may not be denied admission by baptism; the hinge did turn on this point, that by the Kingdom of Heaven is meant the visible Church, into which he would have infants admitted by baptism; and my speech is true of that Argument.

Mr. Blake adds, "Secondly, for his Reasons there is not force in them, 1. Saith he, The kingdom of God must be understood Mark 10.14. as it is *v.*15. and Luke 18.16. as *v.*17. and *Matth.*19.14. as it is in both those; This I prove, because our Saviour from their estate infers a likeness to them in others for the same estate, *Apol. pag.*150. This Argument howsoever it carries more colour than usually is found in Mr. T. his Reason, yet it is not conclusive. It may be taken more largely in Christs argumentation, and in a more restrained sense in his words of instruction and application, as in a place much parallel I shall shew, 1 *Cor.*6 1,2. There we have the Apostles reproof, *v.*1. and his Reason, *v.*2. as in the Evangelists we have Christs assertion confirming his reproof, v. 14. and his application, *v.*15. Now [Saint] in the Apostles reproof is taken taken more largely than it is taken in his Reason: A visible Saint is meant in the first place, a real and glorified Saint in the second; visible Saints may judg in small matters, for real Saints in glory shall judg the world, shall judg Angels; and so it may be here, infants have their present title to the visible Kingdom; and men qualified as infants, shall onely enter the Kingdom of Glory.

Answ. I see Mr. Bl. so pertinacious in what he hath said in this argument, that he is cedere nescius, he knows not how to yeild to any thing against his dictates, though it be never so plain. He denies not Mark 10.15. Luke 18.17. must be understood of the Kingdom of glory for the reason given by me in my Postscript The proposition being false, being understood of the visible Church; many proud persons entering therein, as Simon Magus, Diotrephes, &c. But denies it to be conclusive, and therefore must deny the major. But he answers nothing to the proof of it, because our Saviour from their estate infers a likeness to them in others for the same estate. Whence the argument ariseth. The same estate is meant Mark 10.14. which is mean *v.*15. This is proved from the inference of Christ which is, as of little children is the kingdom of God, so whosoever doth not receive the Kingdom of God as a little childe shall not enter into [αὐτὴν, it] or the same estate, the relative particle plainly notes it to be the same. But the estate Mark 10.15. is meant of the Kingdom of glory, which is proved, because otherwise the proposition were false: nor is it denied by Mr. Bl. therefore the argument is most plainly concluisve. Mr. Bls. answer is either upon a wilfull or heedeless mistake of my argument as if it were onely from the identity of the words in both verses, whereas it was taken from the sameness of estate gathered by the force of our Saviours whether application of *v.*15. as Mr. Bl. terms it, or inference from what he had said *v.*14. and the relative [αὐτὴν, it.] I deny not that it is frequent according to the figure in Rhetorick termed antanaclasis to use terms sometimes in the same verse elegantly in a different sense: but it cannot be so here for the reasons given. And yet Mr. Bls. instance 1 Cor. 6.1,2. is not right. For 1 *Cor.*6.2. the term [Saint] doth not note a glorified Saint. For the sense is this, know ye not these now despised Saints shall hereafter judg the world, and so though it be true that then they shall be glorified, yet the term [Saints] is attributed to them according to their present estate of debasement, in which the very Emphasis is put. Besides if it had been so that in the one v. it noted a visible Saint here, and in the other a glorified Saint hereafter, yet the same persons were meant in both verses; whereas if Mark 10.14. were meant the visible Church, who are a number of persons, and *v.*15. were meant an estate of glory, there would be a greater difference than in 1 Cor. 6.1,2. and therefore Mr. Bl. doth not rightly say, the one place is much parallel to the other.

Mr. Bl. goes on. His second reason, that Christ directs his speech to the Disciples already in the visible Church, and therefore speaks not of the Church visible, I know not how to make up into a reason; if I understood it, I would either yeild or answer it.

Answ. The reason is thus formed. The same is meant Mark 10.14. which is meant *v.*15. as is before proved. But by [the Kingdom of God] *v.*15. is not meant the visible Church, Ergo, neither *v.*14. The minor is thus proved. By [the Kingdom of God] is meant that estate into which the Apostles had not but were thereafter to enter into. For the speech is meant of them as well as others, and directed to them, Verily I say to you, and so where the same thing is sayd *Matth.*18.3. it is sayd to and of them, Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of the Heavens. But the estate the Apostles were to enter into was not the visible Church, for that they had entered into already, but the Kingdom of glory. Therefore by [the Kingdom of God Mark 10.14.] is meant the Kingdom of glory.

Mr. Bl. adds, The third reason, that the speech Mark 10.15. Luke 18.17. *is like Matth.*18.3,4. but there it is meant of the Kingdom of glory; Ergo, so here, is answered already. If Mark 10.15. Luke 18.17. *be like Matth.*18.3,4. yet Mark 10.14. Luke 18.16. *which we have in question is unlike Matth.*18. 3.4.

Answ. 1. If Mark 10.15. be like *Matth.*18.3,4. then also Mark 10.14. is in like manner understood *the Kingdom of Heaven, as Matth.*18.3,4. For it is understood of the same Mark 10.14,15. as is proved before. 2. Mr. B. conceived them them like by putting them together in the chapter before answered, and the New Annot. and Diodati, whose Testimonies are alleged in my *Postscript. pag.*151.

Mr. Bl. adds, Thirdly, were it granted him, that the Kingdom of glory must be understood both in Christs reason and application, yet he is nothing holpen. Infants have right to the Church visible militant, because they are in a capacity of entrance into the Church triumphant, Acts 2 47. The Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved; not necessarily saved, but now (having entered Covenant with God) they were in a capacity, and therefore added as visible Church-members. Infants standing in this capacity ought to have admission likewise.

Answ. It helps me much to answer the arguments drawn from *Matth.*19.14. for infants visible Church-membership, if by the [Kingdom of Heaven] be not meant the visible Church, For then it is not there affirmed, that infants are visible Church-members. Nor doth Mr. Bls. reserve regain the loss, to prove it by consequence, For his speech is not true, Infants have right (meaning of admission) to the visible Church, because they are in a capacity of entrance into the Church triumphant. Nor is it proved Acts 2.47. where Mr. Bl. perverts the meaning of the term τὺς σωζομένους, which is in English [the saved] that is either [*the saved from that crooked generation v.*40. by their effectual calling as 2 Tim. 1.9. Tit. 3.5.] or by an enallage of tense [such as should be saved] and that certainly or necessarily] as 2 Cor. 2.15. not as Mr. Bl. they were in a capacity to be saved, (for so were those that were not called) and therefore added as visible Church-members. Nor is Mr. Bls. proposition gathered thence: for neither is there any thing in the words to prove that then all were added to the Church which should be saved, much less which were in a capacity to be saved, or on the contrary that all that were added to the Church should be saved: much less that their right to be added to the Church was from this, that they should be saved; It is said, the Lord added to the Church such as should be saved, it is not said the Apostles added them to the Church because they were to be saved, yea *v.*41. it is said, that even of those that were to be saved, they gladly received the word; and then were baptized and added. So that if the Text be rightly looked into there is nothing to be gathered thence of the persons right to be added to the Church, or the Ministers duty to add to the Church by baptism, persons meerly upon this consideration, that they shall be saved, but onely that it is the course of Gods providence to add to his Church such as shall be saved. I yet add that if Mr. Bls. proposition were granted him, they have a right to the Church-visible militant who shall be of the Church triumphant, yet this right cannot be claimed but by those who are elect, and therefore from these Scriptures so expounded Matth. 19. 14. Acts 2. 47. it cannot be proved that any other than elect infants are to be baptized and to be added to the Church, not the natural children of true believers, who are many of them non-elect; nor can a Minister gather thence, he ought to baptize any of them till he know they are elect, and shall be saved, and therefore they rashly and profanely baptize from hence them, that they have no knowledg of, that of them is the Kingdom of glory and that they shall be saved.

SECT. XIX.

Animadversions on Mr. Cobbets Just Vindic. part. 1. cap. 5. and the arguings of Dr. Homes, Mr. Bailee, Mr. Fuller, Mr. Sidenham, from the words and actions of Christ to little ones are answered.

HAving answered Mr. B. Mr. Bl. my two eager Antagonists I shall add animadversions on Mr. Thomas Cobbet his Just Vindic. part. 1. ch. 4. sect. 1. 1. He says without proof that they that brought the infants mentioned Luke 18. 15. were pious minded parents. 2. He denies [of such is the kingdom of God] to be meant of the Kingdom of glory, the contrary whereof is proved in the next section before against Mr. Blake. 3. He supposeth, that these words [suffer little children to come to me] being granted to contain a rule of suffering little ones of that sort such as those are to come to him and the words [of such is the Kingdom of God] being expounded of the invisible Church it must be conceived that Christ must direct them to suffer

members of the invisible Church to come to him, and then that they may be known. But this is his mistake; they that expound thus the words [suffer these little children and other little children in age if any hereafter be brought to my person to be touched, to come to me, and forbid them not as ye have don these. For however they are persons that are not fit to be my hearers; yet of these now brought and of some other infants which may be brought, and men of years like them in quality is the Kingdom of God, the invisible Church or the Kingdom of glory belongs to them] may avouch this exposition without supposing their election must come under the cognizance of men, nor need they say that onely such who were elected, were, by this rule so expounded to be permitted, to come to Christ. 4. That Christ spake of those infants not as an extraordinary inspired Prophet is said without proof; nor is it likely, sith such blessings were never given but by extraordinary inspiration, and Christ appoints not the admitting of little children to any, no not to his Apostles, but himself. 5. That he delivered an ordinary rule of ordinary practise and use afterwards is said without proof; nor is it likely, sith we reade no more of that practise by any of the Apostles, nor any rule concerning it after this one act of Christ.

Sect. 2. He denies that [of such is the Kingdom of Heaven might be spoken in reference to the future, that is that they were elect ones, and should in time be of Gods Kingdom, that is believers, or that they were such as God would bless. For Christs words are not, of such may, will or shall be the Kingdom of God, nor that they were of his Kingdom, because such as he would bless: but rather that they should not be hindered from being blessed of him, because of such is the Kingdom of God.

To which I answer: that by [the Kingdom of Heaven Mat. 19. 14. and the Kingdom of God Mark 10.14,15. Luke 18.16,17.] must needs be meant the Kingdom of glory is proved before, & then the sense can be no other than of such is the Kingdom of Heaven, that is the Kingdom of glory belongs to such, as Mat. 5.3,10. and as ἐστὶ, doth oft signifie as Mark 9.14, &c. And then it must needs be an enallage of tense, as Mat. 18.1. as Piscat. on Mat. 18.1. est pro futurus est enallage temporis, or as Piscat. on Matth. 5.3. ipsis destinatum est & dabitur, and this is all one as to say they are elect, which is Piscators term in his observation on Matth. 19. 14. as I shewed above in answer to Mr. Blake, and thus [of such is the kingdom of God] refers to the present estate as elect, to their future as possessours of glory hereafter. And so to Mr. Cobbet's objection I answer, Matth. 5. 10. it is not said, theirs shall be the Kingdom of Heaven, but [is] and yet it must be understood of present title and future possession, so here. And for his exception at my words, that the reason may be given why these infants did belong to Gods Kingdom, because they were such as Christ would bless, is not avoided by saying, they were blessed, because of Gods Kingdom. For both ways the reason is good, they should not be hindered from blessing, because theirs was the Kingdom of Heaven the end of blessing, or they should not be hindered from blessing because he intended to bless them, and therefore theirs was the Kingdom of Heaven. Either way that I intended to prove Examen pag. 147. is evinced, that the reason why theirs was the Kingdom of Heaven is not from their parents faith (which should have been if it were meant, as Pædobaptists would, of interest in the visible Church) but Gods election or Christs blessing.

I have often said, that if Christs minde had been that infants should be baptized, he would have commanded these little ones to have been baptized for an Example. To this Mr. Cobbet answers, that according to our principles they were elect, heirs of the kingdom of glory: now why should not or were not these infants at least baptized?

Answ. Because though elect, yet were not believers or Disciples by profession.

But You would allow, saith he, such to be baptized if of grown years.

Answ. No, untill they were believers or Disciples, not barely because elect and heirs of glory.

But You say, saith he, that if by extraordinary revelation you knew an infant to be sanctified, you would baptize it, because the extraordinary revelation would authorize it, and the words of Peter, Acts 10. 47. and the institution, Matth. 28. 19. And then it would follow, 1. That persons may be Disciples without being outwardly taught. 2. It is agreeable to the rule that persons without personal profession of faith should be baptized. Albeit extraordinary things done besides rule cross not ordinary rule; yet neither extraordinarily nor ordinarily is any thing to be done, which is in it self contrary to rule. 3. It was the minde of Christ they should be baptized, as that they should be instructed, though it be not expressed.

Answ. 1. It is true I grant in my Examen, p. 142, 158, 160. upon the grounds mentioned, that an infant regenerated, united to Christ, sanctified by the Spirit upon extraordinary revelation of this might be baptized; and the like is said by Mr. Blackwood Apostolical Bapt. p. 51. And for those that have the thing signified let them make it appear to any Church of Christ, and they cannot deny their baptism. But yet it follows not that these infants might be baptized which are mentioned Matth. 19. 14. For though their election be mentioned, yet not their regeneration and sanctification. Now Prædestinatio nil ponit in prædestinato, and therefore it makes not Disciples or believers at present, but assures it as future: but we are to baptize actual Disciples and believers, not future.

But However, saith he, they may be Disciples who are are not outwardly taught.

Answ. Who denies it? yet they must be learners of Christ in their own persons.

But then, saith he, a person may be baptized without personal profession.

Answ. It is granted, when God supplies the absence of it by his revelation otherwise: nor is this contrary to the Rule, sith that is, to baptise known Disciples, who are ordinarily known by their personal profession, though in this case Gods extraordinary act supplies that want. Yet Mr. Cobbets saying is not right, that neither extraordinarily nor ordinarily is any thing to be done, which is in it self contrary to rule. For Abrahams killing his son was in it self contrary to rule, yet upon extraordinary command it was to be done. And for the third, though it might be conceived Christs minde, that the children should be instructed, though it be not mentioned, Luke 18. 16, 17. because it was a duty of perpetual equity by virtue of the moral Law: yet baptising infants being a meer positive rite, that hath no reason or warrant but institution, is not to be conceived Christs minde, without some declaration, which he neither then when he had so fit opportunity, nor at any time else expressed.

There are some more things in Mr. Cobbet censurable, as that he makes the infants paterns as well of receiving the kingdom at least externally, as of the affection and disposition with which it is to be received; whereas, 1. the words Matth. 18. 3, 4. do plainly make them paterns onely of humility, and such good dispositions as are in children fit to be imitated. 2. In Mr. Cobbets sense the words of Christ would be false, [whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little childe externally by an initial seal or some other visible sign, as laying on hands, &c. shall not enter therein.] For then that Popish Doctrine, or rather more rigid than Popish must be maintained, that no unbaptized Martyr or other shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven. And in like manner it is gratis dictum, without proof sayd [of such like infants, like them in covenant, and Church interest in God is his kingdom,] there being not a word in the Text that leads to this paraphrase, and the plain meaning is before expressed.

That which Mr. Cobbet sayth in answer to the reason of Pistator, Why they were not infants because Christ called them; I conceive is not an answer. For what he sayth, that things ascribed to the children are rather to be understood of parents, and he instanceth in Levi's paying Tyths in Abraham, Heb. 7. is not right. For, 1. that which is sayd of Levi is to be understood of Levi, not of Abraham; for it were neither good sense nor to his purpose, to say, Abraham payd Tyths in Abraham. 2. If things done by a parent and related by the Holy Ghost as mysterious passages are imputed to the children, yet it is absurd to understand in an historical narration of facts that to be meant as spoken to the parents, which was spoken to the children. Other things I let pass, which oppose not my dispute but others: and what things he speaks in answer to my Objections, and what concerns the answering the imaginary absurdities arising from our Doctrine in that chapter, I refer to another place. This is sufficient in answer to what he sayth in opposition to me about that passage Luke 18. 16, 17.

Dr. Homes in his Animad. on my Exercit. pag. 57, 58. argues thus, To whom indefinitely as such, Heaven and the blessing of and for Heaven belongs, to them as such the seal of conveyance, and confirmation of Heaven and that blessing belongs. For if the Land be mine the Deeds and Seals of Conveyance are mine. But Heaven and the blessing of and for Heaven belongs indefinitely to such little children, more, whiles little children; so the Text here expresly. To them belong, or (which is all one) of such is the kingdom of Heaven, and he took them in his arms and blessed them. Therefore to little children indefinitely belongs the Seal of Conveyance or Confirmation of Heaven, and the blessing of Heaven, which in the New Testament, according to the time Christ spake, is baptism.

Answ. Neither is it true, That baptism is the seal of conveyance of heaven, and the blessing for it, that I finde in Scripture, but the Spirit, *Ephes.*4.30. Ephes. 1.13. 2 *Cor.*1.22. Nor is it true, That heaven and the blessing of heaven belong to little children indefinitely as such, that is as little children. For then it should belong to all little children, nor to them as children of believing parents, for it should belong to all children of believing parents, but as they are elect. And to these I grant baptism belongs when they are called, and believe, not before; as a conveyance may be made to a childe, yet he is not to have it in his hands till he come to understand it, and is fit to make use of it. So that the major may be denied if [the belonging of the seal] be meant in respect of present use or possession. And the minor is to be denied, if [as such] be meant [as little children, or children of believers] and the inference on the conclusion is denied, the seal belongs to them, Ergo, baptism. Other arguments of Dr. Homes are answered in my *Apology pag.*102. though briefly yet sufficiently. Nor hath Mr. Geree in his *Vindiciæ Vindiciarum ch.*10. brought any thing worth rejoyning in reply to my answer to his fixth argument in my *Apology pag.*101,102. It is false which he saith, in admitting to ordinances we proceed not upon judgment of certainty but charity, nor is a judgment of charity grounded upon hope of what a person may be, any rule to us in admitting to baptism, For if so, then hope of a profane persons amendment were enough to baptize him. Mr. Baillie's reasoning in his *Anabaptism pag.*149. [since imposition of hands a seal of Christs grace and blessing, and of the Kingdom of Heaven belonged to infants; that therefore baptisme a seal of that same kinde, when once the Lord had solemnely at his ascension appointed it to be the ordinary seal of initiation into his Church ought not to be denied to them] is but dictates. 1. He says, baptisme is a seal of the same kinde with Christs laying on hands, which he saith without proof, nor is it true. For. 1. Christs laying on hands was an act extraordinary done by Christ himself as the great Prophet, but baptism was an act of ordinary ministration not done by Christ himself but his Disciples, John 4.1,2. 2. Baptism was the duty of the baptized, Acts 2.38. not onely the baptizers, but not so laying on hands by Christ. 3. If baptisme be a seal of the same kinde with laying on of hands, then laying on hands is a seal, and a Sacrament of the same kind with baptism, which is counted a point of Popery. 2. To shift off the objection, that Christ appointed not those infants to be baptized, he allegeth that Christ did after solemnly appoint it at his ascension, and since then it ought to be done: which intimates that infants were not to be baptized before, but after the ascension. But, 1. The appointment and practise of baptism was before, if not as solemn, and the same use and order of it, and therefore this reason is of no force why others should be baptized after, more than these before the ascension. 2. It will follow that Jews infants were not to be baptized till after the ascension of Christ, which overthrows his and other Pædobaptists argument about the seal and Covenant, which if of any validity, prove infant baptism as well before the ascension as after. 3. It is false, that Christ at his ascension appointed infant baptism any more than before, the commission of Christ and the Apostles practise shew the contrary. Therefore I deny his argment in the words set down as being without proof or shew of it. Mr. Thomas Fuller in his *Infants advocate ch.*18 hath these words St. *John addeth ch.*21.21. And there are also many other things which Jesus did which are not written, amongst which for ought appears to the contrary, the baptizing of these infants might be one of them; wherein he runs to the Popish plea for their unwritten traditions, and forgets that besides what I have alleged before to shew those infants were not baptized, there appears something to the contrary out of John 4.1,2. where it is said, that Jesus baptized not, but his Disciples, and therefore the baptizing of those Infants could not be one of the things which Jesus did though not written John 21.21. His argument, they were capable of a blessing, therefore of baptism; hath been often denied and answered before. There came to my hands also the Exercitation of Mr. Cuthbert Sidenham, in which ch. 10. he terms Antipædobaptism denying infants with scorn a little water, and after, this Text Matth. 19.13,14. if there were no more, will fly in the consciences one day of the most confident contemners of infants, and their baptism. To which I say, it shews too much youthfull rashness unfit for a Teacher of a Church either to call Antipædobaptists contemners of infants, and their baptism, and their denying infants baptism (which they do for ought he knows out of tender conscience of not profaning Christs ordinance) an act, of scorn, and to speak of the Texts flying in their consciences, who know that he had more reason to expect the flying of this Text in his conscience, who in this (as he doth in the rest of his pamphlet) makes the objection against his urging it for infant baptism so as that he might put it off with a slight answer, For whereas Antipædobaptists object, if Christ hinted their right to baptism, why did he neither baptize them, nor appoint them to be baptized by his Apostles? Mr. Sidenham leaves out the later part of the objection, and answers. 1. He baptizeth none. 2. He did that which was an ordinance usually, in those primitive times, administred after baptism and equal to it in dignity, and so we may argue from this to baptism either inclusively or à majori from the greater, he did such acts to them as are equivalent if not supereminent. But doth Mr. Sidenham indeed think such petty arguings, which he knows not how to form in a Logick way, but in pathetick Rhetorick, likely to terrify our consciences so much, when he himself dares not positively assert, that the laying on of Christs hands did include and presuppose baptism, yea he acknowledgeth it to have been extraordinary; and for his way of proving à majori, he either is ignorant in Logick or else might understand, that an argument à majori is not thus; there is conferred on such a one a greater thing, therefore the less; Christs blessing therefore right to baptism; For then the argument were good, Christ blesse the infants which is the greater, therefore he gave them the Lords supper, or made them Apostles, or gave them the gift of tongues, which are the less. But an argument à majori is à magis probabili, and so it is not more probable that Christ would have them baptized, than that he would bless them, sith they were not meet subjects of the one as of the other. There is nothing else in that chapter but what hath answer before, this is enough to abate the insolency of this Scribler.

SECT. XX.

The practice of infant-baptism is not proved Acts 16.15. by baptizing a household against Mr. M. Dr. Homes, Mr. Bailee, Mr. Cook, Mr. Sidenham, Mr. Fuller.

ANother Text to prove the practise of infant baptism is Acts 16.15. and the mention of baptizing households elsewhere. From whence Mr. M. in his (*Sermon pag.*40. (though the Assembly leave it out *Confess. of faith ch.*18. *art.*4.) would gather examples of the new administration taking place just as the old, and so the practise of infant baptism by good consequence. To which I answered in my Examen at large, *pag.*138. &c. 1. That the new administration is much different from the old, to wit, baptism from Circumcision. 2. That the practise of baptism in all the Evangelists is set down of singular persons. 3. That the practise in the Acts of the Apostles is differently set down, sometimes of singular persons sometimes of a City, sometimes of families. 4. Where households are said to be baptized there is no mention of an infant and the circumstances with other places do shew that Luke doth understand onely the believers of the house. What Mr. M. replied hereto doth yeild so much as shews there is no good consequence in this Argument. Households were baptized, therefore infants, sith he saith, It may be granted that a house is sometimes taken for the grown persons in that house. And what else he speaks that is to the point is briefly answered in my *Apology pag.*100. And in my *Postscript sect.*19. I have sufficiently answered Mr. Blake his arguing from households being the precedent of baptizing, and what he saith vind. sed. pag 416. is answered before in this part of the *Review sect.*6.

Dr. Homes in his Animadv. on my Exercit. ch.8. pag.71. tels us that the Syriak in the story Acts 16.33. renders it, he was baptized and all the childern of his house, and sure enough a son of eight days old is a son. And if sons of the house then some sons of the Father of the house. But he might consider that the same Syriak renders *v.*32. they spake the word with him, and with all the sons of his house, which cannot be said of infants. Nor is it true that the Doctor saith, that the sons of the house are the sons of the Father of the house. For as Tremelius in his note sayth, it is an Hebraism, in which the son of the house is all one with the inhabitants in the house, servants as well as childien. As for the evasion which the Doctor and M. Cook in his *Face uncovered, pag.*18. have, that it is said [*all that were in his house, v.*32. not, of his house] so that the word might be spoken to the prisoners and others which ran in on the fame of the thing, and then *he and his were baptized, v.*33. it is. 1. Without ground and unlikely, that the prisoners should be reckoned in his house when the prison is named distinctly from his house, as *v.*30. & 34. compared shew, and he took such care about securing the prisoners *v.*28,29. and then brought Paul and Silas *out, v.*30. afore he spake to them or they to him about salvation, nor is it likely that into the house of the Jaylour could others get or would attempt it at that time of night. 2. Were it granted yet it no whit avoyds the objection, which is, that either there were no infants in the house, or else they spake the word to them, which were absurd. But saith, the Doctor, *they spake the word to the infants, because they should be the better for it, v.*31. To which I reply, this reason is most gross it being contrary to all use of writers and Grammar construction to say he spake the word to infants, to whom he directed not his speech at all, onely because the speech might be for their good. Besides he spake the word to all in his house as he spake to the Jaylour, it was the same speaking and Preaching to the one and the other, and therefore if infants be there meant, the Apostle is made as ridiculously to Preach to infants, as Francis the Frier is by the Popish Legend to Preach to a brute. Besides the same Syriak renders *v.*34. he exulted, and all of his household in the faith of God, and Tremellius hath this marginal note, to a word sons of the house as a little before. As for what

Dr. Homes with Mr. Cook adds about rendering παντοι, all over his house, and rendering ηγαλλιάσατο, he did skip as in a dance of a Galliar with triumph, they are such as having no other approved interpreter for their author, nor indeed agreeing with the gravity and seriousness of the business and the Jaylors condition, are justly rejected as meer shifts to avoyd the plain evidence from that and many more places in my *Examen pag.*139,140. (which Mr. M. yeilded) that under the term [household] persons of years onely are meant by Luke. As for what Mr. Baillee in his *Anabaptism pag.*146. tels us, that infants are not excepted; I answer, that infants are plainly excepted from being meant in those speeches, if the things spoken of the household cannot be said of infants. But then, saith he, they will be excepted from salvation if they be not comprised under the term [house] saith Luke 19.9. salvation is said to come to the house, and Acts 11.14. Cornelius and all his house should be saved by Peters words, and Acts 16.31. upon the Jaylours faith he and his house should be saved. I answer Though infants be not in those passages comprised among the saved, yet it follows not by this interpretation that there is no other Tex. out of which we may conclude their salvation. And therefore all his inferences of wrong to infants as excluding them from salvation. because they are not included in the term [household] are but calumniatory And his other inferences shall be shewed to be vain in answering Mr. B. As for Mr. William Cooks collections from Luke 19.9. Acts 16.31. in his *Font uncovered, pag.*18.19. They require faith of the Jaylour, that he and his family might be admitted into a saving estate. They said not that every one of his family must of necessity actually believe and profess, that so his household might be saved with him. So (as he did with Zacheus) God shews here by his servants that he would deal with the Jaylour, not standing for the present on strict terms of actual faith of all in his house, If the Governour believe, it is enough to put the whole family into a saving estate inchoatively at least in respect of admission into Covenant, neither are any to be excluded, but such as by stubborn refusal of the Gospel offered deprive themselves of that privilege, I except against them 1. That he makes one sort of salvation to the believers, and another to his house in the same words and by the same means.

2. That

2. That he imagines a salvation inchoative that shall not be consummate. 3. That he makes a member of a family to have right to this salvation by the faith and profession of the head of the family, if they do not express their dissent or refusal of it. 4. That God at some time stands not on strict terms of actual faith of all in a house for salvation. All which are gross conceits and contrary to Mark 16.16. John 3.17,18, &c. In vain likewise doth Mr. Cuthbert Sidenham in his *Exercit. c.*11. infer from these passages of saving and baptizing houses, and instances in the old Testament of family Churches, as if God had cast by an eternal decree this platform, baptism to be administred to families, and so to children. And why not then to servants, and wives, and friends? Are not they of the household? And why doth not Mr. Sidenham take the whole nation into a Church, when the whole nation was taken in formerly in Abrahams posterity? Why doth he gather his Church with such choice distinguishing some from others? How doth Mr. Sidenham cross himself when he interprets Luke 19.9. the Covenant is not made with him onely but with his house that is his seed, where he appropriates the term [house] to seed, and in the next page makes the term house a general phrase, which may sometimes comprehend more, and will have [all his, Acts 16.33.] to note no servants, which cannot be meant of servants, who are our own as goods and lands are, but not of a man: but must firstly and primarily refer to his children who are begotten of him; and it may be secondarily to his kinred. In which his strange shiftings may be discerned, sometimes the term [house] must note the whole family of which servants and wives are a part, sometimes it must mean the seed, and then straightway it must be a general word comprehending more, and then οἰκὸς, must be meant not servants for they are a mans own but not of a man, and yet kinred secondarily must be meant, though they be not any more, no nor so much of a man as servants. But if we ask Mr. Thomas Fuller in his *Infants Advocate c.*16. he will tell us, For the Jaylor; That children (if he had any) were comprised under the expression of all his, is sufficiently known by Satans interpretation, Job 1.12. of Gods Commission, Behold, all that he hath is in thy power; and Gods consenting thereunto, when permitting him by vertue thereof, to destroy all Jobs children;

concerning which passage I say. 1. If [all his, Acts 16.33.] must be expounded as Job 1.12. all that is his, then must the Jaylours sheep, and oxen be baptized as well as his children, for they were comprehended under [all that he had] 2. Though Jobs children were comprehended under [all that he had] yet there was never an one an infant: but such as did feast, and might curse God in their hearts. As for Dr. Homes his question, Is any Anabaptist sure there were no infants in these families? I say, 1. It belongs to him to prove, who brings it for infant-baptism, that there were, and that they were baptized. 2. Yet we are sure from the words none were meant but persons capable of hearing, and believers under the term [house, Acts 16.32,34.] Yea, but sayth Mr. Sidenham, Those in his house are a larger term, but when he speaks of the baptized he sayth all his or of him; But how doth it appear that [all in his house] is larger than [all his] or what can he gather from it but this, that he spake to more than he baptized; but will Mr. Sidenham say, he baptized any to whom he spake not? Yea, that a man may see with what raw conceits these Scriblers abuse people, who reade such ind gested Pamphlets with examination. His own observation excludes infants. For if [all that were in his house] be the largest term, then it comprehends [all his, *v.*33.] But it notes no infant: For he spake not the word to any infant. Therefore by his own observation infants are excluded. But enough of the janglings of these wrangling Baby-sprinklers about this Text.

SECT. XXI.

That 1 Cor. 10. 2. proves not the practice of infant-baptism against Mr. Bailee, Mr. Cobbet, &c.

THere is another Text which is by Mr. Cobbet, Mr. Bailee, Dr. Homes, Mr. Philips, and others produced for the practice of infant-baptism, and it is 1 Cor. 10. 2. Mr. Bailee in his Anabaptism, *pag.*149. argues thus, Infants were baptized as well as their Parents by Moses baptism, Ergo, Infants as well as their Parents ought to be baptized by Christs baptism.

ptiſm. The Antecedent is the Apoſtles, 1 Cor. 10.1,2. The Fathers baptized in the Cloud, and in the Sea, were the whole People as well young as old; for no doubt the infants went as well through the Cloud and the Sea as their Parents.

Anſw. 1. The Antecedent may be denied, becauſe it is ſayd [our Fathers] not infants. But ſayth Mr. Cobbet, This is ſpoken of the Church Fathers to Paul and the Gentile Church-members, and the young ones were in after ages inſtruments to convey Church-truths and bleſſings.

Refut. 1. It is not ſayd our Fathers as we are a Church, none but Abraham that I know is termed a Father to the Church of Chriſt, he being onely named the Father of the faithfull, and they his ſeed: but either [our Fathers] notes ſimply the Anceſtors that went before, as it is uſual to call thoſe our forefathers who were before us in former generations, though they begat us not; or elſe if it note their fathers in reſpect of natural generation, it notes as Grotius in his Annot in locum, the Fathers of us, to wit, Hebrews. But it may be ſayd, that cannot be, ſith Paul onely was an Hebrew, and then it ſhould be my Fathers.

Refut. 1. It is not unuſual to ſpeak of perſons in the ſecond perſon by figure of Communication or Enallage of perſons, when the thing is not true of them but our ſelves, and when the thing is not true of us but others; as when we ſay, we have preached, it is meant of one perſon that ſpeaks, and 1 Theſſ. 4.17. it is ſayd, [we which are alive, and remain] and yet none of thoſe that wrote were ſuch, and ſo [our Fathers] is no more than the Fathers. 2. But there's no need of a figure: For the Epiſtle was written by Paul and Soſthenes, 1 Cor. 1.1. And for Paul there's no queſtion he was an Hebrew, and Soſthenes being a Ruler of the Synagogue, Acts 18.17. And in like manner *Criſpus, v.*8. and *Apollo, v.*24. whom he mentions 1 Cor. 1.14. & 4.6. were Hebrews, and therefore he ſaying, [our Fathers] might well mean our Fathers as Hebrews. 2. It doth appear the infants were not meant in that they are onely meant, who were in a ſtate of pleaſing or diſpleaſing God, as appears by *v.*5. but ſo were not infants. 3. They onely are ſayd to be baptized to whom the ſame thing was ſignified by the cloud, that is, ſignified by our baptiſm; but to the infants nothing was ſignified by the cloud and ſea, and paſſing through or under them, for they were not subjects of instruction, capable to know a resemblance, Ergo, infants were not baptized. But sayth Mr. Bailee, They went through the Sea, Ergo, they were baptized.

Answ. So did the beasts also, and yet are not sayd to have been baptized, but those that did or might understand the signification of it. 4. They that are sayd to be baptized, v. 2. are all sayd to eat and drink Manna and Water, and that it was or might have been to them spiritual meat or drink, v. 3. 4. But this is not to be said of their infants. For as Dr. Homes and Mr. Cobbet grant, the infants did not eat Manna cakes, nor is it likely they did drink water, having breast milk, much less is it true that they were spiritual meat or drink to them, or might have been, Ergo, they are not meant by the Fathers baptized.

Nor is Mr. Bailees consequence good. For if the infants might be sayd to be baptized with Moses baptism, yet it follows not they are to be baptized with Christs, sith Moses his baptism was not formal baptism, but similitudinary after a sort, they were baptized, that is, as Grotius Annot in locum quasi baptizati, as if they had been baptized; but a Rule holds not from similitudinary to formal baptism. But Mr. Bailee would prove the consequence thus, The Reasons which may be brought for the exclusion of infants from being baptized with their Parents by Christs baptism, militate as much against their being baptized with their Parents by Moses baptism. Therefore if nowithstanding they were admitted to the one baptism, they may as well be admitted to the other.

Answ. The antecedent of this proof is false; for in that of Moses, the baptism is onely similitudinary in respect of a fact or event, which was no duty: but formal baptism of Christ is a duty of the person baptized, Mark 16.16. Acts 2 38. & 22.16. which cannot agree to an infant though the other should. Nor is such kinde of shadowy, typical, analogical, similitudinary baptism any more a rule about Christian baptism than Noahs Ark, which had the like resemblance, 1 Pet. 3.21. And this Reason is confirmed from the Text. For if by [Fathers] are meant infants, v. 2. and they were baptized, and this must be a rule to us now about baptism of water appointed by Christ, which was sayd of het ſimilitudinary baptiſm, then ſith the ſame are meant by [*Fathers, v.*3,4.] and they are ſayd to eat the ſame ſpiritual meat and drink, which was Chriſt, which is manifeſtly meant of the Lords Supper, by the ſame reaſon which Mr. Bailee brings, infants muſt not be excluded from the Lords Supper. Yea, but ſaith Dr. Homes, They did not eat all the Lords Supper.

Refut. They did all eat the ſame ſpiritual meat, and drink the ſame ſpiritual drink, which if he deny to be meant of the Lords Supper he deſerts Proteſtants and other Divines acknowledging it, and may be refuted from the ſcope of the Apoſtle, which is, to ſhew that they had in a ſort, in reſpect of ſignification and uſe the ſame Sacraments with ours, and yet were not ſecured thereby when they ſinned. But Mr. Cobbet ſays, There muſt be a Synecdoche in the later, not all the Fathers ſimply being meant, but ſuch as were capable of making a ſpiritual uſe thereof.

Refut. If [all our Fathers] muſt be meant Synecdochically, *v.*3,4. then alſo in *v.*2. it being the ſame term in either, and the *ſenſe of them, v.*5. being meant of as many, *v.*3 4 as *v.*2. Yea, but there's a bar put againſt infants receiving the Lords Supper, 1 *Cor.*11.28.

Refut. There are more bars, and more expreſs put againſt infants baptiſm, Acts 8.37. Matth. 28.19. Mark 16.16. Acts 2. 38. *Epheſ.*4.5 &c. which it ſeems Pædobaptiſts will leap over, or break down, notwithſtanding they are ſo plainly ſet up by Chriſt and his Apoſtles to prevent their infant-baptiſm.

That which Mr. Ainſworth in his Dialogue brings out of Pſalm 77.17. to prove that the Iſraelites were indeed formally baptized with water, is upon miſtake, that the water there poured out was on the Iſraelites, whereas his own Annotations on the places, and the words of the Pſalm refer it to what was done to the Egyptians, *Exod.*14.24,25. And thus Junius and others conceive it. Yet were it granted him, there muſt be a Synecdoche in the term [all the Fathers] for the reaſons given, and otherwiſe beaſts as well as infants muſt be ſayd to be baptized.

SECT. XXII.

MR. Blake had in his Birth-privilege, *pag.*9. argued from Gal 4.29. for infant-baptism, and his passages in his arguing I censured as very gross in my Examen, *part.*3. sect. 2. which he seeks to make good Answer to my Letter, *cap.*4. to which I reply in my Postscript sect. Yet he hath thought good to reinforce his allegation of that Text, and in his *Vindic. Fœd. cap.*43. *sect.*1. he argues thus. *Fourthly, They that by birth according to the flesh are in the bosom of the Church have right to baptism; but infants by birth according to the flesh are in the bosom of the Church, Gal.*4.29. Infants therefore ought to be baptized.

To which I answer, if he mean by [the Church] the Church Christian visible, and by [being in the bosom of it] having actual visible Church membership, I grant the major, and deny the minor, and for the Text *Gal.*4 29. alleged to prove it, am no more induced by Mr. Bls. arguings to believe that it makes to his purpose, than I am to think the Snow is black. For if it were to his purpose, the words ὅπω χ᾽νῦν, should have this sense, even so now infants by virtue of birth according to the flesh, as being the children of a believer by natural generation, are visible members in the Christian Church, v. g. of Galatia, which is as far from the meaning of the Apostle as East from West, if either I or those Interpreters I meet with have not lost their common sense. This I prove from the true supplement which must make up the words complete sense. This will be understood by considering, that the whole verse is a compound proposition of that sort which Logicians call comparative, as 1 Cor. 15.22. The terms ἀλλ᾽ ὥσπερ ὅπω χ᾽ do shew it to be a comparative proposition, and therein are two parts, the first called the Protasis, then he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, that is (for I think Mr. Bl. will not gainsay this exposition) Ishmael who was born after the flesh being the son of Hagar the bond-woman, persecuted (whether by mocking or by some crafty undermining device, (as Heinsius conceives) Isaac who was born after the Spirit, by Divine virtue according cording to the promise, as Grotius I conceive rightly explains it. The other part is called the Apodosis or rendering, wherein that which answers to the forepart first held out is expressed, now that always notes some agreement, correspondence, parity or likeness whether in quantity, quality, action &c. But according to Mr. Bls. apodosis or reddition, there is no such answerableness, or likeness as hath the shew of a comparison of things equal or alike (as this is as the affirmative terms shew) For who would conceive any better then nonsence in such a speech as this, even as Ishmael persecuted Isaac, so the children of Christian believers are visible members in the Christian Church, it were all one as to say even as Esau hated Jacob so godly men are heirs of Heaven, or have access to God, the absurdity of which is so gross that I am amazed Mr. Bl. doth not see it or will not confess it, there being no likeness, or shew of answerablenes either in the compared subjects or in the compared predicates. Not in the subjects. For in the forepart the term, he that was born after the flesh, is taken in the worser part, as a term importing debasement, bondage, a curse, but in Mr. Bls. own expression Vindic. fœd. ch 40. the term [he that is born after the flesh] notes in the better part a natural seed that inherits outward privilges yea and that no small one to be a visible Church-member by vertue of birth after the flesh. And then in the predicates there is less answerablenes. For what answerablenes between persecuting him that was born after the Spirit who resembles the true believer, and having right to outward privileges as visible Church-membership and baptism by being born of a believer according to the flesh by natural generation, and this competent to infants? But the supplement is this. Even so now the Jew who is carnal seeking righteousness by observing the Law, and not through the Spirit waiting for the hope of the righteousness which is by faith, now persecuteth by words and deeds the Christian believer whether Jew or Gentile, who is born after the Spirit, that is who by the Spirit doth wait for the hope of the righteousness which is by faith Gal. 5. 5. This supplement is cleared to be genuine from the scope and series of the Apostles Doctrine before, and deductions after, and the constant exposition of interpreters. The Apostles Doctrine before is to dissuade the Galatian Christians from affecting to be under the Law, v. 21. as the false

teachers endeavoured to perſwade them. And to that end he teacheth them the allegory of Hagar and Sarah, and their children; Hagar and Sarah repreſent two Covenants, the one of the Law, the other of Righteouſneſs by Faith; and the Children repreſent the one the Juſticiaries that ſeek Righteouſneſs by the Works of the Law, and are tenacious of that Covenant, the other believers in Chriſt, who ſeek Righteouſneſs by Faith in him, and ſtick to the new Covenant of Grace, in which is promiſed the Juſt ſhall live by Faith. The former Covenant is a Covenant of Bondage, and the Children thereof are in bondage with their Mother, that is, they are not to inherit the promiſe of Righteouſneſs; but the later Covenant is free, and her Children are free-born heirs of Righteouſneſs. And though the former Covenant had many Children while the Jewiſh Church ſtood, the greateſt part reſting in the Law, and expecting their righteouſneſs in obſerving it, yet the new Covenant that was as barren, having none or very few that were born of it, there being but few that looked for redemption by the Meſſiah or the conſolation of Iſrael, but followed the Phariſes Doctrine, of conceiving themſelves righteous by keeping the Law, now, being made known to all Nations by preaching the Goſpel, hath many more children than the old, innumerable believers of the Gentiles as well as the Jews, embracing the Doctrine of the Goſpel concerning righteouſneſs by faith: and of this ſort are we, ſayth the Apoſtle, v. 28. But it happens to us as of old, as Iſhmael perſecuted Iſaac, ſo now the carnal Jews who are Juſticiaries perſecute us who are believers. And then follow deductions, one that it is Gods ſentence to reject Juſticiaries, as not heirs of righteouſneſs, v. 30. Another, the aſſerting the eſtate of believers to be a ſtate of freedom, v 31. and hereupon exhorts cap. 5. 1. that they ſhould ſtand faſt in their liberty wherein Chriſt hath made them free, and not be again intangled with the yoke of bondage, to wit, the Law and legal Covenant. And that the conſtant expoſition of Interpreters is for the ſenſe according to the ſupplement made by me, and not according to Mr. Bls. conceit, may appear by alleging ſome of their words, Hieronym. Comment. in Epiſt. ad Galat. lib. 2. cap. 4. thus paraphraſeth the words, Sicut ergo tum major frater Iſhmael lactentem adhuc & parvulum perſequebatur Iſaac, ſibi circumciſionis prærogativam, ſibi primogenita vendi-

Trapp. Com. on the place. Even so it is now*] And so also it is now, may we say at this day. For what do Papists persecute us for else, but because we reject their justification by works? which being determined I infer that Mr. Bls. arguing includes many absurdities. 1. That when it is

sayd, Even so it is now, and the term [they that are born after the flesh] is to be supplied, he by [being born after the flesh] means Birth by natural generation of infants born of Christian Parents, in which are many gross absurdities. 1. That he understands this sayd of infants, which must then be sayd to persecute. 2. That he takes [being born after the flesh] in the later part to note natural birth: but that is clean besides the Apostles meaning, who considers persons born after the flesh, not as born by humane members and seed, but as born by a fleshly covenant. Otherwise it should import no Allegory contrary to the Apostles speech, v. 24. which tels us these things are an Allegory, that is, do speak or declare some other thing than the narration according to the Grammar-sense imports, and that is, to be born according to the fleshly covenant, that is, to imbrace the Doctrine of that covenant. 3. That [to be born after the flesh] should import birth of Abraham as a believer, and so natural generation of each childe of a believer in that respect, but then [to be born after the flesh] would be common to Isaac with Ishmael, to him that is born after the spirit, of the free woman, by promise, with him that is born after the flesh of the bond woman; for to be born of Abraham or a believer agrees also to Isaac, to him that is born after the spirit, of the free woman, by promise; whereas to be born after the flesh is taken in a sense from which Isaac and we, that is, Paul and other Christian believers are excluded. For he infers v. 31. Therefore brethren, we are not the children of the bond woman, which is all one with this, We are not born after the flesh, as it is expressed, v. 23. whence it is apparent that [being born after the flesh] doth onely import the birth of the bond woman, generation by Abraham being not considered in this thing. 4. Mr. Bl. doth quite pervert the Apostles intent in taking to be born after the flesh to import an honour, and that it implies two things: 1. A birth of nature, a childe by lineal descent of such a father. 2. Outward Prerogatives that accompany such a birth, as his words are Vindic. Fœd. cap. 40. whereas the Apostle mentions birth after the flesh as a debasement, takes it in the worser part, not as importing a descent from the father, but from the mother, and that mother a bond woman, and therefore the children servants or bond slaves by reason of their being born after the flesh.

I will

I will use the words of Cameron in his Conference with Tilenus, Die Dominica April 26. 1620. sect. 18. Contrà verò Ismael etsi patre libero attamen matre serva natus est, porrò partus ventrem sequitur, nascendi ergo conditione servus fuit: tales scilicet sunt, qui Deo cultum exhibent servilem Justiciarii: where he explains the Apostles words, Gal. 4.

Against this Mr. Bl. excepts Vindic. Fœd. cap. 40. "1. That I make the Apostles parallel to look at the Allegory, and not at the History; when the Text makes it plain that the Apostle looks at the History, then and now are both Adverbs of time, and relate to Ishmaels jears in person, not to the malignity of men of the covenant of works against those of the covenant of grace: Here he is wholly silent, and answers in his Apology nothing at all."

Answ. I conceived in answering the second I had answered this exception. But I now answer particularly. I conceived he meant by the history those words v. 22. 23. and the forepart of the 29. v. As then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit. And by the parallel he meant the later part of the 29. v. And the allegory to be that which answers to Ishmael, to wit, to seek righteousness by the Law, and to Isaac, to wit, to seek righteousness by faith: which may be seen in Bezas and Piscators Diagrams, where Beza and Piscator make Ishmael συστοιχεῖν, to answer, or to be in the same rank as the type with the Justitiaries that seek righteousness by the Law, which answers to Hagar, whose generation is after the flesh, that is, justification is by works, and are cast out of the family of God, excluded from the inheritance of life as Ishmael from Abrahams, and Isaac to answer to believers by virtue of the Covenant of the Gospel answering to Sara, whose birth is after the Spirit, that is, whose justification is by faith, and so are in Abrahams house and heirs of eternal life. Now it is true I do make the history to be in the forepart of the 29. v. and the mystery or allegory in the later: not but that I acknowledg there is a history in both parts of the verse, as the Adverbs then and now shew. But it is not the same history in the later part of the verse which is in the former. For then there should be nothing allegorized, yea there would be a meer tautology, if as Mr. Bl. speaks, then and now both adverbs of time relate to Ishmaels jears in person, then the speech of the Apostle is inept or rather false. For then it should be [As Ishmael in person then jeered Isaac, so now Ishmael in person jeers Isaac] which is I say still a gross absurdity. But the later part contains another history of what was done in the Apostles time, where in the terms [born after the flesh and after the spirit] are allgorized, and applied to other sorts of persons, and the term [now] relates the malignity of men of the covenant of works against those of the covenant of grace, as hath been fully proved before against Mr. Blake.

2. "M. Bl. excepted, that I shut out the literal sense both from the history and parallel, and bring in an allegorical sense in both, when the contrary is evident in the Text, for though Ishmael be a Type of one under the covenant of works, yet that Ishmael himself was a Justiciary, or that he sought righteousness that way, and persecuted Isaac under any such notion, as a man for Gospel-righteousness, Scripture hath no word, or so much as any colour."

Answ. This exception is the same in effect with the former, and in answering this the former was answered in my Postscript, sect. 5. and now this is answered by answering the former, yet I finde a necessity to add something by reason of Mr. Bls. unreasonable importunity. I take notice that Ishmael is confessed to be a type of one under the covenant of works, and whether he were himself a Justiciary is not material, though sure there is some colour for it. But this seems to be Mr. Bls. minde that in the parallel, Gal. 4. 29. there's no allegorical sense, because Ishmael himself was not a Justitiary: which reason rests on this conceit, that neither in the forepart nor the later part of v. 29. by [he that was born after the flesh] is meant any other than Ishmael himself or in person, which how it makes the Apostles speech tautological or false is shewed before.

Mr. Bl. goes on, "To this he answers, he shuts not out the literal sense from the History but from the parallel, and that is so far from being contrary to the Text, that it is expressly sayd, These things are ἀλληγορούμενα, an Allegory: I desire the Reader to take notice, what kinde of interpretation Mr. T. will put on this Text, and who will have him pass for an eminent Scripture interpreter? (when Mr. B. is a man in his high censure defective in it) Then and now are both Adverbs of time, and we must have a literal then and a mystical now, one of them to answer the History and the other the Allegory; if my interpretation be thus gross, I desire the Reader to disclaim it; either the History must be wholly looked at in the parallel, or else the Allegory, there is that harmony between the Apostles then and now that will not admit such divorce and separation."

Answ. What I sayd of Mr. Bs. interpretations of Scripture in my Præcursor, sect. 3. appears by this writing to be right, and will appear more hereafter. Did he measure himself suo modulo ac pede, he would be more cautelous than he is in expounding Scripture, and if he did take warning by my words the Church of God would have cause to thank me for them, however he or Mr. Bl. take them. I am sorry that the Reader and my self are troubled about such flirtings rather than arguings, which Mr. Bl. here and elsewhere useth, which sure do ill become him, who should at the years he is now of rather weigh things than lightly pass over them with satyrical quips instead of arguments. He may take notice that I make no mystical Now, Gal. 4. 29. but in both parts the Adverbs of time are literal, and yet the terms [he that is born after the flesh, and he that is born after the spirit] are without any absurdity meant allegorically, as I have both sayd and demonstrated.

3. Sayth Mr. Bl. "I have told him, that he makes two contradistinct species of birth, that both cannot be incident to one man, no more than a man be a brute beast, or a brute beast a-bird; when it is plain that here is not a distribution of a genus into several species, but a distribution of a subject according to its several adjuncts, of which I give several instances."

Answ. I sayd in my Postscript, that I not onely make birth after the flesh and after the spirit contradistinct but also contrary. Contradistinct species may be incident to the same person, the same man may be long and broad, just and temperate, but not contrary, as white and black, just and unjust; [Birth] distributed into birth after the flesh and after the spirit must needs be a genus, or an equivocal term, it cannot be any subject either quod or quo, it being neither substance, quantity nor quality, but either act on or passion, action as from the mother, passion as in the person born.

Now actions though they are capable of various modifications, yet I do not think any Logicians call them subjects, or their several modifications adjuncts: but the substance whose action or passion it is, is the subject both of the action and passion, and their degrees and modifications, and these are adjuncts of that substance.

Mr. Bl. adds of me, "He is pleased to deny that it is a distribution of the subject according to its adjuncts, and gives in the thing in dispute for a reason. Then the same person (he says) would be born after the spirit and after the flesh."

Answ. I give in this reason I confess: but I did not think this was in dispute, but out of all dispute, the Apostle making them two sons born of two mothers, v. 22. two several ways, v. 23. born to two several estates, v. 24, 25, 30. the one persecuting the other, and all these diversities are in the persons which are Types, and in their Antitypes; and the Apostle thence inferreth, that the one are not the other, v. 31. whence it follows, that birth after the flesh and spirit are not adjuncts of the same subject, but contrary attributes of several subjects.

Mr. Bl. proceeds. "Presently he confesseth that Isaac was born after the flesh in the two senses I mention. And I am sure Mr. T. will not deny that Isaac was born after the Spirit, and then either truth is very absurd, or else Mr. T. hath quit me from absurdity; but then he says, It is untrue in the Apostles sense, for then he should be the childe of the bond-mayd, not by promise, a persecutor to be cast out, not to inherit. To which I answer, that my sense is the Apostles sense, and Mr. T. his sense far from it: For though the Apostle doth indeed allegorize the Text, as Arias Montanus renders it, quæ sunt allegorizata, yet the Apostle in the parallel looks at the letter of the history, as I have shewen, not at the Allegory, which Mr. T. had not a face to oppose, either he must deny now and then to be Adverbs of time, or else he must allow of my interpretation, Ishmael did never as a Justitiary prosecute Isaac under the notion of a follower of Evangelical righteousness.

Answ. I do confess Isaac was born after the Spirit, and that he was born after the flesh in the two senses of Mr. Bl. for one born of natural parents Abraham was his natural father, and in the sense more common in Scripture for the outward prerogatives that accompany such a birth (though I do not find the phrase, born after the flesh in this later sense in Scripture, not Phil. 3.4. Rom. 9.3.5. 2 *Cor.*5.16. where the term [flesh] is used and yet I think onely in the first place importing prerogatives, no where the phrase born after the flesh in that sense) yet not in the Apostles sense, in which to be born after the flesh notes birth without consideration of the father as by a mother that was a bond-woman, and so no prerogative is intimated in it but a debasement or deminution and so Isaac was not born after the flesh, that is not of a bond-woman, by an usual way of generation, but of the free-woman by Divine virtue according to a promise to her when past childe-bearing in the course of nature. And this to be the Apostles sense is proved before, and Mr. Bls. sense proved very absurd, and his reasons for it answered.

Yet he adds of me. "After some concessions in full contradiction to himself, I deny not (saith he) but legal Justiciaries may be in the visible Church as Ishmael in Abrahams house, though the Apostle make the parallel onely in the casting out, that they might not inherit, *Apolog. pag.*114.) he saith, if Mr. Bl. would gather any thing hence for himself, he must prove that the Apostle makes some to be of the visible Church by virtue of being born after the flesh as their prerogative, which is as wide from the Apostles meaning, as the East is from the West, as far as the East is from the Sun-rising, he should have said, that is the thing that I have proved, and do maintain, I laid down by way of Syllogism and have an Apology instead of an answer. Mr. T. hath a notable faculty in begging of the question in agitation. The Apostles full scope (I confess) is another thing, but I still affirm that he occasionally expresses that from whence this is evidently deduced, namely a distinction of births literal not allegorical, which Mr. T. never will be able with any reason to deny, till it can be proved that then and now look at the Allegory, not at the History; I can prove from Luke 13.16. that the Israelitish women are daughters of Abraham, though it is plain that another thing there was Christs main intention.

Answ. Mr. Bl. continues to write at random. There's no shew of contradiction much less a full contradiction in my words to

my self. This may be true, Justitiaries may be in the visible Church, and this also, To be born after the flesh or to be a Justitiary doth not import a prerogative giving title to be of the visible Church, my speech was right, and needs not to be mended by any of Mr. Bls. flirts. He hath a full answer to his Syllogism before, and so he had before in the Apology, the strength of his arguing being thus expressed here, The consequence is plain, birth of the flesh in the Church gave a Church interest, which is denied to be proved from Galat. 4. 26. and was denied before. And though being an answerer I need not prove, and therefore begging the question is charged on me frivolously by Mr. Bl. For he only begs the question who takes for granted that which he should prove (which is Mr. Bls. fault who useth to dictate when he should prove) yet did I prove that the Apostles scope is not onely another thing than the asserting of a prerogative of visible Church-membership by being born after the flesh, that is, being the childe of a believer by natural generation, but that he deduceth their casting out of the Church from it, and that the birth after the flesh is taken in the worser part as that which bringeth bondage not Church estate or Christian liberty, nor doth birth after the flesh respect the descent from a believer but the bond-woman, and that this birth is in the Antitype allegorical, and yet the Adverbs then and now are Adverbs of time, and a history is related in both parts of the 29. v. of Gal. 4. Generally interpreters take the words, even so it is now, as meant of the Jews, which cannot be true literally: for they were not born after the flesh, that is, of bond-women, but of free-women, which were true Israelites, or daughters of Abraham, as Mr. B. here confesseth.

Mr. Bl. proceeds. Secondly, he sayth that I say, such are in the bosom of the Church, when the Apostle sayth, they persecute the Church, and are cast out: I desire the Reader to consider, if this had any truth in it; whether it hold with greater strength for me or him? They are cast out, and therefore they were in, is my Argument: they are cast out, and therefore were never in, sayth Mr. T. 2. The Apostle sayth no such thing, that they are cast out; Ishmael was in the family when he persecuted, though afterwards he was cast out of the family; these are in the Church, though in case they continue persecution, they shall in time be cast out; now in present they have a being in it.

Answ. It is true that this was my second Exception against his gross perverting of the Apostles words, [even so it is now] as if the meaning were, that by virtue of being born after the flesh, some infants, to wit, those that are born of a believing parent are in the bosom of the Church, when the Apostle sayth, 1. They persecute, which cannot be meant of infants. 2. In that they are born after the flesh they persecute the Church, therefore he ascribes no privilege to them, as accruing to them, by the birth after the flesh, but a cursed practice. 3. That they persecute the Church, therefore while born after the flesh they were not in the bosom of the Church, that is the Church Christian visible. 4. That they are cast out, therefore not in the Church. To the two first of these nothing is answered, the consequence of the third is denied, he supposeth they did persecute the Church, and yet remained in; which is most palpably false: For this being apparently meant of the unbelieving Jews that sought righteousness by the Law, and acknowledged so by Interpreters, it is notoriously false, that they were in the bosom of the Christian Church, while they did persecute the Church; yea, Saul himself was not after his conversion taken in presently to communion with the Disciples at Jerusalem, till they knew that he ceased to be a persecutor, Acts 9.26. so that the words [even so it is now] expounded as Mr. Bls. words intimate [even so now by virtue of being born after the flesh, that is, by natural generation born of a believing parent, there are some even infants that are in the bosom of the Christian visible Church, as members of it, and remaining in it, do persecute the Church] are so false, and the Exposition so unsavoury, that it is a wonder to me, that neither Mr. Bl. nor the Prefacers to his Book take care to have it left out. That which Mr. Bl. answers to the fourth thing in this exception is of like stamp. 1. He sayth, It follows not they were cast out, therefore never in. But my Argument is this, they were by reason of their being born after the flesh cast out, therefore not for this reason in the bosom of the Church. 2. That it follows, they are cast out, therefore they were in: which consequence I deny, being understood of the Church Christian visible, and the particular persons who are sayd to be cast out: for they are sayd to be cast out not from what they had, but from what they might have had

my self. This may be true, Justitiaries may be in the visible Church, and this also, To be born after the flesh or to be a Justitiary doth not import a prerogative giving title to be of the visible Church, my speech was right, and needs not to be mended by any of Mr. Bls. flirts. He hath a full answer to his Syllogism before, and so he had before in the Apology, the strength of his arguing being thus expressed here, The consequence is plain, birth of the flesh in the Church gave a Church interest, which is denied to be proved from Galat. 4. 26. and was denied before. And though being an answerer I need not prove, and therefore begging the question is charged on me frivolously by Mr. Bl. For he only begs the question who takes for granted that which he should prove (which is Mr. Bls. fault who useth to dictate when he should prove) yet did I prove that the Apostles scope is not onely another thing than the asserting of a prerogative of visible Church-membership by being born after the flesh, that is, being the childe of a believer by natural generation, but that he deduceth their casting out of the Church from it, and that the birth after the flesh is taken in the worser part as that which bringeth bondage not Church estate or Christian liberty, nor doth birth after the flesh respect the descent from a believer but the bond-woman, and that this birth is in the Antitype allegorical, and yet the Adverbs then and now are Adverbs of time, and a history is related in both parts of the 29. v. of Gal. 4. Generally interpreters take the words, even so it is now, as meant of the Jews, which cannot be true literally: for they were not born after the flesh, that is, of bond-women, but of free-women, which were true Israelites, or daughters of Abraham, as Mr. B. here confesseth.

Mr. Bl. proceeds. Secondly, he sayth that I say, such are in the bosom of the Church, when the Apostle sayth, they persecute the Church, and are cast out: I desire the Reader to consider, if this had any truth in it; whether it hold with greater strength for me or him? They are cast out, and therefore they were in, is my Argument: they are cast out, and therefore were never in, sayth Mr. T. 2. The Apostle sayth no such thing, that they are cast out; Ishmael was in the family when he persecuted, though afterwards he was cast out of the family; these are in the Church, though in case they continue persecution, they shall in fine be cast out; now in present they have a being in it.

Answ. It is true that this was my second Exception against his gross perverting of the Apostles words, [even so it is now] as if the meaning were, that by virtue of being born after the flesh, some infants, to wit, those that are born of a believing parent are in the bosom of the Church, when the Apostle sayth, 1. They persecute, which cannot be meant of infants. 2. In that they are born after the flesh they persecute the Church, therefore he ascribes no privilege to them, as accruing to them, by the birth after the flesh, but a cursed practice. 3. That they persecute the Church, therefore while born after the flesh they were not in the bosom of the Church, that is the Church Christian visible. 4. That they are cast out, therefore not in the Church. To the two first of these nothing is answered, the consequence of the third is denied, he supposeth they did persecute the Church, and yet remained in; which is most palpably false: For this being apparently meant of the unbelieving Jews that sought righteousness by the Law, and acknowledged so by Interpreters, it is notoriously false, that they were in the bosom of the Christian Church, while they did persecute the Church; yea, Saul himself was not after his conversion taken in presently to communion with the Disciples at Jerusalem, till they knew that he ceased to be a persecutor, Acts 9.26. so that the words [even so it is now] expounded as Mr. Bls. words intimate [even so now by virtue of being born after the flesh, that is, by natural generation born of a believing parent, there are some even infants that are in the bosom of the Christian visible Church, as members of it, and remaining in it, do persecute the Church] are so false, and the Exposition so unsavoury, that it is a wonder to me, that neither Mr. Bl. nor the Prefacers to his Book take care to have it left out. That which Mr. Bl. answers to the fourth thing in this exception is of like stamp. 1. He sayth, It follows not they were cast out, therefore never in. But my Argument is this, they were by reason of their being born after the flesh cast out, therefore not for this reason in the bosom of the Church. 2. That it follows, they are cast out, therefore they were in: which consequence I deny, being understood of the Church Christian visible, and the particular persons who are sayd to be cast out; for they are sayd to be cast out not from what they had, but from what they might have had

of others had; as Matth. 8. 12. it is sayd, The children of the Kingdome shall be cast out (of the Kingdom of Heaven, v. 11. in which others were, and they not) into outer darkness. He sayth also, The Apostle sayth no such thing that they are cast out, but mentions a command of casting them out. To which I replied, As if Gods dictum were not factum: if they were not cast out, why doth the Apostle allege that Text? My meaning was, Gods speech of the casting out of Hagar and Ishmael was not a bare command, but such as included a sentence and decree of God, which he took course to execute, and that the Apostle alleged the Text not to prove a duty, but to shew an event, or fact of God. For as the Apostle alleged it, the casting out is of the legal covenant, and the children of it those that desired to be under the Law, and their casting out is their rejecting from the inheritance of righteousness and being Gods people: now this could not be any mans duty but Gods act determining and accordingly accomplishing this sentence, that righteousness shall not be by the Law, nor Justitiaries this people, and therefore it is most absurd in Mr. Bl. to determine, that some by vertue of being born after the flesh have a right to be in the bosom of the Church Christian, when the Apostle determines they are for this reason rejected or cast out.

I had, thirdly, excepted against Mr. Bl. as making those that are born after the flesh, Gal. 4. 29. Abrahams seed, wherein he joyns with Arminius in calling them Abrahams seed who sought justice in the Law, Mr. Bl. Vindic. Fœd. cap. 40. sayth, I joyn with Arminius, and that he follows Mr. Bayne. For sayth he, I interpret it of a natural seed that inherit outward privileges, and never reach the birth of the spirit, so Mr. Baines interprets it, the children of the flesh here, are those onely who in course of nature came from Abraham, Baines on Ephes. 1. pag. 140. quarto.

Answ. It is true Mr. Bayne hath those words, but yet he excepteth pag. 139. against Arminius as I do for calling legal justitiaries (who are meant by [they that are born after the flesh, Gal. 4. 29.]) Abrahams seed. For there he thus speaks. Beside that, though the sons of the flesh may signifie such, who carnally, not spiritually conceive of the Law, yet the seed of Abraham without any adjoyned is never so taken. It is true that Mr. Baines so interprets the term [children of the flesh, Rom. 9. 8.] as Mr. Bl. hath hath cited him, which place he meant by [here] but not the term [he that is born after the flesh, Gal.4.29.] yea *pag.*138. he saith, For though children of the flesh in some other Scripture (meaning Gal.4.29.) doth note out Justitiaries, seeking salvation in the Law, yet here (Rom.9.8.) the literal meaning is to be taken; a childe of the flesh being such a one who descendeth from Abraham according to the flesh. So that this is the thing that I except against Mr. Bl. for that whereas by the consent of all, that I know, interpreters besides himself [they that are born after the flesh, Gal.4.29. in the apodosis there even so it is now] do note legal Justitiaries who are there called the children of the bond-woman, not called Abrahams seed (for those he had determined before to be those of the faith, Gal. 3.9. Christs v.29.) not to inherit, but cast out, he on the contrary, makes them Abrahams seed as Arminius doth in his Analysis of Rom.9. And ascribes to them the inheriting of outward privileges as to be members of the visible Church in that they are born after the flesh. Whereas the term [born after the flesh] is taken in the worser part precisely from the birth from the bond-woman abstractively from generation by Abraham and importing no privilege, but a privation of privilege. As for Mr. Baym, though he interpret [children of the flesh, Rom. 9. 8.] of those onely who in course of nature came from Abraham, and proves there that it notes not legal Justitiaries, because it is applyed to Esau who is considered as having done neither good nor evil. Yet Mr. Bl. wrongs him in two things. 1. In that he saith, Mr. Baine interprets it of a natural seed inheriting outward privileges, whereas though Mr. Baine doth interpret [children of the flesh, Rom.9.8.] of a natural seed, yet not as inheriting thereby outward privileges. 2. That he makes his exposition of [children of the flesh, Rom.9.8] to be his exposition of [those that are born after the flesh, Gal.4.29.] whereas he expresly saith, though children of the flesh in some other Scripture (which can be no other than Gal.4.29. doth note out Justitiaries, seeking salvation in the Law. I confess Cameron in his Conference with Tilenus in the place before cited makes Ishmael not onely a Type of Justitiaries, Gal.4.23.29. but also Rom.9.7,8 9. and Isaac a Type of believers in both places, and Esau and Jacob Types not of Justitiaries and believers, but of uncalled and called, non-elect and elect, and so the resemblance to be different of the two former brethren from the later; which to me seems not right: for me thinks the words οὐ μόνον δέ, ἀλλὰ καὶ, have this sense, that the thing he had sayd before did not onely appear in Ishmael and Isaac, but also more fully in Esau and Jacob, which me thinks imports, that the Apostle meant to prove the same thing by Esau and Jacob, which he did by Ishmael and Isaac, and me thinks the long Parenthesis he imagines from v. 10, to 30. agrees not with that expression v. 10. Not onely so but also, they being connexive particles, and so not agreeable to a Parenthesis. But Cameron and all others I know, understand by [those that are born after the flesh, Gal. 4. 29.] legal Justitiaries. Mr. John Cotton Grounds of baptism, &c. pag. 158. By such as are born after the flesh (Gal. 4. 29.) the Apostle doth not mean such as are born by ordinary course of nature: but such as are born and bred of the carnal seed of the Covenant of the Law; which as it begot by Ishmael carnal confidence of his own strength, (or else he would never have slighted and mocked the promised seed) so it begat in Cain and Saul and Judas an utter despair of grace and salvation.

My fourth exception was, whereas the covenant of grace is made the reason of baptizing infants; to be born of Hagar, that is, to be in the covenant of works, should give a childe interest into the Church of Christ. To this all that Mr. Bl. replies is this, If Mr. Tombs his Gloss (borrowed from Arminius) must stand for the sense of the place, that to be born of the flesh, is to be under the covenant of works, then it will hardly be avoided; but in case Mr. Baines interpretation may stand of a birth in nature, according to the flesh, then the Argument is valid.

Answ. That Mr. Baines doth interpret no otherwise the term [born after the flesh, Gal. 4. 29.] than I do, is shewed above: yet if it were true, that he did as Mr. Bl. mis-allegeth him interpret [born after the flesh, Gal. 4. 29.] of those onely who in course of nature came from Abraham, yet it is false that either there or Rom. 9. 8. he conceived this term [children of the flesh] to import a natural seed by virtue of it inheritiing outward privileges, and therefore the Argument of Mr. Bl. is not valid, though Mr. Baines were granted to be rightly alleged by him. And for that he sayth, I bor- row my Gloss from Arminius: I answer, I have shewed that I have deduced it from the Apostles own words, and have the concurrent judgment of many Divines of best note, to whom it is no disparagement, that in this Arminius joyns.

Mr. Brinsley and Dr. Homes their conjecture from Hebr. 6. 2. to prove infant-baptism is refelled.

THere is another Text, to wit, Hebr. 6. 2. from which Dr. Homes Animad. on my Exercit. pag. 58. and after cap. 10. would prove Infant-baptism, and with him Mr. John Brinsley Doctrine and Practice of Paedob. pag. 76. &c. which if their arguing were good, would not onely prove the practice of infant-baptism, but also that it is a principle of Christianity, and part of the foundation.

The arguing is to this effect, If the Doctrine of laying on of hands put after the Doctrine of baptisms cannot be expounded of any other than the laying on of hands for confirming the baptized in infancy than the Doctrine of laying on of hands put after the Doctrine of baptisms presupposeth infant-baptism. But the Antecedent is true, Ergo, the Consequent. The Antecedent is proved by parts, 1. It cannot be understood of laying on of hands for healing or miraculous gifts of the Spirit. For then the knowledg of the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit should be put among the Principles of Christian knowledg, which is absurd.

To which I answered in my Exercit. pag. 22. that it is no absurdity to put that among the Principles of Christian knowledg, those gifts being though by extraordinary power, yet frequent in those days, and necessary to be known to confirm young Christians, that Jesus is the Christ, because the Spirit thus given was the great witness concerning Christ, that he was the Son of God, and shewed that he was gone up to the Father, else the Spirit had not descended, it was it by which the world was rebuked, and the Saints established.

To this sayth Dr. Homes, that I by and by as good as confess it is a vulgar reason, because I go about to prove that imposition of hands here mentioned is for Ordination, because it was still in use, and to continue to be used.

Answ. The Doctor misallegeth my words; for I do not say positively as he cites them, but comparatively thus; for it is more likely that imposition of hands for Ordination, which was still in use, and to continue to be used, should be there meant, than laying on of hands for confirmation after baptism of infants, which hath no Rule nor Example in Scripture.

2. Saith Dr. Homes, These gifts usual onely in that little time of the Apostles were not to be joyned with, and put among the first Principles of Christian Religion to be taught young ones to fit them for baptism, or to give an account of their faith after baptism.

Answ. Those Principles Heb. 6. 1, 2. are not sayd to be taught to little ones in age, but in knowledg of Christian Religion, nor are they sayd to be taught to fit them for baptism, or to give account of their faith after baptism: they may be principles and a foundation, though they were taught them after baptism, and to establish themselves rather than to give account to others. Now for what reason the knowledg of these might be a part of the beginnings of the Doctrine of Christ to young Christians is given above. And there is in the Text that which may induce us to conceive the giving the spirit by laying on of hands meant, because v. 4. they that were enlightned, which many even of the Ancients understood of baptism, commonly called by the Greeks [inlightning] are sayd, to have tasted of the heavenly gift and to be partakers of the Holy Ghost, which seems to be meant in respect of these gifts, and Paul Acts 19. 2. propounded this as a Catechism question to certain Disciples at Ephesus, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? But I rested not on it, because the other of laying on of hands for Ordination seemed to me more likely then.

2. Saith Mr. Brinsley, It's not likely to be meant of laying on of hands for Ordination, 1. Because that's not fit to be taught younglings, children, novices; as milk, Heb. 5. 12. If this be milk, viz. the Doctrine of Church-discipline, Church-officers, Church-goverment, &c. what shall we call or count strong meat?

To

To this was answered, that however all the Doctrine about Church-discipline might be unfit to be taught novices, yet laying on hands for Ordination being an outward rite of continued use, it might be needfull to be taught younglings in Christian profession.

To this Dr. Homes replies, that no ingenuous man weighing and pondering things will think that little children should be taught, as one of the first elements of Christian faith the imposition of hands to ordain Ministers.

To which I say, many even of later Writers, whom me thinks the Doctor should not deny to be ingenuous men do refer the laying on of hands, *Heb.*6.2. to Ordination, Dieson on *Heb.*6.2. *Ames Bell. Ener. tom.*3. *lib.*3. *cap.*2. *th.*8. Cartwright Answ. to Rh. Annot. in locum, *Thomas Hooker Survey part.*1. *cap.*1. *pag.*7. *Noyes the Temple measured, pag.*70. *Hudson Essence and Unity of the Church, pag.*9. and *Vindic. pag.*22. Dr. Hammond of the *Keys cap.*4. *sect.*28. *Chamier tom.*4. *Panstr. Cath. lib.*4. *cap.*10. *sect.*38. recites the opinions of Papists, as differing, some referring to Confirmation, some to Ordination, some to giving the Holy Ghost. The New Annot. Diodati, speak as uncertain, to which to refer it, Grotius refers it to all rites besides baptism; and the Lords Supper, in Confirmation, Ordination, curing the sick, reconciling penitents, blessing the married, and therefore whether little children were taught the Doctrine thereof or no, many ingenuous men conceive it meant, *Heb.*6.2. 2. Though it might be conceived unfit for little children in age to be taught, yet it may nevertheless be fit to be taught younglings in Christianity meant, *Heb.*5.12. It seems to me to be as fit to be taught little children as the Doctrine of Confirmation, and may be as easily learned by them as the points about the Resurrection of the Dead, and eternal Judgment.

2. Sayth Mr. Brinsley, The very putting these two together [baptisms and laying on of hands] seems in Calvins judgment to import some relation that the one should have to the other, as in the other Principles which are by pairs.

To this I answered, that baptism and imposition of hands might be fitly coupled, being both Ordinances for initiation, the one into the profession of Christianity, the other into sacred function.

To

To this Dr. Homes replies, that imposition of hands initiates but few, and that long after they are Church-members, and that Matriage might better be coupled with baptism or imposition of hands and the Lords Supper.

Answ. If all this were granted, yet the answer stands good, that the joyning proves not Mr. Brinsleys sense necessary, which is enough for my purpose to shew the insufficiency of his Argument.

But Dr. Homes thinks to blow away all by avouching his and Mr. Brinsleys interpretation, which he cals a naked and honest explication of the Text. And that is, that the Doctrine of baptisms is the Doctrine which the catechized of the heathens recited afore their baptism, and the Doctrine of laying on of hands was the Doctrine which infants of believers before baptized in their infancy, after they were past childhood, rehearsed before the Church, upon which they were received into the Church by imposition of hands.

Answ. He may well call it a naked interpretation, because it is brought into the world without proof, there being nothing in the Text for it, and all the shew of proof is onely the opinion of some late writers mistaken about the practise of antiquity. Yea me thinks if the Doctor with his brethren of the congregational way, as it is called, did believe this interpretation to be genuine, they should admit their infant-sprinkled members by laying on of hands, which yet I hear not that they do. But against this interpretation are these reasons. 1. In it is supposed that the Doctrine of baptisms, and laying on of hands is not the Doctrine concerning those rites, but the Doctrine recited when those rites were used. But the Doctrine then recited being the Doctrine of the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment, and the profession of repentance from dead works and faith towards God, if the Doctrine of baptisms and the laying on of hands be the Doctrine recited by the baptized, and confirmed at the use of those rites, it will be the same with the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment, repentance from dead works and faith towards God, and so those several principles will be confounded. 2. The Doctrine of baptisms was that which in those to whom the Apostles wrote was layd before, which is intimated in the words

*v.*1. not laying again. But they were Hebrews, therefore not, as the Doctor, Heathens that recited it at baptiſm. 3. There's no diſtinction in the Text as if ſome recited the Doctrine at baptiſm, and others who had been baptized in infancy recited it at laying on of hands, but the ſame perſons had the Doctrine of both layd in them. 4. There's not a word of reciting the Doctrine at the ſeveral rites by the taught, but the laying of the foundation of the Doctrine of thoſe rites by the Teachers. 5. The Doctrine of baptiſms whether by them be meant thoſe of John and Chriſt, or other, and of laying on of hands is more likely and more generally conceived to be concerning the uſe of baptiſm and laying on of hands. But the Doctrine of the uſe of theſe was not recited by either ſort of catechized perſons, though both ſorts were taught both doctrines. 6. The placing the words [the Doctrine of baptiſms and laying on of hands] in the middle between faith and reſurrection of the dead, is againſt the Doctors ſenſe, ſith the Doctrine of baptiſms, being joyned by appoſition to faith and repentance, the ſenſe muſt be, that repentance and faith were the Doctrine recited at baptiſm, not the reſurrection of the dead, which comes after, if the Doctors ſenſe were right. 7. This order leads us to conceive, that the writer of that Epiſtle did orderly place the elements of Chriſtianity in which Chriſtians were inſtructed, to wit, repentance and faith before baptiſm, then the baptiſm of water, and the laying on of hands for the obtaining the Spirit by prayer after baptiſm, and then the declaration of what they were to expect, the reſurrection of the dead, and eternal judgement, wherein ſentence ſhould paſs on them concerning their everlaſting ſtate. 8. The terms [of repentance, of faith, of the doctrine, of the reſurrection, of judgement] are all governed of [θεμέλιον, the foundation] as if they were poſſeſſed of it (as the Grammarians ſpeak) the word [Doctrine] is not joyned by appoſition to [faith] as if the ſenſe were [which is the Doctrine of baptiſms] which muſt be the ſenſe if the Doctors interpretation be right. 9. Thoſe interpreters which are brought as giving us that ſenſe which Dr. Homes and Mr. Brinſley allege are but late writers, and ſuch as ſpeak onely by gheſs without proving the antiquity of the uſe they mention out of ancient writers, or alleging any ancient writer expounding the Text *Heb.*6.2. as referring to that uſe, Dr.

Homes recites p. 59, 60. the words of Pareus, Calvin, Bullinger, Marlorat, Hofman, Theophylact, Mr. Cotton, of all which there is none afore the 16. Century but Theophylact placed by Dr. Usher atthe year 1070. and his words with the words of Hofman, and Marlorat do not at all speak of the use of laying hands on children of believers baptized in infancy, and Bullingers words apply the laying on of hands to the ordination of Pastors. So heedlesly did Dr. Homes write his Animadversions that his own authors he allegeth are not for him, or else against him. And for Mr. Cotton he sayth onely, There be that conceive and that not improbable there was such an use, and that some judicious Divines have conceived that use to be the reason of reckoning the laying on of hands among the Principles, Heb. 6. 2. and he brings it to prove that then Elders were not without laying on of hands, for all Church-members had hands layd on them, and so might more freely lay hands on others: which speech if true, and the inference be good, then women who were Church-members had hands layd on them, and might more freely lay hands on others. But the New England Elders, of whom I think Mr. Cotton was one, if not the very Penner of those answers, in the Answer to the 32. Question pag. 69. say, If it were not so, then one of these would follow, either that the Officers must minister without any Ordination at all, which is against 1 Tim. 4. 16. Heb. 6. 2. So that there it is referred to the same laying on of hands which is mentioned 1 Tim. 4. 14. which is indeed a very common exposition of interpreters. It is true Calvin and Pareus refer it to the use Mr. Brinsley mentions: yet Chamier tom. 4. Panstr. Cath. lib. 4. cap. 10. sect. 39. allegeth with Salmeron, Justinian, Calvin, Beza, Aretius, Piscator, concerning the initial laying on of hands upon the catechized to prepare them to receive baptism, (for which use Dr. Hammond in his letter of resolut. pag. 195. brings some places of the ancients) and Calvin in his institutions l. 4. cap. 19. sect. 4. disallows Hieroms judgment, conceiving that the laying on of hands for confirmation was an Apostolical Ordinance. Beza saith, that the Doctrine Heb. 6. 1, 2. was delivered when they met either to baptize, or lay on hands on infants or adult persons; so that he speaks as one not fully resolved. And indeed interpreters, as is shewed above, are not agreed whether to refer it to laying on hands on the baptized or the ordained, yet very few of the Protestants refer it to the laying on of hands for confirmation of them that were baptized in infancy, and the 25. Article of the Church of England makes Confirmation one of those things which have grown of the corrupt following of the Apostles.

I sayd in my *Exercit. sect.*14. that if *Hierom. tom.*2. in his Dialogue against the Luciferians do assert that use of imposition of hands from Scripture, yet he allegeth not *Heb.*6.2. for it, but the Examples of giving the Holy Ghost by laying on of hands in the Acts of the Apostles.

To this Dr. Homes replies, 1. That however the antiquity holds good, that imposition of hands was used to be after applied to them that have been baptized.

To which I say, This being granted, yet as I shew there and here the use of baptizing infants is not proved thereby, nor doth Hierom confirm Mr. Brinsleys Exposition.

2. Sayth Dr. Homes, In that place he quotes other places than the Acts of the Apostles, and speaks to our purpose thus, and then reciting some words of Hierom, adds, so Hieronymus. Wherefore he supposeth imposition of hands may be on them that had the Spirit in baptism before: which is not denied by me, nor do I see what that is to Dr. Homes his purpose to prove *that the laying on of hands Heb.*6.2. is meant of believers infants before baptized, and then upon their own profession received into the Church by imposition of hands. Yet *Chamier. tom.*4. *Panstr. Cath. lib.*4. *cap.*11. *sect.*41. allegeth Hierom, as referring the imposition of hands to the time of baptism, not some years after.

I sayd in my *Exercit. pag.*23. but if it were supposed, that this imposition of hands meant *Heb.*6.2. were on the baptized; yet this proves not the baptism of infants in the Apostles days, unless it could be proved, that it was used after the baptism of infants onely for a confirmation either of the baptism or the baptized. On the contrary, it is apparent out of *Tertullian de corona militis, cap.*3. that in the primitive times the baptized did make his confession sub manu antistitis, the Minister laying hands on him.

To this Dr. Homes says, 1. That the learned men before quoted gave us the sum of Antiquity. But how little to the purpoſe their words are, or how deſtitute of proof is ſhewed above. 2. He cites in the Margin Tertul. de bapt. Cyprian. Ep. 3. & 70. Auguſt. Tract. 6. on Johns Epiſt. But none of the paſſages he cites prove the uſe of laying on hands after the baptiſm of infants, which is many years after baptiſm, but of laying hands preſently after baptiſm. 3. He excepts againſt my allegation out of Tertullian, that he there diſputes for receiving unwritten traditions, that he alludes to no Scripture authority, or to any approved Antiquity: Which doth no whit infringe my allegation: For notwithſtanding theſe things his teſtimony is valid for the practice of what was done at baptiſm in his time, of which no doubt he was often a ſpectator.

4. Saith he, [Sub manu] is a Phraſe that hath ſo many ſenſes as it is no ways certain, that here [Sub manu] [under the hand] ſignifies impoſition of hands. Haply it may rather ſignifie the Miniſters liſting up of his hand in prayer: as Pacianus hath it, We obtain, ſayth he, in Prayer pardon, and the Holy Spirit in baptiſm by the mouth and hand of the Antiſtes.

Anſw. The moſt likely ſenſe is, the Biſhop laying on his hand, as being neareſt the uſe of the phraſe. Dr. Homes his ſenſe is not likely, 1. Becauſe that which is ſayd was done under the hand of the Biſhop, to wit, the proteſtation of the baptized, intimates that the Biſhop did not then lift up his hand in prayer, but hold his hand on the head of the Proteſtant. Nor is it likely he would then be praying when he ſhould attend to his confeſſion. 2. Dr. Homes ſhews not the phraſe to be uſed elſewhere in his ſenſe. For that which he cites out of Pacianus is a different expreſſion, by the hand, is not all one with under the hand. And yet Chamier. Panſtr. Cath. tom. 4. lib. 4. cap. 11. ſect. 28. refers that obtaining by the hand to the impoſition of hands at baptiſm.

I added further. And to ſave labour in reciting teſtimonies Chamier may be ſeen, who in his Panſtr. Cath. tom. 4. lib. 4. cap. 11. ſect. 14. &c. at large proves out of the Ancients, that the impoſition of hands, which was after made a diſtinct Sacrament called Confirmation, was either a part or Appendix of baptiſm, and cites many paſſages to ſhew, that it was when the baptized was to confeſs the faith, and renounce Satan.

Againſt this Dr. Homes excepts, that Chamier quotes but few,

and those not of credit. But though the Books some of them be not the Authors works whose names they bear, yet many of them are of credit, yea all for what they are brought, and for the purpose for which they are alleged, however Dr. Homes scorn or score with his nails those Fathers; if I may use his own words of my doing which is more justly to be charged on himself. Dr. Homes grants there imposition of hands presupposeth baptism, precedent, though in men of ripe years, but he should have added at the same solemnity joyned with it. The other testimonies are sufficient to shew the practice in the Age in which the Writers of them lived. But for Dr. Homes to say, that Chamier doth not assert as from himself or from antiquity, that imposition of hands was to be conjoyned with baptism, when he doth at large undertake to prove, it was a part or appendix of baptism, is too much boldness in the Doctor, much more to say, But rather tels us the contrary, partly from himself, partly from the Authors he quotes, as that men were reconciled in penance by imposition of hands, Sect. 53. which is nothing to the business. For though imposition of hands in reconciliation might be unconjoyned to baptism, yet what Chamier says stands good, that imposition of hands for Confirmation was a part or appendix of baptism. And what the Doctor adds, Sect. 54. that though Confirmation belongs to the solemnities of baptism, yet after a while after baptism, is a plain confession of what I allege as averred by Chamier, that that imposition of hands which after was made a distinct Sacrament long after baptism, did formerly belong to the solemnity of baptism: which shews how little regard the Doctor had to his own allegations. But it is not Chamier alone who avers that anciently baptism and laying on of hands were together; Salmasius also a man of very accurate study in Antiquity in his Apparatus ad librum de Primatu Papæ, pag. 84. speaks thus, Discat igitur in Ægypto & in Gracia & in toto Oriente confirmationem quæ separata est à baptismo non fuisse notam. Unus idemq; Presbyter in omnibus Orientis Ecclesiis simul & semel in baptismo conferendo etiam Chrismationem cum manuum impositione ac signaculo Dominico dabat egressis è piscina sive baptisterio: which he proves thereout of Severus Alexandr. Cyrillus Hierosolymitanus, and refers to more testimonies in his Treatise De Chrismate. And he says, p. 124. Pri- nis temporibus in Occidente Chrismatio & manuum impositio sequebantur post baptismum, posteaquam à baptismo separata est confirmatio aliquando in sola Chrismatione constitit, pag. 182. he proves in Tertullians, Cyprians, and others times, that Hæ tres erant baptismi hoc est unius Sacramenti partes, lotio, unctio, & impositio manuum. Out of all which I conclude, that the laying on of hands for the confirmation of children of believers baptized in infancy, when they came to years, and professed the faith, was altogether unknown in the Eastern Churches anciently, and in the Western onely in the declining times, and therefore notwithstanding Calvin and Pareus his conceits there was no such thing meant, Heb. 6.2. as baptism of infants, and their receiving into the Church, many years after by laying on of hands, there being no such things known in the days of that Writer, nor some hundred of years after, and therefore Mr. Brinsley and Dr. Homes Argument from thence for infant-baptism is of no weight. I go on.

SECT. XXIV.

DR. Henry Hammond in his Letter of Resolution to six Queries, in the fourth Quere, Sect. 23. speaks thus, But there is no need of laying much weight on this, or any the like more imperfect ways of probation, (meaning the example of Circumcision, *Gen.*17. of baptizing a whole household, Acts 16.33. Christs reception of little children, Matth. 19.14. Mark 10 16.) The whole fabrick being sufficiently supported, and built on this Basis (the customary baptism among the Jews) and that discernible to be so, if we consider it first negatively, then positively. First negatively, that Christian baptism, which is an institution of Christs, lightly changed from the Jewish custome of receiving of Proselytes by him appointed in his life-time, and settled a little before his Ascension hath nothing in the patern, whence it is copied out, nothing in the copy it self, as it is set down in the New Testament, ſtament, i. e. in the words of the inſtitution, or in his or the Apoſtles practice, which doth any way exclude the Chriſtians children from being part of that indefinite number, that ought to be baptized, or for whom baptiſm was inſtituted by Chriſt. That there is nothing exclusive of them in the patern (the Jewiſh cuſtom of baptiſm) hath been ſufficiently evidenced by the ſeveral branches of that already inſiſted on.

Anſw. I like the Doctors ingenuity in his waving the imperfect ways of proving infant baptiſm he mentions, and doubt not to ſhew his own to be no better than thoſe he relinquiſheth. The ſubſtance of his proof is this, as I conceive. The Jews were wont when they admitted Proſelytes to baptize them and their children, and this is diſcernible to be the patern of Chriſtian baptiſm, and that Chriſts inſtitution was but a copy according to that patern, and therefore infants to be baptized, the Apoſtles and the firſt Churches practiſe ſhewing it to be ſo. Concerning which I ſay, 1. It ſeems baptiſm was a cuſtome of all nations as well as the Jews. Grot. Annot. in Matth. 3.6. conceives that for as much as ſtrangers waſhed, not circumciſed, were obliged by thoſe Laws onely which God had given to all mankinde, it is eaſie to be underſtood that baptiſm was among old inſtitutions ariſing, as I think, after the great deluge in memory of the world purged. Whence that famous ſpeech among the Greeks, The ſea waſheth away all the evils of men. Surely we read even in the Epiſtle of of Peter, that baptiſm is anſwerable to the deluge. And Annot. in Matth. 28.19. yea with profane nations it was of old uſed, that they who would be initiated were firſt waſhed all over their body, no doubt teſtifying thereby their purpoſe of innocency. 2. By the paſſages cited by the ſame Author in Matth 28:19. Juſtin Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian, and Auguſtin allegeth thoſe nations cuſtome for their practiſe; nor do I know that ever Dr. Hammond or any other hath alleged one paſſage in Scripture or any of the Fathers, that might evince that the cuſtome of baptizing or baptizing infants was derived from the Jews initiating proſelytes by baptiſme, but ſome paſſages in the Fathers ſhew rather that they took it as inſtead of Circumciſion. Mr. Selden de Syned: Ebræ. Lib. 1. Cap: 3. pag. 40, 41. mentions ſome who have conceived that the Iewiſh baptiſm in initiating Proſe-

lytes was in imitation of Christs example, though he do not beleive it; and that Schickardus conceives they added a certain Baptism to Circumcision to difference them from Samaritans, which I allege to shew that notwithstanding the Doctors supposition, that the whole fabrick of baptism is discernible to be built on that basis the customary baptism among the Jews, yet many will conceive it needs more proof than the bare recital of passages out of Jewish writers. I for my part conceive that there was a custom of baptizing proselytes afore Christs incarnation among the later Jews, but that either it should begin from Jacobs injunction to his household Gen. 35.2. or Gods Command, Exod. 19.10. for the Israelites to wash their clothes afore the giving the Law (though the Jewish Doctors allege these for it) I do not conceive, those places speaking of washing Jews by nature, not proselytes, whereas the Jews baptized not Jews by nature, as Selden l.2 cap.4. de Jure nat. ac Gent. juxta discipl. Ebra. Sayth, but by profession, nor do I conceive Mr. Seldens exposition in his Book de Syned, l.1. cap.3. that the sea was some vessel or receptacle of waters wherein they washed their bodies before the giving of the Law *Exod.*19.10. but the read sea. For as the drinking of the rock, is a relation of an accident of Gods providence for them, signifying to them the Lords supper, so their passing through the sea declares, not what they were injoyned to do, but what God did for them, that under the cloud they passed through the sea, to signify to them the same thing that baptism doth to us, our safe passage to life by Christ, nor do I think Dr. Hammonds exposition *sect.7. pag.*181. right, that they were baptized into Moses in the cloud and in the sea v.2. i.e. were (by these two great solemnities, the cloud that gave them light by night, and a guard by day, and the sea that was a wall to defend them, and a devouring deep to their enemies) received and initiated into Gods Covenant under the conduct of Moses, as since they are wont to be initiated by baptism: For when it is said, our Fathers were baptized, it is not meant were baptized as since Proselytes were baptized among the Jews, but as Christians were baptized, even as when he sayth v.3. and they did all eat the same spiritual meat, it is meant they did all eat the same spiritual meat, with us Christians, that is, they had Christ signified to them by the Manna they did eat, as we eat

Christ spiritually in the Lords Supper. There's no more an allusion to a custom of the Jews in the one then in the other, bu a narration of what happened to them by Gods providence, which the Apostle interprets as signs to them of the same thing that baptism, and the Lords supper are to us Christians. And therefore I conceive that the Scripture doth not make the customary use of baptizing Proselytes by the Jews as a thing from God, or eyed by Christ as his pattern, but that the custom of baptizing proselytes was a tradition of the Elders as the baptisms mentioned Mark 7. 3,4. and many other things they held. Nor do I think it true that the customary use of the Jews in baptizing proselytes and their children, was the pattern of Christs institution of baptism, and the Apostles and first Churches practise. For according to the custom of the Jews set down out of Maimony and other Jewish Rabbins by Mr. Selden l. 2. de Jure natur. ac gent. &c. cap. 4 lib. 1. de syned. Ebr. cap. 3. John Baptist, and Christs Apostles should have baptized no native Jews, but onely Gentiles that embraced the faith, for after the baptism Exod. 19.10. the Jews did not baptize Jews but onely proselytes. Whereas not onely John Baptist, but also the Apostles both before, and after the ascension of Christ did baptize Jews as well as Gentiles upon their profession of repentance and faith in Christ, as being agreeable to Christs institution Matth. 28.19.2. Christ would not have avouched the baptism of John to be from Heaven, and not from men, if it had been in imitation of and conformity to the Jewish custom. 3. It is likely some where or other some intimation would have been given of that custom as the Directory for Christians in the use of baptism. 4. The institution and practise would have been conformable to it. But the contrary appears. 1. In their baptizing no infants of the Gentiles at their first conversion: whereas the Jews baptized onely the Gentiles infants at their first proselyting, not the infants of those who were baptized in infancy. Selden l. 2. de Jure nat. &c. cap. 4 (sed vero, non aliter atq; Israelitæ ipsi filii proselytorum circumcidendi tantum erant nec quemadmodum parentes sive illi sive filiæ baptizandæ. Nunquam enim solennis proselyti baptismus ille iterandus erat, nec in ipso qui primo baptizatus (tametsi apostata factus in ritus Judaicos rediret) nec in posteris. So that if it be true that the Jewish baptism of Proselytes is the pattern of the Christian, then no infant of Christian race is now to be baptized, but such as were born when the first Gentile Ancestors were converted. Yea the Jews were so far from baptizing any infants of proselytes born after their first conversion and baptism, that they resolved, as may be seen in Selden ubi supra, and Dr. Hammond himself allegeth sect. 109. if a woman great with childe become a proselyte, and be baptized her childe needs not baptism when tis born. So that whereas the Doctor brings the Iewish custom as a pattern for Christian baptism so as that it may be reasonably thought to belong to all that among the Jews were usually baptized, his own arguing will prove that no infant of Christians now descended from Christian Ancestors, or born of parents formerly infidels after the parents were baptized, should be baptized, because it is against the Jewish custom of baptizing any childe of a Gentile infidel born after the parents were become proselytes, and baptized; But secondly besides this first and main thing wherein the Doctors patern is incongruous to Christian baptism there are many more disparities, which shew that the Iewish baptism of proselytes was not the patern of Christan baptism, As v.g. 1. The baptism of males must be also with Circumcision and an offering. 2. There must be a kinde of court of three Israelites skilfull in Law to approve it or else it is voyd, Dr. Hammond sect. 114. "Among the Iews, saith the Gemara Babyl. the infants used to be baptized upon the profession or confession of the house of judgment, the consistory, and the Gloss saith, the Triumviri are set over baptism and are necessary to it, and so they become to him a father. and Maimonides, he must be baptized before the Triumviri. 3. It was not to be on the Sabbath or feast day, or in the night. 4. The body must be washed not in a made receptacle of waters as a vessel, or font, but a natural one as a river, pool, well. 5. No part of the body but must be washed, if any scab, or blood hardned or filth stuck on the body so as that water could not come to the whole superficies it was not accounted right baptism, yet they allowed garments which separated not the water from the body. 6. While the proselytes stood in the water the precepts of Moses were recited by the three Israelites skilfull in the Law, and he was to take on him the observation of them all not one excepted, or else not accounted a Proselyte. 7. A woman proselyte was placed in the water unto the neck by women which baptized her, while the three Israelites stood after the manner observing the baptism, yet they were to turn away their faces, and go away when the woman came out of the water. 8. Elder Gentiles were made proselytes according to their own choice, younger as males before thirteen years and a day old, females before twelve and a day old according to the minde of their father or the court to which they were subject were admitted to Judaism. The same right was of a natural foole. Yet if a person under years when baptized did after as soon as he came to age renounce Judaism, then he lost what privilege he had by baptism either by assent of the parent or the court. 9. The baptism did give them interest in the policy of the Iews as other Israelites, except some things peculiarly reserved to natural Israelites. 10. Yet a servant without his Masters consent was not made free. 11. A blessing was to be used at baptism, but unless he were made free, not by the servant, but by the master. 12. A young one as an infant, whether taken or found, the Israelite that possessed it might baptize it, either into the state of an ingenuous person, or freed person, or a servant. 13. They taught that a person baptized was so born again, that lying with his own natural sister was no incest. 14. If the person be privily baptized, though before two, yet he was not counted a Proselyte. All which may be seen in Selden l. 2. de jure nat. & Gent. juxta discipl. Ebr. cap. 2, 3, 4. lib. 1. de Syned. Ebr. cap. 3. So that if the baptism of Proselytes among the Iews be the patern of Christian baptism, baptizing of women must be by women, no one single Bishop or Presbyter must baptize, but three at least, there must be no private baptism, no baptizing in Fonts or Basons, no baptism without the whole body be washed, and so as that no filth or scab hinder the water from coming to the skin, there should be no infants baptized but at the first conversion of the parent, no Iew should be baptized, none baptized in the night, on the Sabbath, or other Feast-day. In most of which Christ, Iohn the Baptist, and the Apostles varied from the Iews, and therefore they took not their baptism for their patern, and if they did not make the Iews baptism their patern in baptizing, neither are we to do so, but to follow the rule of Christs institution, and the Apostles practice, and not the Iews uſe, which is not delivered in Scripture, and much of it according to the ſuperſtition and dotages of their Rabbins, and was not a meer religious Sacrament, but a kinde of mixt rite partly religious, and partly civil, intitling to Civil as well as Eccleſiaſtical right, and done by perſons Civil rather than Eccleſiaſtical, and ſo of a far different nature and uſe from the Chriſtian baptiſm. I think Dr. Hammond were he a Biſhop would cenſure ſuch baptizing as the Iews uſed as irregular, and then he may well bear with Antipaedobaptiſts, though they reject his new conceit of making the Iewiſh baptiſm our patern, and thereupon grounding the baptizing of infants. Himſelf in his Practical Catechiſm lib.6. Sect.2. allows of ſprinkling, though the Iewiſh cuſtome was dipping, yea they ſo preciſely require it, that it was not counted baptiſm, except the whole body were waſhed, and yet the Doctor confeſſeth, that by Chriſts appointment the baptized was to be dipt in water, i.e. according to the primitive ancient cuſtom to be put under water, and the words [I baptize thee in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt] he ſayth, Being by Chriſt preſcribed to his Diſciples muſt indiſpenſably be uſed. So that when the Doctor pleaſeth, the Jewiſh cuſtom muſt be the patern, and when he likes it not, or the Biſhops Canons otherwiſe order it, he may vary from it: in one thing which Chriſt did not preſcribe, as the Doctor ſayth, nor did the Apoſtles that we finde ſo conceive it, yet Chriſts preſcription muſt be indiſpenſably uſed, yet in another thing though appointed by Chriſt, and according to the primitive ancient cuſtom, a diſpenſation is allowed by the Doctor, becauſe later cuſtom varies from Chriſts appointment and the primitive ancient cuſtom. Such a Lesbian leaden Rule the Doctor dictates by, fit for ſuch as have reſolved rather to forgo Chriſts appointment than the Biſhops Canons. It is conceived Chriſt inſtituted the Lords Supper, ſomewhat like the Jews Poſtcœnium after the Paſſover Shall then the Iews after-Supper be the patern to the Chriſtians in the Lords Supper? If ſo, the Lords Supper muſt be in private, in the night, adminiſtred by the maſter of the houſe, no more to receive than were uſually at the Paſſover, not many hundreds, &c. The Apoſtle Paul 1 Cor. 11.23. in the uſe of the Lords Supper, ſets down what he received from the Lord, without mentioning the Iewiſh uſage, which ſhews he would have

Chriſtians

Christians in that rite keep to what Christ appointed, not what the Iews practiced. And should it not be so in baptism also? It is conceived the use of laying on of hands in Ordination, and the term [Presbyters] were from the Iews: Must we then or may we take Rules from their practice in Ordination, and not ty our selves to the Apostles Canons and practice? One Presbyter or Doctor it's sayd, according to the ancient manner of the Iews, might create another, and sometime by an Epistle or Books an absent person might be created, as may be seen in Selden de Syned. Ebræ. vet. l.2. c.14. Must these usages of theirs be a patern to Christians? The use of Excommunication came from the Iews discipline into the Christian, yet so as that the same manner & effect was not retained in both, sayth the same Authorin the same book, c.7. Out of all wch I infer that in the use of those rites which were taken from the Iews, and brought into the Christian discipline; yet our Rule according to which Christians are to observe those rites, is to be taken from the words and example of Christ and his Apostles, which I doubt not to make it appear do no whit serve for Dr. Hammonds purpose.

Mr. Marshall in his Defence, p.170,171. thinks, "this to be a good Argument, that baptism belongs to infants as well as grown men, because, baptism being in use before as an Ecclesiastical rite, though it begun to be a Sacrament of divine institution when Iohn was sent to baptize into the name of Christ, there are special testimonies in the Talmud, which declare that infants both of Iews and Gentiles were thus admitted, the male children by Circumcision and baptism, the females by baptism, &c. especially since there is not the least hint given in the word that when it was thus advanced to be a Sacrament it should not be applied to those persons to whom before it was, viz. infants as well as grown men."

But I think Mr. M. cannot finde in the Talmud the Iews or their infants were thus baptized since the time of giving the Law, *Exod.*19.10: I confess the Gentiles infants were baptized as is abovesayd; yet as Mr. Ms. learned men mentioned in his *Defence, pag.*227. confess "that the baptism of Iohn and of the Pharisees was for a different end, so Dr. *Lightfoot Harmony part.*1. *pag.*138. saith, "the Iews baptism was clean of another nature from Iohns." "And in the second part of his Harmony on Iohn 1.25. *pag.*76. he shews sundry differences between them, and cites out of the Iewish Doctors some of those differences before alleged; which are enough to shew that our baptism is not to be regulated by their practice. Sure it is a wonder to me that Mr. M. engaged to reform the worship of God according to Gods Word, and in his Sermon on 2 Chron. 15. 2. "Admiring that ever mortal man should dare in Gods worship to meddle any jot further than the Lord himself hath commanded," should yet in the point of infant-baptism follow the Talmud quite besides the Lords command. But I return to Dr. Hammond.

SECT. XXV.

SECT. 25. Ubi supra, he sayth thus, "And in the New Testament I cannot foresee any words that may come under suspition of doing so, but those of Matth. 28, 19. Go teach all Nations, baptizing them, &c. And those words being duly weighed are far from doing so. For the phrase which is there used in the original is a singular one, not duly expresst by our English [teach] It is μαθητεύσατε, make Disciples, or receive into Discipleship all Nations, baptizing them in the Name, &c. making this form of baptism their ceremony of receiving them. You may see the word explained in a parallel phrase John 4 1. The Pharisees heard that Jesus makes more Disciples and baptizeth than John, μαθητὰς ποιεῖ καὶ βαπτίζει, where to make Disciples and baptize is all one with μαθητεύσατε βαπτίζοντες, where the baptizing being immediately annexed to the making or receiving Disciples, and the receiving Disciples not supposing any precedent instruction, but, looking wholly on it as subsequent (in like manner as in this place v. 20. διδάσκοντες [teaching] follows after βαπτίζοντες, baptizing) all that are thus brought and received ad discipulatum, to be for the future instructed, and instituted in the Christian faith, may surely be received by baptism, the ceremony which is there prescribed by Christ, with which to receive Disciples. "

Answ. Though I conceive Dr. Hammond to ascribe more power power to the Canons of Prelates about the Sacraments than is meet, being one who hath written in defence of the Common-prayer Book, yet by this allegation of Matth. 28.19. he seems tacitely to yield that if the words there include not infants under the discipled, then there is something in the New Testament, which excludes infants from baptism, although he say, Sect. 96. I do not believe or pretend that that Precept of Christ doth necessarily infer (though it do as little deny) that infants are to be baptized. But me thinks if the Doctor will stand to his own words elsewhere, he must acknowledg that by the precept of baptizing, Matth. 28. 19. infants are excluded. For the Doctor sayth, Sect. 55. "Christs institution makes dipping or sprinkling with water a Sacrament; which institution is Matth. 28.19. and therefore the Doctor will have the words there indispensably used in baptism; and Sect. 92. he sayth, Baptism is a Sacrament, that Sacrament an institution of Christ, that institution not founded in any reason of immutable truth, but onely in the positive will of Christ, and so that there is nothing considerable in this question, (or any of this nature) but how it was delivered by Christ. And Sect. 94. that which was don by the Apostles, if it were not a Rule for ever, yet was an effect of such a Rule formerly given by Christ, and interpretable by this practice to be so." And Practical Catech. lib. 6. sect. 2. he expounding Christs institution, sayth, that the words import that the person baptized acknowledgeth, maketh profession of believing in three, delivers himself to three, as Authors of his faith, and to be ruled by the direction of this Master, and this he will have to be meant by baptizing into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Whence I infer, that if baptism be a Sacrament, and made so by Christs institution, and that institution founded onely in his positive will, and the will of Christ be that baptism be into the name of the Trinity, and this is when the baptized makes profession of believing in three, to be ruled by them, and the Apostles practice interprets Christs rule; no infant that doth not profess faith is baptized into the name of the Trinity, nor was appointed to be baptized by Christ, nor did the Apostles baptize them, and therefore they are not baptized according to Christs institution, and so no Sacrament to them. Yea, if the positive will of Christ be the reason of baptism, they usurp upon

Christs prerogative, who baptize otherwise than Christ hath appointed & then if the precept of Christ doth not necessarily infer infant-baptism (which the Doctor ingenuously acknowledgeth) it doth by manifest consequence deny it, sith he forbids that to be done otherwise than he hath appointed, when he hath determin'd how it should be done. The Doctor when he sayth above, the words [I baptize into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost] must be indispensably used; me thinks by the same reason should conceive Christs institution should be unalterably used in baptizing those onely whom he hath appointed to be baptized. But let us consider what shift the Doctor makes to elude the force of Christs institution, Matth. 28.19. that it may not be thought to exclude infants from baptism. I grant that μαθητεύσατε is best rendred [make Disciples] and like it well, that he acknowledgeth [makes Disciples, and baptizeth, John 4.1.] is all one with [making Disciples, baptizing them, Matth. 28.19.] But I deny, 1. that μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη βαπτίζαντες αὐτούς, is well paraphrased by [receive into Discipleship all Nations, baptizing them in the Name, &c. making this form of baptism their ceremony of receiving them] For by it the making Disciples is made the same with receiving into Discipleship or receiving Disciples, and baptism the ceremony of receiving into Discipleship, which is as truly the act of the baptized thereby professing or avouching his Discipleship. 2. That the making or receiving Discipleship supposeth not any precedent instruction, but looks wholly on it as subsequent. For 1. that which in Matthew is expressed by, Go ye therefore and make Disciples all Nations, is in Mark 16.15. Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature; which shews how they should disciple all Nations. Now they who are made Disciples by preaching the Gospel are made Disciples by precedent instruction. Ergo, the making or receiving Disciples Matth. 28.19. supposeth precedent instruction. 2. Such as the making Disciples was Ioh. 4.1. such is the making Disciples, Mat. 28.19. For by the Doctors confession they are all one. But that was by preaching, as is plain concerning Iohn, Matth. 3.1,2,5,6. and concerning the Apostles, Mat. 10.5,6,7. Ergo. Whence, 3. I further argue, That way the Apostles were to disciple all Nations by which they were to disciple the lost sheep of the house of Israel, but that was by preaching, Ergo, discipling supposeth precedent instruction. 4. From the use and notation of the word, which is to teach as that they learn, and so is used Matth. 13.52. μαθητευθεὶς, is rendred [instructed] by our last Translators, and can be no otherwise rendred than [made a Disciple by teaching] So Acts 14.21. it is sayd, Having preacht the Gospel to that City, καὶ μαθητεύσαντες, and having taught or made many Disciples. Whence, 5. it may appear how the Apostles understood the Precept of Christ to preach the Gospel to persons, and thereby make them Disciples. 6. A Disciple and a believer appear to be the same by comparing Matth. 28.19. with Mark 16.15,16. For as the way of making Disciples is more fully expressed by preaching the Gospel; so the Disciple to be baptized is expressed by [the believer] which is put before baptism. Nor is it against this that after baptism they are to be taught, Matth. 28.20. For that teaching is expressed to be the teaching the observation of all that he commanded: But the teaching that makes Disciples is the preaching the Gospel. So that the plain order and meaning of Christs words is this, that 1. the Apostles should not stay onely within the Land of Israel, but go into all the World. 2. That they should by preaching the Gospel, declaring that Jesus was the Christ, make them Disciples, that is, taught concerning Christ, or believers in him. 3. That they should baptize them. 4. That they should then teach them to observe all his commands. Now infants are not made Disciples by preaching the Gospel, therefore by Christs institution not appointed to be baptized, and therefore are baptized without his warrant, and consequently unlawfully.

What Dr. Hammond sayth sect. 26. were it all granted him, yet it would no whit avail to prove that an infant may be a Disciple appointed by Christ to be baptized. For let putting to school be as early as the Doctor will imagine, yet none is put to school till he doth know his Teacher, and so none is Christs Disciple in the Scripture-language till he know Jesus to be Christ, and take him for his Lord, which infants being not capable of, they are not Disciples, nor to be baptized according to Christs appointment. What he adds s. 27,28. is not right. For 1. it is not true, that a Disciple and a Proselyte are perfectly all one. For a Proselyte notes one that is by birth an alien from the Common-wealth of Israel, and comes to the Israelites to own their God, and be part of their policy, not to be taught but to enjoy privileges with other Jews, whether Civil or Ecclesiastical. There is no mention of the Disciples of the Priests, but of the Pharisees and Sadduces; But a Disciple of Christ is one that owns Christ for his Teacher and Lord onely for spiritual benifits. Nor doth the Holy Ghost at any time call Christians Christs proselytes but his Disciples, that we might not confound the notions of these terms. And though the origination of the word [proselyte] be from προσερχεῖν, to come to, and Christ saith, Suffer little children to come to me, and this infers their capacity of proselytism, and the next words [For of such is the Kingdom of God] suppose them particularly qualified for it, yet that coming and imagined proselytism being onely for ablessing by prayer, and laying on of hands, not to be made Disciples or baptized, this will not prove them capable of being made Disciples according to Christs appointment till by hearing the Gospel they own Christ as their Master. The like may be said of the entering into Covenant, Deut. 29, 10. which though in some sense it should be yielded, that infants may enter into Covenant, that is, by their parents act engaging them under a curse or oath to own God as theirs, in which sense the posterity then unborn did enter into Covenant, v. 15. yet this is insufficient to prove, that such an entering into Covenant makes infants Disciples or subjects of baptism according to Christs appointment. For in it such a discipling is injoyned as is by Preaching the Gospel, and they onely are Disciples to be baptized who are believers, and they onely are appointed to be baptized who in their own persons do enter into Covenant, or engage themselves to be Christs followers.

SECT. XXVI.

Dr. Hammond neither from 1 Cor. 7. 14. nor from Sayings of Ancients proves that the Apostles baptized infants.

HEreto Dr. Hammond adds, to "confirm his opinion of Christs intention to include infants in the institution of baptism for all Nations, and not to exclude them from it, the passage

1 Cor. 7. 14. in which he imagines is a remain and footstep of the Apostles practice of baptizing infants. 2. The practice of the first and purest Ages of the Church, which received infants to baptism, and either by so doing testifie the Apostolical usage transcribed by them, or else affirm, that they received it by tradition from the Apostles. " In both which how he is mistaken remains to be shewed.

First he sets down this, which he cals A brief Paraphrase, though it be too large for a Paraphrase, and takes in more than he can with any colour shew to have any thing in the Text answering to it. His words of Paraphrase of 1 Corinth. 7. 12, 13, 14. are these.

Vers. 12. If any Christian Husband hath an heathen Wife, and she be desirous to continue with him, he ought not to put her away, unbelief being no sufficient cause of Divorce by the Law of Christ.

Vers. 13. And so in like manner, for the Christian Wife that is married to an Infidel, if he be desirous to live with her, let her by no means separate from him.

Vers. 14. For (beside the command of Christ, Matth. 5, 32. which obligeth to this) other advantages there are of the believers living with the unbeleiver, worth considering. For by this means it hath oft come to pass that the unbelieving party hath been brought to the faith by the company and conversation of the believer; and considering the efficacy of good example, 1 Pet. 3. 1. and seasonable exhortation and instruction on presumption of the great zeal (and consequent endeavours and diligence) that by the Law of Christianity the Husband will have to the eternal good of any so near him, as a Wife is, there is great reason of hope that still it may be so, that their living together may produce this effect in the unbeliever, and the intuition of that (more than possible) effect may reasonably move the Christian party not to forsake the other voluntarily. And this one consideration, viz. the probability that the conversation of the believer 1 Pet. 3. 1. should gain, i. e. bring the unbeliever to the faith, and the reasonable presumption that it will be so, is the reason why the young children of Christians, which cannot as yet be deemed believers, are yet admitted to baptism, because by their living in the family with Christian parents they probably, and by the obligation lying on the parents ought to be brought up in the faith, and kept from heathen pollutions, and the Church requiring and receiving promise from the parents) doth reasonably presume they will. And upon this ground it is, that though the children of Christians are, yet the children of heathens are not admitted to baptism.

Answer. This Paraphrase is many ways faulty, and far from the meaning of the Apostle. 1. It puts in many things as explicatory of the Text, to which there is nothing answerable in the Apostles words. For, 1. there is nothing that answers to [by this means it hath oft come to pass] Nor, 2. to these words [by the company and conversation of the believer] yea the term [believer] is quite omitted by the Apostle, which considering the term [unbeliever] twice expressed seems to have been done wittingly, that it might not be taken, that he ascribed the sanctification to the faith of the one party. Surely when men specially in Arguments place the force of a reason in a term they use not to omit it, as the Apostle doth here, but to express it remarkably, and with Emphasis. 3. All the words [and considering the efficacy of good Example, 1 Pet. 3. 1. and seasonable exhortation and instruction on presumption of the great zeal (and consequent endeavours and diligence) that by the Laws of Christianity the Husband will have to the eternal good of any so near to him as a Wife is, there is great reason of hope that it still may be so, that their living together may produce this effect in the unbeliever, and the intuition of that (more than possibly) effect, may reasonably move the Christian party not to forsake the other voluntarily] are added without any thing in the least intimated by the words of the Text, but the contrary, even according to his exposition, who makes the term [ἡγίασται sanctified] refer to some past known Examples, and therfore the forepart of the verse hath not at all that which answers to [on presumption &c. there is great reason of hope, &c.] which import a contingent event for the future, not a thing past, which is always certain. 4. The term [young children of Christians which cannot as yet be deemed believers] is more and otherwise than is in the Text, which hath onely [your children] which is not restrained to infancy, nor doth it appear, that [your] doth imply they were considered as Christians, so as that there should be this construction [your children are holy, because they are children of Christians] distinguishingly from infidels, but [your children] that is, the children of you that doubt, who have had unbelieving husbands and wives, and have had or may have children by them. So that the term [your] onely notes the particularity and individuation of the persons, and if considered in any respect besides, it is their doubting condition, or their having unbelieving yoke-fellows. 5. There is nothing to answer those words [because by their living in the family with Christian parents they probably, and by the obligation lying on the parents ought to be brought up in the faith, and kept from heathen pollutions, (and the Church requiring and receiving promise from the parents) doth reasonably presume they will] 6. Nor is there any thing answering to these words [your children] which his own Paraphrase applies to Christians children. So that the Doctors Paraphrase is beyond measure culpable in respect of addition.

2. It is blameable also in omitting that which the Text expresly and emphatically mentions, to wit, the terms [Wife, Husband] when he sayth, [the unbelieving party hath been brought to the faith by the company and conversation of the believer, and after, the probability that the conversation of the believer should bring the unbeliever to the faith] which may be meant of a companion, brother, father, mother, neighbour. 3. There is much faultiness in quite altering the importance of the Apostles words, by substituting instead of were or should be] in the Apostles words [ought to be, they will be] in the Paraphrase. Which is the more blameable in that himself Sect. 82. pag. 257. doth more truly retain the force of those expressions in the Apostle, when he sayth, [The method of the Apostle must needs be this, unless there were, &c. 'twould certainly follow that their children were unclean] so that the pretended brief Paraphrase of the Apostles words is very faulty, far from the Rule of a Paraphrase, and instead of explaining doth quite pervert the meaning of the words.

2. For many other reasons the exposition of the Doctor cannot be right. For 1. In his paraphrase of the Apostles resolution v. 12. he puts [ought] and of v. 13. [let her by no means] as if the Apostle did make it a necessary duty, that they must continue together, whereas the Apostle answerably to their doubt doth onely resolve them of the lawfulness of their continuing together, not of the necessity of it, and so v. 14. is a reason of the lawfulness of it notwithstanding their doubt, which appears from the resolution v. 15. [If the unbeliever will depart let him depart] which cannot be expounded otherwise than thus, you are not bound to stay as you are not bound to cause her to depart or to relinquish him, you are at your liberty. For the very next words [a Brother or Sister is not under bondage in such cases] do shew that the resolution was of liberty, not of duty, contrary to the Doctors paraphrase. Now that resolution v. 15. is of the same form with his determination v. 12, 13. 2. He makes the resolution to be of a duty v. 12, 13. yet makes v. 14. to be a motive of the will, when he saith, [may reasonably move] as if the Apostle were not deciding a doubt, but perswading the will, and that from such a thing as cannot be reason of duty or liberty, but as it is by him expounded a perswasive to win on the affections, not to settle the judgment, and yet p. 207. he saith, [the unbeliever having been sanctified by the believer is used as an argument why they should live together.] 3. He puts [unbelieving Husband v. 14.] as if he were another than he that is mentioned v. 13. for v. 13. the unbelieving husband was at that present an unbeliever: But according to his sense expounding v. 14. thus, [it hath oft come to pass that the unbelieving party hath been brought to the faith by the company and conversation of the believer] the unbelieving husband must be meant of one that was once an unbeliever, not so then. Now then the Apostle should after this exposition give a reason why the present believing wife need not leave her husband, because another unbelieving husband by another believing wife hath been brought to the faith. Which wherein it could tend to any satisfaction for them that doubted whether they might lawfully live together because of the present unbelief of the yokefellow I see not. 4. Such a reason will appear the more unlikely to be satisfactory, because as it hath often happened that the unbeliever hath been won by the wife, so it hath often happened to the contrary, and it is likely the persons whom he resolved had complained, that they had small hopes of their husbands conversion, and so the reason of their living together from experience

would be more likely to be retorted back thus, You perſwde us to live together, you tell us we may, becauſe it often comes to paſs that the unbeliever is brought to the faith: But our experience is to the contrary, we ſee many not converted, and our own are obſtinate and hardned, and therefore this reaſon doth diſſwade us, and reſolve us that we may not live with him. 5. Hence another exception is againſt this expoſition, that it makes the Apoſtle to reſolve them of their duty or liberty by that which was a meer contingent event which might be or not be. For this expoſition makes the reaſon of their living together to be from what had hapened & might be: whereas a contingent event is impertinent to that end, to ſay, we may lawfully do ſuch a thing, becauſe its likely ſuch a good effect may follow. A contingent event is unfit to reſolve of the lawfulneſs or unlawfulneſs of a thing without ſome other rule, things being unlawfull or lawfull not according to diſagreement from or agreement to Gods will of purpoſe what ſhall be, but his will of Command what he requires to be omitted or done. Beſides this contingent event here was uncertain as appears v. 16. what knoweſt thou? implies, thou canſt not tell whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband? Perhaps thou mayſt. Nor doth the Apoſtle mention any promiſe it ſhould be ſo, but mentions it onely as a contingent event that might be or not be. 6. Beſides it is from ſuch an event as is impertinent to the lawfulneſs or unlawfulneſs of living together. For the paſt converſion of others and the future converſion of our own yoke-fellows is meerly extrinſecal to our duty or liberty, though it be much to our conveniency, and therefore it is fitly urged v. 16. after the reſolution of the judgment v. 12, 13, 14 15. Is there any ſhew of reaſon why I ſhould live with my own unbelieving husband, becauſe anothers unbelieving husband was converted by her, or beeauſe there is great reaſon of hope it will be ſo with mine? This would intimate that future events make our preſent ſtate or acts lawfull or unlawfull, which is ſomewhat like the Turks conceit who judged, that pleaſeth God which ſucceeds proſperouſly, and that to diſpleaſe, which fals out unhappily. 7. According to this Expoſition, v. 14. ſhould be the ſame Argument with v. 16. and ſo there ſhould be an unneceſſary repetition of the same Argument. 8. By this exposition the sanctifying of an unbeliever should be ascribed to a woman, whereas (though I deny not that she is said to save, v. 16. to win, 1 Pet. 3. 1. to convert, James 5. 20.) sanctifying is never ascribed to any but God and his Spirit. So 1 Cor. 6. 11. Ye are sanctified by the Spirit of our God. 9. The word [holy] is expounded in a sense no where else found, nor is there any reason of that sense by way of allusion or otherwise given by the Doctor, though according to him a known fact is expressed which had another appellation used commonly even in that Epistle, ch. 1. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. & 12. 13. For he expounds [holy] by [are admitted to baptism] and so makes the Apostle in narration of a fact to use a term to express what was in his conceit well known to them by a term not imagined to note the thing elsewhere, when there was another term [baptized] used in the same Epistle and familiar to them. 10. He makes the Apostle to infer the lawfulness or duty of living together from that contingent event, which might with like probability be brought to pass by another than the believing yoke-fellow, even by the endeavour of a Father, Mother, Brother, Sister, Companion, especially a Preacher of the Gospel. So that if this reason were of force to conclude husband and wife might live together, because one may bring the other to the faith, the reason might be as good for Father and Daughter, Son and Mother, Brother and Sister, Companions, Preacher and people to couple or live together, because it hath been and there is great reason to hope one may convert the other. 11. According to his exposition the Apostles speeches were not right. For according to him the meaning should be unless there were cohabiting, and there had been an unbelieving husband brought to the faith by the wife, and vice versa the Corinthians children could not reasonably be presumed to be admitted to baptism. 2. Upon this ground that an unbelieving husband was brought to the faith by the wife and vice versa, and there is great reason it might be so for the future the children of believing Corinthians unequally matched were admitted to baptism, Himself p. 9. 2, 7. saith This must needs be the method of the Apostles arguing unless there were some hope, that the cohabiting of a believer should be a means to bring an unbeliever to the faith: would certainly follow, their children were unclean,

that is not admitted to baptism. Now I think all Pædobaptists will disclaim as manifestly false this proposition, That the believing Corinthians young children were not or could not be, or it could not be reasonably presumed they should be admitted to baptism, till the unbelieving yoke-fellow were converted, or without hopes or reasonable presumption, that he might be won to the faith by the believer. It is such a toy as I cannot imagine they will own when they discern it. If they do they must quite change their plea and practise about infant baptism, their plea being from the imagined federal holines of the childe of one believer without consideration of the others present or future faith, and their practise being to baptize infants of one believer, though the other parent died or should die in professed unbelief. And for the other proposition it is a like false, that whether νῦν ἅ, note as much as hoc posito, upon this ground as the Doctor expresseth it, or to be an Adverb of time noting when their children were holy it is most false, that upon the ground of hopes of cohabiting and the conversion of the unbelieving, yoke-fellow, and experience of what happened, the Corinthian believers yonger children not deemed yet believers, were admitted to baptism, or were reasonably presumed to be admitted, or that they were then admitted to baptism when the unbelieving husband was converted, or likely to be converted by the believing wife and not before. This proposition I make no question other pædobaptists will disclaim, nor need I any other proof against his sense than his own words against another interpretation brought in as the Anabaptists, though I know none that so interpret it. I use his own words pag. 257. sect. 82. mutatis mutandis. Now I demand of this pretended interpretation, whether it be possible Saint Pauls argument should conclude in this sense? Suppose the Corinthian parents of these younger children had been one a believer, and the other an unbeliever, could it of them be concluded, if they did not upon the hope of doing good one upon the other cohabit, their children could not be holy by designation of the Church in baptism, to which when they are brought by the congregation and admitted by the Minister they are thus consecrated and devoted to God? This were absolutely to confine the Churches designations to holines and the Ministers admissions thereto to none but the children of believers, as if the childe of parents whereof one is a believer were not thus holy, and admitted to baptism without experience of what hath been done in converting the unbeliever by the believer, and hopes it should be so. It is known that admission to baptism depends upon Christs institution, not upon such accidental conditions as is the cohabiting of the parents, the experience of the converting some unbeliever by the believing yoke-fellow, and hopes so of theirs. 12. Unto all these I add, that I never read or heard any Expositor antient or modern so expounding, as this Doctor or Dictator doth, nor do I think he can shew any. Sure I am Augustin. tom. 7. de pecc. merito & remiss. c. 26. saith, Ac per hoc et illa sanctificatio cujuscunque modi sit, quam in filiis fidelium esse dixit Apostolus ad istam de baptismo & peccati origine vel remissione quæstionem omninò non pertinet.

But let us consider what Dr. Hammond brings for this Paraphrase, Sect. 32. he speaks thus, That this is the true importance of the Apostles words, and force of his arguing doth for the former part of it appear evident. First, by the word ἡγίασται, hath been sanctified, which must needs refer to some past known examples and experiences of this kinde, or else there could be no reasonable account given of the Apostles setting it in the Preter-tense.

Answ. As Dr. Hammonds Paraphrase expresseth it, ἡγίασται should signifie not onely that an unbelieving husband hath been sanctified, but also that there is hope they will, and so it should note, not onely some example past, but also some to come, of which there can be a less reasonable account given than of putting it in the Present-tense in English.

But sayth he, It is put in the Preter-tense in Greek.

Answ. I presume the Doctor knows that enallage or change of Tense is frequent in Languages, even in the Greek, though it abound in Tenses above other Languages. In the same Epistle c. 11. 24 κλαύσιον in the Present-tense is put for the Future, even in the same Verse ἀναμάρτητα ἐστὶν, is rendred by Dr. Hammond himself, Else were your children unclean, so that ἐστὶν must be put for ἦν or εἶεν, & so an Enallage either of Tense or Mood, or both. And in the very next vers. κεκάλωται is manifestly put in the Præter-tense for the Present, as all Interpreters I know render it, & the same enallage or change of Tense Camerarius conceives in the term ἡγιάσται. And, which is chiefest, this sense seems to befit it best, there being no plainer and cleaner than this, Therefore the believer may live with the unbelieving yoke-fellow; because the Husband though an infidel, yet is to his own Wife, in respect of her, and to her conjugal use, as if he were sanctified. But if it be in the Præter-tense, yet it may be understood of a past thing yet continued, as κέκριται, John 3.18. notes an act still continued in force. So that notwithstanding the Doctors conceit, yet there may be a very reasonable account given without understanding it of an Example of another person sanctified heretofore by another Wife, which is very far from the Apostles meaning, as I shew before.

Secondly, sayth he, by the Phrase ἐν τῇ γυναικὶ, by or through the Wife. This the Preposition ἐν, so ordinarily signifies, that it cannot need to be farther testified, (in this notion it is that we here take it) whereas the notion which by opposers is here affixt to it, that it should signifie to (that to which is a sign of the Dative-case) [sanctified to the Wife, (as meat to the believer) made lawfull to her to live with] is never once found to belong to it, in the New Testament, nor can with any tolerable congruity or Grammatical analogy be affixt to it. All the places that are produced for this sense are commonly mistaken. So Matth.17.12. [ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ] is not fecerunt ei, they have done to him, but on him or against him: so as ἐν is used for εἰς, which is an ordinary acception of it. So Acts 4.12. There is no name δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, it is not [given unto men] but among men: and that is an ordinary notion of ἐν, for among, εἰ θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν, Is God among us? and χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, Christ among us, and many the like. So 1 Cor. 7.15. God hath called us, ἐν εἰρήνῃ: It is not to, as the note of a Dative-case, but unto peace, as ἐν is again taken for εἰς. So Gal. 1.16. to reveal his own Son, ἐν ἐμοὶ: It is not [to me] but [by or through me to others] as it follows, that I might preach him. And when it there follows, ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, it is not [to but again among the Gentiles] And 2 Pet. 1.5. χορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει ὑμῶν ἀρετὴν, is Add unto your faith virtue, &c. in the notion of ἐν for εἰς, unto your faith, or over and above that, ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἀρετὴν, superadd virtue, or fortitude, or constancy, that which in this time of persecution they stood so much in need of. And so still the rendring it [to the Wife] will be without any one example, and the turning it quite into another phrase, as if it were γυναικὶ, without ἐν; which to do without any necessity or reason (save onely δυλόυν ὑποδύσει, to serve the opposers turn upon the place, and support his false opinion, must needs be very unreasonable.

Answ. I subscribe to this last speech: But all that the Doctor saith makes me not to recede from the rendering of ἐν, 1 Cor. 7.14. [to] as noting the Dative case, and being redundant. Not out of any necessity to serve my turn: For if it be read [in the wife and expounded as Beza doth Annot. In locum respectu uxoris, in respect of the wife, expounding [is or hath been sanctified in the wife] thus, hath been or is enioyed in coniugal use lawfully in respect of his wife, it will as well serve my turn. And in this sense ἐν, is as much as erga towards, apud with, and is as much as εἰς in, the sense that ἐν and εἰς are used, 2 Cor. 13.3. ἐν ὑμῖν, *v.*4. εἰς ὑμᾶς. But it will not serve the Doctors turn unless he can prove that [ἐν] must be renderd [by] and notes the instrument, yea and [by the wife] must signify [by the company and conversation of the believer] which supplement is not yet proved, nor do I think can be proved to be necessary. The reason why I still adhere to the reading of [ἐν to] is, 1. Because it seems to me the fairest, easiest, and most congruous sense thus to expound it. The believer may abide with the unbelieving yoke-fellow. For though he be an unbeliever, and so in himself unsanctified, yet in or to the wife or his wife he is as if he were sanctified, it's all one in respect of lawfull conjugal use as if he were sanctified. 2. Because, though the Doctor deny it, yet I aver the notion of [ἐν for to as a sign of the Dative case] is found more than once in the New Testament, and may with good congruity and Grammatical analogy be affixt to it. Of the which places the first he brings cannot be eluded. 1. Because the same speech which is Mat. 17.12. ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ is Mark 9.13. ἐποίησαν αὐτῷ, and rendered by Beza in the former place fecerunt ei they did to him. 2. whereas he saith ἐν is used for εἰς on him or against him, and that this is an ordinary acception of ἐν for εἰς, I grant that it is an ordinary acception to use ἐν for εἰς, but not in the sense he here conceives, to wit as εἰς notes [on or against a person.] It had been meet the Doctor should have given at least one instance of such a construction, which I do not yet believe he can do. However if he could, yet me thinks it should satisfie that ἐν αὐτῷ, notes no more than αὐτῷ, and is a sign of the Dative case, because Mark, who seems to have abbreviated Matthew, so expresseth it; and the common use of ποιεῖν, when it notes dealings of man to man whether good or bad is usually expressed by the Dative case: as *Matth.*7.12, & 18.12. & 20.32. & 21.36,40. & 25.40,45. There is another instance which I conceive cannot be eluded, to wit, *Col.*1.23. τῷ κηρυχθέντι ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, which was preached in every creature. Where, 1. There is no other sense than that of the Dative case that hath any tolerable conguity or Grammatical analogy affixt to it. Mr. Den's conceit of preaching the Gospel in the Sun, Moon, &c. is so wild that I presume, it will be easily rejected. For let men imagine the most they can of Gods grace discernible in the creature, yet the Gospel in which Christians hope and of which Paul was a Minister is not discernible thereby. Nor is here any place for those conceits of putting [in] for on, against, among, over and above or the like] For the use of κηρύσσω, to preach, is commonly with a Dative case of the object, as 1 *Cor.*9.27. 1 *Pet.*3.19. Acts 8.5. & 10.42. Luke 4.18. I deny not but 1 Tim. 3.16. it is ἐκηρύχθη ἐν ἔθνεσιν. But our Translators have there rendered it [unto the Gentiles] the vulgar [prædicatum est gentibus] Beza [prædicatus est gentibus] as if there it noted onely the Dative case. And if there it should be [among the Gentiles] yet it cannot be so *Col.*1.23. because the object is in the singular number: But ἐν when it is for [among] is joyned still to a noune of the plural. It is true 1 *Thes.*2.9. it is ἐκηρύξαμεν εἰς ὑμᾶς, but unto you is no more than to you, and shews not onely ἐν but εἰς also notes the same with the Dative case without either preposition. 2. That which puts this thing out of all doubt the phrase *Col.*1.23. answers (as Beza Camerarius, Piscator, &c. conceive, and me thinks none should deny) to that Mark 16.15. where our Lord Christ bids κηρύξατε τὸ εὐαγγέλιον πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, preach the Gospel to every creature, and there that which was expressed by ἐν *Col.*1.23. is expressed onely by the Dative case without it Mark 16.15. nor do I yet conceive but that δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, Acts 4.12 is better rendered [to men] than among men.] 1. Because the verb δίδωμι in the several voyces and other verbs of giving have most regularly and constantly ſtantly a Dative of the perſon after them, as both Grammarians in their Syntaxes teach, & many inſtances in the New Teſtament prove, as Acts 3.16. & 4.29. & 5.31. 32. & 7.5,8,10,25,28. Beſides many more there and throughout the ſacred Writings. 2. Becauſe if it had been [among men] it had been to be placed after ἕτερον, other; for ſo the ſenſe would have been clear, there is no other name among men given, but being placed after given, it is to be expounded as referred to given, not to other, and ſo muſt not be read among men, but to men. 3. It ſeems to me not good ſenſe, or not true, that Chriſt was a name given among men; for though he were among men, yet he was given from above. 4. To all which I add the words of Beza Annot. in Act. Apoſt. c.4. v.12. Inter homines, ἐν τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, Hebr. בְּאָדָם beadam, id eſt, hominibus ut rectè convertit vetus interpres, & Irenæus quoque lib.3. cap.12. ſicut infra 7.44. ἐν τοῖς παρέσιν, non aliùs declarat quàm παρέσιν. Camerarius renders it, Attributum hominibus. And for the other Text Gal.1.16. Me thinks the Doctors expoſition makes the Apoſtle tautologize ineptly, when he expounds when it pleaſed God to reveal his Son, ἐν ἐμοὶ, not to me, but by or through me to others. For what is it to reveal his Son by him or through him to others, but to preach the Goſpel to them? And is it not then to tautologize to ſay, when it pleaſed God, that I ſhould preach the Son of God to others that I might preach the Goſpel? Can preaching the Goſpel be fitly ſayd to be the end or conſequent of preaching the Son of God which is all one with preaching the Goſpel? And for 2 Pet.1.5. ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει, there is no reaſon to imagine ἐν to be put for εἰς, ſith the ſimple and compound are uſually put with the Dative after them, as 2 Cor.9.10. Gal.3.5. and in other Authors. Nor do I finde εἰς τινὰ, or τὶ χορηγεῖν, in any Author, and what the Doctor obſerves, that ἐπιχορηγήσατε notes ſuperadde, it rather confirms it, that as ἐπὶ notes over, ſo ἐν notes to; nor is the Doctor I ſuppoſe ignorant of that Rule in Grammar, Verba addendi, ſupplendi regunt Dativum. Beſides theſe I have alleged in the firſt part of this Review ſ.11.*pag.*96. out of the *Septuagint. Deut.*28.60. 2 Kings 7.27. plain paſſages of putting ἐν, ſo as to note the Dative caſe, with the ſpeeches of ſome learned men, whereto I add that *Pſal.*68.18. that which the Septuagint hath ἔλαβες δόματα ἐν ἀνἀνθρώποις, the Apostle hath Ephes. 4.8. ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, which I take to be more than enough to refute the Doctors speech that the notion wherein ἐν signifies To, which is a sign of the Dative case is never once found to belong to it in the New Testament, nor can with any tolerable congruity or Grammatical analogy be affixt to it, and that he talks ad randum, when he intimates, that by construing it so, 1 Cor. 7.14. ther's a turning it quite to another phrase to serve the turn upon the place. The Doctor goes on thus.

*Thirdly, this appears most irrefragably, by the express words added on this Argument, v.*16. where [the unbelievers having been sanctified by the believer] (used as an Argument why they should live together) is farther explained by these words of an undoubted perspicuous sense; For what knowest thou O Wife whether thou shalt save thy Husband? Or how knowest thou O Husband whether thou shalt save thy Wife? where the word σώζειν, save. which ordinarily signifies to reduce, as it is 1 Pet. 3.1. κερδῆσαι, to gain) to repentance from heathenism or wicked life is set parallel to ἁγιάζειν, sanctifying, and makes it clear what was meant by it.

Answ. However the Doctor conceive, yet doth it not appear to me probably, much less irrefragably by express words, that *v.*16. is added further as an explanation of the words, *v.*14. The unbelieving Husband hath been sanctified in the Wife. For, 1. though some conceive *v.*15. to be put parenthetically as Grotius, and that *v.*16 belongs to the matter of *v.*12,13,14. yet Beza, Piscator, and others conceive that *v.*16. hath reference to the words *v.*15. God hath called us to peace, that is, to live peaceably together, & as an encouragement thereto *v.*14. is added: none that I know besides the Doctor makes *v.*16. to explain the forepart of *v.*14. 2. Nor is there likelihood that the Apostle doth use *v.*16. as an explanation of the forepart of *v.*14. it being not his wont to express a thing obscurely, and than presently to express it more plainly, or to use unnecessary repetitions in such short resolutions as are here, especially there being not any thing mystical in it, but matter of fact. 3. If he had made *v.*16. an explanation of the words *v.*14. The unbelieving husband hath been sanctified in the wife and vice versâ, he would have used τὸ-

τέκνα, as *Rom.*9.8. or some such like term; But he useth 1 Cor. 7.16. the expression τί γὰρ, For how knowest thou? Which plainly sheweth it to be a further argument to move them to live together, not an explanation of a former speech: for [γὰρ for] is a particle shewing it to be a further reason of it. 4. It to me appears irrefragably, because according to the Doctors exposition *v.*16. doth not explain the forepart of *v.*14. For according to him the word [hath been sanctified] must needs refer to some past known examples and experiments of converting of other unbelieving yoke-fellows by the believing parties, or else sayth he, There could be no reasonable account given of the Apostles setting it in the Præter-tense. But *v.*16. For what knowest thou O Wife whether thou shalt save thy Husband? Or how knowest thou O man whether thou shalt save thy Wife? Mentions a thing to be, and that as a possible but not certain event, and that concerning one that is an unbeliever. Now that the words mentioning a possible uncertain event concerning others should explain the words that speak of a thing past about others is out of my reach: Surely it seems to me ridiculous to paraphrase, *v.*14. The unbelieving Husband hath been sanctified in the Wife, thus, For what knowest thou O Wife whether thou shalt save thy Husband? and therefore I take the Doctors conceits in this to be his dotage.

The Doctor adds, *Sect.*33. Which being once yielded to be the true meaning of the first part, there will then be little reason to doubt but that this of the admission of the Christian children to baptism on this score, is the importance of the later part, that and no other being it, which exactly accords with the former reasoning, and it being not imaginable, that this should be here added in that argumentative stile [ἐπεὶ ἄρα, whereas (or for) elsewere, &c. if it were not an enforcing of the foregoing Position thus proved by him.

Answ. It is true the style is argumentative, and [ἐπεὶ ἄρα, else were] shews the latter part of the verse, 1 *Cor.*7.14. to be an inforcing of the foregoing posi ion of the same verse asserted, I say not proved by him. But that this exposition [else were your children unclean. that is, not admitted to baptism, but now they are holy, that is, admitted to Christian baptism] exactly accords with the former reasoning yielded, so as that the Doctors para-

phraſe being once yielded to be the true meaning of the firſt part there will be little reaſon to doubt but that this, of the admiſſion of the Chriſtian children to baptiſm on this ſcore is the importance of the later part, is ſo far from having any colour of truth, that in my apprehenſion the Doctors expoſition makes the Apoſtles words Are nam ſine calce, ſand without lime, that is without connexion. For what ſhew of connexion is there in this conſequence, If ſome other unbelieving yoke-fellow had not been converted by the faith, diligence and converſation of the believing party that then was, then the children of you who are believers, but begotten or brought forth by one that yet is an unbeliever had not been admitted to Chriſtian baptiſm in infancy: but now, that is upon this ſcore that ſome former unbelieving yoke-fellows have been brought to the faith of Chriſt by the faith, converſation and diligence of the believer, they have been admitted to baptiſm? According to the tenour of this reaſoning theſe propoſitions ſhould be included in the Apoſtles argument. The children of a believing yoke-fellow who is joyned to an unbeliever had not been admitted to Chriſtian baptiſm, if ſome other believing yoke-fellow had not been brought to the faith. The children of a believer by a unbelieving yoke-fellow have been admitted to Chriſtian baptiſm by reaſon that it hath been uſual that other believers have brought the unbeliever to the faith. Whence will follow. 1. That at the firſt converſion of a people, at which time there is no experiment of ſuch events of the believing yoke-fellows bringing the infidel to the faith, then the infants of the believer were not admitted to Chriſtian baptiſm: which is directly contrary to the Jewiſh batizing infants of proſelytes, which is onely at firſt converſion, which yet the Doctor will have the patern of our Chriſtian baptiſm. 2. That the Doctor derives a title to baptiſm of this believers infant children from the diligence and happy ſucceſs which another believer hath had, which is a thing meerly extrinſecal to the inſtitution of baptiſm. For where did ever Chriſt ſay, Baptize thoſe or their children who are yoke-fellows to unbelievers, for ſome other believing yoke-fellows have had good ſucceſs in converting their yoke-fellows to the faith? I can hardly forbear to call ſuch reaſoning à baculo ad angulum. On the other ſide, the Doctors expoſition makes the children of the believer joyned to the unbeliever not capable of Christian baptism, if there had not been some experiment of a believer bringing to the faith the unbelieving yoke-fellow, and some hopes that the present unbeliever would become a Christian by the diligence of the other yoke fellow, which would exclude the believers childe from baptism whose yoke-fellow is deceased in unbelief, and so the conversion of that person is hopeless. So that what ever pretences are made for infant-baptism, no children (according to the Doctors exposition) of a believer can be rightly baptized without proof of such experiment of the converting of the unbeleiving yoke-fellow by the believer; it would not suffice that the conversion be by a Minister, &c. Now this being rare and hard to prove, it will certainly make questionable, if not void most of the pretended infant-baptisms that are. Confident I am that no Pædobaptist ancient or modern besides the Doctor ever asserted Pædobaptism on this score, which is the onely ground, if the Doctors exposition of the Apostle be right. The Ancients did admit to baptism any ones childe whether Pagans or Believers being brought to them, as I shew in my Examen part. 1. sect. 8. But I need say no more to refute this exposition being the most unlikely of all that I have hitherto met with.

He tels us Sect. 34. What is thought fit to be brought for the eluding and avoiding this interpretation will be most fitly considered anon in answer to the Anabaptists plea.

Answ. The falsly so called Anabaptists have not allowed Dr. Jeremiah Taylour to make their plea, nor do they all, if any of them frame their plea as he lays it, yet it is shewed above, that the Reply Dr. Hammond makes to overthrow their pretended answer overthrows his own exposition.

But he goes on, Mean while for the confirming of it, it may be remembered, what ἅγιος, holy is known to signify in the sacred dialect, not onely an inherent, but a relative holiness, being separate or set apart to God, discriminated from common ordinary things, or persons, and as that belongs to higher degrees of separation, the office of a Prophet or the like, so the lowest degree of it is that of being received to be members of the Church, into which all are initiated by baptism. And accordingly, all visible professors, and not onely those that are sincerely such, are in Ezra

9.2. the holy seed, and in the Epistles of the Apostles called ἅγιοι, holy.

Answ. This being all granted confirms not Dr. Hammonds exposition, now they are holy that is admitted to Christian baptism. The Doctor knows its no good argument à genere ad speciem affirmative, the children are holy that is set a part for God, discriminated from common ordinary things or persons, Ergo they are set apart by the special way of baptism. And it being granted that all visible professors, and not onely those that are sincerely such are in Ezra 9.2. the holy seed, and in the Epistles of Paul called holy (though that term Ezra 9.2. hath a far different notion, as I shew in this Review Antipæd. part. 1. sect. 13,25. from what the Doctor imagines) yet till the Doctor prove infants to be visible professors he hath not confirmed, that the taking of [holy 1 Cor. 7.14.] for [infants admitted to baptism] is agreeable to the Apostles language.

He adds Sect. 35. And secondly how the word ἀκάθαρτα, unclean, is used by St. Peter, Acts 10.14. for those that must not (as he conceived) be received into the Church, as [Gods having cleansed] is Gods reputing them fit to be partakers of that privilege. Whereby it appears how fitly receiving and not receiving to baptism may be expressed by those phrases.

Answ. I deny not the fitness of the expressing receiving and not receiving to baptism by the terms of holy and unclean, if the Holy Ghost had so thought good. But sure the Doctor is mistaken in the notion of unclean, Acts 10.14. For it is plain from Acts 11.3. that an unclean person is in that place one that was not onely out of the Church, but also one that a Jew conceived he might neither go into, nor eat with him, yea though he were a Proselyte of the Gate, and owned the God of Israel. Now then if the same notion of unclean and holy be 1 Cor. 7.14. as is Acts 10.14. an unclean person is one that a man may not go into, nor eat with. which applied to infants is ridiculous; else if the unbelieving yoke-fellow had not been sanctified, that is, brought to the faith by the conversation and diligence of the believer your children had been unclean, that is, such as they might not go in to, nor eat with them, but now their infants are holy, such as they might go in to and eat with them.

Thirdly, sayth he, how the word קדש which is ordinarily to sanctifie, doth among the Jews (whence this word ἁγια, is taken) as when the high Priests washing his hands and his feet ten times on the day of Expiation is called עשרה קדושין ten sanctifications, Joma, cap. 3. sect. 3. which being the word which denotes the washing some part of the body, and distinguished in use from the טבולה which is the immersion of the whole body, may perhaps be an intimation, that the primitive baptisms were not always immersions of the whole body, but that sprinkling of some part the literal importance of the קדושין sanctifications might be sufficient.

Answ. If this reason were good, it would rather confirm this exposition [The unbelieving Husband hath been sanctified by the Wife, that is, the unbelieving Husband hath been baptized by the Wife or washed] than this, the children are baptized, for they are not sayd to be sanctified, but to be holy. And then the Apostle relates it as a thing oft used among Christians, that believing Wives did baptize or wash unbelieving Husbands: which so expounded is a plain testimony for womens baptism of their own unbelieving Husbands, & so hath better ground from this Text than infant baptism. What the Doctor draws in besides the business, to put some colour on their sprinkling instead of baptism, is but a fig-leaf too narrow to cover the nakedness of their practice. The Doctor himself pag. 180. makes the baptism which was a Jewish solemnity, the washing of the whole body. And Sect. 71. pag. 185, 186. he sayth, Jethro was made a Proselyte by immersion or baptism in waters, and the manner of this immersion is sayd to be that they should be set up to the neck in water. And pag. 184. Unless he be טבול baptized he is a Gentile. And out of Arrian the Jewish Proselyte is called βεβαμμένος, dipped, and he that is onely so in shew not indeed, ψευδοβαπτισης, a counterfeit baptized person. In his Pract. Catech. lib. 6. sect. 2. By Christs appointment whosoever should be thus received into his family should be received with this ceremony of water, therein to be dipt, i. e. according to the primitive ancient custom to be put under water three times. His words following intimating as if sprinkling were appointed by Christ instead of it, are his own figment. Pag. 35. he makes the ancient manner of putting the person under water, and then taking him out again, to denote dying and rising again, with more of the like confessions, and even in this place sayth, the washing some part of the body is distinguished in use from the טבולה (which answers to the Greek word Baptism) which is immersion of the whole body. And yet the Doctor is not ashamed to say, that primitive baptisms were not always immersions of the whole body, (which me thinks he should hardly believe himself in) and because the besprinkling of some part, (which I think is not true, if sprinkling by water and not bloud or ashes be meant, for the Priests in their sanctifications dipped their hands and feet in water) is called קדושין sanctifications, to intimate as if any kinde of sanctification of a part of the body though but by sprinkling with water were baptism. It is a like abuse when Christ bids baptize, to sprinkle onely or pour water on the face as it would be, when he bids to eat, onely to chew in the mouth; or when he bids to drink, to wet the lips onely. But that to sprinkle is not to baptize, is elsewhere asserted, Addition to the Apology, Sect. 22.

The Doctor goes on in his dictating way thus. Fourthly, it is known of the legal uncleannesses, contrary to those their sanctifications, that they were the cause of removing men from the congregation, they that were so ἀνάβαπτοι, unclean, might not partake of the privileges of the Temple, till they were washed and sanctifyed, and that is proportionable also to the notion here given of it, that the Christian children are holy, i.e. not inherently, (they are not capable) but in the account of God and men capable of separation for the service of God, of being entered into the Church, into Covenant, which denominates men holy, (as the Gentiles as long as they were out of it were unclean and unholy, Acts 10.) now are they holy, i.e. it is the present practice of the Church, that Apostolical Church of S. Pauls time, to admit to baptism such infant-children of Parents of whom one is Christian, though not of others.

Answ. It is sayd without proof, that the uncleanness excluding from the Tabernacle and sanctification restoring are proportionable to the notion here given of childrens being excluded or included in the Church. Why should Cornelius be counted out of the Church by God or men, when God sayth, He was a devout man, and one that feared God, with all his house, who gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always, Acts 10.2. It's true, he was excluded from the familiar ſociety of the Jews according to their ſuperſtition, and ſo unclean, but not accounted by God to be out of the Church, but in it. That Chriſtians children are denied to be capable of holineſs inherently, will not be granted him, much leſs his paraphraſe on the words [now are they holy] i. e. it is the preſent practice of the Church that Apoſtolical Church of S. Pauls time to admit to baptiſm ſuch infant children of parents, &c. It will not ſtand with his own expoſition, as hath been ſhewed, and it makes the Apoſtle relate a matter of plain fact in obſcure terms. Auguſtin did diſclaim this interpretation Hierom and Ambroſe gave another, and ſo did Tertullian de animâ, cap. 39. what he adds is frivolous. And to put all out of queſtion, the aneient Fathers which certainly knew the ſacred Dialect, call baptiſm ſanctification. So Cyprian Epiſt. 59. Eum qui natus eſt baptizandum & ſanctificandum, He that is born muſt be baptized and ſanctified; where baptizing is ſanctifying of infants. So Greg. Nazian. Orat. 40. Edit. Bill. pag. 658. Κρεῖσσον ἁγιασθῆναι ἢ ἀπιλθεῖν ἀσρεάγιςα, 'Tis better to be ſanctified without ſenſe of it, I. e. baptized in infancy when they are not ſenſible of it, than to depart or die without the ſeal of baptiſm. And again pag. 648. ἐκ βρέφους ἁγιασθήτω, let him be ſanctified from the infancy, I. e. baptized then. And many the like.

For 1. That the Ancients of the third or fourth Century knew certainly the ſacred Dialect eſpecially the Latin Doctors, me thinks the Doctor ſhould know them better than to aſſert it. He ſure is not ignorant that in multitudes of things later writers do finde their many miſtakes about the ſacred Dialect, and how few of them had any skil in Hebrew or Greek the Doctor is not ignorant I preſume. 2. In this very thing if thoſe Fathers certainly knew the ſacred Dialect and from their uſe Paul muſt be interpreted, then the word [ſanctified] not the word [holy] (for the Doctor doth not ſhew they uſed the word [holy for [baptized] but the word [ſanctified]) muſt be 1 Cor. 7.14. as much as [baptized] and then the ſenſe is, The unbelieving husband is baptized by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is baptized by the husband, of the abſurdity of which interpretation I need ſay no more.

thus interpreted, is a clear proof of the point in hand. And were not this the importance of it there were no privilege imaginable, no ſanctity, which could be attributed to the infants of Chriſtians which would not belong to the infants of heathens alſo, which yet is here diſtinctly affirmed of the one and denied of the other by the Apoſtle.

Anſw. How abſurd the Doctors interpretation is hath been ſhewed before, yet were it granted him it would not be a clear proof for infant-baptiſm, unleſs [your children] were all one with [your infants] which will not be cleared till it be ſhewed that the Corinthian Chriſtians had then no children but infants, or that he meant no other under that term then the infants. Which ſure is not according to the Jewiſh pattern, in which they baptized Proſelytes children if females under twelve, if males under thirteen, not according to their will, but of the Father or court to which they were ſubject, I add, if the Apoſtle ſhould by [holy] underſtand a privilege where upon they were baptized he ſhould conceive otherwiſe than the Jews did, who conceived all unclean, whom they baptized, till by baptiſm they cleanſed them and made them holy. And for what he ſayth that no privilege imaginable &c. I anſwer, 1. By denying that the Apoſtle there attributes a privilege or ſanctity belonging to the infants of Chriſtians, which would not belong to the infants of heathens. I have I conceive in the firſt part of this Review demonſtrated the contrary againſt Mr. M Mr. B. &c. 2. If there were a privilege attributed yet it might not be baptiſm. For. 1 That belonged according to the Fathers opinion and practiſe to unbelievers children alſo, if they were brought as I ſhew examen part. 1. ſect. 7. 8. 2. There are other imagined privileges or ſanctities belonging to them, as, by ſome real actual inward holineſs, by others federal external holineſs, by others holineſs in hope and expectation.

He goes on. And as this evidently concludes ſuch a cuſtom, known and acknowleged among Chriſtians at that time: ſo it is directly the thing that the Jewiſh practiſe, in which Chriſt founded his inſtitution, hath laid the foundation of, in baptizing Proſelytes and their children, and to which the primitive Church conformed. And ſo though that Judaical practiſe taken alone were not deemed any demonſtrative evidence, that Chriſt thus in- instituted his baptism for the Gentiles, yet being taken in conjunction with this Testimony of the Apostolical practise, and the primitive usage it brings all the weight with it, which a Divine Testimony interpreted by practise can afford, which is as great as any such matter can be capable of.

Answ. 1. It is false that Christ founded his institution in the Jewish practise of baptizing proselytes and their children. If he had done so he would have bid the Apostles, baptize Disciples and their children as the Jews did. There is not any thing that is brought by the Doctor that proves it, yea if it were the minde of Christ to baptize Disciples and their children, as the Jews did Proselytes, it would utterly overthrow all use of baptism of water after the first conversion of Progenitors to be Christs Disciples, none but they and the children then born should be baptized, all Disciples and their infants which descended from the first baptized should not be baptized with water being clean or holy without baptism. For they baptized because they were unclean till baptized, not because holy before. Nor did they baptize any of the posterity of the first baptized though born but a few moneths after their first baptism. So that this conceit of the Doctor would help much for the Socinian conceit, as if water-baptism belonged onely to the age of the Apostles. 2. It is false that there is any evidence in the Apostles words 1 *Cor.*7.14. of such a custom of baptizing Christians and their children as was among the Jews of baptizing the Proselytes and their infants. Nor do I think ever any of the Fathers did interpret the Apostles words as this Doctor doth. Tertullians words in his Book *de anima cap.*39. are not as the Doctor saith an exact parallel to the Apostles speech 1 *Cor.*7 14. as the Doctor renders and interprets it The terms candidati sanctitatis or designati sanctitatis, or candidati fidei, *in Hieromes Epist.*153. to Paulinus do note, not that they were baptized as the Doctor interprets [Holy 1 Cor 7.14.] but that they were in expectation, as they that were seekers for Offices in Rome, while they stood for the Offices were candidati in White so the infants were as it were in expectation of being believers and baptized, Quod veluti ambiunt, & expectant baptismum as Erasmus in his note on *Hierom Ep.*153. to Paulinus, or designed that is intended to be holy by the parents, that is to be bred up to

profeſs the Faith, and ſo to be baptized. Both which ſenſes do indeed oppoſe the Doctors aſſertion and ſhew that they were not baptized in infancy. And for that which the Doctor talks of Tertullian as ſaying they were holy that is baptized ex ſeminis prærogativa from the prærogative of their birth, it is a manifeſt miſtake as the very reading the words ſhew. For. 1. The holineſs he aſcribes to believers children was not onely by prærogative of birth, but alſo ex inſtitutionis diſciplina, by the diſcipline of their inſtruction, which is afore baptiſm. 2. The prærogative of birth the very words of Tertullian ſhew to be no more but this, that believers children were born without thoſe idolatrous ſuperſtitions, which were uſed in the birth of infidels children, which he there particularly recites. There is no one of the Fathers interprets Paul as the Dr. Ambroſe and Hierom interpret the words of legitimation in birth, Auguſtin, what way ſoever he go, ſaith expreſly, the words belong not to baptiſm. 3. It is falſe that the Jewiſh practiſe in baptizing Proſelytes and their children layd the foundation of infant-baptiſm; neither the Scripture gives any hint thereof, nor any of the Ancient Chriſtian writers, no not any of thoſe the Doctor cites ever derives it from the Jewiſh practiſe: But the ſpeeches of Tertullian de bapt. cap. 8. of Gregory Nazianzen Orat. 40. de baptiſmo, diſſwading from it except in caſe of neceſſity by reaſon of apparent danger of death, the very decree of the Council in Cyprians 59. Epiſtle, the ſpeeches of Auguſtin, Hierom againſt the Pelagians, the words of the counterfeit Authors of the Book of Queſtions and anſwers to the Orthodox impoſed on Juſtin Martyr qu. 56. The queſtions ad Antiochum impoſed on Athanaſius qu 114. the words of the Author of the Eccleſiaſtick Hierarchy impoſed on Dionyſius Areopagita, the ſtory of the baptiſm of Gregory Nazianzen, the intended baptiſm of Auguſtin, when in danger of death, tom. 1. confeſſ. lib. 1. cap. 11. and other evidences do ſhew that the Fathers took the baptiſm of infants not to have foundation in the Jews practiſe, but in the conceit they had that baptiſm did regenerate, give grace and ſave, and that it was neceſſary for them to enter into the Kingdom, and that they were in danger of periſhing if they were not baptized, and therfore they practiſed baptizing of infants in that caſe. Which thing the Papiſts avouch at this day, and in order thereto womens baptizing. The Protestant reformers who composed the Common Prayer Book, do appear to have had the like conceit, in that in the preface before publique baptism they use the old reason from John 3.5. Rom. 5.12. for infant-baptism, affirming infants to be regenerate, and undoubtedly saved dying baptized, allowing Midwives to baptize, till the words [lawfull Minister] were added in the Rubrick after the conference at Hampton Court, where had not King James overruled them the Bishops had not yelded to that reformation; yet still they kept private baptism, with that ridiculous use of propounding the questions of repentance and faith to the infant, to which the sureties must answer in the childes behalf, with profession of the childes desire to be baptized into the faith recited, though the childe were then crying when the words were spoken; and for the sureties they had no desire to be baptized; and the Bishops and Presbyters requiring it would have censured them as Anabaptists had they indeed minded baptism according to Christs minde: which thing was a meer mockery, as Chamier calls it. Yet in the Rubrick it self in the Common prayer Book in the title of Publique baptism it is confessed that the Ancient custom was of baptizing onely at Easter and Whitsuntide, & baptizing is acknowledged to have been by dipping: sprinkling or pouring water on the face I do conjecture by reports and such writings as I have seen, was most after the conference at Hampton Court. Dr. Hammond himself in his Practic Catech. lib. 1. sect. 3. pag. 23. saith, All men were instructed anciently in the foundamentals of faith before they were permitted to be baptized. And therefore for the present I shall put by the answering of the stale and rotten allegations out of the Fathers for infant-baptism brought by the Doctor, because having sayd so much in my Examen part. 1. and my Apology sect. 16. I presume those that are not willing to be deceived will not be swayed with Dr. Hammonds, Mr. Bs. Mr. Ms. friends, or any other citations from them, some being of meer counterfeit Authors, as Justin Martyr, Pope Hyginus, Dionysius Areopagita, Athanasius, some suspected as Origens words, some misinterpreted as Irenaus and Tertullian, some the very Authors shew that they maintained infant-baptism but in the case of danger of death, as Tertullian and Nazianzen. Cyprian as he avouched infant-baptism, so he did rebaptization, and that as from the Apoſtles. Auguſtin as he avouched infant-baptiſm by Apoſtolick tradition, ſo he did alſo infant-communion. But of theſe things if God will more hereafter if it appear neceſſary. This I take to be ſufficient for the preſent to anſwer Dr. Hammonds new device which he vainly boaſts to have all the weight that a Divine Teſtimony interpreted by practiſe can afford, and is as great as any ſuch matter can be capable of.

TO THE PARLIAMENT OF THE Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

HAving presented the two former Parts of this Review to His Highneſs, and His Council; I take boldneſs to tender this to your Honours, as those who are intruſted with the affairs of these Nations (in which are many Churches of Christ, whose safety, and welfare doth much depend under Christ on your wisedome, and uprightneſs) that it may serve to justifie your Honours in allowing those who agree with me in the point herein discussed liberty, employment, and maintainance alike with dissenters. wherein your equity and wisedome is very conspicuous and laudable, notwithstanding the clamours and practises of those our opposites, who would have the ship of this Commonwealth so ordered, that the power of it should all incline to one side to the endangering of the whole. 'Tis true the asserting of this truth hath heretofore been unhappily managed, partly by reason of the conjunction of some errours very dangerous in the Asserters of this truth, and partly by reason of the violence of spirit in them and their opposites, which have occasioned hard Lawes against them, and great hatred towards them. Nor do I know any likelihood but that still not onely about this, but also about any other point in difference, when one party seeks to oppreſs the other there will be much unquietneſs, unleſs Governours become moderatours between them. In the Declaration of the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, Ordered to be printed 4. Martii 1647. I read these words. The name of Anabaptism hath indeed contracted much odium, by reason of the extravagant opinions and practises of some of that name in Germany, tending to the disturbance of the Government and peace of all States: which opinions and practices we abhor and detest. But for their their opinion against the Baptism of Infants, it is onely a difference about a circumstance of time in the administration of an Ordinance, wherein in former ages as well as this, learned men have differed both in opinion and practice: And though wee could wish that all men could satisfie themselves, and joyn with us in our judgment and practise in this point: yet herein wee held it fit that men should bee convinced by the Word of God with gentleness and reason, and not beaten out of it by force and violence: And yet May 2. 1648. there was an Ordinance which made it punishable with imprisonment, to affirm that the Baptism of Infants is unlawfull, or that Infants Baptism is void, and that such persons are to be baptized again. Notwithstanding which, it is to be acknowledged with all thankfulness to His Highness and your Honours, that we enjoy our Peace and Liberty as Dissenters do; which they who value not, forget the goodness of God, and make forfeiture of their own good. For those who so do, I plead not, but for that Truth and Practise which is delivered and appointed by Christ, which should be encouraged not suppressed by Governours. For this I am moved to appear out of Conscience of my duty to Christ, commiseration of them who have been condemned and injured for avouching my position, and my engagement by Solemn Covenant enjoyned by Parliament, to endeavour Reformation in Doctrine and Worship according to Gods Word; And do humbly present it to your Honours, craving that if any Lawes do remain in force against it they may be repealed; And that while we walk according to the rule of Christ, Liberty, Peace, Encouragement may be granted to us as to others who have joyned in the Common Cause, which will be a motive to us the more affectionately to pray for your Honours prosperous and happy proceedings in repairing the Breaches, and building up this Commonwealth whereto you are advanced, and for which I am

Your Honours Humble and

JOHN TOMBES.

The christian Reader.

THough all personal Pleas and Narrations are suspected to be partial, and are usually judged to have something of ostentation, or dissembling, or some such inordinate affection which may abate their credit and esteem, yet the practises of opponents in Controversies, and the great prejudice to the Truth, and person opposed they create thereby, and the difficulty for persons who are not actors in such contentions to understand the truth without them make them necessary. Doubtless if such pleas were not necessary, the Apostle Paul would not have thought his course justifiable, who hath written one Epistle, to wit, the second to the Corinthians, almost wholly Apologetical for himself, that the misunderstanding of himself and wayes might not be advantage to Seducers for hindering the success of his preaching. It is true my credit and esteem is nothing comparable to the Apostles, the Church and Truth of God may stand, though I be buried in perpetual silence; yet sith I am a Preacher of the Gospel as Paul was (absit verbo invidia) and my labours therein as I hope not altogether without fruit, and sith the Lord seems to me to have set me, though in a lower Sphere, for defence of that One Baptism which Paul mentions Ephes. 4. 5. as one of the chief points of Christianity, and Heb. 6. 2. is counted as a foundation point. I assure my self Paul's practise doth justifie mine, and that I should be wanting not onely to mine own credit, but also to that truth which is dearer then my credit, if I should pass by with silence those misrepresentations whereby both are abused, and the mindes of men alienated from them. Which is the more necessary, because of the great repute which my Antagonists have in this generation, and their confident speeches, and their incessant endeavours upon all occasions in Pulpits, Presses, Disputes, Conferences, to represent the way I avouch as dangerous, my self as instrumental to an evil designe of perverting and dividing the Churches of God, unto which the proneness of men to uphold an Errour inveterate, and speciously pretended to be approved and blessed by God, and the contrary opinion accursed, besides the advantages it hath for their carnal ease, and for the begetting of a favourable opinion of themselves and their children (which are more to most then demonstrations out of Gods word) do gain an easie assent. And though I am not out of hope that those who have opposed the truth I assert with impetuous zeal, will be (especially the most tender conscienced, who examine their wayes, and review their doctrines) awakened and see and confess their errour, yet I fear the obloquy, and perhaps detriment in repute and outward estate and peace, which men either are likely or doubt they may incur by owning the truth I hold forth, or the seeming inconsistency of the reformation I seek to promote, with the peace of the Churches of God, will divert the thoughts of many from an exact consideration, and an equall judgement of what I shall write, either of my self or the matter under debate. What was wont to be opposed against the reformation of Popish and Prelatical corruptions, shall we go against all antiquity? Be wiser then our Fathers? condemn all the Churches? make rents in the Church? and such like objections, though they be upon examination but vain, yet like Gorgons head they are apt to turn men into stones, and to make men not see what they do or might see, and to be insensible of the evil of the practise, which otherwise their Consciences would be affrighted with. And truely though it be the wise and just contrivance of Divine providence, and congruous to his end, that the vanity of all things under the Sun might appear, yet is it an humane irregularity, that not only for evil labour, but also for all travel and every right work a man is envied, maligned, or disliked of his neighbour, Eccl. 4. 4. chiefly when it crosseth self ends and conceits. Nor is it incident onely to the prophane and unbelievers, to dislike and oppose such acts as are rightly done, but also to the godly, until their mistakes are discovered to them. The building of the Altar of Ed, Josh. 22. 12. was likely to have been an occasion of war betweeen the rest of the Congregation of Israel and some Tribes, till the intention of the builders was cleared to Phinehas; and Peter's going in to Cornelius, Act. 11. 2. occasioned contention with him, though it were from God, til his warrant was shewed. Paul knew that his promoting the collection for the poor Saints at Jerusalem might be distasted of the best, and therefore he prayes that his service which he had for Jerusalem might be accepted of the Saints, Rom. 15. 31. Even holy uplight men have their weaknesses, passions, mis-prisions, prejudices, which oft times hinder a right understanding of tenents and actions of Christian Brethren, and thereby no small contentions arise. God would have us discern thereby humane imperfection, and keep our spirits humble and heedfull how we manage the rightest actions. Surely no action is more necessary then the discovery of truth in the things of God, nor should any endeavours be more acceptable to holy persons, then such as tend thereto, yea though there should be imperfection in actings and defect in the success. Yet too much experience hath shewed that such attempts meet with much opposition, and are ill entertained even by those who are or seem friends to truth. It is unnecessary to give instances: in the Scripture Acts 15. 2, &c. in the Ecclesiastical Story there are so many as verifie it beyond all contradiction. If there were no other example but what hath befaln me about the point in this writing discussed, yet it were sufficient to verifie what I said of the difficulty to gain entertainment of that truth against which men are prepossessed, and of the ill usage of them that in a due manner endeavour to cleer it. That Infant Baptism was not according to Gods will, I thought might be made manifest by the silence of it in Scripture, and the Writings of the two first Ages, and by shewing how it was counted but an Ecclesiastical humane tradition unwritten, induced upon such reasons by the Leaders of the Churches in after ages as are now judged erroneous; and how false and dangerous the grounds are on which it is made a Divine institution, to wit, an imagined Covenant of grace to a Believer and his seed natural, the nature of Sacraments to be seals of the Covenant of grace, the inference of duties about positive rites of the new Testament from analogy with abrogated Ceremonies of the old, the command of Circumcision to have been in the extent of it commensurate to and derived from the Covenant with Abraham Gen. 17. as the adequate reason, the succession of Baptism into the room and use of Circumcision; all which or most of them, are so contrary to the Scripture and Protestant doctrine, as that I presumed they would quickly have been discerned by those who are acquainted with the controversies of Divines, and sought reformation in Discipline, and removal of humane inventions in Gods worship, and had entered into a solemn oath and Covenant to that end. And for my way of manifesting my doubts first to the Ministers of London, and then to the Committee of the Assembly then sitting at Westminster, and after to a prime man in it in the years 1643, 1644. and what opposition I found is so manifest in my two Treatises and Apology published 1645, 1646. as that it were but actum agere to say any more thereof. Which I hoped would have taken off such prejudices, as my Antagonists writings had raised against my writings and person, that I might securely apply my self to review the Dispute, without hearing of any more personal objections. But when I found the like usage continued by Mr. Robert Baily of Glasgow in Scotland, I published an Addition to the Apology 1652. though it were framed before, and sent in a letter Manuscript to him. Yet the hottest charge was behinde. After my necessitated removal from the Temple in London to Bewdley in Worcestershire, anno 1646. it happened that a publike Dispute was between Mr. Richard Baxter of Kidderminster near to Bewdley and my self, at Bewdley Jan. 1. 1649. which how it was occasioned, managed, injuriously divulged, may be perceived by the writings on both sides; his Epistle before the first Edition of the Saints Everlasting rest, his Book of Baptism, Praesestinantis Mortor, and my Antidote printed 1650. and Praecursor, anno 1652. By Mr. Baxters book of Baptism, my self, doctrine, answers, practise have been so unworthily dealt with, as that they have been painted out in deformed shapes quite besides their true features, and thereby exposed to the unrighteous censures and contempt of so many, that Mr. Blake in his Preface to his Vind. foederis thought he might without controul say, Mr. Tombes is generally look upon low enough under hatches. It is indeed too manifest that upon the publishing of Mr. Baxters Book of Baptism, which was often printed and very much dispersed, floods of reproaches were cast on me and those who are of my judgement in that point, triumphant boastings of that book as the Mawl of Anabaptism, a most excellent piece, a lasting monument, &c. which had laid me flat on my back, with many the like vaunts in print and colloquies. Nor did mens loose tongues and pens stay here, but many insolent speeches were vented, trampling upon me and the Cause with me as Captives subdued by that mighty hand; my actions were censured, my abilities disparaged, yea people possessed with conceits as if I and those of my judgement were accursed of God, left over to a spirit of delusion, a hardened heart; Magistrates were provoked to make Lawes against us, as intollerable authors and fomentors of the errors, heresies, and divisions now in the Land; the rage and violence of common people shewed it self against the practise of Baptism enjoyned by Christ, people were deterred from hearing us, Schollers from reading our Writings, ancient acquaintance alienated, liberty formerly allowed to preach in publike places restrained, those that by Baptism were added to Communion withdrawn from society, yea violent courses taken to hinder Wives, children, servants from associating with them that were baptized, and that which was in former ages the onely Baptism, and highly honoured by the ancient Writers with titles of dignity exceedingly debased and derided, insomuch that in many parts of this Land, I have been taken at best for a self-conceited man, affecting novelty and singularity, of a dangerous spirit, a ring leader of a sect of giddy men adversaries to unity, discipline, opening a door to all fanatique conceits, whose end would prove wicked, with many more imputations, which neither my books nor known conversation afore and since the wars, my labours and imployment in places not obscure, the confessed holiness, orthodoxy, unblameableness of those Churches over which I had any inspection, or with whom I associated could so acquit us, but that with your wound is uncured or a skar remains. Mr. Blake in his Preface to his Vind. fæd. saith thus of me. And indeed I think it a special providence that he should thus appear with a shew of learning, a volumn of words, a rhapsody of Authors, getting a name to be the strongest sword and buckler that was ever lift up in this Cause, to draw the eyes of his party towards him, and then fall so flat, able to make good nothing; so that men far from censorious vanity well able to judge (upon serious perusal of his works and converse with him) do conclude, that it is not possible but he goes against the dictates of his own conscience; so that these it seems count me for an autocrit or self-condemned heretick. What other imputations Mr. Blake casts on me, may be seen here Sect. 26. And what Mr. Firmin, Mr. Gattaker, and Mr Simon Ford, Sect. 53. Besides what Mr. John Goodwin, Mr. Wood, and many more have judged of mine and Mr. Baxters writings. After Mr. Baxter Mr. John Crag would needs take up the cudgels and play his part in this matter, which how he hath done may be seen by our writings, compared chiefly here sect. 87, &c. Books after books have been published from England and Scotland, by Dr. Hammond, Mr. Carter, Mr. Rutherford, Mr. Fuller, Dr. Savage in Latin, and others for Infant-baptism; besides Sermons in the Pulpit, and determinations in the Universities at most solemn times. Yea upon occasion of a meer accident at Oxford in July 1652. I have been baited in the Weekly News books, and I have just cause to conceive that by clancular Letters, conferences, consultations, not onely my doctrine hath been decried, my writings vilified, my way represented as pernicious that people might not know the truth, but also my station undermined, and my silencing endeavoured; and which is of all other the most grievous to me, the fruit of my labours in the Gospel of Christ not a little hindered: so that whereas Mr. Baxter would have in his Gildas Silvianus all Ministers tied to confer with the people in private, by his misrepresenting of me, the people (whom I would gladly teach) are deterred from hearing me in publike, and conferring with me in private. Yea notwithstanding the Quakers have been so often opposed by me, and my doctrine as contrary to theirs as light to darkness, by reason of Mr. Baxters imputing the rise of Quakerism to Anabaptism, as he terms it (which how far he chargeth on me may be seen by his Questions to me set down here sect. 63.) one Blashfield a bookseller in Lempster hath openly reviled me at the close of my Sermon while I was in the Pulpit Decemb. 26. 1656. though I then refuted the Quakers, and told me if there were no Anabaptist there would be no Quaker; and somewhat afore Mr. Farmer a preacher in Bristol making a relation of James Naylors riding into Bristol, prints a passage in a private letter, which he with much ado signifies to mee was written by Mr. Robert Breton of Pembridge in Herefordshire but four miles from me, in which I am charged to say, that in a Sermon which I disavow in my writings upon the report at table of a man of this Town, who (what ever his qualities be) being pressed twice by me, once before some of the most intelligent and indifferent men here, another time before all or the most part of the Governours vernours of this Town, to deal plainly whether I did speak those words which Mr. Farmer hath printed doth refuse to do it, shuffles in his answers, and will neither affirm nor deny it. Such dealings as these from men reputed godly, preachers of the Gospel, some of them fellow-sufferers for the common cause of reformation, and by the same Covenant engaged to it, do make me amazed to see what strange courses the intemperate zeal of Pædobaptists carries them, discerning thereby what a malignity of spirit they have towards me, who have so far as I can remember done no such thing to them, nor have been wanting in any good office I could do for them with a good conscience, but willing to joyn with godly dissenters in the common Cause of Christ. Nor do I finde any relenting in Mr. Baxter, but as he shews his spirit in his letters printed here sect. 53, 63. so by his preaching at Bewdley May 4 1656. in which he gave ten frivolous reasons for his practise of Infant-baptism, for the confirming of his party who opposed my preaching there at that time, and since, and by the late passages in most of his writings, and in his last book of Conversion p. 109. I finde him still the same he was. No doubt (saith he) but God doth pardon original sin to multitude of infants by the blood of Christ, through the Covenant of grace which is made to the faithfull and their seed, and this pardon bestowed by the Covenant is sealed by baptism which more solemnly conferreth it. It is most probable that God doth also make some change on the hearts of infants, secretly giving some seed of inward grace before or in their baptism. And p. 299. he hath this foolish passage. Others withdraw upon pretence we are unbaptized, to which end they must coin a new baptism, or else they are at a loss. And their arguing with us will be much like the Papists, in the point of Transubstantiation, which requireth that men renounce their sense and say, that they see not that which they see, and feel not or taste not that which indeed they feel and taste, and then they may come to be in the right; and so we must believe that we see none baptized in our Churches, nor hear it, nor know of any such thing, and then we may come to be a Church: As if the arguing were that there is nothing which Pædobaptists call baptism in their Churches, not, there is nothing that may bee truely called Christian baptism according to Christs institution, and then p. 300. after his fashion when he wants arguments, he adds. Oh if it were the will of God that we could have as clear light in some other weighty points as we have in Scripture for the baptism of the children of believers, how much would it do to quiet the understandings of many that are willing to know I dare not say it is a wonder to me to finde such passages in Mr. Baxter but having examined his book of baptism, his ten reasons for his practise of Infant baptism delivered in Bewdley Chappel May 4. 1656. His Letters to me 1655. set down here sect. 53, &c. I cannot but bemoan the sad condition, first of Ministers and people who are carried away with such shallow disputings, and confident speeches as Mr. Baxter hath used in these writings. 2. Of my self, and all who go about to cleer truth, that they be necessitated to stir up such a nest of Wasps and Hornets, as these have shewed themselves to be who have opposed me, if they do never so brotherly and fairly and regularly declare their judgments contrary to the common received tenents. Yet I must confess two things have somewhat refreshed mee against the hard censures of those whom Mr. Blake mentions and the rest, the one that His Highness and Council and the Parliament since (as I am informed) confirming the Ordinance for approbation of publique Preachers seem to have better thoughts of me in putting that trust on me, the other that (to mention no other) two of the ablest acutest and well read Divines and accurate Disputants, which I have known the University of Oxford in my time to have bred, and who have been thought fit for the Divinity Chair, have had far other conceits of my writings then these have had, the one not long after the publishing of my Examen, expressing his rejoycing to see so accurate and scholastical a discussing of the point, which he found not in the Assembly, wishing he had known of it afore the publishing of it that he might have prefixed an Epistle, yet wishing it had been written in Latin, as foreseeing that the publishing it in English was likely to beget me more trouble, then it would have done if printed in Latin; the other who since that wrote thus to me. I am a friend to your person (whom I have known (though not known to you) this 31. years) and to your opinion too (as to the main of it) for I believe and know, that there is neither precept nor practise in Scripture for Paedobaptism, nor any just evidence for it for above two hundred years after Christ. The first who bears witnesse to Infant baptism practised in the Church is Tertullian, but so as he expresly dislikes and condemnes it as an unwarrantable and irrational custome: and Nazianzen a good while after him (in his Oration εἰς ἅγιον βαπτισμα*) dislikes it too, and would not have infants brought to baptism till they were of some age and able to answer for themselves. Sure I am that in the Primitive times they were first to be* Catechumini, and then illuminati, or baptizati, and that not onely children of Pagans, or Pagans converted, but children of Christian parents, Nazianzen (though a Bishops son) being not baptized till he was above 30.

years of age, as appears in his life, and the like is evident of some others. The truth is, I beleeve Paedobaptism did (how or by whom I know not) come in in the 2d. Century, and in the 3d. and 4th. began to be practised (though not generally) and defended as lawfull from that text (grosly misunderstood) Jo. 3. 5. Upon the like gross mistake of Jo. 6. 53. they did for many Centuries (both in the Greek and Latin Church) communicate infants and give them the Lords Supper, and I confess they might do both as well as either: But although they baptized some infants and thought it lawfull so to do, yet Augustin was the first that ever said it was necessary inde durus pater infantum. I have read what my learned and worthy friend Dr. Hammond, Mr. Baxter and others say in defence of it, and (I confess) I wonder not a little that men of such great parts should say so much to so little purpose, for I have not yet seen any thing like an argument for it. Nor is it a small case to me that I finde after all Mr. Baxters shamefull and vain arguings against the truth, and injurious dealings with me and the baptized Christians, with whom I hold Communion, that yet at last, though quite besides his intentions, he hath so befriended our cause as to lend us twenty-good arguments against Infant baptism, in his 2d. disputation of right to Sacraments, in the close of the 16th. saying thus p. 156. I conclude that all examples of baptism in Scripture do mention onely the administration of it to the professors of saving faith: and the precepts give us no other direction. And I provoke Mr. Blake (as far as is seemly for me to do) to name one precept for baptizing any other, and make it good if he can. I know what he will pretend, that he intended this onely against Mr. Blakes opinion of baptizing upon a dogmatical faith and he means what he argues onely in the case of adult persons. But that doth not avoid his own arguments against himself, though he otherwise intended; nor will his evasion serve till he prove, that there is a different precept or example for baptizing Infants from that of baptizing adult persons, or that any are to be accounted beleevers or disciples by their parents or, as his term is, propatents profession, which will never be done by him. I will not say as Mr. Blake saith some have said of me, that it is not possible but he goes against the dictates of his own conscience: But this I dare boldly say, that Mr. Baxter hath strongly disputed against Infant Baptism in the place forenamed, pag. 53. asserting and proving Arg. 1. We must not baptize any who profess not true repentance, pag. 62. Arg. 2. We must baptize no man that first professeth not to beleeve in God, p. 68. Argum. 3. It's the very nature or appointed use of the external part of Baptism it self (yea essential to it) to signifie and profess the saving faith and repentance of the baptized, pag. 710. arg. 4. We must baptize none that profess not their consent to enter themselves presently into the Covenant of grace with God in Christ, p. 79. arg. 5. we must not baptize any without the profession of that faith and repentance which are made the condition of remission of sins; the rest have speeches to like purpose, in which though he puts in sometimes [and their seed] yet his proofs do all overthrow that his own addition, and tear off his patch which he hath printed to his argument, and as fully militate against his book of baptism as Mr. Blakes tenet; so that to me it seems that by Divine providence without his intention, una eademque manus vulnus opemque tulit: Nor do I think but that if conscientious Christians chiefly Schollers, would read over that second disputation, they would be satisfied that infants ought not to be baptized but themselves, and that Mr. Baxter hath cheated the world by his book of baptism, and shewed himself therein an inconsiderate writer. But however this fall out, it is a great rejoycing to my soul, that God hath so long preserved my life and strength though now declining, to finish this part of the Review also, and to see that part of it printed which is in answer to Mr. Baxters second main argument in his book of baptism, about his pretended ordinance of infants visible Church-membership and its repeal, which some have given out as unanswerable, because this answer hath been so long in publishing; not considering that besides the not knowing of his minde about it till 1655. I have been necessitated to answer many others, and together with my constant labours, some other employments extraordinary with domestick distractions, necessity of respect to my bodily strength, want of help of books in some points, of learned men to whom I might have recourse, of an amanuensis, and chiefly the difficulty of getting it printed by reason of the great charge, which this book amounts to, and yet is not so readily put off as other smaller writings, and such as suite more with the minde of Readers, of whom few seem to search after truth impartially, especially in controversies of this kinde. In this which is done my witness is in heaven how faithfully and sincerely I have dealt, which makes me slight the unrighteous censures of those Mr. Blake mentions, of Mr. Baxter, Mr. Firmin, Mr. Gattaker, Mr. Ford, Mr. Crag and the rest. And for Mr. John Goodwin who so much magnifies Mr. Baxters book, I wish he and Mr. Horn his second would read this writing, which I take to be a sufficient answer, with the two fore-parts of this Review, to what is said by Mr. Baxter and themselves in the point of Infant-baptism. As for the point of Schism or Separation which Mr. Baxter, and he charge Anabaptists tists with, I take my self no further concerned then mine own fact, which if they can prove to have been unbrotherly or unrighteous, I hope God will so frame my heart as to testifie my repentance: if not, I advise them to take heed of rash judging, and all their followers of following them in that sin. If the objection be still set on foot, That those that are, as they term us, Anabaptists, do fall into many false opinions, prove Quakers, &c. I wish them better to examine reports of us, then Mr. Farmer, Mr. Breton, and others have done of me afore they spread them, and to look into the state of the societies of their own judgement, who if they be not guilty of such fallings, I shall rejoyce with them, and hope they will learn to pitty and endeavour to restore those who are fallen in the spirit of meekness; if they be, that they will remember that it should be no more objected to us then to themselves. For my own part, I hope I shall not abet any such errour, nor do I know of any such errours or miscarriages in the Churches to which I have associated which are not opposed and censured by us: Nor do I think it equal we should be charged with that errour or miscarriage which we condemn. And I make bold to admonish Pædobaptists in the Lord, that they take heed of those practises which tend to the disquieting, defaming, hindering their brethren in the work of Christ because of the supposed errour, as they term it, of Anabaptism, lest they happily fight against God, and wrong their brethren, remembring that he that doth wrong shall receive for the wrong he hath done, and there is no respect of persons with God, Col. 3.25. And to the end they may search their own consciences, and rightly judge of themselves, I presume they may do well to lay to heart these following questions. 1. Whether it be not a manifest perverting of the Gospel of Christ, to maintain that the Covenant of Gospel grace is made to each beleever and his seed. 2. Whether it be not against the Gospel to maintain, that the command of Circumcision Gen. 17. doth any way bind Christian beleevers now in their practise? 3. Whether it be not against the Gospel to entitle persons to the Church visible Christian by their natural generation of beleevers? 4. Whether it be not a manifest will-worship to practise the positive Rite of Infant Baptism as Gods worship, which is confest to have neither precept nor example in the New Testament? 5. Whether it be not a profanation of Baptism to use it otherwise then Christ appointed? 6. Whether by justifying Infant Baptism, the relinquishing of many Popish and Prelatical ceremonies which have as much of reason, tradition, authority of the Church as it, be not condemned? 7. Whether it be not an oppression, and exercising of dominion over mens consciences, to tie them to acknowledge Sacrament to be in their nature seals of the Covenant of grace which the Scripture terms not so, nor can be proved plainly from it, and to impose on them the practise of Infant baptism under pain of guilt of sin which Christ never appointed? 8. Whether it be not manifest hypocrisie to oppose the Cross, Surplice, &c. and to be zealous for Infant baptism? 9. Whether they who justifie Infant baptism and oppose baptism of Believers at age confessed to be according to the institution of Christ and primitive practise, are not partial in Gods Law and may expect to be made contemptible before all the people? 10. Whether they who do so, do not break the solemn Covenant of endeavouring reformation according to Gods word? 11. How they that say they baptize infants into the Name of Christ, who sprinkle or powr onely some water on them, without any profession of the infant can be acquitted from saying falsly? 12. By what rule those who are acknowledged visible Church-members in infancy can be denied the Lords Supper? 13. Whether it be not a signe that Pædobaptism is not according to rule, when there are so many differences about the title to it between Papists and Protestants, and the ablest Protestants themselves? 14. How they can make good the regularity of Church-constitution, and the ordination of Elders, who have no other baptism but that in infancy? 15. How they can be free from the guilt of hardening souls in deadly presumption, who avouch the Christianity of infants by natural birth, and Infant baptism which is the great plea of ignorant and profane persons on which they rest? 16. Whether it be not a signe of injustice and want of love to truth, or adherence to a party, in them that will read and hear what one party saith for Infant baptism, and refuse to read or hear what the opposits say, though they bring the plain institution of Christ and his Apostles practise for them? 17. Whether it be not an unrighteous course to charge the miscariages of persons either dead or strangers, on that doctrine or practise which countenanceth not them, or to persons who are no way abettors of them becaus of agreement in one opinion? 18. Whether division or Schism is not chiefly to be imputed to those who violently oppose & inveigh against their Brethren for holding & practising that which they conceive themselves bound to do by the plain command of Christ which their opposites do acknowledge? 19. Whether such as impose Infant baptism on their Brethren who hold the faith and baptism confessed to be from Christ, and deal rigorously with them for not owning it, do not as the Papists, who impose with cruelty their own additions on those who otherwise are not denied to hold the true faith and practise? 20. Whether such pretences as are made for Infant baptism, and the imagined evil of Anabaptism, can be a sufficient plea for baptism, and the imagined evil of Anabaptism can be a sufficient plea for any truly godly person to neglect that baptism which Christ hath so strictly commanded *Mat.*28.19. *Mar.*16.16. & the Apostles constantly practised? And sith Mr. Baxter hath with so much earnestness ministred so many interrogatories to me, I shall take the boldness to advise him to consider his own ways. 1. In giving such a title to his book of Plain Scripture proof of Infants baptism, when there is not one text in all his Book which speaks plainly or obscurely for it, yea it's confessed by himself, that it is not plainly determined in Scripture, p. 3. and is so dark in Scripture that the controversie is become hard p. 301. 2. In his abusing so many texts of Scripture as he hath done, chiefly the institution of Baptism *Matth.*28 19. for infant Baptism, as if they were disciples appointed there to be baptized, which is sufficiently refuted by himself in many places of Baptism, p. 299, 300. of the right to Sacraments from p. 91, to 96. 3. In coyning a new title to Baptism by the profession of parents or pro parents, of which the Scripture is altogether silent. 4. In his devising an ordinance of infants visible membership in the Christian Church, of which there is no foot step in all the Bible. 5. In his many years clamorous abuses, and some kind of violent persecutions of my self and others of my judgement for not acknowledging these figments of his, but promoting reformation of Baptism according to our duty. 6. In his unbrotherly printing my answers I made in the dispute at Bewdley Jan. 1. 1649. without so much as acquainting me with it though living near him. 7. In blazing it abroad that he had driven me to gross absurdities, which yet he hath not in his answer to the 17. sect. of of my precursor or elsewhere shewed to be so. 8. In his light passing over my urging his own words against infant baptism, about Christs institution *Mat.*28.19. in my precurs. p. 66. in his Praefat. monit. sect. 16. which is noted in the 2d. Part of the Review, p. 66, 67. which sure being from Christs institution, deserved better consideration. 9. In condemning our rejection of infant Baptism, though but an humane tradition, on no better grounds then Papists build many of their ceremonies which he condemns, in asserting the Covenant of grace to the faithfull and their seed, which in disputes against Arminians is commonly denied by Contraremonstrants. 10. In his many false accusations of me as a sect master disturber of the Church, which he cannot prove, in his scornfull expressions in the dispute and his books, in his injurious insinuations of me, as if I were blinded or hardened, occasioned the rise of Quakerism and other errours, thereby indirectly creating odium to me and to the truth, and which is worst of all, weakning my hands in the work of Christ, and particularly in taking off my quondam hearers at Bewdley from hearing me, or permitting me there to preach in publike. None of which, nor any of the rest of his evil suggestions of me or the people baptized there or elsewhere, I pray God may be laid to his charge.

I have no more to add, but to commend the reading of this and the other parts of the Review to thy care, hoping that as the differences between the Cis-Jordan and Trans-Jordan Israelites, and Peter and the circumcised Christians were composed by right intelligence of their actions, so it may be in this, and that God will awaken the eyes of those who have opposed the truth I assert, with devices of an anti-Evangelical Covenant of grace to Believers and their seed, a Law and Ordinance of infants visible Church membership no where extant, of baptizing infants according to the Jewish pattern of baptizing Proselytes, of an additional promise of casting elect children on elect parents ordinarily, of a command in force now, Gen. 17. 9. of Baptisms succession to Circumcision and fetching a rule from it, of baptisms conferring Grace, &c. will discern their errour, and embrace that light which they have hitherto shut out, and laying aside their vain disputes about the baptizing of Infants of not Churchmembers, profane, excommunicate parents, or proparents and such like, endeavour to restore that one Baptism which with that one faith once delivered to the Saints, may bring the Churches of God to a right constitution and holy unity and order, and without which a right reformation covenanted will not be, and that godly parents of tender consciences will take heed of bringing infants to baptism whereby it is profaned, and discern that it is their own duty to be baptized in the name of Christ, and that the use of baptism is, as Mr. Baxter confesseth p. 68. Of right to Sacraments, yea essential to it to signifie and profess the saving faith and repentance of the baptized (which shews infants are not baptized, sith they do not that which is essential to baptism and that which is essential must be in all) and not to look upon it as their childrens privilege, but as it was by Christ appointed, by it engage themselves to follow the Lord JESUS; which is the prayer of

Thy loving Brother and real Servant in Christ;

JOHN TOMBES.

The Contents.

Sect. 1. THe second argument against infant Baptism that it is will worship is confirmed.

Sect. 2. Dr. Homes his arguments to prove infant Baptism from Gen 17. are examined.

Sect. 3. Mr. Drews argument for infant Baptism from Gen. 17. is examined, and it is shewed that there is not the same reason of infant Baptism as of infant Circumcision.

Sect. 4. The Covenant Gen. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. was a mixt covenant.

Sect. 5. Acts 2. 38, 39. proves not either the identity of covenant now with that to Abraham Gen. 17. 7. as it comprehends his natural seed, nor the connexion between it and baptizability.

Sect. 6. The argument of Mr. Josiah Church in his Divine warrant for infant baptism, from their being judged in the promise of propriety in God is answered.

Sect. 7. Bare judgement of charity concerning a persons interest in the promise is not a warrant to baptize.

Sect. 8. Acts 2. 38, 39. proves that interest in the promise intitles not to baptism without repentance.

Sect. 9. Infants are not proved by Mr. Church to bee of the visible Church Christian.

Sect. 10. Infants capacity of some respects different from discipleship intitles them not to baptism.

Sect. 11. The agreements between circumcision and baptism do not justifie infant baptism, and the validity of sealing infants with an initial seal is shewed to be null.

Sect. 13. The arguments of Mr. William Lyford from the Covenant for infant baptism are answered.

Sect. 14. The arguments of Mr. Stalham, Mr. Brinsley, Mr. Hall, and a nameless Author from the Covenant for infant Baptism are examined.

Sect. 15. The dispute of Mr. John Geree about the extent of the Gospel Covenant to prove thence infant Baptism is examined, and it is shewed that interest in the covenant did not intitle to circumcision; nor is it proved it doth now to baptism.

Sect. 16. That the Gospel covenant is not extended to infants of believers as such.

Sect. 17. Mr. Cottons, the Assembly's, and London Ministers way of arguing for infant Baptism from the Covenant and Circumcision is recited, and the method of the future progress in the Review expressed.

Sect. 18. Mr. Marshals reply to the first section of the 3d. Part of my Exam. about the connexion between the Covenant and seal is reviewed.

Sect. 19. Mr. Blakes exceptions againſt my ſpeeches in the point about the connexion between the Covenant and initial ſeal are refelled.

Sect. 20. The exceptions which in the firſt part of my Review or Antipædobap. tiſm ſect. 5. are made againſt the proof of connexion between the Covenant and initial ſeal, are confirmed againſt Mr. Blake vind. fed. ch. 42. ſect. 3.

Sect. 21. The ten exceptions of the firſt part of my Review againſt Pædobaptiſts expoſition and allegation of Acts 2. 38, 39. for the connexion between the Covenant and ſeal, are vindicated from Mr. Blakes anſwer vindic. fed. ch. 37, 43.

Sect. 22. Animadverſions on ch. 2. part. 1. of Mr. Thomas Cobbet his Juſt vindication touching the explication of Acts 2. 38, 39. in which his expoſition is ſhewed to be vain, and mine juſtified.

Sect. 24. Mr. Sidenham's notes on Acts 2. 39. in his Exercitation ch. 5. are conſidered.

Sect. 25. Mr. Marſhals reply to my Examen about his firſt concluſion is reviewed, and the Covenant Gen. 17. ſtill maintained to be mixt, and that Gentile ſelf-juſtitiaries, though reputed Chriſtians, are not termed Abraham's ſeed, nor Gal. 4. 29. proves it, and that the diſtinction of outward and inward Covenant is not right.

Sect. 26. The mixture of the Covenant as by me aſſerted, is vindicated from Mr. Blakes exceptions vind. fed. ch. 26.

Sect. 27. The four firſt chapters of Mr. Sidenham's Exercitation are examined, and his vanity in his conceits about conſequences proving infant baptiſm, the purity of the Covenant Gen. 17. infants of believers being Abrahams ſeed and in Covenant is ſhewed.

Sect. 28. It is proved from Luk. 1. 54, 55. & 19. 9. Job 8. 39. Rom. 4. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Gal. 3. 7, 16, 29. & 4. 28. Rom 9. 6, 7, 8. Matth 3. 9. that the ſeed of Abraham to whom the promiſe as Evangelical is made Gen. 17 7. are onely true believers or elect perſons.

Sect. 29. The allegation of Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. Matth. 3. 7, 8, 9. to prove that the ſeed to which the promiſe Gen. 17. 7. as Evangelical belong are true believers or the elect onely, is vindicated from Mr. Blakes anſwer vindic ſad. ch. 36. and Mr. Sidenhams Exercitation ch. 6.

Sect. 30. Of the meaning of Mr. Marſhals ſecond concluſion, the ambiguity of which is ſhewed.

Sect. 31. Of the novelty and vanity of Mr. Marſhals and others doctrine about ſacraments being ſeals of the Covenant of grace, and the ſeveral ſealings of them.

Sect. 32. The exceptions in my Examen part. 4. ſect. 5. againſt Mr. Marſhals ſpeeches about the Covenant and conditional ſealing, are made good againſt Mr. Marſhal and Mr. Blake.

Sect. 33. That it is no error, as Mr. Baxter calls it; but a truth, that the Covenant of grace is made onely to the elect.

Sect. 34. Mr. Baxter hath not proved that the abſolute promiſe or Covenant is not it that is ſealed in baptiſm.

Sect. 35. My ſpeech about Gods ſealing to none but believers, is cleered from Mr. Baxters objections.

Sect. 36. Chriſtianity is not by birth, nor the Church as civil corporations, Mr. Marſhals equivocation in the uſe of the term [Covenant of grace.]

Sect. 37. That the promiſe Gen. 17. 7. proves not an external priviledge of viſible Churchmemberſhip and initial ſeal to infants of Gentile believers, as Mr. Marſhal aſſerts.

Sect. 38. Animadverſions on the 3d. ch. of the firſt part of Mr. Thomas Cobbets Juſt vindic. ſect. 1, 2, 3. about Gen. 17. whereby his poſitions about Church Covenant and external priviledges of the Covenant of grace are reſelled.

Sect. 39. Animadverſions on ſect. 4th. of the ſame chapter, whereby the conceits of Mr. Cobbet about external being in the Covenant of grace, are ſhewed to be vain.

Sect. 40. Animadverſions on ſect. 5. of the ſame ch. ſhewing that Mr. Cobbets ſuppoſed viſible intereſt in Gods Covenant is not the rule of baptizing.

Sect. 41. Animadverſions on the 6th. ſect. of the ſame ch. ſhewing that Chriſt is not head of any unſound members, nor parents profeſſion unites children to Chriſt ſo as to entitle them to baptiſm.

Sect. 42. Animadverſions on ſect. 7th. of the ſame ch. ſhewing that the body of the Jewiſh Church, even the worſt of them, was not under the Covenant of grace in reſpect of external intereſt therein.

Sect. 43. That the Covenant at Mount Sinai was a Covenant of works and not of Evangelical grace, and that the Jewiſh Church and ſtate were but one body.

Sect. 44. Animadverſions on the 9th. ſect. of the ſame ch. in which the Covenant intereſt external and Eccleſiaſtical of infants of inchurched believers, is pretended not proved to be Goſpel, and his allegations of Deut. 30. 6, &c. Gen. 17. 8. Luk. 19. 9. Deut. 29. 10, &c. Ezek. 16. 1, &c. Gen. 9. 25, 26. and other places are examined.

Sect. 45. Mr. Cobbets anſwers to objections againſt his 7th. concl. part. 1. c. 9. ſect. 9. of his Juſt vindic. are conſidered, and Mr. Blakes tenet concerning the general nature of a Covenant that it is a mutual agreement.

Sect. 46. The 27, 28, 29. chapters of Mr. Blakes vind. fad. are examined, and it is ſhewed that he hath not proved the Covenant of grace in Goſpel times to admit or to be made to any but the elect regenerate.

Sect. 47. Mr. Blakes vindic. fad. ch. 34. concerning the ſtating the queſtion of the birth-priviledge of the iſſue of believers is examined, and his objections againſt my ſtating it removed.

Sect. 48. The 35th, and 37th. chapters of Mr. Blakes vindic. fad. are examined, and his argumens concluding the natural iſſue of believers to be taken into covenant are anſwered.

Sect. 49. The 4th. ch. of Mr. Baxters part. 1. of plain Script. proof, &c. is examined, his conceits about infants viſible Churchmemberſhip and their admiſſion conſidered, and ſundry animadverſions made on that chapter.

Sect. 50. The 5 ch. of Mr. Brs. plain ſcrip. &c. p. 1. is examined, and the texts Gal. 4. 1, &c. Mat. 28. 19. cleered ſo as to prove infants now no viſible churchmembers.

Sect. 51. The arguments from altering of the Jewiſh Church conſtitution and call, the ceaſing of the High Prieſt, &c. to prove infants now no viſible Churchmembers, are made good againſt Mr. Baxters 5 ch. plain, &c. part. 1.

Sect.

Sect. 52. It is proved that infants were not reckoned to the visible Church Christian in the primitive times, nor are now.

Sect. 53. Letters between me and Mr. Baxter are set down, concerning the Law and Ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, which he affirms, whereby the point is stated.

Sect. 54. Infants were visible Churchmembers onely in the Congregation of Israel.

Sect. 55. Infants of the Jews were not visible Churchmembers by promise or precept, as Mr. Baxter teacheth.

Sect. 56. That the people and thereby the infants of the Hebrews were made visible Churchmembers by a transeunt fact, is made good against Mr. Baxters exceptions.

Sect. 57. Mr. Baxters Law of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed is not proved from Gen. 1. 26, 27, 28. or Gen. 3. 15.

Sect. 58. Infants visible Churchmembership is not proved by the Law of Nature.

Sect. 59. The sayings of Adam, Eve, Noah, concerning Cain, Seth, Shem, the term [sons of God, Gen. 6. 2.] prove not Mr. Baxters Law of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed.

Sect. 60. Mr. Baxters Law of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, is not proved from Gen. 12. or 17. or 22.

Sect. 61. Covenants, promises and speeches in the Old Testament of Israel, the righteous, prove not Mr. Baxters Law of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed.

Sect. 62. Mr. Baxters 9th. and 10th. questions about the repealableness and repeal of his imagined Law of infants visible Churchmembership, and his 8. additionals are answered

Sect. 63. Mr. Baxters ten calumniatory questions and the conclusion of his Letter are answered.

Sect. 64. My answer in the Dispute and sermon to the argument of Mr. Baxter of Baptism part. 1. ch. 6. about the nonrepeal of infants Churchmembership because neither in justice nor in mercy is vindicated.

Sect. 65. Mr. Baxters arguments from Matth. 23. 37. Revel. 11. 15. for infants visible Churchmembership ch. 12, 13. are answered.

Sect. 66. Mr Baxters 9th, 10th, 11th, concerning infants better condition in the N. T. in his 14th, 15, 16th, chapters part. 1. of Baptism, to prove their visible Churchmembership are answered.

Sect. 67. Mr. Baxters argument ch. 17. part. 1. of baptism, from Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. is answered, and my answers vindicated.

Sect. 68. Neither from Rom. 4. 11. nor by other reason, hath Mr. Baxter proved ch. 18. 19. part. 1. of baptism, that infant Churchmembership was partly natural, partly grounded on the Law of grace and faith.

Sect. 69. Mr. Baxter ch. 20. by his 15th. argument from infants being once members of the universal visible Church, hath not proved their visible Churchmembership unrepealed.

Sect. 70. Mr. Baxters 16th. and 17th. arguments from the promise of mercy Exod. 20. 6. and of blessing Psal. 37. 26. are answered.

Sect. 71. Mr. Baxters 18th. argument from the priority of infants Churchmembership before Circumcision, his 19th. from Gods mercy, his 20th. from from blessing and cursing Deut. 28. are answered.

Sect. 72. Mr. Baxters 21. argument from the absurdity of my doctrine making all infants members of the Devils visible Kingdome is answered.

Sect. 73. Mr. Baxters 22. argument ch. 27. that my doctrine leaves no ground of hope of salvation of infants dying is answered.

Sect. 74. Mr. Baxters allegations p. 76, 77, 78. shew not a stronger ground of hope of infants salvation so dying then mine, his 23d. argument ch. 28. his 25th. ch. 30. are answered.

Sect. 75. My arguments to prove the ingrassing Rom. 11. 17. to be into the invisible Church by giving faith, are vindicated from Mr. Blakes exceptions vindic. fæd. ch. 38. and Mr. Sidenhams Exercit. ch. 8, 9.

Sect. 76. My sense of matrimonial holiness 1 Cor. 7. 14. is vindicated from Mr. Blakes exceptions vindic. fæd. ch 39. and Mr. Sidenhams Exercit. ch. 7.

Sect. 77. Mr. William Carters attempt of proving the Christian Sabbath from Heb. 4. 7, 9, 10. is shewed to be successeless, and so useless for proof of infant baptism.

Sect. 78. Mr. Carters exposition of Gen. 22. 16, 17, 18. as if God promised to make every believer a blessing, so as to cast ordinarily elect children on elect parents is refuted.

Sect. 79. Neither did Circumcision seal Mr. Carters additional promise, nor was Abraham thence termed father of believers.

Sect. 80. Mr. Carters conceit as if Gen. 17. 9. were a command in force to Abrahams spiritual seed in the N. T. is shewed to be vain.

Sect. 81. The succession of Baptism to Circumcision, and their identity for substance to us is shewed to be unproved by Mr. Carter, Mr. Marshal, Mr. Church, Dr. Homes, Mr. Cotton, Mr. Fuller, Mr. Cobbet, from Col. 2. 11, 12. or elsewhere.

Sect. 82. Notwithstanding Mr. Carters allegations of Acts 2. 38, 39. 1 Cor. 7. 14. Rom. 11. 16, 24. Mark 10. 14. Acts 15. 10. Matth. 28. 19. the N. T. appears to be silent about Mr. Carters additional promise and infants baptism.

Sect. 83. Interest in the Covenant gave not title to Circumcision as Mr. Marshal in his 4th. concl. would have it.

Sect. 84. The enlargement of our priviledges proves not infant baptism as Mr. Marshal in his 5th. concl. would have it.

Sect. 85. Mr. Cobbets dictates Just. vindic. part. 2. ch. 1. touching childrens baptismal right are examined and refelled.

Sect. 86. The 13th. and 14th. chapters of the first part of Mr. Rutherfords book of the Covenant are examined, and found to make nothing for infant baptism.

Sect. 87. The disasters in Germany and our present distractions sprung not from Anabaptism as Mr. Crag saith.

Sect. 88. Austins saying about Apostolical traditions is not to be rested upon, nor his testimony about the antiquity of infant baptism.

Sect. 89. The testimonies of the Ancient writers of the Greek Church concerning infant baptism are examined and my exceptions made good against Mr. Crag, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Homes, Mr. Marshal.

Sect. 90. The arguments to prove infant baptism an innovation in the Greek Churches Exam. p. 9. are made good against Mr. Marshal, and Dr. Homes.

Sect. 91. The testimonies of Tertullian for infant baptism, and Dr. Hammonds interpretation of ch. 39. de Animâ, are examined with 1 Cor. 7. 14.

Sect. 92. Dr. Hammonds imagined evidence from [hath been sanctified] for his sense of the forepart of 1 Cor. 7. 14. nullified, and my opinion of enallage of tense vindicated.

Sect. 93. Dr. Hammonds rendring [by 1 Cor. 7. 14.] is refelled, and my rendring it [to] justified.

Sect. 94. It is shewed that Dr. Hammond hath no proof from 1 Cor. 7. 16. for his sense of the forepart of v. 14. nor will his sense of holy for baptized agree with the Apostles argument, though his sense of the forepart of the verse were granted.

Sect. 95. Dr. Hammonds reasons from the terms holy and unclean for his sense of baptized or not baptized are refelled.

Sect. 96. The Jewish custome of baptism for initiation was not the pattern of Christian baptism, as Dr. Hammond would have it.

Sect. 97. Matth. 28. 19. Infants are excluded from being subjects of baptism notwithstanding Dr. Hammonds pretensions.

Sect. 98. The testimonies of Cyprian, Augustin, and other Latin Fathers for infant baptism, are shewed to have come from their mistakes, and the evidences why the antiquity of infant baptism should not be deemed such as is pretended, are vindicated.

Sect. 100. The Arguments of Mr. Crag for infant baptism are re-examined.

Anti-pædobaptiſm:

OR,

The third part of the full Review of the Diſpute concerning Infant-Baptiſm, refuting the proof of it from Circumciſion and the Covenant.

SECT. I.

The ſecond Argument againſt Infant-Baptiſm, that it is will-worſhip, is confirmed.

HAving proceeded ſo far in the Review of the diſpute concerning Infant-baptiſm, as to vindicate the Texts, Rom. 11. 17. Act. 2 38,39. 1*Cor.*7.14. from ſuch gloſſes as tend to wreſt them to the maintenance of it, and to make good my firſt Argument againſt it, from the inſtitution of Chriſt, *Mat.*28.19. *Mark.*16.16. The Apoſtles and primitive Evangeliſts practice and ſayings, in two parts of the Review already printed, I go on to the finiſhing of the reſt of the forementioned Review.

My ſecond Argument againſt Infant-baptiſm is thus formed, That which is will-worſhip is not agreeable to the will of God, nor according to the rule of baptizing: But the ordinary Baptizing of Infants, though by a lawful Miniſter, is will-worſhip. Ergo.

The Major is proved, 1. From Col. 2. 13. where will-worſhip is diſallowed by the Apoſtle, and ſo generally Commentators and other Authors account will-worſhip a ſin. Doctor Lakes defence about the Sabbath, Theſ. 2. Ye know that ἐθελοθρησκεία did never pleaſe God; yet Doctor Hammond in his Treatiſe of will-worſhip, will have ἐθελοθρησκεία, or will-worſhip, to be underſtood in the better ſenſe. But againſt it are the frame of the Apoſtles words, and the driſt of them, which is to blame them for being ſubject to ordinances after the doctrines and commandments of men, as not agreeing with a Chriſtians co-dying with Chriſt; And he ſaith, Such things have a ſhew of wiſdom: and verſe 18. he that promiſeth that none do beguile them of their reward θέλων ἐν ταπεινοφροσύνῃ, willing in humility, or as our Tranſlators, in a voluntary humility. I may not now divert from the preſent buſineſs to examine Doctor Hammonds Allegations, there being enough in that Text to prove, ſervice as done to God, invented by men, and practiſed after their commands, without Gods appointment, not to be after Gods will: and I take Doctor Hammond to be well anſwered by Mr. Cawdrey. 2. However the Major is plainly proved from Chriſts words, Mat. 15. 9. In vain do they worſhip me, teaching for doctrine mens precepts; which proves that worſhip which is taught after mens precepts (which is the ſame with will-worſhip in my propoſition) is in vain, and therefore not agreeable to the will of God. But I need not ſay any more about it, ſith my Antagoniſts do moſt of them except againſt will-worſhip as a ſin.

The Minor is proved thus, That which is worſhip not appointed by God, is will-worſhip: But the ordinary baptizing of Infants of Believers, Churched or unchurched, though by a lawful Miniſter, is worſhip not appointed by God. Ergo. The Major is confirmed from the very definition of will-worſhip, which is, A worſhip of God nor appointed by him, but taken up according to the command of man, out of Mat. 15. 9. The Minor is proved, by demanding a Scripture wherein God appointed Infant-baptiſm.

In anſwer hereto, in conference with me, it was once denied that Infant-baptiſm was uſed as a worſhip of God: But if ſo, then it is no holy thing, no Sacrament, no profaneneſs to contemn it, no matter if a Midwife do it, with many more of the like abſurdities.

Maſter Blake in his anſwer to my letter ch. 13. pag. 92. Vindic. fœd. ch. 44. denies Infant-Communion, Bell-baptiſm, to be will-worſhip, he makes will-worſhip then when men deviſe an Ordinance, but not when it is onely an abuſe, profanation, miſapplication of an inſtituted worſhip to a wrong ſubject.

And

And Master Marshall page 195. of his Defence, would put me to prove, that all things belonging to Christian worship, even in the circumstances of it, even the ages and sexes of the persons to whom the Ordinances are to be applyed, must be expressely set down in the N. T. pag. 196. There is no absolute necessity, that every circumstance of an Ordinance, or the several sexes or ages to whom an Ordinance ought to be applied, must be set down in precept, or Apostolical example equivalent to a precept, found in the N.T. pag. 205. The point about Infant-baptism toucheth but a circumstance of age. In which speeches Mr. M. seems to make Infant-baptism but an arbitrary circumstance; and if so, then much injury was in the first use of his Sermon, in which he made the denial of Infant-baptism, odious, as if it were as bad or worse than the facts of Herod, and Hazael in slaying Infants; then much guilt of oppression lies on them that have denied place in the Ministery, scourged, imprisoned, fined, banished, put to death men for opposing, or not owning Infant-baptism; and very unrighteous have been their declamations, who in Pulpits and elsewhere have inveighed against them as Hereticks, Sectaries, &c. censured their opinion as intolerable, as Maresius qu. 6. their practice as Sacrilege, as Master Blake vindic. fæd. ch. 4. If Master M. do indeed think the point of Infant-baptism to touch but a circumstance of age, and that it needs no divine institution, then it is an indifferent ceremony with him, such as the power of the Church may appoint, and if so, it is no otherwise blameable to omit it, than it is to omit any other Church-constitution. But the truth is, it is false which he saith, That the matter toucheth onely a circumstance of age: for indeed it toucheth the qualification of the person to be Baptized; and the very end and use of Baptism (which are the essentials of it, as it is a Sacrament) which is, that the person Baptized, do thereby testifie his profession of Repentance and Faith in Christ, and covenant to be his, as appears by the very phrase used, of being Baptized into the name of the Trinity, Mat. 28. 19. compared with 1 Cor. 1. 13. as I have proved before, Part 2. Sect. 5. And were it a circumstance onely of age, yet it being determined by Christ, who are to be baptized, to wit, Disciples and Believers, it is an arrogant presumption to alter it. Rightly saith Chamier {Panstr. tom. 4. lib. 8. c. 4. Sect. 32. quæ non sunt institutæ circumstantiæ habeto sane sibi Ecclesia, ut tempus locumque celebrandi, & si quæ sunt similia. At quæ instituta sunt ea ne moveto.

As for M. Blakes speech, that a misapplication of an instituted ordinance to a wrong subject, is an abuse or profanation of it, but not will-worship, 1. It is not right. For though every misapplication to a wrong subject of an instituted ordinance be not will-worship, yet a misapplication to a wrong subject of an instituted ordinance is a will-worship, when not onely the rite it self is made worship of God, but also the application of it to that subject, though it be but mens invention, yea and such a one as alters the end and use of the ordinance. as is in infant baptism, bell-baptism, altar-baptism, infant-Communion, Prayer, sacrifice, vows, keeping solemn feasts, offering incense, building altars, were instituted ordinances, yet Jeroboams sacrificing and keeping a feast at another time than God appointed, Ahaz his forming an altar after the pattern of that at Damascus, Nadab and Abihu their offering strange fire, prayer to Saints, for the dead, vowes to Saints, monastick profession after such a rule, keeping of holy dayes to Saints, and many other things among Pagans, and Papists, are condemned as will-worship. Generally Protestants, even the Assembly in their Confession of faith, chap. 29. art. 4. make the lifting up, reserving the elements in the Eucharist, Contrary to Matth. 15.9. and chap. 21. they say, the acceptable way of worshiping the true God is instituted by himself, and so limited to his own revealed will, that he may not be worshipped according to the imaginations and devices of men, or suggestions of Satan, under any visible representations, or any other way not prescribed in the Holy scripture; yea the non-conformists have gone further in so censuring the three ceremonies, crosse at baptism, kneeling at the Lords Supper, the wearing the Surplice in holy ministrations, to be will-worship, as the Abridgement of the Lincolnshire Ministers petition, and other writings shew, and D. Morton in his Defence, and D. Burges in his Rejoynder to the reply, chap. 2. and elsewhere, acquit them onely from will-worship, in that they placed not holiness in them, made them not necessary parts of worship, which I presume M. Blake will not say of Infant-baptism, the denial of which he counts, though vainly, to be sacrilege, Vindic. fœd. chap. 40. And sure baptisms were instituted ordinances among the Jews, Heb. 9.10. yet our Lord Christ applies the Prophets censure of will-worship, Isai. 29.13. against the Pharisees placing holiness and fear of God in their washings of hands and other things so often and in the manner they used. Mark. 7.1,2,3,4,5,6,7.

Secondly, were it granted, that it is not properly will-worship to misapply an instituted ordinance to a wrong subject, yet if it be an abuse or profanation, the matter is no whit mended with M. Blake, if I put in my argument instead of the term (will-worship) the term (profanation or abuse) I presume Pædobaptists will not justify a profanation or abuse, which Infant-baptism is acknowledged to be if it be not after Gods appointment or Christs institution. Wherefore M. M. and the most of the pædobaptists, not trusting to these evasions seek for an appointment of Infant-baptism in the institution of Infant-circumcision, Gen. 17. Yet M. Baxter in his plain Scripture proof, part. 1. chap. 4. &c. declines the command of Circumcision for proof of Infant-baptism, and imagins an ordinance of their visible Church-membership, distinct from the ordinance of Circumcision, unrepealed, out of which he endeavours to prove Infant-baptism, though he no where that I know shew us where that ordinance is, notwithstanding in my Præcursor and elsewhere he hath been often pressed to shew it, which book of M. B. taking so much, that a third edition is printed, I had hoped pædobaptists would have stuck to his way, and declined the other way of analogy of the Command of Circumcision. But I see latter books, as M. Sidenham, M. Fuller, and others, still insisting on the hypothesis concerning the covenants and the seal, and Baptisms succession to Circumcision, &c. M. Gataker in his Latin treatise against D. Ward about the force and efficacy of Infant-baptism, though by his Epistle it appears he had seen M. Baxters books, yet p. 16. he speaks thus to D. Ward. I would you had specially designed the Com- mand concerning the baptizing the infants of believers, which you mean. For although from the analogy of Circumcision, and the nature of this very sacrament, as it is destined to initiation, the comprehension of infants in the Covenant of grace &c. I deservedly believe both the Antient Church to have used, and the Church at this day justly to use Infant-baptism, yet hitherto I have found no speciall Command concerning this thing. I wish he had formed and confirmed his proof for Infant-baptism from the Analogy of Circumcision, &c. so antient, learned a man, and so accurate in Controversies, me thinks should have yielded some better proof for Infant-baptism than others have don, or have forborn calling them novel sectaries who with so much endeavour oppugn Infant-baptism (which is the expression in his Epistle to the Reader) and with-held his hand from subscribing to that attestation wherein the Four positions of my Examen were censured as erroneous and pernicious. But not meeting with any other proof than this, I shall keep on in the Review of the dispute, and examine the pretended institution of Infant-baptism out of the Old Testament, taking in some texts of the New, and first Examine the way of proof by analogy of Circumcision, which seems to have been the Assemblies way, and then M. Bs. more refined way, as is imagined, desiring the Reader to take notice of what was before disputed in the Second Section of the second part of this Review, to prove that consequences drawn from analogy between meer positive rites of the Old and New Testament to prove a duty in the use of them, without particular institution, are not good.

Two wayes I finde Consequences framed, one in arguments formed syllogistically, the other in certain Conclusions or hypotheses from whence it is conceived they may deduce Infant-baptism. I begin with the former way. I had formed the argument from Gen. 17. 7. &c. three wayes, in my Exercit. Sect. 1, 2, 3. and that without disadvantage to my Antagonists, notwithstanding D. Homes his exceptions. But I am content to view the forms D. Homes sets down, as more agreeable to their minde. In his Animadversion on my Exerc. chap. 2. pag. 6. he saith, Our first form of argument from Gen. 17. 7. &c. is this. Where there is a Command for a thing never remanded or contramanded, there the thing is still in force. But there is a Command for signing the infants of a believer with the sign of the Covenant of grace, Gen. 17. 7, 9. never yet remanded or contramanded: therefore the signing believers children with the sign of the Covenant of grace (namely baptism now) is still in force.

To which I answer, 1. The conclusion is not of the thing in question, which is not of the children of believers, but of the Infant-children of believers, as it was in the Minor, now a person of 20. years of age is a believers lievers child, as well as one of two dayes old. 2. In the Minor (the ſign of the Covenant of grace Commanded) is underſtood, either of the ſign of the Covenant of grace expreſſed in the Concluſion, to wit, Baptiſm, and if ſo, it is denied that there is any ſuch Command, Gen. 17.7,9. to ſign with the ſign of the Covenant of grace believers infants, theres no Command but of circumciſing the manchild of eight dayes old, not a tittle of baptiſm: or elſe of a ſign of the Covenant of grace there expreſſed, and if ſo, the Minor is denied, that the Command for ſigning the Infants of a believer with the ſign of the Covenant of grace, Gen. 17.7,9. was never yet remanded or contramanded. It was expreſſely contramanded Acts 15. 28. Gal. 5.1,2,3. If in the Concluſion by (the ſign of the Covenant of grace) be meant as the words (namely baptiſm now) import, the rite of Chriſtian Baptiſm, and in the Minor it be meant of the Command of Circumciſion, then there is a fault of the ſyllogiſm in the form, it conſiſting of four terms. If in the Minor ir be meant of the ſign of the Covenant indefinite, which is neither Baptiſm nor Circumciſion, I deny there is ſuch a Command, Gen. 17. 7, 9. and the ſyllogiſm hath alſo fourth terms.

Two other forms he hath pag. 9. 2. Form of argument from Gen. 17. is this. To whom the Covenant in force runs in the ſame tenour in the New Teſtament as in the Old, to them the application of the firſt ſign or ſeal of the New Teſtament may be applied. as well as the firſt of the Old Teſtament: But this tenour of the Covenant of grace ſtill in force, is as true, and doth as truely run to a believing Gentile, I am thy God and the God of thy ſeed, as it did to Abraham the Father of believing Gentiles, Rom. 4. Gal. 3. Ergo, the firſt ſeal of the Covenant may be applied to believers children, now in the New Teſtament as well as in the Old to Abrahams. The Major is plain in Gen. 17. the tenor of the Covenant, and the application of the firſt ſeal, are Knit into a dependence one upon another. I am the God of thee, and thy ſeed, V.7,8. Therefore thou ſhalt circumciſe every male, V.9. &c. The Minor is unqueſtioned of any that I know.

Anſwer 1. The thing to be concluded was, that Baptiſm may be applied, but baptiſm and the firſt ſeal of the Covenant I do not take to be all one. Baptiſm or Circumciſion I do no where finde in Scripture called the ſeal of the Covenant, much leſs the firſt ſeal, and why the blood of Chriſt, or the ſpirit of Chriſt, or the oath of God may not be called the firſt ſeal of the Covenant as well as theſe, I know not; again the Concluſion was to be (may be applied to infant-children of believers) where as the concluſion is (may be applyed to believers children) And the thing to be concluded was ſimply (baptiſm may be applied to Infants of believers) whereas it is propounded comparatively (now in the New Teſtament as well as in the Old to Abraham) now baptiſm was not applied to Abraham, and therefore the Concluſion may be granted (baptiſm may be applied to infants of believers now as well as to Abraham) that is, juſt never a whit, ſith it was never applied to Abraham. 2. But beſides, if the phraſes (to whom the Covenant in force runs &c.) in the Major, and in the Minor, (doth as truely run to a believing believing Gentile) (as the words carry it) be meant onely of the believer, and in the Major (the application to them) be meant onely of the believing Gentile as in the Minor, then there are more than three terms in the syllogism, (applied to believers children) beeing not at all in either of the premises. But if it be put in the Major (may be applied to them and their Infants) and in the Minor (to a believing Gentile and his Infant children) I deny both Major and Minor. Nor the Major proved from Gen. 17.7,8,9. as in my Answer to M. Bailee, Sect. 3. in my Ample disquisition Sect 5. is made manifest, by shewing the nullity of the pretended connexion between the Covenant and the seal; The term (therefore) Gen. 17.9.) may be read (and) and it hath not reference to the promise onely, V. 7. but to the rest of the promises, V 4,5,6,7,8. or rather to the whole Covenant, and the making of it, and it imports not a right by vertue of the Covenant, but a motive inforcing a Command, and this command being of circumcising the male onely of 8. dayes old, shewes there is not a connexion between the Covenant and Seal, sith then it would belong to the female and male of the seventh day, they being in Covenant as well as the male of the eighth. The Minor he takes as unquestioned, But I deny it, till I finde it better proved than yet I have done. I omit the uncouthenes of the Phrase (to them the application of the first sign may be applied) and leave the D. to make good sense of it, which I cannot do.

His 3. form of Argument from Gen. 17. is, Where there is the same reason of a precept, there may be the same practice: But the promise which is the reason of the precept runs in the New Testament (as flowing from Gen. 17.) to believers and their children, The promise is to you and your children, Acts. 2. 39. Ergo.

Answer. What is the Conclusion he would prove he leavs to be gathered. It should be, Infants of believers are to be baptized. But then the predicate in the Conclusion would be found in neither of the Premisses. For the precept Gen. 17.9. is onely that male Infants of 8. days old of Abrahams house should be Circumcised. But a little after he puts this as the Conclusion, that the same reason on which the administration of circumcision was grounded, the administration of baptism was grounded. Which I grant true in this sense, that as the reason why Circumcision was administred to Infants was the Command of God, so the reason why Baptism is to be administred to believers, is the Command of Christ. But the D. would have it thus, that as infants were to be Circumcised by vertue of the promise, Gen. 17.7. so Infants of believers are to be Baptized by vertue of the same promise repeated Acts 1.39. concerning which, to omit the monstrosity of his syllogism, in which there are more than 4 terms, and neither the Predicate nor Subject in the Conclusion, Major or Minor, his speeches are without proof or trueth. For 1. it is not true, where there is the same reason of a precept there may be the same practice. For Levit. 19.5,9,10,19,23,25,26,27,28,30. are precepts concerning Mosaical ceremonies or observances, as of offering a sacrifice, of peace offerings, not reaping the corners of the field, not sowing the field with mingled seed, not wearing a garment of linnen and woollen, not eating fruit of trees planted till the fourth yeer, not eating any thing with the blood, not rounding the corners of the head, reverencing the Sanctuary, to wit, the tabernacle or Temple, and these with other moral precepts mixed among them in the same Chapter, have in sundry of those verses, and the beginning and end of the Chapter, this as the common reason, I am the Lord, and yet we are not by the same reason tied to all the practices. 2. He doth not prove that the promise, Acts 2.39. is the same with the promise, *Gen.*17.7. It is more likely to be either the promise, *Act.*2.17,33,38. or Act. 2.30. or *Act.*3.25. which were eminent promises, and related to the covenant of grace. 3. He doth not prove that (to you, Act.2.39.) is (to you believers and to your children) that is, the Infants of believers as such: It doth not appear they were then believers when these words were spoken. 4. Nor is there a word that shews the promise was to them or their children, whether called or no. 5. Nor is it proved that the promise to Abraham and his seed, *Gen.*17.7. was the onely reason of the precept, vers. 9,10. 6. If it were so proved, it is not proved, nor ever can be, that it was the formal adequate reason, why an Infant was circumcised. 7. Nor is there the least hint in the words, *Act.*2.38,39. that the reason why a person hath right to be Baptized, is barely the being of the promise to that person, or Gen. 17. 7,9,10. any hint that the promise barely of it self, did either give right to Circumcision, or oblige to the duty, but in both places it is brought as a motive to excite to that duty, which the precept alone was the formal reason of, and in the former as well of Repentance as of being Baptized. So that when the Doctor hath formed his arguments, they are but mishapen things, having many ambiguities of speech, little or no proof for what he saith. And notwithstanding the Doctors cavils, I yet think the arguments from Gen. 17. were better formed by me in my Exercitation for Pædobaptists advantage, than by the Doctor in his Animadversions: But perhaps we may finde the Arguments better formed elsewhere.

SECT. III.

Master Drew's Argument for Infant-baptism from Gen. 17. is examined, and it is shewed, there is not the same reason of Infant-Baptism, as of Infant-Circumcision.

MAster John Drew is one of those to whose writings Master Baxter refers me, and is said by the Author of the lawfulness of obeying the present government, to have written with sharp reasons and mild language. Let's see how he hath disputed pag.23. of his serious address; Where there is the same reason of a precept or command enjoyning any practice continued, there may and must be the same practice continued: But the reason of the command for signing Infants of Covenanters with the first signe or seal of the Covenant under the Old Testament continues still in force for that practice under the New Testa-

Teſtament. Therefore now that command is in force to all perſons in Covenant, as it was then.

Anſw. The command in force then to all perſons in Covenant, is expreſſed by himſelf in the words before, pag. 22.23. the command of Circumciſion, Gen. 17.11,12. when he ſaith (All the Infants of thoſe in Covenant with God were ſigned with the firſt ſigne or ſeal of the Covenant then inſtituted and commanded by the Lord, which was Circumciſion) ſo that if he mean, as his words are, this is his meaning in his concluſion (that command which is Gen.17.11,12. to Circumciſe the fleſh of the foreskin of Abrahams males of eight dayes old, is now in force to all perſons in Covenant, as well as it was then) which neither hath nor can have any other ſenſe (taking words as they are uſed by other men) but that ſtill all in Covenant with God, are bound by the command, Gen. 17. 11, 12. to Circumciſe their male children of eight dayes old; which is to maintain that which the Apoſtles have abrogated, Act. 15. to intangle us with the yoak of bondage, which the Apoſtle ſaith, would make Chriſt unprofitable to us, Gal. 5. 1, 2, 3: But it will be ſaid, he means not the command of Circumciſion, but the command of ſigning with the firſt ſign or ſeal of the Covenant. Anſ. If he means ſo, he rather juggles than diſputes. For the words ſpeak of the command, which is Gen. 17. 11, 12. and that is no other than of Circumciſion; no ſuch command of ſigning Infants of Covenanters with the firſt ſigne or ſeal of the Covenant in the Old Teſtament, beſides that of Circumciſion, is either there or any where elſe that I know of; if there be let it be ſhewed. But this is the manner of Pædobaptiſts, in their diſputes to imagine a command of ſealing, as they call it, with the firſt ſeal, the Infants of Covenanters abſtractively or diſtinctly from Circumciſion in the Old Teſtament, Gen. 17. which is indeed a meer fiction, with which they mock their auditors and readers, who unwarily take what they ſay without examination. Now this were an anſwer ſufficient to this argument; yet becauſe this mans reaſoning is ſo commended, let's view his proofes.

For proof of the Major thus he writes. For when God giveth the reaſon of any command, that reaſon is the ground of the command; and till that reaſon ceaſeth, he is very bold with God, that dare exempt himſelf from the practice. And again, If the firſt propoſition be denied, viz, where there is the ſame reaſon of a precept continued, there muſt be the ſame practice, then every man may ſet himſelf free from any command of God, and who can ſay unto him, what doeſt thou? For the Lord commands nothing without a reaſon, if there be no reaſon expreſt, the reaſon of his will is implyed, which is as cogent and binding as all reaſons in the world, till he makes it appear that it ceaſeth. This is very clear.

Anſw. The reaſon of a Command may be underſtood, either of the reaſon why God commands a thing, or the reaſon why we are bound to obſerve that command. The reaſon why God commands is various, ſometimes one thing, ſometimes another, ſometimes expreſſed, ſometimes concealed. And ſometimes the ſame reaſon is given of very various commands, as I said before (I am the Lord your God) is *Levit.*19. the promiscuous reason of moral and ceremonial and judicial commands; yea that the very reason which 1 *Pet.*1.14,15,16. is given for the command to be obedient children, not fashioning themselves according to their lusts in their ignorance, but to be holy in all manner of conversation, is cited from Levit. 11. 44,45. and is the very reason why he forbids the Israelits to eat certain meats, or to touch certain things unclean by the Law. And therefore by Master Drew's reasoning (the reason of the precept not ceasing) we are bound still to the precept, Levit. 11. of abstaining from meats unclean by the Law, and from touching things legally defiling. But though there may be many motives to do it the rather, yet the onely formal adequate reciprocal reason why we are bound to observe any thing, is the command of our Lord revealed to us, besides which, we are to look no further, nor are we to neglect it, till by some declaration of his will, it appears we are discharged. Thus Abraham was bound to offer his son Isaac on the Altar, because of Gods command, without knowing any other reason; yea though he had known the reason from the end to be fulfilled, yet he had not been discharged till God signified it by the Angel, that he should not slay him. Now then to Master Drews argument. If he understand the reason of the precept in the first sense his major is false; the reason why God gave a precept may continue, and yet the practice is not to continue, as Levit. 11. 44,45. On the otherside the reason of a precept may not reach, and yet the precept reach; as though God brought not us out of Egypt; which is the reason of the command, Deut. 5. 6,7. yet the command pertains to us, and *vers.*15. It is said, Remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt, therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day. Where I presume Master Drew will say the command reacheth us, though the reason of it do not. And as for his inference, That if it be denied, where there is the same reason of a precept there must be the same practice, then every man may set himself free from any command of God, it is true, if by the same reason of a precept, he understand the reason of a precept in the second sense, for the reason why we are bound to observe his precept, to wit, the declaration of Gods will it should continue: but if he understand it in the first sense, for that reason which God gives, why he declared his will, and bound us to observe it, though it continue, yet the precept may not be in force, nor on the other side doth the precept alwayes cease to binde, though that reason cease, as is proved before.

Now that reason of the precept *Gen.*17.11,12. which is *vers.*4,5,6,7,8. is a reason of the first sort, and not of the latter. And indeed in more positive rites which are by institution the precept continues not in force, however the reason God used to inforce it, remaine, except the institution be continued. Rightly Parens comm. in Gen. 8. 20. to an Objection, That sacrifices are to be continued, because the cause is perpetual, Answereth, The perpetual cause of a thing necessarily co-hering with the thing, as a Cause continued with its effect, makes the same perpetual. But the said causes or ends do not so co-here with the sacrifies of the Ancients, but onely by appointment, that is divine ordination, which was that those sacrifices should be the confirmation of the faith of the fathers, and a signification of gratitude, unto the coming of the Messiah, &c. The like may be said of the ends of Circumcision, and the occasion of appointing it.

But let us view Master Drew's proof of the Minor, The reason (saith he) of the command for signing Infants of Believers under the Law, with the first signe or seal of the Covenant, was this promise, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, as is evident, Gen. 17.7,8. compared with the 9. 10. and 11. verses, where this promise of God, and the application of the first seal are knit into a dependence one upon another: I will establish my Covenant between me and thee, &c. to be a God unto thee and thy seed after thee; therefore thou shalt Circumcise every male, as a token of the Covenant, vers 11. But this same reason of the command continues in force under the Gospel; God doth as truely say to every Believing Gentile now, I am thy God and the God of thy seed, as he did to Abraham the Father of believing Gentiles, so he is called Rom. 4.11. Therefore I may conclude, that Believers under the Gospel, have the same command for signing their Infants with the first seal of the Covenant of promise (which now is baptism) as Abraham had to signe his under the Law with the first signe, &c. which then was Circumcision; and now Sirs, if the blessing of Abraham be come upon you, and if you be heirs according to the promise, you may easily finde a command for Baptizing your Infant seed.

Answ. If Master Drew would prove what is to be proved, he should prove that the proper formal reason obliging to the duty of Circumcision, Gen. 17. 9, 10,11. was the promise, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed after thee. But that is false. For the formal reason being put, the thing is put without any other thing, and it being not put, the thing is not put, though other things be put. But if the promise had been put, yet Abraham had not been obliged to Circumcise, unless a command were put, and the command being put, Abraham was bound to Circumcise; though God had made no promise.

Therefore, though the promise might be a motive to do it, yet as Master Marshall truely confesseth, Defence of his Sermon pag. 182. the formal reason of the Jews being Circumcised was the command; and therefore till Master Drew shew we have the same command to Baptize Infants, as Abraham had to Circumcise Infants, he can never shew we have the same or equal reason for Infant-baptism, as was for Infant-circumcision. But Master Drew thinks to prove his Minor from *Gen.*17.7,8. compared with the 9, 10, 11. vers. Where it is evident (saith he) this promise of God, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, and the application of the first seal, are knit into a dependence one upon another.

But he doth but dictate without any cleer explication, or thorough consideration of what he saith. For 1. He doth not plainly tell us, that the dependence he imagines to be one upon another of the application of the first seal and the promise, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, is upon that promise alone, and not upon the other promises, *vers.*4,5,6,8. And if he do so mean, yet he brings nothing to prove it, and it is unequal he should expect we should take it on his word, sith if we gather any thing from the placing of the words, the reason of the command, *vers.*9,10,11,12. may as well be from the promise of giving him and his seed the land of Canaan, *vers.*8. as the promise, *vers.*7. 2. Whereas the promise *vers.*7. hath diverse senses, one, so as to be meant of Abraham as a natural father, and his seed according to the flesh, another, of Abraham as a ſpiritual father, and his ſpiritual ſeed, he neither brings a word, nor do I think can, why the reaſon of the Command, verſ. 9, 10, 11, 12. ſhould be from the promiſe made to Abraham as a ſpiritual father, and to his ſpiritual ſeed (which alone is for his purpoſe to bring Gentile-believers children to be in the promiſe) rather than to Abraham as a natural Father and to his natural ſeed, eſpecially thoſe of them that were to inherit the land of Canaan: yea it is manifeſt, that if the dependence were, as he ſaith, it is to be interpreted of Abrahams ſeed by nature, ſith the command there was given to the natural ſeed of Abraham only, and them that joyned to them. 3. Nor doth Mr. Drew ſhew what dependence one upon another they are knit into, whether contingent or neceſſary, or if neceſſary, in what degree of neceſſity, Whether, de omni per ſe or quatenus ipſum. This laſt ſeems to be moſt likely, and the dependence this, To whomſoever that promiſe is made, that perſon is to have the firſt ſeal; and whoſoever is to have the firſt ſeal, to that perſon the promiſe is made. But this were evidently falſe. For it appears from v. 19. that the promiſe was not made to Iſhmael, and yet he was to have the firſt ſeal, & others of Abrahams houſe had not the promiſe who were to be ſigned with Circumciſion, and the females had the promiſe made to them, and yet were not to be ſigned. If it be ſaid they were vertually ſigned, it ſerves not Maſter Drew's turn, who aſſerts a dependence of the promiſe and actual ſigning in the perſon federate. 4. Nor doth he ſhew from what term or words his imagined dependence is evident. The onely term I know, he or any other gathers the ſuppoſed dependence from, is verſ. 9. (thereſore) But in the Hebrew it is ואתה which in the moſt uſual ſenſe is, And thou, noting a further addition to his ſpeech, not an illation of one thing from another. And ſo the Tigurines read & tu, And thou, Parens Tu autem, But thou, Piſcator, Tu vero, Thou verily. So that the evidence is very ſmall, which is from ſo uncertain a light. 5. Nor doth he nor can he ſhew from the comparing Gen. 17. 7,8. with 9, 10, 11. any dependence of application of any other firſt ſigne, than Circumciſion upon the promiſe there. The Command of an indfinite firſt ſeal, there or elſwhere to believers Infants, is a meer figment. 6. That dependence which is implyed by the term (therfore) is not at all ſuch as intimates a right competent to Infants, but a duty enjoyned to parents, which Infants are nor capable of. And therefore if any ſee a command for Baptizing of Infants in that place, it is but a parallax, or deceptio viſus, a miſtake of ſight, as in him that thinks he ſees two Suns or two Moons at once. The Minor alſo in his Argument is to be proved.

The Covenant, Geneſis 17. 4,5,6,7,8. was a mixt Covenant.

BUt afore he comes to prove it, he brings in an objection, Gods Covenant with Abraham, was not a pure Goſpel-Covenant, as appears, ſay they, by his promiſing Abraham temporal things, Gen. 17. 8. therefore we may not argue from thence to the Covenant of Grace.

It is true, both in my Exercitation, and in my Examen, Part 3. Sect. 2. and elſe where, I deny the Covenant made with Abraham, Gen. 17. to be a pure

Gospel-Covenant, and aver it to be mixt, and shew how it is mixt, to wit, of promises not belonging to every one with whom the New Covenant of the Gospel is made, but respecting peculiarly Abrahams house, and the policy of Israel, and that the promises Evangelical are delivered, *Gen.*17. in words expressing proper benefits to Abraham and his natural seed, though in the more inward sense of the Holy Ghost, Evangelical promises were meant, and therefore it may be well doubted, whether that Covenant may be termed simply Evangelical: Yea the Scripture where it speaks of this Covenant, often mentions no other promise, but of the Land of Canaan, as *Exod.*6.4. *Psal.*105.8,9,10,11. 1*Chron.* 16.17,18. *Act.*7.5. Where Stephen mentions Gods promise to Abraham, he mentions that of the land of Canaan; and *vers.*8. calls the promise of Canaan, the Covenant of Circumsion. Wherefore Cameron in his Theses of the threefold Covenant of God, Thes.78. saith, That Circumcision did primarily separate Abrahams seed from other Nations, sealed the earthly promise, it signified sanctification secondarily. Whence I inferre, that when Pædobaptists speak of Circumcision as if it were a Seal of the Covenant of Grace onely, and from it gather Rules and Conclusions concerning the Ordinance of Baptism, in the New Testament, as if the Reason of Circumcising Infants were from nothing proper to the policy or Nation of Israel, but onely out of the respect it had to the promise of Evangelical grace, they do but mislead the people, and speak their own conceits, and not the Language and minde of the Scripture.

Mr. Gatakers Annot. on Jer. 31. 30. The former Covenant comprehended, together with those spiritual promises, which yet were the principal part of it, many temporal blessings, as the possession of the land of Canaan, and multiplicity of issue, and outward prosperity, Gen. 15.5,7,18. & 17.2, 7, 8. Psal. 105. 8. Deut. 28. 1, 19. Whereas this later runneth wholly upon the Spiritual and Celestial blessings, Rom.3.24,25. & 5.1,2. Eph.1.3. Heb. 8.6.

To this Matter Drew saith, I answer, The Scripture no where calls that Covenant a mixt Covenant, but on the contrary, notwithstanding any civil promises of temporal things, it is held forth as pure a Covenant of Grace as may be; the Apostle tells us plainly that this Covenant was confirmed of God in Christ, Gal.3.17. which I think is enough to make it a pure Gospel-Covenant. Christ was never the Testator of any Covenant, but that of Grace: outward things as appurtenances altered not the Covenant, nor made it mixt at all, unless that Covenant we live under be mixt too, for outward things are promised to believers under the Gospel, Rom.8.32. 1*Cor.* 3.22,23. 1*Tim.*4.8. Besides, this Covenant with Abraham is called a Covenant of justification, Rom.4.2,3. of Grace, vers.4. of Faith, vers. 13. and I am perswaded, that Abraham had not been called the Father of the Faithful, if Believers had stood in a different Covenant towards God, with that in which he stood; as for differences in the manner of administring and dispensing that Covenant, they matter nothing, if there be no difference in those Evangelical promises, which make it a Covenant of Grace; but no man is able to make this appear; therefore this exception weakens not our proposition, nor the Argument at all.

I reply, if it be true which I allege, that the Covenant, Gen. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, was a mixt Covenant, as I shew in the places forecited, and that Circumcision injoyned, *vers.*9,10,11,12. had reference as a signe or token not onely to that promise ſpiritual father, and his ſpiritual ſeed, he neither brings a word, nor do I think can, why the reaſon of the Command, verſ. 9, 10, 11, 12. ſhould be from the promiſe made to Abraham as a ſpiritual father, and to his ſpiritual ſeed (which alone is for his purpoſe to bring Gentile-believers children to be in the promiſe) rather than to Abraham as a natural Father and to his natural ſeed, eſpecially thoſe of them that were to inherit the land of Canaan: yea it is manifeſt, that if the dependence were, as he ſaith, it is to be interpreted of Abrahams ſeed by nature, ſith the command there was given to the natural ſeed of Abraham only, and them that joyned to them. 3. Nor doth Mr. Drew ſhew what dependence one upon another they are knit into, whether contingent or neceſſary, or if neceſſary, in what degree of neceſſity, Whether, de omni per ſe or quatenus ipſum. This laſt ſeems to be moſt likely, and the dependence this, To whomſoever that promiſe is made, that perſon is to have the firſt ſeal; and whoſoever is to have the firſt ſeal, to that perſon the promiſe is made. But this were evidently falſe. For it appears from v. 19. that the promiſe was not made to Iſhmael, and yet he was to have the firſt ſeal, & others of Abrahams houſe had not the promiſe who were to be ſigned with Circumciſion, and the females had the promiſe made to them, and yet were not to be ſigned. If it be ſaid they were vertually ſigned, it ſerves not Maſter Drew's turn, who aſſerts a dependence of the promiſe and actual ſigning in the perſon federate. 4. Nor doth he ſhew from what term or words his imagined dependence is evident. The onely term I know, he or any other gathers the ſuppoſed dependence from, is verſ. 9. (thereſore) But in the Hebrew it is ואתה which in the moſt uſual ſenſe is, And thou, noting a further addition to his ſpeech, not an illation of one thing from another. And ſo the Tigurines read & tu, And thou, Parens Tu autem, But thou, Piſcator, Tu vero, Thou verily. So that the evidence is very ſmall, which is from ſo uncertain a light. 5. Nor doth he nor can he ſhew from the comparing Gen. 17. 7, 8. with 9, 10, 11. any dependence of application of any other firſt ſigne, than Circumciſion upon the promiſe there. The Command of an indfinite firſt ſeal, there or elſwhere to believers Infants, is a meer figment. 6. That dependence which is implyed by the term (therfore) is not at all ſuch as intimates a right competent to Infants, but a duty enjoyned to parents, which Infants are nor capable of. And therefore if any ſee a command for Baptizing of Infants in that place, it is but a parallax, or deceptio viſus, a miſtake of ſight, as in him that thinks he ſees two Suns or two Moons at once. The Minor alſo in his Argument is to be proved.

SECT. IV.

The Covenant, Geneſis 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. was a mixt Covenant.

BUt afore he comes to prove it, he brings in an objection, Gods Covenant with Abraham, was not a pure Goſpel-Covenant, as appears, ſay they, by his promiſing Abraham temporal things, Gen. 17. 8. therefore we may not argue from thence to the Covenant of Grace.

Whence I inferre, that when Pædobaptists speak of Circumcision as if it were a Seal of the Covenant of Grace onely, and from it gather Rules and Conclusions concerning the Ordinance of Baptism, in the New Testament, as if the Reason of Circumcising Infants were from nothing proper to the policy or Nation of Israel, but onely out of the respect it had to the promise of Evangelical grace, they do but mislead the people, and speak their own conceits, and not the Language and minde of the Scripture.

Mr. Gatakers Annot. on Jer. 31. 30. The former Covenant comprehended, together with those spiritual promises, which yet were the principal part of it, many temporal blessings, as the possession of the land of Canaan, and multiplicity of issue, and outward prosperity, Gen. 15.5,7,18. & 17.2, 7, 8. To this Matter Drew saith, I answer, The Scripture no where calls that Covenant a mixt Covenant, but on the contrary, notwithstanding any civil promises of temporal things, it is held forth as pure a Covenant of Grace as may be; the Apostle tells us plainly that this Covenant was confirmed of God in Christ, Gal.3.17. *which I think is enough to make it a pure Gospel-Covenant. I reply, if it be true which I allege, that the Covenant, Gen. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, was a mixt Covenant, as I shew in the places forecited, and that Circumcision injoyned, *vers.*9,10,11,12. had reference as a signe or token not onely to that promise promise (I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed:) but also to the promises which peculiarly respect the house of Abraham, and policy of Israel, which cannot be understood to belong to every believer, as vers.7. to be the father of many Nations, to be exceeding fruitful, that God would make Nations of him, and Kings should come out of him; that he would give unto him and his seed after him the Land wherein he was a stranger, all the Land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; Then it follows, that the reason of the command, vers.9,10,11,12. is not onely from the promise vers.7. but those other promises, and the application of the first seal are knit into a dependence one upon another, as well as that vers.7. and then if the argument be good, The Infants of those to whom the promise is, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, are to have the first seal, because of the dependence there, it will follow, he to whom God gives the Land of Canaan for a possession, he out of whom God brings Nations and Kings, he is likewise to be sealed with the first seal, sith there is as much dependence in the text, of Circumcision on the promises vers. 4,5,6,8. as on the promise vers. 7. so that if this reasoning of Master Drew's be good; for my part I see not but that the Turk, possessour now of Canaan, may be intitled to Baptism by the same reason he produceth for Infant-baptism of Believers children.

Now whereas he saith, That the Scripture no where calls that Covenant mixt, I grant it, and it is true also, that it no where calls it a pure Gospel-covenant, nor Circumcision a seal of the Covenant of Grace, or the first seal; yet, the thing I mean by it being proved out of those texts forenamed, there is no reason to except against the expression.

Nor can it be true, that the Covenant Gen. 17.4,5,6,7,8. is held forth as pure a Covenant of Grace as may be, if the promises are of sundry things not assured to Believers in the Covenant of the New Testament. Which is most evident: for no Believer hath now a promise of the possession of the Land of Canaan, but rather an assurance of persecution, no promise of such greatness, as to be the progenitor of Kings and Nations, but rather of obscurity and debasement.

A pure Gospel Covenant containing many promises, is rare in the Old Testament, except where he foretells us he would make a new Covenant. God made a Covenant with David, *Psal.*89.3,&c. Nor do I deny it was a Gospel-covenant, yet therein are promises peculiar to his house, as vers. 30, 31,32,33. yea the promises which were Evangelical in the furthest intent and aim, were domestical in the first place, and the most open expressions. Nor is it a whit against the mixture of Abrahams Covenant which I avouch, That the Apostle tells us plainly that this Covenant was confirmed of God in Christ, Gal.3.17. And that Christ was never the Testator of any Covenant but that of Grace. For the word is in Greek εἰς Χριστὸν rendered in Christum by the Tigurines, into or unto Christ, or as Master Dickson renders it, respectu Christi, in respect of Christ, That is, as in his paraphrase, with relation to Christ, or as Diodati, whose foundation was Christ, not as the Testator, but as the party concerning whom the Testament was made, or as the executor by whom the things promised were performed. Now in either of these senses it is easie to conceive how the promise might be in Christ, or unto Christ, and yet the Covenant not a pure Gospel-covenant. He might be either a Legatee, or an Executor in that Testament which contained not onely Evangelical blessings of justification, &c. which were common to all true Believers, but also outward blessings, which few or no Believers had in the New Testament. I see not any inconvenience in it to say that the Testament was confirmed in Christ, in respect of the promises, so far as they were Evangelical, and yet to say there were promises in the same which were not such, nor they confirmed in Christ, though in the same Covenant.

And whereas he calls outward things appurtenances, I conceive the promises of outward things, *Gen.*17.4,5,6,8. are as truely parts of the Covenant as the promise, *vers.*7. Yea in the places foretold, the promise of Canaan hath the title of the covenant. And those promises, though they alter not the Covenant, yet they must needs make a mixture in the covenant, for by reason of them the covenant contains promises of diverse sorts.

And for that which is said, That now under the Gospel, outward things are promised to Believers: I grant it, yet it is nothing against the mixture in the covenant, *Gen.*17. which I assert: For those promises are not the promise of Canaan, to be progenitor of Kings, which are not made to every Believer, but of a different sort. Whence I infer, that there was a mixture in the covenant, *Gen.*17. which is not in the New Testament, and the reference of circumcision to that covenant, might be and was in respect of those domestick promises, as well or more then of the Gospel promises as such. Nor do I finde *Rom.*4.2,3,4. any mention of the covenant, *Gen,*17. much less is it there, which Master Drew saith, That it is called the covenant of justification and of grace. It is true Abraham is there said to be justified by Grace, yet no mention of the covenant, and the text there cited, is *Gen.*15.6. not *Gen.*17. And theugh *Rom.*4.13. it be said, The promise to Abraham and his seed, that he should be heir of the world, was not by the Law, but by the righteousnes of faith; yet it neither calls the covenant the covenant of faith; nor doth it assert that the covenant, Gen. 17. contained no other promise but what was Evangelical or common to all Believers of Jews and Gentiles. Neither do I, nor need I say, that Believers stood in a different covenant towards God with that in which Abraham stood. I am perswaded as Mr. Drew, that Believers now are justified by the same covenant that Abraham was justified by, to wit, that in Abraham all Nations of the earth should be blessed, Gal. 3.8. & Rom.4.13. A father of many Nations have I made thee. I onely say, that the covenant *Gen.*17. contained promises which were proper to the Jews, together with the Evangelical promises. And to make those promises no parts of the covenant, but onely the manner of administring and dispensing the covenant, because the Holy Ghost alludes to them as figures aud types of spiritual things, is not right. For even the promise, vers. 7. was in the like manner typical, Abrahams natural seed inheriting, shadowing the Israel of God, true believers, and then by this reason the promise, I will be a God to thy seed, should be no part of the covenant, but belong to the manner of administring and dispensing the Covenant.

The like may be said of the rest of the promises, they all shadowed out spiritual benefits, and so there should be no parts of the covenant, and consequently no covenant at all, but a manner of administring and dispensing of I know not what covenant. But the speeches vers. 4, 5, 6, 8. do contain promises, as well as *vers.*7. and either I am uncapable to understand the meaning of terms, or else promises are parts, yea substantial or essential, or integral parts of a covenant.

venant, the description of a covenant, being a collective of promises, and this Scripture, what Gal.3.15. is called a covenant or testament, calls *vers.*16. promises. And therefore to make the promises Gen.17.4,5,6,8. not to be parts, but appurtenances to the covenant, or the manner of administring and dispensing it, hath in my apprehension, neither truth nor congruous sense. Now if they be part of the covenant, as hath been made appear, and circumcision had its appointment by reason of them, as well as the promise, vers. 7. it matters much to weaken Master Drew's proposition and argument, though there be no difference in those Evangelical promises which make it a covenant of grace between Abrahams covenant and ours. Master Drew proceeds.

SECT. V.

Acts 2. 38, 39. Proves not either the identity of Covenant now with that to Abraham, Gen. 17. 7. as it comprehends his natural seed, nor the connexion between it and Baptizability.

NOw to go on to the proof of our second proposition in the argument, which is, that the reason of the command for signing, &c. even this promise I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, continues in full force under the Gospel, I refer you to that Scripture Acts 2.39. to make it good. The promise is unto you and to your children. What promise? Why this must needs relate to a former engagement, yea and too made unto them to whom the Apostle Peter spake, viz. Jews, and I know not to what engagement this can have reference, if not unto Gods promise made to Abraham, of being his God and the God of his seed after him. Certainly he is one of those that are blinde, and yet have eyes, who sees not from this text, that this very promise is in force and appliable to Believers under the Gospel, and if this stand good, then the command for signing our Infants with the first signe of the covenant of grace, viz. Baptism, stands good too, for this promise is the reason which God gives of his precept; God will own a Believers children, therefore he will have them markt for his.

Answ. I grant the promise I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, doth still continue in force, God is still the God of Abrahams seed, that is his spiritual seed, elect persons, and true Believers; and he will be again the God of Abrahams natural seed when the natural branches or posterity of Abraham, the root, shall be grafted in again.

But I deny that which Master Drew means, and in the page before expressed, that God doth as truely say to every believing Gentile now, I am thy God, and the God of thy seed, as he did to Abraham the father of the faithful; yea or that ever God meant by that promise to assure Spiritual or Evangelical blessings to all and every of Abrahams natural posterity, the Apostle determining and proving the contrary, Rom.9.6,7,8, &c. and restraining that promise in the Evangelical sense onely to the children of Abraham, which were elect by God. Nor is there a word, Act. 2. 39. to make it good in Master Drew's sense. For, 1. Master Drew proves not that the promise *Act.*2.39. must needs be the promise Gen.17.7. I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed. His argument is, It must needs relate to a former engagement to the Jews, and therefore to that Gen. 17.7. But this is to argue a genere ad speciem affirmative, it relats to a former engagement therfore to this, which Logicians deny to be good proof.

But saith he, I know not what engagement this can have reference to, if not unto the promise Gen. 17.7.

I answer, though he know not, and so may be one of those, that are blind and yet have eyes, (which he chargeth on his opposits) yet others see other promises, namely that to David of raising up Christ to sit on his throne mentioned Acts 2.30. or the promise of the Holy Gost mentioned *V.*33. or the promise of blessing mentioned Acts 3.25. Any of which may be the Promise meant Acts 2.39. more probably then that Gen. 17.7. 2. Where it is said (The promise is to you) if we either consider the scope of the Apostle or other parrallel texts Acts 3.26. Acts 13.32,33. (the promise is) is as much as to say, the promise made to David Acts 2.30. or to Abarham Acts 3.25. is fulfilled in raising up Christ, or the Promise of the spirit is fulfilled in the shedding forth of its gifts, (of which Promise mentioned *V.*17.18. Piscator and others understand it) and that for you, that is for your good blessing, and your children and all that are afarr off as many as the Lord our God shall call, not as M. Drew means, there is a promise of being a God to you and every one of your children continually to be fulfilled as soon as ever they are in being.

3. It is false which M. Drew presupposeth as if the meaning were (the Promise is to you) that is (the Promise of being your God is to you believers and to your children) that is to all your Infant children, as children of believers whether Jews or Gentiles. For 1. that speech is made to the Jews (as M. Drews own words seem to import (onely and their children, and not to Gentiles and their children 2. It is false that when it is said (the Promise is to you) the meaning is to you as believers. For neither were they then believers, as I prove in my Ample disqnisit: Sect 5. nor is it certain whether some of them were ever believers, the occasion and scope seems to intimate rather that they were consdered there as persons who had crucified Christ 3. Neither is it true that the Promise is to their children, that is to their infant children as their children, M. Gataker discept: de bapt: Infant: vi. & Effic. pag. 12. saith thus, To the obtaining the promise as well repentance as partaking of baptism at least in this place is exacted; so that hence the promise of remission of sins cannot be proved to be made to Infants when they are entered by baptism, unless also they repent. 4 nor do I know how it can be true, which M. Drew sayes, in any sense for his purpose, that God hath promised to every believing Gentile now to be the God of his seed as he did to Abraham, by which he would expound the words Acts 23.9. the promise is to your children. For in respect of spiritual blessings accompanying salvation it is not true, every believers child is not elect, in the Covenant of saving grace, a child of the resurrection, nor in respect of outward Ecclesiastical privileges. Neither did God Promise Circumcision to every child of Abraham, not to the males under 8. dayes old nor to the females, nor hath it any colour to interpret I will be the God of thy seed, that is they shall be circumcised, much less that God promised to every Gentile believers child he should be Baptized or have right to Baptism, sure not to professed unbelievers, to abortives or still born Infants. For my part with all M. Drews light I cannot understand how according to M. Drews exposition the promise Gen. 17.7. is in force and applyable to believers under the Gospel as he saith.

Nor do I conceive it true which he ads. If this stand good then the Command for signing our Infants with the first sign of the Covenant of grace viz. Baptism stands good to; For were it granted that it were true, that God doth as truly say to every believing Gentile now, I am thy God and the God of thy seed as he did to Abraham the Father of believing Gentiles, yet there is not a word in that text or any other to prove that therefore every believers Infant child is to be baptized, it being false that the Covenant of grace doth of it selfe intitle to Baptism as I have proved in my *Examen part.*3.S.1. in my letter to M. Baile or Additions to my Appology Sect.3. in the Ample disquisition Sect.5. where also it is proved that though the promise Acts 2.39. be alleged why they should be baptized *V.*38. yet not as the reason of their right to Baptism as M. Drew makes it, but as a motive encouraging them to it as their duty, and in performing of it first to move them to repent and then to be baptized. The reason, is not as M. Drew makes it. The promise is to you and and your children therefore it is their and your right to be baptized, and the minister ought to do it to you and your Infants; but this, the promise is to you and your children, therefore you and they ought and may be encouraged to repent and be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus for remission of sins: nor is there a word in the text or elsewhere to prove that dictate of M. Drew, God will own believers children, therefore he will have them marks for his, even in infancy by baptism, more truely saith M. Gataker disceptat. Infant. de bapt: infant. vi. & Effic. pag. 9. Acts 2.38,39. is nothing found concerning Infants to be baptized, In that they are Commanded to repent and to be baptized unto the remission of sins, it is altogether like to that saying of the Lord Christ, he that believeth and shall be baptized shall attain salvation Matth.16. 16.

But M. Drew thinks to take off the exceptions that are laid against the witness which this place brings to prove the birth priviledge of believers children under the Gospel. The first exception is that the promise is of extraordinary gifts of the spirit, and beanswers. This doth not suite with the promise made Gen. 17. 7. which was to be performed to Abrahams children, and yet they had not those gifts.

But 1. this Answer goes upon his mistake that the promise Acts 2.39. must be that Gen. 17.7. 2. he supposeth that the promise Acts 2.39. must be understood so as to be made good to Abrahams seed afore Christ: But if so, it were false in his sense, for all Abrahams seed had not the birth priviledge of the first seale not the females any of them, nor any of the males till the eight day.

2. He saith, it cannot be true of extraordinary gifts, sith then all believing Jews must have those gifts, which they had not, and all believers might pray for them.

To which I say if the promise be so understood, you shall all have such gifts. I acknowledg it were not true *Exam. part.*3. Sect 6. But in this sense it may be true even of those gifts, the promise of sending the spirit in extraordinary gifts is fulfilled to you and your children and all that are afarr off even as many as the Lord our God shall call, that is for their and your benefit, in that by those gifts the Apostles were inabled to publish and propagate the Gospel, which is a benefit to all that are called.

The Second exception is that the words (as many as the Lord our God shall call) expound the Apostls meaning, which is this, their children should receive the promise if the Lord called them, To it he answers 1. that this particle (even) with that which follows (whom the Lord our God shall call) has relation to the next foregoing sentence viz. those that are afarr off for the explanation of that not unto this sentence (to you and your children) so that the Apostle speaks thus, The promise is made to you and your children for the present, and when the Lord shall call those that are a far off and strangers to the Covenant of promise, they and their children shall be heirs to the promise as well as you and your children are now.

To which I reply, M. Drew gives no reason, why the limitation should be ment onely of those afar off, and not also of them and their children 2. nor doth he answer the reason given to the contrary, that the speech were not true, if it be so expounded as that the sense be, that God would be a God to those Jews he then spake to, though they were not called to the knowledge and belief of Christ, and so salvation by another then Christ contrary to the same Apostles words Acts 4 12. To me saith M. Gataker discept. debapt. Inf. viz. and effic. pag. 253. the Covenant of grace Act. 2.39. seems onely to be with them that have embraced the Gospel. Now if the words (as many as the Lord our God shall call) must limit the words (to you and all that are afar off) it is incongruous to the use of speaking not to apply it to (your children) in the middle. Yea without the limitation it would not be true that God hath promised to be a God to their or any others children. For God is not a God to any but those he calls either outwardly or inwardly at least. 3. His Paraphrase (when the Lord our God shall call those that are afar off, they and their children shall be heirs to the promise as well as your children are now) is an intolerable abuse of adding that of which there is not a word in the text, which doth not mention at all the children of them that are afar off though called.

2. saith M. Drew if the Appostle had meant to apply the promise oncly to those who should be called of God to believe, then it had been needless to have made any mention at all of children.

To which I reply there was great reason why he should mention their children with them, because they had wished Matth. 27. 25. Christs blood on them and their children. To take away the horrour of soule, and fear of the curse on them and their children caused by the conscience of their crucifying Christ and imprecation to them and their children, and not to assure them of such a poor empty Ecclesiastical outward priviledge as pædobaptists imagine to belong to believers infants, was that speech of the Apostle intended in like sort as Joseph did in the like Gen 45.3,4. &c. Gen. 50.20. For this end was sutable to the occasion of their question Ver. 36.37. and to the Apostles answer, and it seems probable tthe Apostle saith (to you and your children) but not, to all that are afar off and their children, because those afar off had not wished Christs blood on them and theirs as the other had done.

3. Saith M. Drew, it utterly overthrows the Apostles scope which is to shew the Jews shall be bettered rather then worsted by believing in Christ, which they would hardly believe should be have left their children (who were always till now reckoned in Covenant with them) in as poor a condition as the most barbarous heathens in the world, which had been a bad argument to bring in the Jews, cold comfort to hear that their children should be made as much aliens to the Common-wealth of Israel by their Fathes embracing the Gospel, as the very Pagans. Surely this would stave off the Jews from Christ rather then bring them on.

To which I reply, The Apoſtles ſcope is plain to direct them what to do being oppreſſed with the horrour of their ſin in crucifying Chriſt and wiſhing his blood on them and their children, and Ver. 39. is a notice to them to repent and be baptized in the name of Chriſt. To imagine the Jews then either thought of a priviledge for their children anſwerable to circumciſion, or that Peters ſcope was to ſatisfy them about it, is ſuch a toy as is fit for children rather then men of underſtanding. It had been alike comfort unto the Jews at that time to tell them of their Infants right to baptiſm as for a man to tell an arraigned malefactor, expecting to be condemned and hanged, that his little child had a new Coat given him, vain words and bug-bears fit to affright children with, of a childs being out of the Covenant for defect of tittle to baptiſm, of being in worſe caſe then the Jews, in as poor a condition as the moſt barbarous heathens in the world, aliens to the Common-wealth of Iſrael, debarred a priviledge the deprivation of which would have ſtaved off the Jews from Chriſt. Children may be in covenant as much as the Jews, no whit worſted in their condition in a better condition, then barbarious heathen infidels, though title to baptiſm be not aſerted to their infants. If by (the commonwealth of Iſrael) the Jewiſh civil or Eccleſiaſtical eſtate, be underſtood thoſe that Peter ſpake to, muſt expect to be alienated from it if they would be Chriſtians. They knew Chriſt was caſt out, and might know he had told them it would be ſo with his diſciples. If by (the Common-wealth of Iſrael) be meant (the true Chriſtian Church) the defect of Infant-baptiſm neither expreſsly nor by conſequence made them aliens from the Common-wealth of Iſrael. Such conceits ariſe from pædobaptiſts miſtaken ſuppoſitions. Nor can I imagine but that had the Jews underſtood that their children were in that condition, worſted for want of a priviledge equal to their circumciſion they would have been glad to accept of Chriſt to take away that horrour that then lay on their Spirits.

The third exception is, that it is not ſaid the promiſe is to the Gentiles and their children; now if this be not made good the argument fals, becauſe we are Gentiles by nature. To which he anſwers 1. If believing Gentils live under the ſame Covenant that Abraham and his ſeed did (which has been proved) then though they were none of his ſeed, tis ſafer to apply the whole promiſe to them, I am thy God and the God of thy ſeed, then to cut off and circumciſe the tenor of the Covenant, and to ſay unto believers now, God onely is your God, not the God of your children; is not this to make a main and ſubſtantial alteration in the Covenant? and to rob believers of one of the moſt precious comforts they have by promiſe, even Gods owning their ſeed. Which they cannot be aſſured of as the Jews were, without the children be admitted to the firſt ſign or ſeal of the Covenant, which is baptiſm now under the Goſpel, as I ſhall prove by its ſucceeding circumciſion by and by.

To which I reply, The Covenant *Gen.*17.4,5,6,7,8. is mixt and in reſpect of the temporal promiſes believing Gentiles live not under the Covenant made to *Abraham Gen.*17.7. but in reſpect of the ſpiritual part, that is, they are juſtified and ſaved now, or God is a God to them as they are Abrahams ſeed Gal. 3.29. But neither did God promiſe to be a God in reſpect of Goſpel grace, to Abrahams natural ſeed as ſuch, the contrary is delivered *Rom.*9.7,8. nor now to any believers ſeed as ſuch, but the elect whether believers or unbelievers children, as is proved at large by me Exam. part.3. Sect. 4. not by denying the Covenant of grace to be made with a believer & his natural seed do we cut off or circumcise the tenor of the Covenant, or make any alteration, much less a main and substantial alteration in the Covenant, the Apostle expressly determining, and whole Juries of the ablest Protestant writers even pædobaptists expounding *Rom.*9.8. as resolving, that the Covenant *Gen.*17.7. to be a God to Abraham and his seed, was not made to all Abrahams natural seed, no not to the circumcised, not to Ishmael and Esau, but to the elect onely, and therefore there is no safety to apply the whole promise, I am thy God and the God of thy seed, to every sincere believer and his child, it being expressly contradictory to *Rom.*9.8. which determines some onely to be children of the promise. And yet we need not say as M. Drew injuriously makes us say, God onely is your God, not the God of your children, but onely this: you may assure your selves that he is your God, for ye are believers and so Abrahams seed; and ye may hope by reason of general indefinite promises and frequent experiences that God will be a God to your children. But God hath not promised that he will be certainly a God to every, or any one of your children definitely, but is at liberty to shew mercy to your children, or to an infidels, as it shall please him. And this you must be contented with, sith God afforded no more to Abraham himself, when he had made Isaac the child of the promise and not Ishmael, nor to Isaac when he loved Iacob and hated Esau. It is fit you should remember God to be no debtor to you, that he is the potter, ye and yours are the clay, and accordingly acquiess in his will blessing him for his love to you which is the most precious comfort you have by promise, and not being anxious concerning your children. Nor is there any truth in it that either the Jews were assured that God would own their seed, that is, be their God, nor that by being admitted to circumcision they had that assurance, nor that without admission to baptism we cannot be assured of our children that GOD owns them, nor that baptism succeeds circumcision, or if it did, such assurance as Mr. Drew speaks of cannot be inferred thence. So that all this passage is but a fardel of mistakes. Lets consider the next. 2. saith M. Drew, Are not Gentiles the seed of Abraham? Then I would fain be resolved in this whether Christ took upon him onely the nature of the Jews, or of the Jews and Gentiles both? If only of Jews, how must the Gentiles be saved? If of both, then how you will construe this text Heb.2.16. He took upon him the seed of Abraham, if you will not allow the Gentiles by any means to be Abrahams seed.

Answer. I grant believing Gentils are Abrahams spiritual seed descending from him as the Father of the faithfull by imitating his faith. And as for M. Drews frivolus or captious question, which goes upon a supposition as if Christ might take on him the nature of the Jews only, & that the nature of the Jews were one and the Gentils another, I tell him (though I think such a Dr. might have resolved himself) for his resolution that Christ took on him the nature of both, that is the same specifical essence or kinde of being, that both had, to wit the being of a man common a like to Jews and Gentiles, meaning by nature his individual, and numerical Existence, which is all one with that, our Lord sprang out of Judah Heb. 7.14. not from Levi, or from Lot, and yet the Gentils are saved by his name, he dying and arising again both for Jews and Gentils. And for the Construction of *Heb.*2.16. thought there are learned men that expound pound σπέρματος Ἀβραὰμ ἐπιλαμβάνεται thus, he takes hold or helpeth the seed of Abraham, that is believers of Gentils as well as Jews, yet I think the meaning there to be no more but this, that he took on him or received the nature of man by a natural descent from Abraham 1. because the seed of Abraham is opposed to Angels, and therefore Abrahams seed signifies the nature of man contradistinct to Angels. 2. because the author saith *ver.*17. thence he ought to be like to his brethren, to be a mercifull high Priest, which comes not from his helping believers, but his assumption of the humane nature, whith fits him to be like to men and to be a mercifull high Priest. And therefore I like best the reading of our translators in the text, not that in margin. And thus have I answered M. Drews doury question in which he would so fain be resolved. But what is this to prove that Acts 2.39. the promise is not yet to the Gentils, that are called but also to their children I see not, it being neither proved that Acts 2. 39. the promise is the promise Gen. 17.7. I will be a God to thee and thy seed, or that the children of Gentils called, are in that respect Abrahams seed.

M. Drew adds, But yet further 3. Tis plain in the Gospel that faith maketh a believer the child of Abraham; yea and a surer heir to the promise, I will be thy God and the God of thy seed, then carnal descent from Abrahams Loyns doth. Abraham had 2. seeds one descending from Ishmael and another from Isaac; all that came from Abraham were not children Rom.9.7. But in Isaac shall thy seed be called. Isaac was his special seed, and typed out his believing seed under the Gospel, for ver. 8. they which are the children of the flesh, these are not (that is not in so peculiar a manner) the children of God as the believing seed, for the children of the promise are the seed, the seed by way of eminencie, that is the prime seed. and Mark I pray you how the same Apostle explaines and applyes this to our purpose Gal.4.28,29. The Galatians were Gentils, but being believers, we saith the Apostle, as Isaac was, are the children of promise, and so the special seed of Abraham: the Galatians were no more of Abrahams natural seed then we are, but by faith they became his prime seed, and heirs apparent to all the promises as Isaac was, who is said in the next ver. to be born after the spirit as well as Gospel believers are. And, sirs, shall we make the Covenant entail and narrow to Abrahams prime seed and halve the promises to them when they are full and large to his worser seed? The Apostle will not suffer this Gal.3. 29. If ye be Christs then are ye Abrahams seed, and heirs according to the promise, which surely must needs be according to the full extent of that promise made unto our Father Abraham; for if it be not ours so fully as it was his, then we are not heirs according to the promise; if our seed be exempted it fals much short of what was said to him, I will be thy God and the God of thy seed. And mark, friends, I beseech you, that was Gospel which was preached to Abraham Gal. 3.8. In thee shall all Nations be blessed; not onely his natural seed, that was but one Nation; but all that were of the faith shall be blessed, as children of what nation soever ver.7. For faith was imputed to Abraham in uncircumcision Rom.4.10,11. to this end that he might be the Father of all them that believe though not circumcised. And truely I wonder since the Gospel is so clear that believers are Abrahams children that any man dare rob them of any comfort or priviledge wherewithall he was invested by that promise to which they are more sure heirs then any of his natural seed, as I think is made plain to the easiest of your capacities.

Answer. the thing to be proved is that to the natural seed of Gentile beli-

evers God hath promised to be a God. To prove which divers places are brought which do manifestly refute it. That of *Ro.*9.7,8. determines that all the natural children of Abraham were not the seed to whom God had promised to be God, but that in Isaac his seed should be called. And the same is determined Gal. 4.28. that Isaac was the child of the promise and not the son of the bondwoman, and that no child of any man is a child of the promise but he that is born after the Spirit. And Gal. 3.29. is meant of those onely that are the sons of God by faith in Christ ver.26. and from the Gospel mentioned *Gal.*3.8. in thee shall all nations be blessed, he infers *ver.*9. onely of believers, so then they that are of faith are blessed with faithfull Abraham. And Rom. 4.10.11. Abraham is said to be the Father of believers, or as it is ver. 12. those that walk in the steps of the faith of our Father Abraham which he had yet being uncircumcised. Wherefore I may much more justly wonder that learned Protestants who so commonly say, that elect persons onely are in the Covenant of grace from *Rom.*9.7,8. when they dispute against Arminians, should yet have the face to avouch that every believers yea though but by profession a believers natural child whether elect or a believer or not, is in the Covenant of grace made to Abraham *Gen.*17.7. when they dispute for pædobaptism, though by such doctrine they make the word of God to fall, it being not true of Ishmael, Esau, and thousands of others of both of Abrahams and other believers seed, God hath not nor will be a God to them.

Tis true believing Gentils are heirs of the promise made to Abraham of blessing or justification by faith as he had, but it is false, every believer is heir of every priviledge Abraham had; none besides him is Father of the faithfull as Abraham, or hath Gods promise to his natural seed as Abraham had to his spiritual, yea or to his natural. None hath the promise that in his seed all nations of the earth should be blessed Acts 3.25. nor any that his posterity should be graffed in again as it is assured to Abrahams seed *Rom.*11.28,29.

The imagined priviledge that God would be the God of his naturall seed was never promised to Abrahams natural posterity, as such. Yet it is false, that a believers child is a more sure heir of the promise then any of Abrahams natural seed.

For though God hath not promised to be a God to all Abrahams posterity, yet he hath to some, which I know not that he hath done to any believing Gentils natural child. M.D. doth but Calumniate by insinuating as if we curtaild the promise, robbed believing parents of any comfort or privilege wherewith Abraham was invested by that promise Gen. 17.7. perverting the text as if when God said he would be a God to Abrahams, by Abraham were meant every believer, and when he saith he will be a God to Abrahams seed, it were meant of every belivers natural seed whether believers or not.

About which he and other pædobaptists, particularly the Assembly at Westminster in the Directory about baptism do but a buse people, and lead fond parents, who swallow down Preachers sayings without Scripture proof into a fools paradise, by telling them that the promise is made to a believer and his seed, that God will be a God to a believer, and his child, and that Infants of believers dying in their Infancy, are saved by the parents faith, and by this there is assurance of their salvation.

But

But Master Drew once more urgheth *Rom.*11,17. that the term graffing, shews believing Gentils come in with their seed, or twigs that grow from them, else surely they cannot be said to be graffed in as the Jews were cut off,

But I have so fully proved the ingraffing to be by giving faith according to election, and that none but elect persons are ingraffed according to the Apostles meaning, and that ingraffing is into the invisible Church in my Ample disquisition, being the first part of this Review in the ten first Sections, that I think it unnecessary to say any more to what Master Drew here speaks. And for what he saith, If believers Infants were taken in under the legal administration, and left out in the Gospel-administration, the covenant dispensation under the Gospel is more uncomfortable then that under the Law, it is but a vain speech, as if the circumcision of Infants were such a matter of comfort, that the having of no priveledge under the Gospel did recompense the loss of it without Infant-baptism, as if Infant-baptism were of so great comfort to parents, that without it other comfort concerning their children were nullified, whereas these things arise upon mistakes, as if Baptism were administred according to a persons interest in the covenant, and circumcision was so, and that the denying Infants Baptism, is putting them out of Covenant, which is but ungrounded talk, as shall be further shewed in that which follows.

Yea when the Pædobaptists answer the Papists, who would have the work of outward Baptism to take away original sin from the Infant-baptized, they say onely that it seals the covenant, but doth not seal the fruit of the covenant, but upon condition of Faith and Repentance; so that the Infant hath no benefit by the covenant, or the seal without Faith or Election; and so much benefit hath any unbeliever or his Infant; yea the unbeliever hath more advantage then the Infant, for the unbeliever hath the moral use of the sealing of any baptized person, which the Infant hath not. When they talk of the covenant to Infants of believers they say it is but condicionally that they do believe that God will be their God, and in the same manner the covenant belongs to all men in the world, to unbelievers and their Infants, and when they speak of the benefit of Baptism, they say it onely seals the covenant, not the persons partaking the fruit of it (excepting he be an elect person dying in Infancy) which yet he may have without the seal) till he believe, yet he hath not the moral use and comfort of it till he understand and believe, at which time the Baptism in Infancy is altogether unknown to him. So that indeed the comfort which Pædobaptists give to parents, is either the same I give, without Infant-baptism, or, if parents did examin it, it would be found delusory. What Master Drew speaks about Baptisms succession to circumsion, and his imagined full proof from thence for Infant-baptism, I shall put off till I review the Dispute about Master Ms. third Concl. This is enough to satisfie that Master Drew's reasons are blunt and not sharp as was supposed.

SECT. VI.

The Arguments of Master Josias Church in his Divine warrant for Infant-baptism, from their being judged in the promise, is answered.

THere is another writing of Master Josiah Church, intituled, The Divine warrant of Infant-baptism, of which I passed a censure in the first part of this Review Sect. 21. and I might let it pass, being as the commanders of it say, Dogmatical rather then Polemical, and leave it to those that affect such superficial writings. Yet because Master Roberts and Master Geree have commended it, and Master Baxter pag. 6. of his Plain Scripture proof, puts it among the chief books, of which he saith, If any of the men of Bewdly have taken up the notion of Antipædobaptism, and have not read and studied him with others, and been able to confute them, he hath discovered a scared conscience (which is a most unreasonable and uncharitable censure) to shew the folly and vanity of Master Baxters and others conceit, I shall give the Reader some taste of his overly handling the point.

His first Argument is thus, The Infants of Christians are rightly judged in the promise of propriety in God, therefore they may be Baptized.

To it I answer, 1. The antecedent is ambiguous, not expressing what propriety in God he means, whether of justification, regeneration, and salvation, or of outward protection & prosperity among men or Ecclesiastical privilege, nor where that promise is which he calls promise of propriety in God, nor whether he means it of all Infants of Christians, or some, and if of some of which he means it, and of which not; nor of what sort of Christians, whether such as are Christians onely by profession, or really such in Gods account; nor with what judgement he means, whether of charity or verity, probably or certainty; nor upon what evidence they are with any of these sorts of judgement rightly judged in the promise of propriety in God. So that I finde nothing but Sophistry in this dispensation, the antecedent being perhaps true in some sense, in some false: and therefore it is but wast labour to refute it, or answer his proofs, till that he distinctly set down what he asserts, and how his proofs suite with his assertion. Yet I shall cast away some animadversions on this writing, least my silence be disadvantage to the cause I maintain.

That which I conceive he means, is this, All the Infants of Christians by visible profession, are rightly judged by a judgement of charity, though not of certainty to be included in the promise of propriety in God, in regard of eternal adoption and priviledge expressed in those words, Gen. 17. 7. I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, therefore they may be Baptized. Of which Argument, I deny both the antecedent and the consequence. The antecedent he takes upon him to prove by ten Arguments.

1. The Infants of the Jews (so long as they continued visible professors) were rightly judged to be in the promise of propriety in God, for it was sealed to them by the initial Sacrament no less then to actual professors, Gen. 17. 7, 12. Ergo

Answ. Did not Master Church affect new phrasifying, which serves onely to puzzle, in plain words he had said, To the Jews Infants the promise was made of being God to them, therfore the Infants of Christians are rightly judged to be in that promise: Of which, neither is the antecedent true universally taken, but contradicted by Paul, Rom. 9.7,8. where he expressly denies the promise (I will be the God of thy seed) to be true of Abrahams natural seed universally taken: Nor if it had been true, doth it follow that what was promised to Abrahams seed, is true of every true Believers, muchless of the seed of every meer visible professor of Christian faith, who are neither themselves, nor their children in any Scripture sense Abrahams seed: nor is the proof of any weight, That the promise of propriety in God was sealed to the Jews Infants by the initial Sacrament, no less then to actual professors, therefore the Jews Infant were rightly judged to be in the promise of propriety in God.

For this reason in plain terms is no more then this, the Jews Infants were to be circumcised, Ergo they were rightly judged to be in the promise of propriety in God, that is that God would be their God; which rests upon these false suppositions, that God had promised to be God to those whom he commanded to be circumcised, and that the promise of being their God was the formal reason of their being circumcised; that when God promised to be a God to Gentiles, he meant it of external adoption and priviledges.

The consequence he would prove by four Argument. 2. The promise of propriety in God was not a specialty, therefore the Infants of Christians being certainly no less in the promise then were the Infants of Jews aforetime, they are rightly judged to be in it as they were. Where the conclusion is altered, which was to be proved (therefore if the Infants of the Jews were rightly judged to be in the promise of propriety in God, then the Infants of Christians are rightly judged to be in that promise) and instead thereof, that which should have been the antecedent (the Infants of Christians are certainly no less in the promise then were the Jews Infants aforetime) is made the chief part of the conclusion, and in stead of the right antecedent, this ambiguous antecedent is put (that promise of propriety in God was not a specialty) which he says he would prove by seven arguments, but sets not down which branch of the promise was not a specialty, whether that (I will be thy God) or that (I will be the God of thy seed) nor in what sense it was not a specialty, nor doth his speech (that it was not a specialty) appear equipollent to that he should have proved (The Infants of Christians are certainly no less in the promise then were the Jews Infants aforetime) but he dictates so ambiguously and indistinctly, that more labour will be necessary to understand him then to refute him. He tells us, the promise of propriety in God, was not peculiar to Abraham, and visible professors, and Abrahams natural seed; where he supposeth, that the promise (I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed) was true of meer visible professors, and Abrahams natural seed; which is most false and contrary to Rom. 9.6,7,8. Luk. 20.36,37,38. He brings the words Exod. 12.48,49. the stranger was as one home-born, and there was one law for both (which are spoken meerly of allowance for them to eat the Passeover with them) to prove a like propriety of the Infants of visible professors of the Gentiles in the promise of propriety in God, Gen. 17.7. He brings Gal. 4.28. which was spoken onely of true Believers born after the Spirit, to prove visible professors and their Infants to be judged in the promise of propriety in God. He saith, Isaac was in the promise as an Infant of Believing parents, whereas Paul saith no, for then Ishmael and Esau had been in the promise, but by special calling or election, *Rom.*9.6,7,8,9. He applies those texts *Gal.*3.14. *Rom.*11.17. *Rom.*15.8,9. Gen. 17 5,7. to prove a promise to every Gentile visible professour of faith and their Infants, which are onely verified in the sense the Apostle useth them, of true Believers as Abraham was, who are justified as he was. He allegeth that which the Apostle *Rom.*11.28. saith, The children are beloved for the Fathers, as if it were meant of Infants of every Gentile visible professor, which is spoken onely of the elect Israelites, and the ancient Patriarchs Abraham, &c. That which is said, Psal. 128.1,3. of children of him that fears God, sitting round about his table like Olive plants, to prove visible professors and their partaking in the promise of propriety in God.

He saith, The former part of that promise (I will be a God to thee, Gen 17.7.) is undeniably common to all Believers, which in truth is undeniably proper to Abraham, not simply as a Believer, but either as a natural Father, or Father of Believers according to the spiritual part of the promise.

He saith, Christians are in this dispensation as Jews were in the former, they are called as they were, an holy Nation, a peculiar people, a royal priesthood, 1 Pet. 2 9. Tit, 2.14. And every Nation receiving the faith as the Nation of the Jews did, and in which there is a national agreement in doctrine, worship, and discipline, as was in the Nation of the Jews, is to be accounted to the Lord in every age, Psal. 22.30. even Egypt and Assyria with Israel, Isa. 19. 21. and may call Abraham Father (who obtained the Fatherhood of many Nations, Gen. 17. 5.) and may be accounted a national Church no less then that Nation was, whereby those speeches 1 Pet. 2.9. Tit. 2. 14. *Gen.*17.5. as expounded, Rom. 4. 17. which are meant onely of the elect and true Believers of every Nation, are applied to a national Church like the Jews, consisting of a great part of either ignorant persons, that know little or nothing of Christianity, or persecutors of godliness, profanely despising the word, and hating the godly.

He applies that *Mat.*18.10. little ones, who are said *vers.*6. to believe in Christ, and the offending of whom hath so great a penalty, to little ones in age. He applies *Jer.*30.20. which is spoken of the Jews upon their return from captivity, as appears *vers.*18.21. concerning their prosperity in Canaan to the restitution of their Infants to an initial seal at the calling of them to the Christian faith, whereas if it were so meant, the Prophet should foretell that the Jews children at their calling to Christ should be as a foretime, that is, should be circumcised as they were before the Prophets time, not baptized. More things there are liable to exception in his arguments whereof what pertains to the text, *Act.*2.39. Rom. 11.17. 1. *Cor.*7.14. is sufficiently discussed in my Ample disquisition of those texts. That which concerns the reasons that God promiseth mercy to thousands, and such like arguments, being urged more fully by Master B. I shall answer when I meet with them in his book.

His arguments pag. 18. to prove his Consequence, The Infants of Chaistians are rightly judged in the promise of propriety in God, therefore they are to be baptized, are insufficient. The first is from circumcision of Infants, to which hath been often answered, That was done by vertue of the Command, not by vertue of the promise, and therefore without the like Command the like promise (if it were granted) would not prove the like practice. What is said of John

Baptists, and the Apostles, not denying baptism to any whom they judged to be in the promise, seems to intimate, that they baptized men because they judged them to be in the promise: But there is not a word thereof in any of the Evangelists, but their comming to John confessing their sins, glorifying God in embracing his Counsel, professing faith, as the reason of their admission to baptism.

To his second reason, Being in the promise, is the reason rendered by the Apostles for the receiving of baptism, Acts 2.38,39. Therefore they that are rightly judged in it may be baptized, I answer 1. He says not truely, that being in the promise is the onely reason mentioned by the Apostle for baptism; for repentance is put as a prerequisite. 2. The Apostle doth not speak of the promise as Master Church means that he judged that they and their children were rightly judged as visible professors in the promise of propriety in God, for they were not then such: But that the promise of raising up Christ was fulfilled for them upon their repentance and baptism, or their calling, and this is made not the reason of right to receive, or warrant to the Minister to baptize them, but as a motive to their duty of repenting and being baptized, and encouragement to hope for remission notwithstanding their crucifying Christ and imprecation on themselvs, and theirs, *Matth.*27.25.

Bare judgement of charity concerning a persons interest in the promise is not a warrant to baptize.

PAg. 19. Mr. Church brings in an objection thus, The judgement of charity that any are in promise is not a sufficient reason for administring baptism to them: there must be shews of grace for more certainty, To which he thus answers: shews of grace and actual profession are a reason for baptizing only as they are ground for the judgment of charity, that the parties to be baptized are in the promise; for else if the Devil should take a humane shape, and make a verbal profession (though he were known to be a Devil) he must be baptized.

I reply, Mr. Church here starts a question, by what judgment a Minister is to proceed in admitting a person to baptism. Concerning which I suppose it will not be denied. 1. That a Minister being but as an officer under Christ in baptizing, is to baptize according to his Lords will. For that is the property of a servant. 2. That the will of the Lord is most manifest in the institution or appointment of Christ; which is without question declared by the words of Christ, *Matth.*28.19. *Mark.*16.15,16. explained by the Apostles and other approved Ministers thereof, command and practice mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles. 3. That true believers and disciples of Christ are appointed to be baptized, and that they have true right before God. 4. That such believers and disciples as are appointed to be baptized, are Disciples of all nations, not of Angelical but humane nature; and therefore we have no warrant to baptize either good Angels or Devils taking humane shape and making shews of repentance or faith if known to be Divils or Angels. All the difference is, with what judgment and upon what evidence a Minister is to baptize, I conceive 1. upon extraordinary revelation from God a Minister is to baptize an Infant declared to be a Disciple, as I say in my *Examen p.*4.S.3.2. According to ordinary rule he ought to baptize none but Disciples by profession, which profession ought to be free, sober, serious and intelligent. For discerning of which he is to use ministerial prudence, though he be not able to search the heart, and after the use of ministeral prudence therein, he is prudently to judge of the truth of his faith and discipleship. Wherein he ought to judge according to the rule of charity 1 *Cor.*3. 17. which believeth all things, hopeth all things, and yet heed what Solomon saith *Prov.*14.15. The simple believeth every word: but the prudent man looketh well to his going. And our Lord Christ Luke 12.43. having said as it was conceived of a Minister, Who then is that faithfull and wise steward, whom his Lord shall make ruler over his houshold, to give them their portion of meat in due season? it is requisite that the judgment of a Minister upon which he baptizeth should have both ingredients, prudents & charity, charity alone is not sufficient. For 1. If Charity be used without prudence, there may be a mockery of the Ordinance, and it profaned. 2. If the rule be a judgment of charity alone, then supposing the Minister be defective in his charity the person is to be debarred, who is otherwise fit to be baptized. But about this I conceive there is little or no difference between me and the pædobaptists. Mr. M. in one place, to wit, in his defence pag. 78. intimates that I am conceived to incline to the looser way of baptizing any that would make a profession of faith in Jesus Christ. And in another place pag. 233. he makes it all my pleading that because we cannot know that all Infants of believers have the inward grace, we may not therefore baptize them. From the former I vindicated my self in my Apology Sect. 17. and from the latter Sect. 10. But the difference is what qualification it is that may be evidence to a Minister, whereby to judge prudently a person to be capable of baptism. They that hold all Infants are to be baptized that are offered, they make no scruple, nor do they make much scruple that hold all Infants that are in a chosen nation, which I have refuted Exam. part.3. Sect.13. others baptize onely the children of inchurched members, of which I shall speake in Examining Mr. Cobbets conclusions. There are, that from the Generality of promises and election running through the Loyns of believers, will have all the children of believers to be in Covenant and elect in the parcels though not in the lump, and Mr. Church his opinion comes near it, that we have ground from a judgment of charity that the parties to be baptized are in the promise to baptize them. But against this I argue.

1. That is to be the rule of judging a persons baptizability which is made the condition of a person to be baptized in the holy Scripture. But no where in it is this made the condition of being baptized, that he be elect and in the Covenant. 2. The Scripture doth no where say that the election of God runs for the most part through the Loyns of believers. And though there are promise of blessing to the righteous and their seed, yet these are indefinite both for the kinde of blessing, and the person, and these promises are made onely to the truly righteous, and not to them, who are only such in appearance. Wherefore there can be no certainty for a judgment of prudence to rest upon, to determin of any whether they are elect or not, in the Covenant of grace or not, spiritually considering that God hath declared *Rom.*9.6,7,8,18,24. That he ties not himself to believers children. Now all judgment is to be suspended of that which is not revealed, The secret things belong to the Lord our God, Deut. 29.29.

3. For Infants of believers there is no ground for a judgment of charity, because they do nothing to shew whether they are in the Covenant or no. And if it be revealed by God that they are all or some in Covenant then we know it by a judgment of faith believing Gods revelation, and so it is not a probable judgment of charity, but a certain judgment of verity, which directs in this. 4. If a probable judgmenr of charity that a person is elect and in covenant be the rule to direct in baptizing, then suppose a salvage in new England or elsewhere seeming to be affected in the time of preaching should be judged in charity to be an elect person in covenant, he ought to be baptized by the Minister so judging, afore he owns Christ by profession. It is promised that the Israelits shall be grafted in again, and all Israel saved, Rom. 11. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. and we may charitably judg it will be shortly, shall we baptize any of them or their Infants upon this charitable judgment of their election and being in Covenant afore profession? 5. If a charitable judgement of election and being in covenant had been the rule to baptize, then sure John the Baptist, and the baptizers appointed, had somewhere propounded that question, or made inquiry into that thing, but it was not so, they required repentance Acts 2. 38. inquired into the faith of the baptized. 6. If this had been the direction (baptize those that are elect or in Covenant) it had been a blind direction unfit for men to follow, and so our Lord should have imperfectly instructed his Apostles and others, or rather have mocked them, putting them to do a business not feasible by them. But this is not to be said of Christ, especially the rule being so plain to baptize believers and Disciples by profession.

As for Mr. Church his conceit, that shews of grace and actual profession are a reason for baptizing onely as they are a ground for the judgment of charity that the parties to be baptized are in the promise, I deny it. For the rule is not (baptize persons in the Covenant) but (Disciples or believers of all nations.) To that of the Devils making a verbal profession, I have answered before. That which he saith that the judgment of charity (meaning that they were in Covenant) was the rule by which John Baptist and the Apostles walked in baptizing, is not true, for they baptized upon their profession which they certainly knew. And though they had no infallible knowledge of the individuals election or being in Covenant, but baptized hypocrits not a few, yet they had an infallible knowledge of individuals confessing sins, professing repentance and faith, for they heard them, and this was their rule, not the conjectural knowledg of a persons interest in the Covenant or election of grace.

SECT. VIII.

Acts 2. 38, 39. proves that interest in the promise intitles not to baptism without repentance.

MR. Church brings in a Second objection, which is in effect what I allege Exon. pag. 62. a right to Evangelical promises is not the adequat reason of baptism, for the Jews were in the promise Acts 2. 38, 39. yet not baptized without preceding repentance. To which he answers thus, A visible right to the promise either either by shews of grace (as in those of riper years) or by the naming a species in the promise without restriction, of which the parties to be baptized are individuals (as the Infants of visible professors are) is a sufficient reason for baptism.

To which I reply. If visible right to the promise by shews of grace be a sufficient reason for baptism, then the rule I set down for admitting to baptism is yeilded to be aright. But for the new made rule of Mr. Church it is but an humane ivention without Scripture warrant. He supposeth the Infants of visible professors to be in the promise without restriction, and the promise I conceive he means is (I will be thy God and the God of thy seed Gen.17.7.) But it is most false that that promise is made to any meer visible professors, but to Abraham, nor to any true believers natural seed, much less to any meer visible professors natural seed, but onely to Abrahams seed, who are onely elect and true believers of the Gentils according to the spiritual part of it, as is proved before. Yet were it granted that not onely the Species, but also the individuals were named expresly in the Covenant, I should deny they were to be baptized according to ordinary rule till they were known Disciples and believers. The Jewish people are in covenant Rom. 11.24,25,26,27,28. and yet not to be baptized till they believe, and Peter Acts 2.38,39. requires repentance for baptism, of whom he sayth, the promise is to you. But he tels me, The most learned and rational of the Anabaptists confess that if it could appear to them that an Infant is in the Covenant they would not doubt of the baptism of it, I answer, whatever others do, yet I disclaim that confession. I have granted sundry times as Exam part.3. Sect 15. part. 4. Sect.3. that regenerate, justified, adopted persons born into the world who have the inward grace are not to be debarred baptism, if it be known by special revelation, for they are then known Disciples and believers. But I never said this of an Infant in Covenant. For an Infant may be in Covenant even then when he is unregenerate (being in covenant) noting no more then having the promise made to him, which may be afore he is born, and therefore I should not yeild that of being in covenant, which I would do of actual regeneration.

But Mr. Church makes some shew of answering the argument from Acts 2. 38,39. He tels us those Jews rejecting and crucifying Christ and Atheistically mocking at Gospel truths, ceased to have a visible right to the promise, untill they regained it by repentance.

Answer Mr. Church pag.18. saith being in the promise is the reason rendred by the apostle for the receiving of baptism Acts 2.38,39. therefore they that are rightly judged in it may be baptized. pag. 20. Being in the promise is the onely reason mentioned by the Apostles for baptism. Doth not this plainly assert that the Jews then were righly judged by Peter to be in the promise, and their right thereby to batism? How then is it true which here he saith they ceased to have a visible right to the promise till they regained repentance? But it is not once onely that this Author is off and on, saying and unsaying at a little distance. Here he requires a visible right in the promise regained by repentance, a little before he saith the species being named without restriction in the promise is a sufficient reason of baptism. However I take his confession that notwithstanding what he said pag. 5,6,7. from Acts 2.38.39. of the promise to them and their children, and thence inferring their Infants tittle to baptism, as being the children of visible professors, to whom God had promised to be a God and to their seed, yet here he saith they ceased to have a visible right to the promise until they regained it by repentance, which the Apostle supposeth they then had not, even then when he said, The promise is to you and your children: For he exhorteth to it as a thing to be done.

But Mr. Church flutters like a bird in a net, seeking some evation from this objection, though all in vain. He tels us they were a mixt company to whom the Apostles spake Acts 2.8,11. and not all Jews, for they were of divers languages; and that they were adulti.

But what is this to the avoyding the objection, that notwithstanding it is said the promise is to you, yet they were not intitled to baptism without repentance.

He then discourseth, that repentance was in them onely in fieri before their baptism, and that the Apostle accepted of probabilities of it and baptized them; For in that distance from his preaching, and their baptizing, so many could not have repentance visible by its fruits and discernable, and thence would gather, if such hainous sinners were baptized upon probability of repentance, therefore Infants of Christians guilty of no actual sin may be baptized unto repentance.

To which I reply, 1. It is expresly said *ver.*41. they that gladly received the word were baptized, therefore there were visible fruits of repentance and faith discerned by the Apostles and other Disciples, who were many and could confer with them in that space of time, and baptize them in that day, though their conversion was easily discernable without distinct conference with each.

2. His argument is not worth a rush, notwithstanding Cyprians words to back it, to prove Infant-baptism. For it goes upon this frivolous supposition, that Infants because they have no actual sin may be baptized, though they shew no repentance, much rather then hainous and great transgressors upon probability of repentance. As if lesser sinners might be baptized upon no testimony of repentance, because greater sinners are baptized upon probability of repentance, which if true, the more civil and orderly persons, though pharisaically minded, as if they needed no repentance, have much more right to baptism, then publicans confessing their sins because but probably penitent. 3. All this is nothing to answer the objection, but to strengthen it, that notwithstanding the promise was to them, yet they were not to be baptized till their repentance, either in facto esse, or in fieri, either visible in fruits or at least probably conceived, of which neither is to be said of Infants. Yet Mr. Church is not ashamed to conclude thus.

Being in the promise is the onely reason mentioned by the Appostle for baptism, (whereas repentance is undeniably prerequired) and that if any disable the reason he imputes not a little weakness to the Apostles and their converts; whereas he that disables the inference from being rightly judged in the promise to right of baptism, doth vindicate the Apostle from weakness, which pædobaptists do by their exposition and inference thence blemish him with, and cast the blame of weakness onely on Mr. Church and such inconsiderate expounders and disputers as he is. I had not thought to have said so much of so poor a piece as that book is; yet lest any say it is not answered I add.

SECT. IX.

Infants are not proved by Mr. Church, to be of the visible Church Christian.

HIs second Argument is, Infants of Christians are rightly judged to be of the Church with Christians of riper years, therefore they may be baptized.

To which I say, His words are ambiguous, it being uncertain whether he means the Antecedent of the visible or invisible Church, of all infants of Christians, or some; but conceiving it meant of all, and of the visible Church of Christians, I deny the Antecedent. And for his ten Arguments, not one proveth it.

The Medium of the first is the Antecedent of the former Argument, to which I have answered before, denying that all the infants of Christians are rightly judged to be in the promise of propriety in God, expressed Gen.17.7. in those words, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed.

But I deny the consequence also, that if it were true, that all the infants of Christians are rightly judged in the Promise of Propriety in God, therefore they are rightly judged to be of the visible Church: nor is it proved by that which he allegeth, (For they onely are aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel, which are strangers from the covenant, Ephes.2.12.) For if it did prove, that all that are strangers from the covenant of Promise are aliens from the visible Church of Christians, yet it proves not, that all who are in the covenant are in the visible Church; but the very truth is, neither the one nor the other is proved from that place; for this only is asserted there, that the Ephesians who were Gentiles in the flesh, who are called uncircumcision, by that which is called the circumcision in the flesh made with hands, no Proselytes were in the time of their infidelity & Idol-service, then without the policy of Israel and the covenants of Promise: but it doth not follow that every one that was then uncircumcised in the flesh, and out of the policy of Israel, meaning the outward policy, was stranger from the Promise of Propriety in God, meaning of it of saving Propriety; for Cornelius, Acts 10. was a stranger from the policy of Israel, being no citizen, but unclean, as being a Gentile, uncircumcised, yet then he feared God, God heard his prayers, accepted his alms, &c. much less now that every one that is rightly judged to be in the Promise of Propriety in God is of the visible Church, or every one that is rightly judged of the visible Church, is rightly judged to have the Promise of Propriety in God.

His next Argument is, Infants of Christians are rightly called the Lords children, for his manner hath been to call the children of his people his children. In the old world some were called the sons of God, as children of his people, Gen.6.2,3. And the infants of the Israelites were called by him, his children born to him, Ezek.16.20,21. and their lawfull seed, a seed of God. And the Jews were accounted to him great and small in every age untill the breaking off; and the same was propheſied of the Gentiles, when they shall be converted, and of the Jews when they shall be grafted in again: and the Psalmist calls himself the Lords servant, as he was the son of his handmaid: therefore such infants are rightly judged to be of the Church, which is the House of God.

Answ. Not one of these Texts proves the Church-membership of Christians infants. The term Sons of God, Gen.6.2,3. is attributed to persons before the Floud, and those not infants, but such as took them wives of all that they chose, which could not be said of infants; nor are they said to be Sons of God, because children of believers, but because they professed the true worship of God, Dei filios professione Christi. Cartwright Eborac. Annot. in locum, Such as descending from Seth and Enoch professed the true worship of the true God, New Annot. I omit the opinions of Josephus, Aquila, and many of the Ancients, recited by Mr. Gataker against *Pfochenius, cap.*13. and the other of the Chaldee Paraphrase, R. Solomon, Symmachus, that they are called Sons of God, because Sons of Potentates or Judges, of which Mr. Cartwright ubi supra, and that of others Sons of God, that is, eminent men, because I think the other is more right: however they are not called Sons of God, that is, visible Church-members by their descent, but by their profession, which is not to be said of infants.

It is true *Ezek.*16.28,21. the children of Israel are said to be born to God, that is, of right as their Land was the *Lords Land, Hos.*9.3. and this did aggravate their sin, that those that were of right his were sacrificed to Idols: now this was by reason of that peculiar interest which God had in that people, *vers.*8. But that what is said of the sons of the Jews is true of all the infants of believers, or that this is enough to entitle the infants of Christians to visible Church-membership, and the initial seal, as they call it, is yet to be proved.

Of *Mal.*2.14,15. I have spoken sufficiently in the first part of this *Review, Sect.*13.26. of the Ample Disquisition: to which I add that in the second Edition of the New Annot. these words are added suitable to my Exposition of a legitimate seed; *All other seed is spurious, not a lawfull seed; nor such fathers are lawfull fathers, who so pervert the order and Ordinance of Matrimony, God puts his mark of infamy upon the seed it self, Deut.*23.2. which shews that with Calvin that Authour understood, by a Seed of God, a legitimate seed.

That which is said Psalm 22.30. A seed shall serve him, it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation, hath no shew of any thing for infants visible Church-membership: it cannot be expounded of infants while such: for how can it be said, They shall serve the Lord? But it notes onely a continuance of the Church promised in a people, who should when some decease, stand up after them to serve the Lord. The impertinency of that *Jer.*30.20. is shewed before. As little to the purpose is that Psalm 116.16. He doth not say, he was the Lords Servant as he was the son of his handmaid; and it was to express his mean condition or humility, as Mary, Luke 1.48. not his privilege, and his subjection to God, not his right he could clame from God; yet if there were any privilege imported in this title (son of thine hand-maid) Mr. Church must prove it to be Church-membership, and that not proper to him as a Jew, but common to all Christians ere it will serve his turn, which he cannot do.

Enough is said before in the Ample Disquition, to prove that 1 *Cor.*7.14. children are not denominated holy, because they appertain to the Church.

The remnant to be called holy, Isai 4.3. are either such Jews as in the captivity escaped alive, who should be holy in respect of their worship, not serving Idols, but the living God, or such converted believers in the Christian Church as should be written in the Book of Life, which makes nothing to infants Church-membership.

The

The Church is not called the circumcision, Rom. 3.30. & 15.8. but the Jewish people.

The Christians infants are not rightly judged to be of the Church Christian, because the Hebrews children were of the Church Jewish, God now not taking one whole Nation for his Church, but Disciples of Christ in all Nations.

Abraham is said, *Rom.*4.11. to have received the sign of circumsion a seal of the righteousness of faith, which he had yet being uncircumcised; but that any other mans circumcision was so to him, much less that every infants circumcision was such to them, I reade not: sure the tenour of the words imports no more than this, that Abrahams circumcision in his own person was an assurance to all believers though themselves uncircumcised of righteousness by faith to be imputed to them also. What Divines though of never so great esteem thence infer of the nature of circumcision, that it is a seal of the righteousness of faith, of all Sacraments, that it is their nature to be seals of the covenant of grace, that to whom the covenant belongs to them the seal belongs, and consequently to infants, are but their mistakes, not the Doctrine of the Text.

Of Mark 10.14 enough is said before. Of infants may be the Kingdom of God, yet they not in the visible Church.

The speech (out of the Church is no salvation) is true of the invisible Church of the elect, and is so expounded by Dr. Morton Apol. Cath. and others; of the visible it is not true; Rahab had been saved though she had never been joyned to the visible Church of the Jews.

What I said, that it is uncertain whether the infants brought to Christ, Mark 10.14. were the infants of Christian disciples or believers, is true; for it is not said, their Parents brought them, and though it be probable they that brought them believed on Christ, yet it is uncertain whether they believed him to be the Christ, or some eminent Prophet, as *Matth.*16.14. Luke 7.16.

The Daughter of the Syrophœnician was called a Dog, Matth.15.26. not because she was not a believers childe, but because a Gentiles childe, not an Israelites.

Though *Deut.*30.6. Isai 44.3. Circumcision of the heart and the spirit be promised to the seed of the godly, yet it is not promised to any but the elect, as the fuller promise, *Isai.*54.13. is expounded by Christ himself, John 6.45. and therefore not as Mr. Church saith, to children, as they are the children of Gods People, if (as) be taken reduplicatively; for then all the children of Gods People should have the spirit promised. Nor is the spirit promised to them in their infancy, and yet if it were, till they shew it, we have no warrant to take them for visible Church-members, or to baptize them without special revelation.

It is largely proved above that Acts 15.10. no infant is called a Disciple.

There may be hope of infants salvation, they may be of the body of Christ, though they be not of the visible Church.

Our infants and our selves though believers are yet Heathens, that is, of the Nations by birth, and had been reputed Dogs as well as the Woman of Canaans childe, *Matth.*15.26. if we had then lived: but in the sense as it is now used, and as it was a Title of infamy and rejection, *Matth.*18.17 we are not to be called Heathens, that is, infidels, and whose society is to be shunned; nor our infants, who are neither infidels nor believers, they being not capable of faith in that ſtate ordinarily: as in Logick they ſay, a Whelp till the ninth day is neither blinde nor ſeeing, there being a middle of abnegation of either extreme, by reaſon of the incapacity of the ſubjects, ſo we may ſay, our infants are neither infidels nor believers.

What Mr. Church allegeth out of *Rev.*22.15. ſerves onely to beget hatred towards Antipædobaptiſts: for (without) there is meant of being without the city or heavenly Jeruſalem, *verſ.*14. and Dogs, there are ranked with Sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and ſuch like; neither of which needs be ſaid of infants; though we ſay, they are not viſible members in the Chriſtian Church, and that they are not yet believers.

Chriſt an infant was head of the Church, yet viſibly he appeared not the head of the Church, till he was manifeſted to be ſo. Infants may be members of Chriſt the head inviſibly, but not viſibly till they ſhew faith.

SECT. X.

Infants capacity of ſome reſpects different from diſcipleſhip, entitles them not to Baptiſm.

IN the third Argument is not much more than was ſaid before, and is anſwered. Jews infants were meet for circumciſion, becauſe of the command to them; ours not meet for Baptiſm, becauſe we have no command or example: it is true *Matth.*18.22. A little childe is made a Pattern to thoſe that are ſaved, in reſpect of humility or freedom from ambition: but it doth not thence follow that this meer negation of ambition doth qualifie them for Baptiſm, unto which, actual Diſcipleſhip or Profeſſion is ordinarily neceſſary. Chriſt admitted to him, and bleſſed little children, Mark 10.13. but did not appoint to baptize them, which it is likely he would, if he had judged them meet for it. If Parents may enter into covenant for their childrem, and dedicate them by ſolemn vow, as Hannah did, (of which there is cauſe of doubt whether now it is to be done as then) yet it follows not they are to be baptized, ſith Baptiſm is to be the perſons own engagement, not anothers for him: yea if this reaſon be good each Parent may baptize its own childe, though a woman, ſith Hannah could dedicate her childe by vow to God: If Iſrael be holineſs to the Lord, Jer.2.3. yet it follows not believing Gentiles infants are meet for Baptiſm, Joel 2.16. the children that ſuck the breaſt are required to faſt: if this prove them meet for Baptiſm, by like reaſon ſhould the Ninivites children and cattle be meet too, Jonah 3.5,7,8. The Pſalmiſt was caſt on God from his mothers belly, Pſal.22.10. not by dedication to God, but by ſpecial providence, as *verſ.*9. ſhews. Infants of Chriſtians, it is rightly judged may have in them the principal things ſignified by Baptiſm, but not that they have them till they ſhew it. If Mr. Church could make it good that God undertakes for what is wanting in the infants of his people through infancy, as he doth for what is wanting in his people through infirmity, he ſhould ſay ſomewhat to purpoſe: but I am out of hope to finde any good proofs from him, but trifling dictates and impertinent allegations, Pſalm 119.122. is a Prayer, wherein the Pſalmiſt prays God, to be ſurety for him for good, that is, ſays the New

Annot.

Annot. to put himself between him and his enemies, as if he were his Pledg: it is no undertaking he will, and if it be, it is nothing for his infants, surely not to supply what is wanting in them by reason of infancy for Baptism. He will circumcise the hearts of his peoples children, Deut.30.6. but this is meant of their elect children onely, and not necessarily to be performed in infancy. Christs promise *Matth.*18.19. is upon condition of agreement by two or three to ask in his Name, nor is it said for them and theirs, however not without subordination to his secret purpose, and other limitations.

That of Isai 22.24, is rightly expounded in the New Annot. by learned Mr. Gataker, All his kindred and allies with their issue as well small as great shall partake of Eliakims honour, in one imployment or other: so that this with the other Texts, might as well prove a man in the Moon, as that which Mr. Church infers, Therefore such infants are judged meet for Baptism.

His next, that Christians infants have righteousness by imputation, Rom.5.19. as they have guilt by imputation, is true onely of the elect, but makes them not meet for Baptism till they are called. What he says, Shews of grace are not necessary to the judging infants of Christians meet for Baptism, is said without proof; the contrary is proved before. All his Reasons he brings to prove it, serve as well to prove them not necessary that a person be judged meet for the Lords Supper.

Infants may be rightly judged to have original sin in them without shews, because the Scripture says so, but tells us of none meet for Baptism, but disciples and believers. The Israelites infants did as much eat the Lords Supper, as were baptized, 1 Cor.10.1,2,3,4. If the Text proves the one, it proves the other.

Baptism is called Baptism unto repentance, Matth.3.11. as well as Baptism of repentance, It is well it is confessed that Johns Baptism was called the Baptism of repentance; but it is true also that it is often so called Mark 1.4. Luke 3.3. Acts 13.24. & 19.4. and but once unto repentance: and it might have been observed which Beza notes on *Matth.*3.11. that it might be there read (at repentance, or when they repent) as εἰς κήρυγμα Ἰωνᾶ, *Matth.*12.41. is rendered, (at the preaching of Jonah) however if it be read (unto repentance) the meaning is to the same effect, that when he baptized them they professed repentance for the present, and for the future.

In answer to the Objection, infants by like reason should have the Lords Supper, he tells us, that the ceremonies are different, in the one the person is to be active, in the other passive: but the Scripture says not so, but requires Baptism as a duty, and thereto profession of faith as a prerequisite. He saith, Baptism is the Sacrament of entrance into the church, the other of progress; but this proves the rather that infants should have the Lords Supper, sith they are to grow and make progress after their entrance. What he saith, it cannot be given to infants, is false: for they can take Bread and Wine, and it was given them six hundred years together, as many both Protestants and Papists confess.

What he saith Argument 4. *pag.*30. Sealing the covenant by an initial Sacrament to infants of Gods people aforetime was not peculiar to that church-state, is manifestly false: for that sealing was no other than circumcision, which if it were not proper to the Jewish Church-state, nothing was.

It is frivolous which Mr. Church says, The commission to baptize must be expounded by the command to circumcise.

What

What is said about the antiquity of infant-baptism is elsewhere answered, Exam. part.1. Apol. Sect.15,16. Præcursor Sect.3. Dionysius Areopagita is a spurious Authour, as whole Juries of Protestants and Papists confess. Salmasius saith in his Letter to Colvius, pag.179. that he is no elder than the fifth age, pag. 441. It is certain that he wrote about the fifth age. There's plainer proof for Episcopacy being in use nearer the Apostles days than for Pædobaptism: it is no intolerable presumption but a certain truth in them that assert, that infant-baptism is not so ancient as is pretended, as now taught is a late innovation.

In his fifth Arg. he undertakes to shew, Infants have great profit by Baptism, but either asserts a meer Title, or a Profit which they have not by their Baptism, or that which they may have without it. It is not true, that there is the like profit to infants by baptism as by circumcision; for the one is appointed and not the other, and there is no penalty for omitting infant-baptism as for neglecting infant-circumcision, nor any promise or privilege assigned to infant-baptism as to infant-circumcision.

SECT. XI.

The Agreements between Circumcision and Baptism, do not justifie Infant-baptism, and the validity of sealing Infants with an initial seal now, is shewed to be null.

His sixth and last Argument runs thus, The promise was sealed by the initial Sacrament aforetime to infants of visible Professors, seeking it for them both Jews and Gentiles, therefore it may be sealed to the infants of Christians by the initial Sacrament.

The Antecedent he proves not, it is in effect no more than the infants of Jews and Proselytes were circumcised, onely Mr. Church useth the affected Phraseology of Pædobaptists to call that sealing the Promise by the initial Sacrament, which is no more than circumcision, which it is false did seal, or assure to every circumcised person the Promise of propriety in God, or any other Promise made in the covenant with Abraham, Gen.17. And he says, It was sealed to infants of visible Professors; intimating it was done to them by reason of their Profession, and not to others; whereas the infants of any in his house, whether born in Abrahams house, or bought with his money, who were not of his seed, but strangers children, were by command to be circumcised. He puts in his conclusion (our Baptism) for (sealing by the initial Sacrament) But to let pass these stale Paralogisms; he takes on him to prove the consequence by six Arguments.

The first is, The principal Promise is not made void. He means that Gen.17.7. but gives no reason why that should be the principal Promise, and not that *v.*4. But I grant that Promise Gen.17.7. meant of Abrahams seed by faith is not made void. He thence concludes, Therefore it may be sealed to the infants of Christians by the initial Sacrament in this dispensation; which is not a proof of the consequence, but of the conclusion of the former Argument; nor is there any force in this inference: for though the Promise were still in force as then, yet it is not a sufficient reason to baptize an infant, the command being not to baptise persons in covenant, but disciples of Christ.

In

In his second he tells us, Sealing that Promise by an initial Sacrament to infants of Gods people (which was the substance of circumcision, and a distinct thing from it) did not of right cease with the Jewish church-state; for it was not peculiar to that church as a national church; for that Promise was sealed to infants by the initial Sacrament long before the existence of a national church, and to Infants of strangers which were not of that nation Gen.27. 2. Sealing the promise by an initial Sacrament is principally in reference to the Catholik church. For shews of grace are sufficient to it, though the parties have not joyned themselves to any particular church Acts 18.36,37. and 10 47. and one that cannot be rightly judged to be of the catholick church cannot have the promise sealed to him by an initial Sacrament, though he be a member of a particular church.

Answer. That which Mr. church saith (sealing that promise by an initial Sacrament to Infants of Gods people was the substance of circumcision and a distinct thing from it) is many waies faulty in respect of falsehood, and obscurity. For 1. the substance of circumcision as a type or shadow is Christ exhibited, as the Apostle *Col.*3.7. not the promise of God to every Infant of a believer by profession 2. as circumcision was a sign or taken of the covenant made with Abraham; and it is true the promise *Gen.*17.7. was the thing signified by it, but not onely that part, I will be the God of thy seed, but also the other, I will be thy God, yea and all the rest of the promises as *ver.*4. thou shalt be a father of many nations, fruitfulness, descent of Kings ver.6. inheritance of Canaan ver.8. yet how the promises or the sealing of them should be the substance of circumcision I do not understand. Circumcision was a ceremony consisting of an action and a relation. Circumcision as an action hath no other substance or essence but the cutting off the little skin, as a relation, the signifying, or sealing is the very relation, but it is a trifling speech to say, paternity is the substance of paternity, if the promises sealed be meant to be the substance yet no Logicians I know so speak, to call the object of sight the substance of sight, the thing signified the substance of the sign. *Faith is Heb.*11.1. said to be the substance of things hoped for, but there the act is said to be the substance of the object, not the object the substance of the act, & so the covenant should not be the substance of circumcision, but circumcision, the substance of the covenant. 3. It is more unintelligible to me, how sealing the promise by an initial Sacrament to Infants of Gods people was the substance of circumcision and yet a distinct thing.

For, first, if he mean that it was the substance of circumcision as a relation, that is the essence of it (in which sense only I know how to understand his speech) then sure it was the very same and no distinct thing, the essence being not a distinct thing from the essentiate, the thing defined and definition are not two distinct things, though the notion be formally distinct; if he mean that sealing that promise by an initial Sacrament should be the Genus to circumcision, yet so it should not be a distinct thing, the Genus and species are not distinct really but formally, Quæ formaliter distinguuntur non habent se ut res et. res Kick. sist. log. lib. 1. part. 2. cap. 5. nor was there any other sealing that promise by an initial Sacrament then by circumcision, and therefore no real distinction, all the distinction was meerly notional or verbal, circumcision being one word, and sealing with the initial seal at that time another, yet both expressing the same thing. If any imagine a sealing with an initial seal then that was not circumcision let him shew what it is and were commanded: Mr. Church himself pag. 41. calls circumcision the initial Sacrament aforetime. 2. Sealing the promise by an initial Sacrament is said to be the substance of circumcision, yet pag. 41. he saith it was a distinct thing from sealing the promise, and only a ceremony for that time. Wherin sundry inconsistences seem to be 1. that sealing the promise by an initial seal should be the substance of circumcision, & yet circumcision a distinct thing from it. Is the substance of a being a distinct thing from it? the substance of a man a distinct thing from a man? 2. that Sealing the promise should be the substance of circumcision, and yet circumcision onely a ceremony for that time. Is that a ceremony to a thing which is the substance of it? 3. that circumcision doth cease yet not that sealing the promise by that initial Sacrament which was no other then circumcision. Let him that can read these riddles, I am no such Oedipus as to unfold them. But let Mr. Church use what gibberish he please I know no other initial Sacrament then that of circumcision mentioned in the old Testament, nor any sealing then commanded but it, and if it cease, then all the ruls about it cease to bind, and so are no rule to us now. But saith he pag. 41. The sealing of promise is not ceased, far seals are added in dispensation to the covenant. To which I reply. A thing is said to cease either of right or of fact which was of right to be or had being before but not now. There was no sealing by an initial seal aforetime that had being of right or of fact aforetime but circumcision, which Mr. Church saith was the initial seal aforetime, therefore circumcision ceasing, sealing with the initial seal aforetime ceased, there being no other foretime. But saith Mr. Church it is not ceased, for seals are added in this dispensation to the covenant, he means doubtless baptism and the Lords Supper, and by seals other seals, and so his reason is sealing of the promise by an initial Sacrament which was aforetime is not ceased, because other seals are added, which is as if one should say, the night is not past because the sun is risen, the reason is good to the contrary, there are other seals added, therefore the sealing with the initial seal, aforetime is ceased. But, saith he, it did not of right cease with the Jewish church state: For it was not peculiar to that church as a national church.

Answer. If circumcision were not perticular to the Jewish Church-state I know nothing peculiar to it. And if it were not peculiar to that church as a national church why was the nation peculiarly called the circumcision, and other people the uncircumcision Rom. 3. 30. And for that which is alledged, that promise was sealed to Infants by the initial Sacrament long before the existence of a national church and to Infants of strangers which were not of that nation, I conceive neither is true. For circumcision was not till Abrahams nation were a Church. For he had before that time taught them the way of the Lord Gen. 18. 19. and they worshipped the true God, as appears by the many altars he built to Jehovah. And though Abrahams house was but a small nation, yet it was a nation. And though Infants of strangers were circumcised, yet it was not without incorporation into that nation, so that they were of that nation if not by birth, yet as proselytes added thereto; nevertheless if it had been before the existence of the national church of the Jews, it might cease with that church-state, as the distinction of clean and unclean beasts was before Abrahams dayes, as appears by Gen. 17. 2. and yet that distinction ceased with the Jewish Church state.

As for his second reason it is of no force. For when he saith, Sealing the promise promiſe by an initial Sacrament is principally in reference to the Catholike Church he means it, I conceive, of baptiſm, elſe Acts 8. 36, 37. & 10. 47. are cited to no purpoſe. But there is no colour of conſequence in Mr. Churches reaſon, thus framed, Baptiſm joined men to the Univerſal Church, therefore Circumciſion was not peculiar to the Jewiſh Church-ſtate, or that it ceaſed not with the Jewiſh Church-ſtate. As for his other aſſertion, That [one that cannot be rightly judged to be of the Catholick Church, cannot have the promiſe rightly ſealed to him by an initial Sacrament, though he be a Member of a particular Church,] it being of no weight to the preſent Argument, I ſhall not ſo fitly meddle with it till I come to anſwer the 20.ch. of Mr. Bs. firſt part of Plain Scripture proof, &c.

As for his third Argument, it proves not the Conſequence. [For though faith and repentance be required of ſome afore circumciſion] yet it was not required of infants afore circumciſion. But afore baptiſm it is required of all Mat. 28.19. Mark 16.16. Acts 2. 38. & 8. 36, 37, 38.

To the fourth, I ſay though [infants now are capable of the promiſe as the Jews infants were,] and that [they could bear baptiſm as well as the Jews infants could circumciſion, ye: without a like command (which cannot be found) they are not to be baptized as the other were to be circumciſed.

As for the fifth Argument, it is falſe, That [baptiſm is as appliable to infants as circumciſion was; for there is not the like command, without which though it were, that no more action were required in the ſubject to be baptized then in the ſubject to be circumciſed (which is falſe, as appears from Matt. 28.19. Mark 16.16. Acts 2.38. Acts 8. 36,37,38.) and though it were that the parities were more between them then they are, yet they make no rule for baptiſm without a command or inſtitution. But it is falſe which he ſaith, that baptiſm is the ſame Sacrament with Circumciſion And as for the twelve parities, brought by Mr. Church, ſome are doubtful, as the firſt [that they are both initial Sacraments of the Covenant of grace] in ſome ſenſe with ſome limitations it may be true, but in other, even in that ſenſe it is commonly taken, it is not true; to wit, that the eſſence of them conſiſts therein, and that they are ſo to all rightly circumciſed or baptized.

The ſecond is likewiſe ambiguous, in ſome ſenſe true, in ſome falſe. Thoſe that might not be rightly judged to be in the promiſe might be circumciſed, however it be concerning baptiſm. And thoſe that may be rightly accounted to be of the Church, meaning the inviſible, yet are not therefore to be baptized.

The third likewiſe is doubtful by reaſon of the different waies of being accounted to the Church, and the doubt whether a perſon be to be accounted of the Church afore baptiſm or after. The Words Acts 2. 41.47. ſeem to prove that they are added to the Church after baptiſm.

Neither is the fourth or fifth certain. For women ordinarily entred into the Church aforetime without circumciſion, and did eat the Paſſeover.

The eighth is not true of every circumciſed perſons circumciſion, nor of every baptized perſons baptiſm, that it is an external ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith.

In the tenth ſomething is untrue. For in the new Diſpenſation (as the phraſe is) are not both temporal and ſpiritual promiſes ſealed as well as in the former,

if he mean it of the ſame temporal promiſes, we have better promiſes Heb. 8.6 but not the ſame, not the promiſe of the land of Canaan, of greatneſs, proſperity, &c. but rather a prediction of perſecution, if we will live Godly in Chriſt Jeſus. Chriſtians have Chriſt, and all other things by that part of the Covenant made with Abraham, which is ſpiritual, but not by that part which is proper to the Iſraelites.

In the eleventh Mr. Church ſeems to be out in his computation about the beginning of baptiſm, and end of Circumciſion. He ſaith [Circumciſion of right ended when baptiſm began to be an initial Sacrament, and that was not ſurely till Iohn began to baptize, which was not till the fifteenth year of Tiberius, as is plain from Luke 3. 1,2. now mark his reaſon, For Chriſts Circumciſion was the period of it. Now if Chriſts circumciſion was the period of it, then it did ceaſe almoſt thirty years before baptiſm began to be an initial Sacrament, Chriſt being circumciſed in the Reign of Auguſtus. But whence doth he gather that Circumciſion of right ended, when Baptiſm began to be an initial Sacrament?

For my part I find no ſuch thing in Scripture. If our Lords words Iohn 7. 22,23. do not prove it was then in force, yet thoſe ſpeeches of the Apoſtle Epheſ. 2.14,15,16. of aboliſhing the Law of Commandments in Ordinances, and ſlaying the enmity by his Croſs, and Col. 2.14. of blotting out the hand-writing of Ordinances, which was againſt us, and took it away nailing it to his Croſs, do determine that Circumciſion did of right continue until Chriſts death, and ſo ſo ne years after, baptiſm began to be a Sacrament initial. The uſual Doctrine is, that the Ceremonies of the Law became dead with Chriſt, deadly after the open promulgation of the Goſpel, and calling of the Gentiles, Diodati annot. on Matth. 27. 51. And this breach was a ſign that by the death of Chriſt all Moſaical Ceremonies were annihilated. But Mr. Church tells us, Circumciſion ceaſed to be needful when Iohn began to baptize, for the Law is ſaid to continue but untill John, Luke 16.16. To which I anſwer, I know not why Circumciſion ſhould not be as needful as the Paſſ over, which our Saviour himſelf obſerved Luke 22. 15. and offering the gift to the Prieſt that Moſes commanded, Matth. 8. 4. I preſume the command of Circumciſion was in force till after Chriſts death as well as the command of the Paſſeover, ſeventh day Sabbath and other things. As for Mr. Church his reaſon if it were good, That circumciſion was needleſs when Iohn began to baptiſe, becauſe it is ſaid the law was untill Iohn, by the ſame reaſon he might ſay all the reſt of the Law, yea and the Prophets were needleſs, when Iohn began to baptize. But the meaning is, the Miniſtery of the Law and Prophets continued, till Iohn, or as it is Matth. 11. 13. all the Prophets and the Law prophecied until Iohn, that is, declared Chriſts comming as future, and when Iohn began then the Kingdom of God began to be preached, and therefore Mark 1. 1,2. The beginning of the Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſt the Son of God is ſaid to be upon Iohns preaching; for then the Meſſiah was named as preſent, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the ſin of the World, John. 1. 29.

Laſtly ſaith Mr. Church [the Apoſtle plainly teacheth that Baptiſm is the ſame Sacrament to Chriſtians that Circumciſion was to Gods people aforetime Col. 2. 11. 12. arguing againſt the continuance of Circumciſion: in this Diſpenſation he uſes two Arguments, which argue no leſs. For 1. Chriſt being

To which I anſwer, neither doth the Apoſtle plainly, that is, in expreſs terms, teach *Col.*2.11,12. what ever Mr.Church, or Mr. Calvin ſay, That baptiſm is the ſame Sacrament to Chriſtians that circumciſion was to Gods people aforetime, nordo his reaſons prove it. For by the ſame reaſon we might ſay it of putting away of leaven out of their houſes, and keeping the Paſſeover with unleavened bread: baptiſm is the ſame Sacrament to Chriſtians that the feaſt of unleavened bread was to Gods people aforetime. For 1. Chriſt being come (who was the body of the old ſhadows) they of right ceaſed. 2. That baptiſm is now the ſign of Mortification, for which keeping the feaſt with unleavened bread ſerved aforetime, 1 *Cor.*5.7,8.

But were all theſe parities between circumciſion and baptiſm, which Maſter Church mentions, right, yet they prove not his Concluſion, That the initial ſacrament in this diſpenſation is as appliable to infants of Chriſtians as the initial ſacrament aforetime was to infants of Gods people. For if not all theſe, yet as many other parities may be reckoned, at leaſt according to Pædobaptiſts Hypotheſes, between baptiſm and the Paſſeover, as, that they are both Sacraments of the Covenant of grace, both ceremonies to be uſed about thoſe that might rightly be judged in the promiſe, and accounted of the Church, the ordinary way of communion in the Church, not allowed to thoſe without, engaging to obſervancy of the Covenant according to the ſeveral adminiſtrations, ſigns of mortification, external ſeals of the righteouſneſs of faith, diſtinguiſhing Gods people from infidels, to ceaſe at Chriſts comming, &c. and yet I ſuppoſe Mr. Church will not have them the ſame Sacrament. Yea as many diſparities between circumciſion and baptiſm may be reckoned as Mr.Church reckons parities, as that the one was a ſhadow of Chriſt to come, not the other; the one a token of the mixt covenant made to Abraham, which was of promiſes peculiar to the Jews, not the other; the one a domeſtick action to be done in the houſe, the other an Eccleſiaſtick belonging to the Church; the one to be done by the parents in that reſpect, not ſo the other; the one with cutting off a part, not the other; the one with drawing blood, not the other; the one to males onely, the other to females alſo; the one to be on the eighth day whatever it were, the other not limitted to any preciſe day; the one made a viſible impreſſion on the body, and that permanent, not ſo the other; the one to be done with an artificial and ſharp, the other with a natural and not wounding inſtrument; the one to all males belonging to the houſe of Abraham even infants, but not to others though Godly, except they joined themſelves to that family: the other to believers or diſciples of all nations; the one engaging to keep Moſes his Law, not ſo the other. But be the diſparities or parities what they will, the only rule in theſe meer poſitive rites is the inſtitution or command: ſo that were the Sacraments (as they are called) the ſame in kind, uſe, analogy, or what other way they may be deemed the ſame, yet without a rule of command or example intimating ſuch a command, we are not bound to do the like in the one, as we do in the other.

part of this Review Sect 5. &c. what he grants that it may be soundly gathered that all of riper years should be discipled before baptism from the commission Matth. 28. 19. doth also prove, that they had no Commission to baptize any but discipled persons, and so none but those of riper years, not infants unless there be shewed some other Commission: which is not to be found in the Scripture, but only in corrupt tradition of antiquity, and the Jewish arguings of latter Divines, and is not yet found any other then will-worship.

To all which Mr. Church further brings answer is made before, the vindicating of my objections will most fitly come in the reply to Masters Marshalls Defence, to which I shall hasten after the dispatch of some few other Authors.

SECT. XII.

Doctor Featley his argument for Infant-baptism from the Covenant, is examined.

MR. Rutherford is another of the Authors, whose writing Mr. Baxter tells, yet remains to be answered. But I know not any writing of his in which he doth directly dispute against Anti-pædobaptists.

I confess I have met with a dispute against those of the Congregational way of Discipline in his Peaceable and temperate Plea, c. 12. q. 12. for denying baptism to those infants whose next parent is not a known believer in some gathered Church, who yet do hold and practise baptism of such infants, whose next parent is a Church-member. But that dispute going only against them, and upon his grounds denied and refuted by me elsewhere, it were out of my way to answer what he saith there. If there be any other writing of his, I presume some one or other of the Antagonists I refute, have the strength of it: yet I intend if such a one do occurre to me, to give account of it as I shall find meet.

Mr. Robert Baillee is another to whose writing Mr. B. points me. But his first Argument I have already enervated in the Addition to my Apology in my letter to him, and answering his three first criminations, especially the third, and have shewed, sect. 1. that he doth but calumniate, when he charges us to affirm, That no infants have any place in the Covenant of grace, or any Gospel promises till they be called by the word, and by an actual faith have embraced the Gospel. What other arguments he brings are answered either in answering Others that bring the same, or its intended shall be answered in fit place.

There are many others who have written of this argument in the English tongue, each of which forms his Argument from the Covenant to the initial seal, from infant circumcision to infant-baptism, with some difference in terms, or phrasifying, though in effect all of them are reduced into the three forms in the 1, 2, 3. sect. of my Exercitation, and rest on these false principles, that interest in the Covenant of grace was the adequate reason of a persons title to circumcision, and is the adequate reason of a persons title to baptism, and that there is the like reason of baptizing infants of believers, as of circumcising in-infants of Abraham by virtue of the like interest in the Covenant, though there be not the like command for the one as for the other, nevertheless that it may not be said I have neglected any thing conceived worth answering, or to have slighted any of their labours, I shall briefly answer the Arguments of such as have come to my hands, and then more largely answer Mr. Geree, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Cobbet, Mr. Blake, Mr. Baxter, who have opposed my writings, taking in others by the way, as I see fit.

Dr. Featley is one that hath been a Leader of the Prelatical party, and is judged by them to have proved Pædobaptism learnedly. His dispute is in his Dipper dipt, p. 46. arg. 5. thus.

[All they who are comprized within the Covenant, and are no where prohibited to receive the seal thereof, may and ought to receive it: But children are comprized within the Covenant of faith, whereof circumcision was a seal, Rom. 4. 11. and now baptism is, Ergo children may and ought to receive Baptism.

Of the Major or first Proposition there can be no doubt; for it is unjust to deprive a Man of the confirmation of that to which he hath a true right or title. And for the Minor or Assumption, it is as cleer, for so are the words of the Covenant Gen. 17. 17. I will establish my Covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee.]

Against which I except, first, That the Syllogism is many waies faulty; 1. That he puts in the Conclusion [children] as all one with infants. 2. That in the Conclusion there is this term not expresst in the Major [may and ought to receive baptism] for that which is in the Major [may and ought to receive the seal of the Covenant] is not all one with [may and ought to receive baptism] baptism and seal of the Covenant being not equipollent, besides Circumcision, passeover, Lords Supper, the Ephesians are said to be sealed with the holy spirit of promise Ephes. 1. 13. nor is the term [seal of the Covenant] applyed to Sacraments any other than a novel expression, neither used in Scripture, nor the Antients. Rom. 4. 11. doth not term circumcision (much less other Sacraments as they are called) a seal of the Covenant of faith, as the Doctor misallegeth it, but a seal of the Righteousness of faith, which he had being yet uncircumcised. Whence it appears that it was a Seal of what he had, not of a covenant concerning what he was to have: and this is said onely of Abrahams circumcision, with such an observing of particularizing circumstances, as shew it to be appropriated to Abrahams circumcision, what ever is said of circumcisions being a seal of the righteousness of faith, however Divines dictate to the contrary, and therefore what the Doctor addes in the Minor (which multiplies the terms in the Syllogism) [and now baptism is] asserting thereby baptism to be a Seal of the Covenant of faith, is said without proof, though I should not stick to grant it in this sense, that to the true believer his baptism assures righteousness according to Gods Covenant, and the true believer by baptism gives testimony or assurance of his faith according to his Covenant, as being unwilling to wrangle about terms if we agree in the meaning. But in the sense Pædobaptists use it, as containing the nature of a Sacrament, I shall reject it in that which followes. 3. Against the Doctors omission of some words in the Minor, [and are no where prohibited to receive the seal thereof] which were in the Major. 4. That the term [and are no where prohibited to receive the seal thereof] is ambiguous. For it may be understood either of an expres prohibition in forbidding terms, or a prohibition by consequence. It is granted in so many expres words, infants are not prohibited to receive baptism, no nor the Lords Supper, yet they are by good consequence to be denied both, in as much as both are disagreeing from the institution and practice of those rites in the new Testament. Wherefore to the Doctors argument, I except against the form of it, as containing more then three terms, the predicate in the conclusion not being in the Major, part of the medium in the major being left out in the Minor. And if it be thus formed [all they who are comprized within the covenant of faith, and are no where prohibited to receive the seal thereof, may and ought to be baptized: But infants of believers are comprized, &c. Ergo.] I deny the Major if meant of Gods covenant to us, or promise either of faith or righteousnes to infants by it, as the alleging Gen. 17. 7. imports the Doctor meant. But grant it of those who are comprized within the Covenant of faith by their covenanting to be believers, in which sense I deny the Minor, that children, that is infant-children are comprized in the Covenant of faith by their covenanting to be believers; yea and if the proposition be universal, all children, or all infant-children of believers are comprized in Gods covenant of faith or promise that he will give them faith or righteousnes by faith, I deny it. Nor is the Major proved by the Doctor. For it is no unjust thing to deny baptism to a person to whom it is not appointed; now baptism is appointed to disciples or believers, not to whom God promiseth to give faith or righteousnes by faith. Besides were it true that God had so promised it and confirmation of it were due; yet without institution confirmation by baptism were not due; God hath other waies to confirm it, as by his Oath Heb. 6. 17. the blood of his Son, 1 Cor. 11. 25. his Spirit, 2 Cor. 1. 22. A man that is bound to pass an estate, and to seal it, may not be bound to a further Confirmation by fine and recovery. Besides its no injustice not to confirm ones right who doth not claim and prove it. But this infants do not. And for the Minor, the words Gen. 17 7. have nothing about the second part of the proposition, nor do indeed prove any to be comprized in that promise, but Abraham and his seed, of which sort none of Gentile-believers children are, but those that are true believers as he was, or elect by God to adoption of children. The objection the Doctor brings in is not rightly framed, nor do I deny the answer the Doctor gives is sufficient to overthrow it as so formed. But what the Doctor dictates, That all true believers and their children are to be reckoned among children of the promise, is contradictory to the Apostles determination Rom. 9. 7, 8. as the Apostle is expounded by Dr. Featly himself in the New Annot. on Rom. 9. 8. in which he thus speaks, not all they who are carnally born of Abraham by the course of nature are the children of God to whom the promise of grace was made; but the children of promise, that is, those who were born by vertue of the promise, those who by Gods special grace were adopted (as Isaac by a special, and singular promise was begot by Abraham) they only are accounted for that seed mentioned in the Covenant, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed.

SECT. XIII.

MR. William Lyford in his Apology for Infant-baptism page 33. thus disputes. All that are taken into the Covenant of grace ought to receive the initial sign [what ever the sign be that God shall chuse] and that according to the commandment of God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. But infants are taken into Covenant with their parents, as is proved; therefore by the Commandment of the Lord they ought to receive the sign which God hath enjoined to be used, and that sign is baptism.

To which I answer, by denying the Major, and for his proof out of Gen. 17.7,12. I deny,

1. That there is any command for any other initial sign but Circumcision.

2. That circumcision is there appointed to all who are taken into the Covenant of grace, not to Lot, Melchisedeck, Job or their children, not to the females of Abrahams house, not to the males under eight daies old, not to the Proselytes of the gate as Cornelius was.

3. That the adequate reason why any was to be circumcised was interest in the Covenant, Gen. 17. 7. but the command only. For both Ishmael who was not in the covenant was to be circumcised because of the command, and as hath been shewed, others in the covenant were not to be circumcised through defect of the command. Nor is the Minor true, if understood of all the infants of believers, or any of them as their infants, nor is there a word to prove it Gen. 17.7. which is onely a promise to Abrahams seed, and they of the Gentiles are only true believers or elect persons. But perhaps Mr. Lyford mends the matter in the next form, which is this pag. 34.

If infants have a right to the covenant and the initial sign therof, then it is a wrong to deny it to them. But infants have a right to the Covenant and the initial sign thereof, both by Gods original grant, Gen. 17. 11. 14. and by Christs confirmation of that Covenant made to their Fathers, Rom. 15 8. therefore it is a wrong to deny it them. The Covenant under which we are, is the Gospel Covenant, made long since with us Englishmen and our infant-seed, with a command of giving them the sign, which at first was circumcision, and now baptism by the same Divine authority enjoined and commanded to be given without any exception of any within the Covenant.

I answer by denying the Minor, and to the proof by denying that Gen. 17. 11,14. there is command of any other initial sign than Circumcision, or that circumcision is commanded to all that had a right to the Covenant, or that the Gospel Covenant was made long since with us Englishmen, and our seed as our seed, or that there was in that of circumcision any command to us to baptize infants, or that Divine authority hath commanded baptism to be given without any exception of any within the Covenant. But I affirm he hath commanded only to baptize those in the Covenant who are disciples or believers. But Mr. Lyford adds further p. 37.

All thoſe to whom the bleſſings and promiſes in the Covenant do belong, t them alſo belongs baptiſm, the ſign thereof (by the doctrine of St. Peter, and of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf) But to infants of believing parents, the bleſſings and promiſes of the Covenant do belong before actual faith, therefore by the Doctrine of the Holy Ghoſt in Scripture, ſuch infants ought to be baptized before actual faith.

The Major or firſt part of this Argument is the very reaſon of the Text. The Minor propoſition, viz. that the bleſſings and promiſes of the Covenant do belong to infants before actual faith is proved by theſe reaſons. 1. By the expreſs words of Peter, which ſay, the promiſe is to your children. 2. By the expreſs words of our Saviour, of ſuch is the Kingdom of Heaven. 3. By example of Iſaac and Jacob, they were children of the promiſe before actuall faith, and had applied unto them the ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith. 4. Some infants dying are ſaved, they are members of Chriſts Kingdom, therefore the bleſſing of the covenant, viz. regeneration and remiſſion of ſins through the blood of Chriſt do alſo belong to them.

To which I anſwer, bleſſings of the covenant are of ſundry ſorts, ſuch as certainly accompanie ſalvation, regeneration, juſtification, adoption, or ſuch as are common to reprobates, as to have teachers, example, and acquaintance with the godly, &c. Both theſe may belong to them in preſent poſſeſſion or aſſurance for the future: when they belong to them in preſent poſſeſſion, it is either diſcernibly or indiſcernibly. Actual faith may be in the exerciſe or habit. Infants of believers are elect or non-elect. It is true all thoſe to whom the bleſſings of the Covenant which accompany ſalvation belong in preſent poſſeſſion diſcernibly, to them alſo belongs baptiſm: but ſo the Minor is falſe, underſtood of all infants of believers: they belong not to all, but only to the elect, nor them certainly in preſent poſſeſſion, much leſs diſcernibly during infancy: or if it be diſcernible, then they have actual faith, and ſo the Minor is not true, that to infants of believing parents the ſaving bleſſings of the covenant do belong in poſſeſſion diſcernibly before actual faith. If it be meant of the bleſſings of the Covenant in future aſſurance only the Major is falſe. Nor is it true that the Major is the very reaſon of the text Act. 2.38,39. It is falſe that this is Peters reaſoning, therefore does the ſign belong to Peters hearers becauſe the promiſe did firſt belong to them. For the term [γὰρ for] does not intera right which they might claim, but imports a motive to duties, and of theſe duties firſt to repentance, and then baptiſm: ſo that if from thence a right be concluded, they muſt conclude as well a right to repentance in the firſt place, and then to baptiſm. Nor is it true that Acts 10.47, 48. the Apoſtles diſcourſe is reduced to Mr. Lyfords form of argument, or ſaies as he ſaies, They that receive the ſame grace are capable, yea have right to the ſame ſign, but infants are capable of the ſame grace, therefore of right they are to have the ſame ſign, i. e. the Sacrament of baptiſm. For although the Major be granted of actual poſſeſſion of the ſpirit and magnifying God, yet it is not true only of the promiſe thereof. But the Minor [infants are capable of the ſame grace] alters the term, which is in the Major thus [they have received the ſame grace] and ſo Mr. Lyford ſyllogiſm hath four terms. Nor doth the Apoſtle ſay, they that are capable of the ſame grace are to be baptized as well as we, but, none can forbid water to baptize them that had received the Holy Ghoſt, and ſo were manifestly actual believers as well as themselves, though they were of the Gentiles: which when it appears in infants I should yield they are to be baptized, but not meerly because of the promise or capacity of grace, for the promise agrees to Jews children elect, and capacity of grace to Turks children, and therefore if either or both these did intitle to baptism, the infant-children of such might be baptized. And for his proofs of the Minor, it is false, that to infants of believing parents the blessings and promises of the covenant do belong before actual faith, is proved by the expres words of Peter. For though he say, the promise is to your children, yet he doth not say, to you as believers, or to your children in infancy as the children of believers, nor before actual faith, Yea the words [as many as the Lord our God shall call] do require actual faith afore the possession of the blessings of the promise: Nor is this any miserable shift: nor is it true, that those words are quite a new thing clearly relating to another sort of people, than his present hearers, and not to them, for that expression limits all the Subjects, and is put after all joined by copulative particles, and therefore is to be conceived to limit all of them. Nor is the speech true of any of them without that limitation. Nor is it true which Mr. Lyford saies, That the words do not exegetically expound to which of his hearers children the promise did belong. For they are a manifest limitation excluding some and including others.

And what he saith, that Peter saies [this promise does belong to them that are afar off, and their children, as well as to you and your children] is manifestly false. But of this text I have spoken in the first part of this Review, sect. 5. more fully.

To his second proof, I say it is false, that the expres words of our Saviour (of such is the Kingdome of Heaven) prove his Minor. For [of such] is not all one with [infants of believing parents] nor when it is said [of such is the Kingdome of heaven] is it all one with this [the blessings and promises of the Covenant do belong to them afore actual faith] the Kingdom of heaven is not said to be of them, because their parents were believers, its uncertain whether they were so or no; and if they were, another reason may and ought to be conceived of their interest in the Kingdome of heaven, to wit Christs special and effectual blessing: nor is it said the Kingdom of heaven belongs to them in actual possession; and if it were so meant, and yet they were not appointed to be baptized (as it appears by the Evangelists they were not) it is a good presumption, Christ would not have infants, notwithstanding their interest in the Kingdom of heaven, to be baptized till they became believers by profession, and knew what their engagement is thereby.

To his third, it is true, Isaac and Jacob were children of the promise before actual faith, yea before they were born, and therefore if the interest in the Covenant had been a sufficient reason of Circumcision, they should have been circumcised afore the eighth day, which because they were not, it is an argument, that not the Covenant, but the Command intitled them to Circumcision.

To the fourth, I never denied, that to some infants the covenant belongs, nor that they are saved, regenerated in infancy, but I deny, that this is true of all infants of believers. For the very instances brought prove the contrary, that though Isaac and Jacob were children of the promise, yet Ishmael and E- ſan begotten by believing parents were not, who yet were to be circumciſed: nor is any a childe of the promiſe becauſe he is the child of a believer, but becauſe he is elect of God.

As for Mr. Lyfords anſwer to the Objection in conference with him, it is indeed no anſwer. For he that objects that the bleſſings of the Covenant, belong to elect infants, not to all, and therefore under that pretence all in general are not to be baptized, doth not by that ſpeech grant, that baptiſm belongs to one infant, or to any becauſe elect, but only ſhews the inſufficiency of the adverſaries proof for that practice: As for thoſe who deny baptiſm to all becauſe they are infants, I know not who they be, the reaſon why it is denyed them is not becauſe they are infants, but becauſe in infancy they appear not to be diſciples, or believers in Chriſt, who only by the command are appointed to be baptized; and I agree with Mr. Lyford, That the Sacraments do belong to the elect not as elect, but as viſible members and Profeſſors (and that upon this account Simon Magus was baptized, though Mr. Lyford is miſtaken in ſaying Peter baptized Simon Magus, which was done by Philip) whereby Mr. Lyford doth indeed overthrow his diſpute. For if the Sacraments belong to the Elect as viſible Members and Profeſſors, then to all and onely viſible members and Profeſſours. For what belongs to any quatenus ipſum as ſuch, belongs to all and onely ſuch univerſally and reciprocally, and ſo if he will ſtand to his own words, though children be in the Covenant or elect, yet till they be viſible members and Profeſſors they are not to be baptized, which doth plainly refute his own Argument, viz. the Major of his own ſyllogiſm: nor need we by our reaſon know whether a perſon be elected that we may baptize him, but whether he be a viſible member and Profeſſor.

SECT. XIV.

The Arguments of Mr. Stalham, Mr. Brinſley, Mr. Hall, and a nameleſs Author, from the Covenant for infant-baptiſm, are examined.

MR. Stalham in the Conference at Terling page 4. argued thus, They who are included in the ſubſtance of the Goſpel covenant are not to be excluded from the ſeal of the Covenant. But infants are included in the ſubſtance of the Goſpel covenant, and therefore not to be excluded from the ſeal of the Goſpel Covenant.

But in this Argument the Concluſion is not of baptiſm in particular, and ſo concludes not what was to be concluded, and ſith circumciſion according to him was a ſeal of the Goſpel covenant, it might be true of it and ſo granted. Yet the Major if univerſal is not true, no not of circumciſion. For women and infant-males afore the eigth day were excluded from the ſeal of the Covenant, though they were included in the ſubſtance of the Goſpel covenant, as his phraſiology is, nor hath he a word in all the conference to prove his Major; and for his Minor, ſetting aſide his phraſifying, if this be his meaning: All the infants of believers, or the infants of believers, in as much as they are their children, have the ſubſtance of the Goſpel-Covenant, that is the promiſe, *Gen.*17.7. as it is a Goſpel promiſe made to them, it is falſe and contrary to Romans 9. 7,8. nor is there any thing in the conference there brought that proves it.

Mr. John Brinſley of Pædobapt. page 11 32. makes this his firſt and grand argument for the baptiſm of infants.

If children of believing parents be within the Covenant, then they may be baptized, But they are within the covenant, Ergo.

The Major he takes as granted, though I deny it as being moſt falſe.

The Minor he would prove, 1. From Act. 2 39. where he makes the promiſe to be of remiſſion of ſins, but that belongs only to the penitent believer, and therefore proves not that it belongs to the infant of a believer, without repentance and faith.

2. In that they were in the old Teſtament in the Covenant. But he himſelf page 33. ſaith, All infants of believing parents are in the outward viſible covenant. As for the covenant it ſelf, to ſpeak properly and ſtrictly, it depends upon Gods election. Neither doth it belong to any but thoſe who are elected. What juggling then doth he uſe to tell us that they are in covenant, and that the promiſe belongeth to them without any difference of elect and non-elect; and p. 11. he ſaith, To whomſoever the covenant it ſelf belongeth, to them belongeth this ſeal of the Covenant. And ſo his Minor muſt be, but the Covenant it ſelf belongs to infants of believers: and yet to ſay, the covenant it ſelf, doth not belong to any but thoſe who are elected, but the outward viſible covenant to all. But what this outward viſible covenant is, he tells us not. I cannot underſtand any other than Circumciſion, for that was the outward viſible covenant in the old Teſtament, and then his Minor aſſerts infants are in Covenant as they were in covenant in the old Teſtament, that is, they are to be circumciſed. Beſides what interfering is there in Pædobaptiſts? Mr. Stalham ſaith, they are included in the ſubſtance of the Goſpel covenant, Mr. Brinſley ſaith, the Covenant it ſelf (and then ſurely not the ſubſtance of the Goſpel covenant) belongs not to any but elect, but the outward viſible covenant; that is a new nothing, belongs to them all. And thus people are cheated by theſe Doctors.

3. In that they are federally holy, 1. *Cor.*7.14. but of it enough already in the firſt part of the Review. So much for Mr. Brinſley, one of Mr. Halls Champions.

Let us ſee what Maſter Thomas Hall himſelf in his Font Guarded page 9. argues;

To whomſoever the covenant it ſelf belongs, to them alſo belongs the ſeal of the Covenant; But the covenant belongs to Believers and their children: Ergo the ſeal of the Covenant belongs to them alſo.

Anſw. If Mr. Hall mean in the Minor, that the Covenant it ſelf belongs to all the children of believers, then he contradicts Mr. Brinſley (out of whom he ſaith in his Epiſtle to him and Mr. Blake he gathered his weeds) who ſaith, it belongs only to the Elect, and if he mean it only of the elect, then he can conclude onely concerning the elect; if he mean the outward viſible covenant, than it is either circumciſion, and then he aſſerts circumciſion to belong ſtill to infants; or he means baptiſm, and then his Minor and Concluſion is all one, and his Argument a meer inept tautology, unleſs he mean ſome other new nothing. And indeed this Argument of Mr. Hall is like the reſt concluding of the ſeal of the covenant indefinitely when he ſhould conclude of baptiſm, uſing in the Major and Minor the term [the covenant belongs] but not explaining what covenant, to whom or how it belongs, uſing children for infants, ſo that there is nothing but equivocation in his Speeches.

And for his propoſitions in the ſenſe they are commonly taken, neither Major nor Minor is true, nor is the Major proved though he ſay it is clear. For though he that hath right to a temporal inheritance hath right likewiſe to the ſeals and deeds that do convey that inheritance to him, yet in Law it is not neceſſary that there be a ſealing to each inheritour by himſelf. A man may have a deed ſealed for him to another as a Feoffee in truſt, as is uſual in the Caſe of young Orphans, to one man is conveyed the eſtate of many. So that beſides the frivolouſneſs of this conceit to make the term [ſeal of the Covenant] of the Eſſence of baptiſm, though it be but a metaphor not found in Scripture, and thence, and the uſe in civil Negotiations, to make a rule for the ſervice of God, yet were this kind of proof allowed, the Major is not true, that to whomſoever the covenant it ſelf belongs to them alſo belongs the ſeal of the Covenant, meaning it in their own perſons. For a Feoffee in truſt may have the Eſtates of many conveyed to him, and ſo the parent by this reaſon may be baptized for the child. And for the other reaſon it is alſo inſufficient, Abrahams poſterity being in covenant receive the ſign of Circumciſion the ſeal of the Covenant, for the ſeal of the Covenant is as large as the Covenant it ſelf. But neither is it true that the Seal of the Covenant in Abrahams poſterity was as large as the Covenant it ſelf, the women being in Covenant and yet not to be ſealed in their own perſons: nor if it were true doth it prove the Propoſition. For if it were ſo by vertue of a particular command, then it follows not that if it were ſo then it muſt be ſo now without the like command. Nor is the Minor proved from Gen. 17.7,10,11. Acts 2. 38,39. For in the one is affirmed only that God will be a God to Abraham and his ſeed, which is not all one with every believer and his ſeed; in the other, whatever the promiſe be and howſoever Peter meant it was to them and their children, yet it is not ſaid to you believers, and to your children as the children of believers, for then he had ſpoken falſe they being not then believers, and therefore it proves not that the covenant belongs to Believers and their children. This is enough to ſhew the vanity of Mr. Halls diſputing. For the reſt of his Book, he being a gatherer out of others, as he ſaith, and in moſt things he ſhould argue, referring us as an Index to their writings, I think it beſt to rid my hands of him, and to deal with his Authors he points to.

There were ſent to me by ſome friends theſe two following Arguments in manuſcript, as judged by ſome unanſwerable.

The firſt thus. What privilege the proſelyted Gentiles had who joined themſelves to Abrahams Family in reference to their infant ſeed in the Ordinance of Circumciſion, the like privilege the Chriſtian Gentiles in the New Teſtament have in reference to their infant-ſeed in the Ordinance of baptiſm. But the Proſelyted Gentiles had this privilege, that when they were circumciſed their children were circumciſed in their infancy. Ergo the Chriſtian Gentiles have the ſame privilege that their children ſhould be baptized in their infancy.

To which I anſwer, letting paſs the exception to the quaternity of terms, and conceiving [what privilege] is put for [whatsoever privilege universally] without which the argument would be all of particulars, and so the Syllogism naught; I deny the Major, and my reason is, because were it a privilege or not, what was done in the use of circumcision by vertue of an expreis command, is not to be done in the use of baptism, without the like command. If it were, the Apostles did ill in not baptizing a whole Nation old and young together, and we do ill in keeping away the young ones of believers baptized from the Lords supper, when being circumcised they were not debarred from the Passover. The other argument is in these words.

To whom the outward visible covenant of God manifestly belongs, to them in the daies of the Gospel, the initiating ordinance, viz. baptism belongs: But unto the infant-seed of believers the external visible Covenant of God doth manifestly belong. Ergo to the infant-seed of believers in the daies of the Gospel the initiating Ordinance, viz. baptism belongs.

To which I answer, what outward visible covenant he means, except baptism, I know not. If he speak as Mr. M. speaks, and some others, I have shewed in my Apology sect. 10. that by it is meant the outward administration of the Covenant, which is no other now but baptism. Now if this be the meaning of the Author, the Major contains a trifling tautology, in effect this, They that are to be baptized, are to be baptized, and the Minor and Conclusion being all one, the Minor is to be denied, and the argument hissed out of Schools as a ridiculous foppery.

SECT. XV.

The dispute of Mr. John Geree about the extent of the Gospel covenant to prove thence infant-baptism, is examined, and it is shewed, that interest in the Covenant did not intitle to circumcision, nor is it proved it doth now to Baptism.

But Mr. John Geree Vindic. Pædobap. p. 6. would seem to dispute more accurately and after a syllogism which doth but repeat the conclusion in a new phrase, he disputes thus.

To whom the Gospel covenant is extended in the Churches of Christians to them the Sacrament of initiation appointed for that administration of the Covenant doth belong. To children of believing Christians, the Gospel covenant is extended in the Christian Churches, Ergo, to them the Sacrament of initiation doth belong.

To which I answer, Mr. Geree in this syllogism hath altered the term in his prosyllogism, it was in that [the sacrament of initiation instituted for Christian Churches] here it is [the Sacrament of initiation appointed for that administration of the Covenant] and wherein he supposeth; 1. The sacrament appointed for that administration of the Covenant. 2. The Sacrament of initiation appointed for the administration of the Covenant all one with the Sacrament of initiation instituted for the Christian Churches, and from thence would derive a rule for baptism. But that being a phrase not used in

Scripture,

Scripture, nor perhaps deducible from it, and at beſt ambiguous, it ſerves for no proof, and therefore ſerves only to miſlead thoſe underſtandings which are apt to be caught with ſuch chaff.

That the phraſe is not uſed in Scripture, will not I ſuppoſe be denied, no where is baptiſm called either a Sacrament or a Sacrament of initiation, or ſaid to be appointed for that adminiſtration of the Covenant, nor is it deducible from thence. For there is no place that I find, that makes this the proper and immediate uſe of baptiſm to be the adminiſtration of the Covenant, ſo that whereby either the making of the Covenant, or the conferring or aſſuring to the baptized the benefits of the covenant ſhould be the next end of it ſelf intended therein. The immediate and proper uſe of it is to be a ſign that the perſon baptized repents of his ſins, and renounceth ſpecially his Gentile defilements, communion with Satan, and engageth himſelf to be Chriſts diſciple; Yet I deny not but that by conſequent in the manner of doing it by dipping or plunging under water, it minds us of Chriſts death, burial and riſing again, and teſtifyeth our ſalvation by him, and ſo in a remote manner aſſures to us the benefits of the Covenant of grace. But in this manner it is the adminiſtration of election as well as the Covenant, and is an adminiſtration of the Covenant only to elect perſons, and true believers, for it aſſures ſalvation onely to them, not to all that are baptized, and therefore in this reſpect none but they can have title to it. So that if from hence, that baptiſm is the adminiſtration of the Covenant, a title be derived for infants to be baptized, it can intitle none but thoſe to whom it adminiſters the Covenant, which are only the elect or true believers. But the ambiguity of the expreſſion is much more fallacious. For 1. when it is ſaid, it is appointed for the adminiſtration of the Covenant, the expreſſions ſometimes are, as if it were the adminiſtration it ſelf, calling it the new adminiſtration, as I ſhew in my Apology, ſect. 10. Mr. Gerce here p. 10. baptiſm is a ſeal of a new adminiſtration, and then it is all one as to ſay the adminiſtration of the Covenant is appointed for the adminiſtration of the Covenant, which is either non-ſenſe, or at leaſt inepely ſpoken. 2. When they ſay [it is the adminiſtration of the Covenant] do they mean the outward or inward Covenant? The latter I preſume they will not ſay, for then baptiſm ſhould be an adminiſtration of the things promiſed therein, regeneration, remiſſion of ſins, and if ſo, then it adminiſters them in a natural way, and ſo it ſhould in manner of a natural agent regenerate, &c. which is to confer grace ex opere operato, or in a moral way; but baptiſm can adminiſter regeneration, remiſſion of ſins, &c. no other moral way but by aſſuring, or perſwading, or the like, what ever way it be conceived it adminiſters not the covenant to an infant in infancy, nor to any but the elect: now if it do not adminiſter the covenant to any but ſuch, then it is not baptiſm but to ſuch, if baptiſm be in its nature the adminiſtration of the Covenant of Grace. If they mean baptiſm is the adminiſtration of the outward covenant, I am yet to learn what the outward covenant is, except they mean the outward adminiſtration, which is no other then baptiſm, as I ſhew Apology ſ. 10. and what is this then but to ſay, that baptiſm is the adminiſtration, or appointed for the adminiſtration of baptiſm?

3. When they ſay, it is the adminiſtration of the Covenant, do they mean the Covenant or promiſe of the baptized to God, or Gods promiſe to the baptized? If the former, then it is no more but this, that baptism is the administration, that is the signification of the baptized his engagement to be Christs disciple, which is indeed the best sense of it, but then it will not fit them, for so it is not in infants, for they signifie no profession or engagement of theirs by it. If the later, then by baptism God doth promise mans but thats not true, his promise is in the Word before baptism, or he signifies his promise formerly made, & this can derive no title to the persons to whom the promise is made, for the signifying that promise as past is as useful for others, either baptized or unbaptized, as the then baptized, and not at all of use or avail to infants, who cannot apprehend the signification; or he assures the benefits of the Covenant, and that can be only to elect or true believers; or that he contains them by it, and so it gives grace, ex opere operato.

4. The Covenant of grace is, I take it the Covenant of saving grace, opposite to the Covenant of works, the promise of justification by faith in contradistinction to the Law, Gal 3. 18. This covenant was made mixtly, Gen. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. purely *Heb.*8.10,11,12. They should tell us whether they mean the one, or the other, or both. The former they seem to mean when they make baptism to succeed Circumcision, and to seal the same Covenant that it did. But then baptism should not be the new administration but belong to the old. And if it seal that Covenant then it assures the Land of Canaan, and greatness in it. But it seems they mean that it seals only the promise, I will be thy God and the God of thy seed, so Mr. Geree here, we find in the administration of the Gospel covenant to Abraham and his seed.

But if so, 1. Then it seals only a part of the Covenant that circumcision did, and so succeeds not in it's use, nor is there a reason given, but their own conceit, why it should seal one part, and not another.

2. If it seal or administer the Gospel-covenant, then it administers not this promise [that God will be a God to a believer, and his natural seed as such] For that is neither Gospel nor at all to be found, *Gen.*17.7.

3. In that promise was foretold Christ to come of Abraham, and this was Gospel *Gal.*3.16. But this is not administred by baptism, which signifies Christ already come.

4. In the spiritual sense it was made to Abrahams seed by faith, Gal. 3. 29. *Rom.*4.11,12. But they are only the elect; *Rom.*9.7,8. and then it is an administration of that Gospel covenant onely to elect persons, and true Believers.

5. There's ambiguity also in the term [the Gospel covenant is extended] The Gospel covenant is, The just shall live by faith, that God will be a God to Abrahams seed by faith. But Mr. Geree imagines a Gospel covenant, which is but a fiction, that God hath promised to be a God to the natural posterity of every believing Gentile.

6. For the extent of it how it is extended is ambiguous. For he cannot say it is extended in respect of the Gospel promise of righteousness and life to all the children of believers, it was not extended Ishmael to and Esau. Therefore he acknowledgeth it to be extended in the reality of it onely to the Elect, onely it is to be charitably presumed that they are elect, and therefore they are to be taken for persons in covenant till they discover the contrary. But he shews no rule of Scripture for such a Construction of the promise: sure such a construction ction was unknown to Paul, *Rom.*9.6,7,8. when he expounded that very promise, *Gen.*17.7. nor doth such a construction agree with the words, sith when God saith, I will be a God to thee and thy seed, the meaning according to Mr. Geree should then be [I will be a God to thee, that is, every believer, and to thy seed, that is every believers natural seed which are elect in reality, and to those that are not elect in charitable presumption of the Minister of baptism, till comming to years they discover the contrary] now what a non-sence exposition is this, to expound [thee] meant of Abraham by [every believing Gentile] and by [thy seed] which is meant of Abrahams seed onely either natural or spiritual by faith to understand [every believers natural seed] and when it is said, God will be a God to them, that he will be a God only to some in reality, which is to make God to promise what he doth not perform, and to others, that men shall think he will be a God to them, which would be too poor a matter to be meant in that expression, and therein God should not promise what he will be or do, but what men shall think, which would be false, for it is not made good, or that they may charitably so presume of them, but in this sense it is not a promise at all, but a meer permission to men to think charitably of them, which I suppose they are as well bound to do of unbelievers children till they discover the contrary, and so no privilege to the believers children. And yet this too must be limitted to a certain time till they come to years and discover the contrary, and therefore by seed must be understood onely the infant-seed, when they came to years, there's neither promise nor permission for men to think so charitably of them. And yet herein there is nothing but abuse of terms. For charitable presumption must have some ground, which is to be from some thing we perceive done to judge well of what we see not according to the rule 1 *Cor.*13.7. Charity believeth all things, but in infants acts there's nothing that may be such a ground, but to the contrary they opposing their baptism by their crying, &c. If it be said, the promise is a ground, I answer, Mr. Geree confesseth the promise is not in reality but to the elect, nor to the elect till they believe, and therefore there is no ground from the promise till it be known the persons be elect or believers. But it will be said, we know nothing to the contrary. To which I reply, nor do we know any thing to the contrary, but that unbelieving Jews children are elect, and in the Covenant, and yet its not charitably presumed of them, so as to count them in the Covenant, and to judge them admissible to baptism. I think sith we perceive nothing of believers infants acts that may distinguish them from unbelievers, that we should rather suspend our thoughts of Gods election and covenant to them till they shew of what spirit they are, which is meet for an administrator of baptism, who as a wise Steward should give to every one his portion in due season, Luke 12.42. rather then have such a fond imagination of what God hath concealed.

And if it be true which Mr. Geree saith in his Vindic. Vindic. p. 42. That many of the Assembly intended the words in the Directory for baptism [The promise is made to believers and their seed] in Master Gerees sense, they have reason to be ashamed that they have so much abused the World with such a toy.

Yea but have they not a promise on which to ground this charitable presumption? I answer, surely the Jews have a more expres promise, *Rom.*11.26,27. for their po-posterity then any believer now living hath for his children, and therefore if that be all the ground of baptizing believers infants, there's a like ground for baptizing Jews infants though parents be unbelieving, and they have wrong that it is not done, where it may.

But shall we make no difference between the children of believers and unbelievers? I answer, we are to conceive with a judgement of probability for the present that they are elect, and with a quieting hope for the future that they will be believers.

1. Because of Gods general indefinite promises.

2. Because by reason of the means of the knowledge of the Gospel which they have in their education, and living where the Gospel is taught, they are in a nearer possibility then others to be believers.

3. Because experience shews that God often doth continue godliness in religious families, though it often fall out otherwise. But that such an extension of the Gospel-covenant as Mr. Geree makes to the children of believing Christians, should entitle to baptism, is without all rule. And to his Syllogism, though it might be denied in respect of the form, by reason of the ambiguity of terms; yet I answer, by denying the Major in his sense, which I conceive is this, They to whom the Gospel Covenant is extended according to the charitable presumption of the Minister without the persons shewing by any act that he is in Covenant, to them the Sacrament of initiation to wit baptism doth belong, and shall examine his proof both of Major and Minor.

The Major, saith he, I prove by that of Peter Acts 10.47. when they had received the Holy Ghost, which was but an evidence of Gods receiving them into the Gospel covenant, Peter saith, can any forbid water that these should not be baptized, who are in covenant with God as well as we? They have the word or promise, which is the greater; who can inhibite the sign which is the less?

To this I answer, the proof rests on this, That the allegation of Peter that they had received the Holy Ghost, was brought for an evidence that God had received them into the Gospel Covenant, and so it may be said to the same purpose, who can forbid water that these should not be baptized who are in covenant with God as well as we?

But this is false. For their receiving the Holy Ghost is brought not to prove only that God had made his covenant of grace to them, but to prove that they were actual believers, as their works did shew upon hearing the word of faith, for saith he v.46. they heard them speak with tongues and magnify God, & ch. 11.17. if God hath given them the like gift as unto us that believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I that I could forbid God? And v.18. it is said, when they heard these things they held their peace and glorifyed God, saying, then hath God also granted to the Gentiles repentance unto life.

Whence it appears that they were penitent believers, and this is proved by their acts; and therefore to be admitted to baptism, and not barely because the Gospel covenant was extended to them, much less because the Gospel covenant was extended to some of that sort, and to those particular persons onely upon a charitable presumption, that Gods promise did belong to them for the future without any shew of repentance or faith at the present. It is false that we may say, that when by any other principle in Scripture any are demonstrated to be in the Gospel covenant, who can forbid water that these should not be baptized, who are in covenant with God as well as we? For though God should reveal that this or that person were elect, and that his Covenant did belong to him for the future, yet he were not to be baptized, till God revealed that he were a believer or disciple. For if so, than if God did reveal concerning any, as he did of Isaac and Jacob, that he were a child of the promise, though yet unborn in the Mothers womb, he were to be baptized, which is absurd. None are to be baptized afore born, therefore any principle whatsoever in Scripture demonstrating a person to be in the Gospel covenant is not sufficient to intitle to baptism, much less such an uncertain doubtful guess, called charitable presumption, that he is in the Covenant, as is without any particular declaration of Scripture, or other revelation from God concerning the person, or any shew of his that he is Gods child, which yet Mr Geree makes a sufficient warrant to baptize, nor is his reason of any force, for we might in like manner say, They have the election of God, which is the greater, who can inhibit the sign which is the less? It is not whether that which they have is greater, much less that which is conjectured, or hoped they have, which is the rule to baptize, but the manifest having of that qualification of faith or discipleship, which is prerequired to baptism according to the institution and primitive practice of it. But Mr. Geree hath more to prove his Major.

Besides, saith he, we find in the administration of the Gospel covenant to Abraham and his seed, whom God had thereby separated then to be his church, and evidenced it by an outward seal: there was so near a relation between the Covenant and Circumcision the Sacrament of initiation, whereby men were externally separated from the world, that circumcision was called the covenant, and the token of the Covenant, *Gen.*17. 10,11. to shew us how the seal did follow the Covenant; and therefore when any were aggregated into the Jewish Church and taken into the Communion of the Covenant made with Abraham, they were initiated into that administration of the Covenant by the Sacrament of Circumcision.

To which I answer, letting pass his Phraseology, this reason goes upon these suppositions.

1. That by Circumcision God had administred his Covenant to Abraham and his seed, and separated them to be his Church, and evidenced it by Circumcision, and that the seal did follow the Covenant, when any were taken into Covenant they were circumcised, and therefore it must be so in baptism. But if he mean that to as many as God appointed to be circumcised he administred the covenant of grace (which sense alone serves his turn) it is not true. Ishmael was circumcised, yet the Covenant not administred to him, nor he separated to be of his Church, nor this evidenced by an outward seal, but the contrary declared concerning him afore his Circumcision, *Gen.*17. 18, 19, 20, 21. and he in the event cast out, and so the seal did not follow to the Covenant, but that it was imparted to them to whom the Covenant was not made, and not imparted to them to whom it did belong, as e.g. to the females, nor were the Proselytes all taken into Communion of the Covenant made with Abraham, though they were taken into the Communion of the policy of Israel: nor do the calling circumcision the covenant or a token of the Covenant (which are all one) *Gen.*17.10,11. prove that all that were circumcised had the Covenant made to them: but this that Circumcision was a memorial that such a covenant was made with Abraham, and God would perform it. 2. That it must be in baptism as it was in circumcision. But for proof of that there's not a word brought by Mr. G. and what others bring is examined in its place. M. G. goes on thus.

Now for your exceptions against the connexion which we put between the Gospel-covenant, and the Sacrament of initiation annext to it, in any administration they will clearly be wiped away; for what though (as you say) the Covenant made with Abraham were not a pure Gospel covenant, but had some external additaments? yet a Gospel covenant it was, and for substance the same with ours Gal. 3. 8. The Gospel was preached before to Abraham; and as circumcision was the seal of initiation under that administration; so is baptism under the Christian administration; neither is the Gospel covenant now so pure as to exclude all temporal promises. For godliness even under the Gospel, hath the promises of this life, and that which is to come, 1 Tim. 4. 8.

Answ. The distinction of a pure and a mixt covenant was brought in by me to shew that Pædobaptists do but mislead people when in their writings and sermons they express themselves as if they would have men conceive that the Covenant with Abraham, Gen. 17. is all one with the Covenant of grace, and so that there is the same reason of baptizing infants because of the Gospel covenant, as there was of circumcising infants, because of the Covenant made with Abraham, Gen. 17. Now how doth Mr. Geree wipe this away? He tells his Reader, That I say, the covenant made with Abraham was not a pure Gospel Covenant, but had some external additaments. But neither do I so speak in my Exercit. pag. 2. nor Exam. part. 3. s. 2. nor any where else I know. I say the promises were mixt Exercit. pag. 2. Exam. part. 3. s. 2. now promises are not external additaments to the covenant, but integral parts, the covenant being nothing but a promise, or an aggregate of promises: yea I prove that the peculiar promise to Abrahams natural posterity inheriting of the Land of Canaan, &c. is frequently called by the name of the Covenant, Psal. 105. 8, 9, 10, 11. Nehem. 9. 8, &c. And for what he saith, That the covenant made with Abraham was a Gospel covenant; this is true according to the more infolded and hidden sense of the spirit, but not according to the outward face and obvious construction of the words, which in the first meaning spake of things proper to Abrahams natural posterity, though the Holy Ghost had a further aim in those expressions.

And whereas, he saith, The covenant made with Abraham was for substance the same with ours, Gal. 3. 8. Though that promise mentioned Gal. 3. 8. be no in the Covenant Gen. 17. to which Circumcision was annexed, but that Gen. 12. 3. and the term [substance] be ambiguous, yet I grant the Covenant made with Abraham according to those Gospel promises, which in the hidden meaning declared justification by faith, as the new covenant sealed with Christs blood doth, is the same in substance, meaning by it, the intent, purport and meaning of the Holy Ghost, though not in words or expressions; yet I deny that it was every way or in every respect in substance the same. For the promise, according to that sense in which they contain domestique or civil promises proper to Abrahams natural posterity were of the substance of the covenant, and for the confirming of them, circumcision was instituted of God, as well as for them in priority of order before the assuring of those Evangelical benefits. And for what Mr. Geree saith, That the Gospel is not so pure now as to exclude all temporal promises, it is true; yet the Gospel doth not promise as the Covenant *Gen.*17. the inheritance of the land of Canaan with rest, plenty, prosperity and greatness therein, but on the contrary such temporal blessings as are with persecution Mark 10.30. and do rather consist in inward comfort and content than in outward enjoyment of any earthly commodity: which proves that the Gospel promise for temporal things is clean different from that made to Abraham Gen. 17. concerning temporal benefits to his posterity.

Mr. Geree addes. Neither are the differences mentioned by you (page 4. of your Exercit. or elsewhere) to be between Circumcision and baptism any whit material to put a difference between the parties to be sealed by them in reference to our present controversy; sith notwithstanding these differences they agree in this main general; That the one was the Sacrament of initiation to all that were to be sealed under one administration of the covenant, the other in the other, which is enough to my purpose.

To which I say, the disparities between circumcision and baptism, are brought by me to invalidate the argument made by Pædobaptists to prove the succession of the one, into the place, room and use of the other, from the parities between them, which allegation to that end is made good before against Mr. Church, sect. 11. Those differences which I allege Exercit. p.4. tend to demonstrate that there is not the same reason of circumcision and baptism in signing the Evangelical covenant, nor may there be an argument drawn from the administration of the one to the like administring of the other: which differences are very material, to that end the different end and use of a thing, being the most apt reason for altering the application of it, As Mr. Rutherford, Divine right of Church Government, ch 6.q.2. page 276, 277, 278. answering Erastus, saith of the Sea, Cloud, Mannah, Water, because they had a mixt use, they were appointed to all, yet it follows not now the Sacrament of the Lords Supper must be given to wicked men. So by the very same reason, sith circumcision had a mixt use to signify political as well as Evangelical promises, to confirm the promise of Christ to come, and did belong to the Church, not œcumenical, but œconomical or national, which baptism did not, therefore circumcision might belong to infants, and yet not baptism. And letting pass his phrase of administration of the Covenant, of which is enough said before, though the agreement, which he calls, The main general, be yielded him; that they are both sacraments of initiation, yet unless the same special rule of command, or example primitive be brought for the one as the other, infant-baptism cannot be proved from infant-circumcision.

Mr. Geree further tells me. But you add further p.4. of your Exercit. that some were circumcised to whom no promise in the Covenant made with Abraham did belong; as Ishmael, of whom God had said his Covenant was not to be established with him. I answer, it is said indeed *Gen.*17. 21. my Covenant will I establish with Isaac. But by covenant there is not meant that covenant, which we stand in to God, in regard of our persons, for our own personal benefit: but the covenant of special prerogative, that Christ should come of, and the Church should remain in his posterity. Therefore notwithstanding ſtanding that exception, Iſhmael when circumciſed, might be, and was a member of the viſible Church in Abrahams family, and in regard of his perſon within the external adminiſtration of the Covenant with Abraham, and ſo in the judgement of charity no alien from the covenant of grace, but under it. This I might confirm by the opinion of ſome Hebrew Doctors, wherein they are followed by many, that the petition of Abraham for *Iſhmael Gen.*17.18. was not onely for natural, but for ſpititual bleſſings, and what he begged God granted, v.20. But I clear it thus; God eſtabliſht his Covenant with Abraham and Iſaac, not with Melchiſedeck nor Lot; ſhall we therefore expunge them out of the Covenant of grace? how abſurd were that? we only ſee their poſterity enjoied not that privilege which God vouchſafed Abraham in Iſaac and his ſeed. And therefore no more can be truly or rationally gathered from that place of Geneſi touching Iſhmael.

Anſw. That which in my *Exercit.*page 4. I gathered from the inſtances of Iſhmael, Eſau, the ſtrangers and others of Abrahams houſe their circumciſion, and the non-circumciſion of females, males under eight daies old, Melchiſedeck, Lot, Job, the non-admiſſion to baptiſm of circumciſed Jews in covenant till they profeſſed repentance and faith in Chriſt were.

That the right to Evangelical promiſes, was not the adequate reaſon of circumciſing theſe or thoſe, but Gods precept, as is expreſt Gen. 17.23. Gen. 21.4.

2. That thoſe terms are not convertible [federate and to be ſigned] which overthrows the chief Hypotheſes, upon which the Pædobaptiſts argument from infant-circumciſion for infant-baptiſm reſts. For they all conclude thus, The reaſon why infants were circumciſed, was that they were in covenant, therefore by like reaſon infants being in covenant ſhould be baptized. Now if the reaſon of infants being circumciſed, were not their being in covenant, but only the command, then there is not a like reaſon for infant-baptiſm, though they were in the Covenant, unleſs there were the like command. Now let us ſee what Mr. Geree ſaith to my firſt inſtance of Iſhmael. I alleged that Iſhmael was circumciſed, though no promiſe in the Covenant made with Abraham, did belong to him, and that Abraham knew, therefore the reaſon of his circumciſion (and the ſame is the reaſon of others) was not his being in covenant, but only Gods command to Abraham.

The antecedent is proved from the words Gen. 17.21. which are excluſive. And beſides I alleged *Rom.*9. 6, 7, 8, 9. *Gal.*4.29,30. where expreſly Iſhmael is denied to be a child of the promiſe, or to be born after the promiſe. And I might have added *Heb.*11.9. where Iſaac and Jacob are diſtinguiſhingly reckoned as heirs of the ſame promiſe with Abraham, not Iſhmael and Eſau. Now what ſaith Mr. Geree to this? He ſaith, The Covenant there is not meant that Covenant which we ſtand in to God in regard of our perſons for our own perſonal benefit: but the Covenant of ſpecial prerogative to Iſaac, that Chriſt ſhould come of, and the Church ſhould remain in his poſterity.

But this is falſe, 1. For it was that covenant that made Iſaac heir of the promiſe, which the Apoſtle *Rom.*9. 7, 8, 9. reckons as much as to be an elect perſon, it was the ſame covenant which was mentioned v. 2,4,5,6,7,8. which Mr. Geree, and other Pædobaptiſts call the covenant of grace, and uſually make the intereſt in it the reaſon of circumciſion, and was ſealed by it, and

That it was the same Covenant is apparent from v.19. now then it was a covenant of personal benefit, if it derive grace to the person, or any other personal benefit. If it were only the Covenant containing the special prerogative mentioned, then it was not the covenant sealed to any but Isaac, not to any of the rest of Abrahams house that were circumcised.

2. It is insufficient. For it shews not that to Ishmael any promise, either Evangelical or Political in the Covenant made with Abraham, did belong, though he were circumcised, which he should have done, if he would have answered to the objection, and have vindicated his argument from it: As for his inference, Therefore notwithstanding that exception, Ishmael when circumcised might be, and was a member of the visible Church in Abrahams family and in regard of his person, within the external administration of the Covenant with Abraham, and so in the judgement of charity no alien from the covenant of grace, but under it.

I answer. I know not what it is to be under the external administration of the Covenant with Abraham, except it be to be circumcised; and therefore I count this speech, that Ishmael when circumcised might be within the external administration of the Covenant with Abraham, to be an inept tautology, as if he had said, Ishmael when circumcised might be circumcised. But were his speaking right, yet it is impertinent. For the thing he should have shewed was not, that Ishmael notwithstanding that exception was a visible Church-member, within the external administration of the Covenant with Abraham, or in the judgemeut of charity no alien from the covenant of grace, but that any of the promises in the Covenant made with Abraham Gen. 17. did belong to him, and so that he was circumcised because of his interest in the covenant. Yet how Abraham could in judgement of charity judge him no alien from the Covenant of grace, but under it, whom God so plainly excepted out of that Covenant, which Pædobaptists themselves take to be the Covenant of grace, I see not. It is true that God heard the petition of Abraham for Ishmael Gen. 17.18. but that God granted him spiritual blessings doth not appear, but the contrary v.20. where the blessings granted upon Abrahams Petition for him are recited. However it is clear that he did exempt him from the covenant v. 21. and therefore he was not circumcised by vertue of his interest in the Covenant, nor did his circumcision seal that interest. As for what Mr. Geree saith, no more can be truly gathered from thence then what may be said of Melchisedec, or Let, it is not true. For though its not said expressly that God established his covenant with them, yet they are reckoned among the righteous; and so in the Covenant of grace. But for Ishmael when Abraham begged for him, God answers how far he would grant for him, and then addes adversatively. But my covenant will I establish with Isaac, that is not with Ishmael, which can be no other then the covenant before mentioned, v.2,4,5,6,7,8. which thing was further manifested by Gods ratifying Sarahs desire of Ishmaels election Gen. 21. 10,12. where he is excluded from Abrahams seed, from which the Apostle argueth Ishmael not to have been a child of the promise, nor elect, nor born after the Spirit; but reprobate, a persecutor, born after the flesh. And therefore in my Exercit. I cited those texts, which Mr. Geree did ill to omit, sith they served for my purpose to prove that

See Ainsworth Annotations on Gen. 21. 12.

Ishmael

Ishmael had no part in the Covenant made with Abraham.

To the instance of Esau, Mr. Geree tels me, The case of Esau was but as that of Ishmael, and others that were of Israel, but were not Israel: they were under the external administration of the Covenant, though not really within the covenant of grace. This distinction you your self acknowledge in the fourscore and sixteenth page of your answer, when you say, it is one thing to be under the outward administration, another thing to be under the covenant of grace. Its true these are distinct, but those that are under the outward administration are to be reputed under the covenant of Grace, and thence were to be sealed; thus was it with Esau; for that sentence, the elder shall serve the younger, *Gen.*25.23. could sound no higher in Isaac's apprehension then that difference which was put between Ishmael and Isaac.

To which I reply, If Ishmael were not really within the covenant of grace then Mr. Geree yields what I proved before, that the promise of the Covenant of grace did not belong to him; and if it were so, then Ishmael and Esau were circumcised, though no promise in the covenant *Gen.*17. 2,4, 5, 6, 7,8. did belong to them, and because this was revealed to Abraham and Isaac they were not reputed under the covenant of grace and thence to be sealed as Mr. Geree saith. Nor is it likely but Isaac did apprehend concerning Esau by the Oracle *Gen.*25.23. that none of the promises in the covenant made with Abraham, *Gen.*17.2,4,5,6,7,8. did belong to him. However God appointing circumcision to these to whom he intended no interest in the covenant it follows, he made not interest in the covenant the adequate reason of each persons circumcision, but his own institution.

To the instance of strangers in Abrahams family, he answers; By Gods own testimony Abraham would keep none in his family, but such as were outwardly conformable to the waies of God, *Gen.*18.19. and so were in the state of Proselytes and interessed in the Gospel covenant.

Answ. Whether Abraham did or might keep any infidel in his family was considered by me in the first part of this Review, f. 37. But for the text, Gen. 18.19. it doth not testify, that Abraham would keep none in his family, but such as were outwardly conformable to Gods waies, but that he would command them to keep Gods waies, and shall keep the way of Jehovah; but this being spoken indefinitely is equipollent onely to a particular, as appears in Ishmael and Esau and others. But were this granted they were so conformable and were so proselytes and were in some sort interessed in the benefit of the Gospel covenant, yet it follows not that anypromise in that covenant did belong to them, much less that such interest was the reason of their being circumcised. As for Mr. Gs. useful observation, that circumcision was not annext to the Covenant only because it was a mixt covenant, sith it was appliable to the Proselyte Gentiles, and their seed, that were not onely without, but uncapable of interest in the land of Canaan; I know not what use there is of it for his purpose; it goes upon a mistake that circumcision was to be to none, but who had interest in the covenant Gen.17. which I have refuted. The Gentile proselytes were to be circumcised because of the command, though it were not known that each, or any proselyte, or his seed, had interest in the Covenant. As for Mr. Gs. reason of his obsevation, it should seem by it he meant otherwise than he expressed, to wit, Circumcision was not annext to the Covenant

only becauſe of the tempotal promiſes, which I grant, and yet hold the Covenant, Gen. 17. 4,5,6,7,8. a mixt Covenant, and that perſons were to be circumciſed to whom no promiſe in the covenant made with Abraham did belong.

Mr. G. goes on. To the other part of my exception againſt the connexion between the ſeal and covenant, as they ſpeak, that many were not to be circumciſed, to whom all or moſt of the promiſes of the Covenant did belong, as the females comming from Abraham, he ſaith.

For females we anſwer, That God under that adminiſtration was pleaſed (in reference to ſome things pointed at by the ſeal) to appoint a ſign of which women were not capable; ſo were they particulatly excluded from being ſealed with the Sacrament of initiation under that adminiſtration.

To which I reply, 1. That women are not capable of circumciſion is contradicted by thoſe that ſay, that at this day in ſome parts of the world women are circumciſed. Æthiopes Chriſtiani mares octavo ab ortu die circumcidunt, & feminis etiam aliquid amputatur, ut Abrahami et aliorum ſanctorum patrum exemplo ardentius in ſimilis ſanctitatis ſtudium incitentur. Quarto deinde a circumciſione die mares, octavo autem fœminæ ſalutaribus aquis expiantur, & Euchariſtiam eo die infantes initiati in mica panis aſſumunt. Oſorius lib. 9. rerum ab Emmanuele geſt. Zuinger. theat. vit. Hum. vol. 27. l 3. tit. bapt. pag. 4172. Oſiander Epit. Hiſt. Eccl. Cent. 12. l. 4. c. 4. Anno Chriſti 1187. Jacobitæ baptiſmo & circumciſione utuntur circumcidentes maſculos & femellas. Hornbeck. Append. ad diſp. de bap. ve. theſ. 8. Solebant Æthiopes cum baptiſmo etiam circumcidere baptizatum, mas an femina eſſet circumcidebatur. Doctor Field of the Church 3. book chap. 1. Speaking of the Jacobites in Syria, Sixtly, they uſe circumciſion even of both Sexes, and of the Habaſſines, They are alſo circumciſed both male and female.

The ſame hath Heylin in his Geography, deſcribing Syria and Ethiopia, and before him (if my memory deceive me not) Brerewood in his Enquiry of Religions.

So that it is but a jeſt of Mr. Blake, that women could no more be circumciſed than barb'd, if theſe authors be of any credit. But were it true that women were not circumciſed becauſe uncapable, yet would God doubtleſs have appointed ſuch a ſign as they were capable of, if it were true that all that were in covenant muſt be ſigned. But if it be true which Mr. G. confeſſeth, That the females, though in covenant were particularly excluded from being ſealed with the ſacrament of initiation under that adminiſtration, then the connexion between the ſeal initial and the covenant, is not proved from circumciſion. And as for that he ſaies, That in reference to ſome things pointed at by the ſeal, God under that adminiſtration was pleaſed to appoint a ſign of which women were not capable; it is a plain conſeſſion, that God appointed circumciſion for an end not common to believers at all times, or to ſuch as were in the covenant of grace, but proper to the poſterity of Abraham; and therefore though the covenant were granted to be the reaſon of circumciſion, yet it follows not all muſt be baptized barely from the covenant of grace, becauſe they were circumciſed by reaſon of intereſt in it, ſith this was not true, and as Mr. Geree confeſſeth, Circumciſion was appointed in reference to ſome things proper to that time.

But he hopes to salve the matter thus; So, actually they were not circumcised, yet were they reputed as circumcised, as appears both by the place alleged by Mr. M. Exod. 12. 48. and where the house of Israel is said to be circumcised, and also by that of Samsons parents, being displeased that he should take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines Judges 14.3. For unless the Israelitish women were reputedly circumcised in the males, circumcision could make no difference between wife and wife; yea our Saviour should be born of the uncircumcised.

To which I answer: To be reputed as circumcised, may be understood thus, they were mentioned as circumcised, and this sense is false; for then it should be an errour, sith they were not circumcised: nor is in the text Exod. 12. 48. any thing to that purpose; for the speech, no uncircumcised person shall eat the passeover, is to be limitted by the matter, of them that ought to be circumcised, and that Judges 14.3. of taking a wife of or from the Philistines uncircumcised, as if thereby were intimated that an Israelitess woman was reputed as circumcised, or that our Saviour should be born of the uncircumcised, if women were not reputed as uncircumcised, proves it not. For the terms [circumcised and uncircumcised] are spoken of the people, who are said to be circumcised from the chief part, not from all parts. I remember not where the whole house of Israel is said to be circumcised, but to be uncircumcised in heart, Jeremy 9.26. yet were there such a place, it must be understood of all that were to be circumcised. Or else the meaning is, they were reputed as circumcised, that is, they were admitted to the passeover if their males were circumcised, notwithstanding they were not in their proper persons circumcised, which sense is true. But then it serves not the turn to avoid the force of the instance brought to shew there is not a necessary connexion between interest in the covenant, and the persons right to the initial Seal, in his own person, which Mr G: must prove to make good his Major. For he would have infant-females actually baptized, because in covenant; and his proof is, They that were in covenant were circumcised, which must be meant of all in covenant, and of actual circumcision in their own persons, or else it can prove but a particular of some, and their virtual baptism, to wit, female infants. But Mr. G. thinks to prevent this objection.

And whereas you object, that you may as well say, that children are virtually baptized in their parents, I deny it, because you have not the like proof for the one, as we have for the other. Besides women that are said to be virtually and reputatively circumcised in the males, were not actually to be circumcised at all: they were excluded, which you do not, nor cannot say of infants; when they are grown up you confess they may and ought to be baptized.

Answ. That which I said, was only by way of inference upon Pædobaptists suppositions; if virtual circumcision were all that might be claimed by virtue of the covenant it would not help Pædobaptists who would from the covenant prove a right of actual circumcision to infants, whereas by their own confession it onely proves necessarily a virtual; and if so, how can it prove necessarily by their own principles any more than a virtual baptizing of infants? The same medium that doth not prove as necessary actual circumcision in the one, cannot prove as necessary actual baptism in the other. Now the force of this objection is not at all weakned by his reply. For my words were not concerning the fitneſs of the expreſſion, that the one was as fit as the other, but that I might grant a virtual baptiſm to infants without detriment to my cauſe, if they aſſert no more from the covenant, but a virtual circumciſion.

But had I ſaid [you may as well ſay] (which yet I find not in my writings, but, we might grant, we may ſay Examen page 37. by like, perhaps greater reaſon it may be ſaid Exercit. p. 4.) the ſpeech might have been right notwithſtanding Mr. Gerees exceptions, for there is no more proof for the uſe of this ſpeech, that females may be ſaid to be virtually circumciſed in the males, then for this, infants may be ſaid to be virtually baptized in their parents, neither being uſed in Scripture, and reaſon being as much for the one as the other. And though thoſe that were infants when grown, being believers, are to be baptized, yet infants during their infancy are by more full evidence excluded from actual baptiſm, then females were from actual circumciſion.

Mr. G. proceeds thus. For your ſecond inſtance of infants dying afore they were eight daies old; I anſwer that they were particularly tyed to that day, whether for the Theological reaſon Levit. 12. 2, 3. or for the Phyſical reaſon, that God would not ſuffer an inciſion to be made on the fleſh of a tender infant; or till the ſeventh, that is, the Critical day was over; or whether to typifie the reſurrection, we cannot determine; but till that day they were expreſly excluded; yet therefore it remains clear that all that were within that adminiſtration of the Covenant, that were not expreſly excluded, were circumciſed, which is enough for my purpoſe. And ſo unleſs you can bring a rule that no infant of Chriſtians ſhall have the Sacrament of initiation till 18 years or ſo, that inſtance of infants not being circumciſed dying before the 8. day, is too ſhort to reach up.

Anſw. It is not enough for Mr. Gs. purpoſe, which was to prove, the ſeal did follow the covenant, and when any were aggregated into the Jewiſh church and taken into the communion of the covenant made with Abraham they were initiated into that adminiſtration of the Covenant by the Sacrament of Circumciſion, unleſs he can prove that all that were in covenant, and in the Jewiſh Church were circumciſed. But his own grant, That ſome in the Covenant, and Jewiſh Church, as females and males under eight daies old, were expreſly excluded, overthrows his own poſition, and is enough for my purpoſe to prove, that all in the covenant were not circumciſed. The reaſon why males afore the eighth day were not circumciſed, whatever it were, is nothing for Mr. Gs. advantage, but againſt him, ſith it doth more fully ſhew that God would not have them circumciſed. Nor need I bring a rule that no infant of Chriſtians ſhall have the Sacrament of initiation till eighteen years, or ſo, which goes upon his miſtake, as if the inſtance I gave were as a proof of the time of baptiſm, it being brought only to ſhew a reaſon of my denial of his aſſertion, that the ſeal did follow the covenant. It is enough for me, that I prove (as I have done in the ſecond part of the Review ſ. 5. &c.) that the rule is, that perſons are not to be baptized till they be diſciples or believers, and that infants are not ſuch.

Mr. G. addes. Your third inſtances are of Adam, Abel, Noah page 36. of your anſwer, and Melchiſedec, Lot, Job, pag. 4. Exercit. I anſwer either thoſe were before the adminiſtration begun with Abraham, and ſo before the inſtitu-

tion of seals, or such of them that were with or after him, either they join not themselves to that administration, and so were not to be sealed no more then the Proselytes of the Gate, or if they did unite to the Church in Abrahams family, then it is apparent they might lay claim to circumcision, as other proselytes did. And so indeed it is averred of Iob, that he was circumcised, by the Author of the book of true circumcision, which is ascribed to Hierom, cited by Iunius in his animadversion on Bellarmine, Controv. 4. l. 3. cap. 16. Not. 13.

Answ. Master Geree doth make shew of answering my allegation, but doth indeed confirm my proof, that sith Abel, Noah, Melchisedec, Lot, and many Proselytes of the gate were in the Covenant of grace, yet had not any initial sign or seal, as M. Geree calls it, to seal the Covenant, and some sealed after an initial seal was instituted though in the Covenant of grace, therefore there is not such a connexion between the Covenant, and the initial seal, that therefore a man must have the seal initial because he is in the covenant of grace, and that it was not from interest in the Covenant of grace, that persons were circumcised, but Gods special command upon such reasons as seemed best to him, but is not a reason for us to imitate in another ordinance without the like command. If one Author conceive Iob was circumcised, many do conceive otherwise, and there are more probable reasons he was not; sith there's no mention of his circumcision, or his observing any of the rites of the Law, or of any acquaintance he had with Israel, or any thing else that might induce us to believe he had communion with the policy of Israel.

Master Geree saith further; And wheras you say, Lastly, that the Jews comprehended in covenant and circumcised could not be baptized without faith and repentance. I answer, the reason is evident; because baptism was a seal of a new administration; and therefore they must join to that administration of the covenant as well as be in covenant, before they could be baptized.

Answ. I am beholding to Mr. Geree, who as before had given the reason why Melchisedeck, Lot, Iob, were not circumcised, though in Covenant because of their not joining themselves to that administration, or their not uniting to the Church in Abraham family: so here again he doth not only grant what I allege, but gives a reason of it also, and such as quite overthrows his dispute. For if it were true that the Jews that were in covenant were not to be baptized without faith and repentance, then being in covenant is not a sufficient reason of an infants being baptized without faith and repentance, and if baptism were a seal of a new administration, then it must have a new rule, and so the old rule of circumcision is no direction to us about baptism, if Lot, the Proselytes of the gate, though in covenant, were not to be circumcised without joining to that administration, or the Church in Abrahams family, then right to circumcision was not from interest in the covenant common to all believers, but something proper to that Church-state, or administration, which is now voided: if therefore the Jews in covenant and circumcised must profess repentance and faith afore they were baptized, because they must join to the new administration of the covenant, then according to Mr. Gerees own confession, according to the new administration of the Covenant, faith and repentance are required of them that join to that administration of the Covenant. And therefore whereas Mr. Geree addes, we may therefore conclude, that those that are under the Gospel-covenant in any administration of it, have right to the seal of initiation under that administration; unless they be particularly excluded by God himself, and so the major is firmly proved; I may truly say, it is firmly proved that they that are under the Gospel-covenant in any administration of it, yet have not right to the seal of initiation under that administration, barely from the Covenant without a command, and that God himself hath excluded infants from baptism by Mr. Gerees own concession, without faith and repentance, and that in all this arguing Mr. G. hath dictated much and proved nothing. Let's see whether he speed better about proving the Minor.

SECT. XVI.

That the Gospel-Covenant is not extended to infants of believers, as such.

NOw the Minor, saith he, that children are under the Gospel-Covenant in the Christian administration of it, that we prove by the Scriptures mentioned, as first, *Gen.*17. 7. I will establish my Covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant to be a God unto thee and thy seed after thee. To comprehend the meaning of this place we are to consider. What the privilege is that is here promised: 2. what the extent of it is. First for the privilege it self, as Calvin hath well observed by vertue of this promise, the Church was settled in Abrahams family, and it was separated from the rest of the World, as light from darkness. And the people of Israel (Abrahams posterity) was the house and sheepfold of God; And other nations like wild beasts ranging about without in the wilderness of the World. And by this privilege the dignity of adoption belonged to all the Israelites in common, *Rom.*9.4. To whom pertaineth the adoption. And so, though by nature they were no better than others; yet by reason of this promise they had a birth-privilege, whereby they were separated from others, which is apparently held forth, *Gal.*2.15. We who are Jews by nature, not sinners of the Gentiles; as Mr. Blake hath truly observed; And sith you grant the Jews a birth-privilege, as p.106. and p.78. of your Answer, you needed not have quarrelled with this plain proof. But now among those that had this outward privilege of common adoption (to be reputed children when the Gentiles were reputed as Dogs, *Matth.*15.26.) there were some that were separated by the secret election of God, and really made partakers of sanctifying and saving grace, and so not only adopted outwardly, and reputatively, but also really; in comparison of whom the other Israelites are sometimes spoken of, as no sons of Abraham, *Rom.*9.6,7. Though externally they were the children of the Kingdom, and in reference to the Gentiles they are so stiled, Matthew 8. 11,12. So then the privilege is, that he would be a God to all in regard of external denomination, and external privileges of a Church, and to the elect in regard of spiritual adoption, grace and glory.

Answ. It is true, I granted page 78. of my Examen, that the Jews had a birth-privilege; yet denyed it to be from the Covenant of grace according to the substance of it, as Mr. M. speaks, but that special love God bare to Abra-

hams posterity. Nor do I deny that the people of Israel, till broken off, were in common estimation Gods children, children of the Kingdom, not Dogs, nor unclean as the Gentiles, and that these titles did belong to all by external denomination, really to the elect. Nor do I much gainsay that by vertue of the promise, I will be a God to the seed of Abraham, the Church was settled in Abrahams family, though it doth not appear to me that the Apostle did so expound this promise, but expressly contradistinguisheth the children of the promise, to the children of the flesh, *Rom.*9.8. And his doctrine there is plain, that the elect are they only to whom the promise, I will be the God of thy seed, *Gen.*17.7. was made: yea Exercit. page 2,3. I expound the promise, as in respect of some peculiar blessings, belonging to Abrahams natural seed. Nor did I quarrel with Mr. Blake for proving from *Gal.*2,15. a birth-privilege belonging to the Jews, but excepted against him for that he contended to have the seed of believing Gentile-parents under the Gospel to be under the first member of the division in the text, to wit, Jews by nature: which exception I have made good in my Postscript to my Apology S.9. which I intend to vindicate from Master Blakes Reply, Vindic. fœd. cha. 35. in that which followes. But then what doth this advantage to prove Mr. Gs. Minor. To children (meaning all or else his conclusion can be but particular) of believing Christians the Gospel-covenant is extended in the Christian Churches? Is this the Gospel-covenant to make a people only reputatively and outwardly, but not really adopted: Is this that which circumcision did seal? Is this the covenant of grace which the seal is to follow? What kind of juggling is there with these men?

They contend the Covenant *Gen.*17.7. to be the same with the Covenant of grace for substance, and that they make to consist in saving graces, the temporal benefits they refer to the administration that then was, they will not have it called a mixt covenant, and this covenant of grace they will have to be sealed by circumcision out of Rom. 4. 11. and they say this was made to believers and their seed, and thence they have salvation if they die in infancy, and without this there is no ground of hope of the salvation of any infant deceased; and they argue they are to have the seal, because they are in covenant, which if they understand not of that covenant, of which that ordinance is the seal, what colour is there to derive thence a title unto that seal on them who have interest in another covenant, which it doth not seal? Their argument is, He hath right to the Conveyance, who hath right to the Land: but these men who dare not assert that the covenant of saving grace belongs to all believers natural children, yet will have them all to have right to baptism which seals saving graces, though perhaps a very few, and those all unknown persons have right to that Covenant, onely because a promise of outward and reputative adoption, though not saving graces belongs to all. Besides what ground hath Mr.G. to call this promise the Gospel-covenant? *Rom.*1.16,17. *Gal.*3.8, 9, &c. the Gospel-covenant is, The just shall live by faith: it is that which contains promise of sanctification, remission of sins, &c. Hebrews 8 10,11, 12. & 10. 16, 17. Matthew 26.28. The everlasting covenant that hath the sure mercies of David, Isaiah 55.3 Acts 13. 34, 38, 39. Hebrews 13. 20. and of which Jesus is the Surety or Mediator, Hebrews 7.22. & 12. 24. what a mockage then is this of people to tell them the Covenant of grace is made to their children, and the Coſpel-covenant is extended to them: and that God hath promiſed to be their God, and that they are confederatewith their parents, and yet in fine all that they dare aſſert is, God hath promiſed to the ſeed of believers an external, reputative adoption, though not real: ſuch chaff they catch their auditors with. But is this promiſe that God will ſettle his Church in Abrahams family, and ſeparate them from the reſt of the World, as light from darkneſs, as Mr. G. expreſly makes it, indeed the Goſpel-Covenant? I dare freely ſay, it is Jewiſh, Anti-evangelical, directly oppoſite to the Goſpel-covenant. For the Goſpel-covenant is, That God would bleſs all Nations in Abraham through faith, Gal. 3. 8, 9. Gentiles as well as Jews, yea the Gentile-believers inſtead of the Jews broken off by unbelief. If then this be the Goſpel covenant, I will be the God of thy ſeed; that is, in Mr. Gs. ſenſe, I will ſeparate Abrahams family from the reſt of the world to be my Church, then the Church under the Goſpel covenant is not Catholick contrary to the article of the Creed, and ſo the Goſpel-covenant continues the middle wall of partition. But perhaps Maſter Geree, helps the matter in that which followeth.

For the ſecond thing, ſaith he, the extent of this privilege (though there were ſomething in it peculiar to Abraham) yet was it not limitted to him alone, but thoſe that were of Abraham inherited his promiſe to have God their God, and the God of their ſeed. As what was ſaid to Joſhua, Joſh. 1. 5 I will not leave thee nor forſake thee, was not bounded to his perſon, but applicable to all conſcientious Iſraelites; yea to all Chriſtians in Gods way and work, as the Apoſtle applieth it Heb. 13. 5. So this privilege or the Covenant to have God the God of their ſeed, is to be applyed to all Iſraelites, yea to all of any nation that have his faith and tread in his ſteps: they that do the work of Abraham may claim the promiſes of Abraham, that be ordinary and eſſential parts of the Covenant.

Anſw. Mr. G. Will have the promiſe [I will be a God to thy ſeed] to promiſe the ſettling of the Church in Abrahams family ſeparated from the reſt of the World as light from darkneſs; if this be ſo, how can it be a promiſe to another nation, that their children ſhould be adopted outwardly and reputatively? For, if by this promiſe Abrahams natural poſterity have a privilege whereby they are ſeparated from all other nations, ſurely its no better than a contradiction to ſay this promiſe is common to other nations with them. But ſaith he, The promiſe to Joſhua, Joſh. 1. 5. was not bounded to his perſon, Heb. 13. 5. which I grant; nor do I doubt, but promiſes made to Abraham, David, Joſhua, &c. do belong to all true believers, where the holy Ghoſt doth ſo expound them, and where the promiſe is of a thing which other Scriptures do clear to belong to them. But there is no ſuch thing in the promiſe of Gen. 17. 7. Maſter Geree brings nothing but his own aſſertion to prove it, nor do I know any thing brought by any elſe, but what the Author of the little book, intitled, Infants baptiſm proved lawful by Scripture, printed Anno 1644. hath,

Who thus argued, That which was promiſed to Abraham, as a believer, is promiſed to every believer.

But God promiſed to be a God to Abraham, and his ſeed as a believer: Ergo:

To which I anſwered, if [as] be taken reduplicatively ſo as that the meaning be under that formal conſideration, to him being a believer, and

to every one being a believer, as to him, I deny the Major; it was not made to him as a believer, ſimply under that conſideration, but though it were made upon his faith, as a motive of making that covenant with him, yet not under that formal conſideration ſimply as a believer, ſo as that the covenant ſhould be ſaid to be made to every believer, as to him. As in like manner, though Peter Matthew 16 18 19 had the promiſe of building the Church, and the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and of binding and looſing, conferred on him by reaſon of his confeſſion of Chriſt, verſe 16, yet every one that confeſſeth Chriſt as he did, hath not that that promiſe: If any ask how it was made to Abraham? I anſwer, ſo far as concerns the ſpiritual part, it is cleer from Romans 4 11 12 16 18, that it was made to him as Father of believers, and in that conſtruction, though it belong to Gentiles, yet it belongs onely to believing elect Gentiles, Romans 9 7 8 Galatians 3 29, or to Chriſt, whether perſonal or myſtical, verſe 16. But that it belongs not in that ſenſe, no not to all or any, either of Jews or Gentiles, who are not elect, is apparent from Romans 9 7 8, no meer formal profeſſor can lay claim to it. As for the promiſe of outward privileges, as to be of the viſible Church, to have the Ordinances of Gods worſhip, ſo the promiſe is made to Abraham as a natural Father of his inheriting poſterity by Iſaac, and to that ſeed by Iſaac which was to inherit in Abrahams family: and to that natural ſeed which God would bring out of Egypt, and ſettle in Canaan, and this was but unto the time of reformation, as it is termed, Heb. chap. 9. verſ. 10. Now that thoſe words, I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed, ſhould be expounded thus, I will be the God of every Gentile believer, either in profeſſion or reality, that his natural poſterity ſhould be Gods viſible Church, or viſible Church-members, hath not the leaſt intimation in Scripture, but much againſt it, nor can be brought by any ſhew of right conſtruction to be the meaning. For I would know under which term of theſe [thee, or thy ſeed] every ſuch natural childe, even an infant ſhauld be meant; under [thy ſeed] they muſt ſay, but the Scripture placeth believers themſelves, and thoſe only reall believers under that term, as is proved before, and other places ſpeak to like purpoſe, John 8. 39. Matth. 3.9. Luke 19.9 therefore without addition to the text, believers natural ſeed are not there placed. Nor were the promiſe true in Mr. Gerees ſenſe. For God doth not make good the promiſe in that ſenſe to every believer and his natural ſeed, many Gentile believers have had their children perſecutors, not viſible Church-members, and may have ſtill; yea in that ſenſe which Mr. Geree himſelf expounds it, it was only verified of the natural poſterity of Abraham, yet not of every particular child of his, but of the nation till Chriſts comming.

As for the dictate of Mr. G. they that do the works of Abraham, may claim the promiſes of Abraham, that be ordinary and eſſential parts of the covenant, it intimates ſome promiſes of the covenant to be eſſential, ſome not, ſome ordinary, ſome extraordinary parts of the covenant.

But theſe are new diſtinctions, with which I meet not elſewhere, nor know I how to underſtand what promiſes he makes ordinary, nor what extraordinary, what eſſential parts of the covenant, what not. That Covenant being but once made in my conceit, therefore had all the promiſes of the ſame ſort, whether ordinary or extraordinary, and a covenant being an aggregate of promiſes, con-contains the promiſes as the matter, and the making together as the form, which are the eſſential parts of the Covenant, there's no promiſe but being the matter of the covenant is an eſſential part, or rather all the promiſes together are the matter, and each promiſe is an integral part of the whole number of promiſes. And therfore his ſpeech is not eaſie to be underſtood.

I grant that they who are of the faith of Abraham, may claim the promiſe of Juſtification, and other ſaving bleſſings. But for viſible Church-membership of natural poſterity, or other domeſtique promiſes made to Abraham, neither the natural poſterity of Abraham, nor the trueſt believing Gentile, can lay a juſt claim to them, but that notwithſtanding that promiſe, God is free to make their children or the children of Gentile, or Jew Infidels his people, his viſible church, and to ſettle his worſhip with them.

Mr. Getee writes thus, and that this privilege of having God to be the God of our ſeed, was not perſonal, and peculiar to Abraham, but propagated to his ſeed, may hence appear, becauſe the ſame in effect is promiſed to other godly Jews, which is here promiſed to Abraham, Deut. 30. 6. And the Lord thy God will circumciſe thy heart, and the heart of thy ſeed.

Anſw. The promiſe to Abraham, according to Mr. Gs. expoſition, was, That he would be a God to all in regard of external denomination, and external privilege of a Church, and to the elect in regard of ſpiritual adoption grace and glory. Sure this is not the ſame in effect with that, Deut. 30. 6. which is nothing of external privileges of a Church, but of circumciſing their hearts, and the heart of their ſeed, to love the Lord their God with all their heart, and with all their ſoul, that they might live: which can be true only of the elect. Beſides, it is promiſed to them at their return from captivity, and upon their returning to the Lord, and obeying his voice according to all that he commanded them that day, they and their children, with all their heart, and all their ſoul, v. 2. which ſure cannot be ordinarily applied to them in their infancy, and therefore this text is very impertinently alleged to prove an external privilege to infants of meer reputed believers, even in their infancy. Mr. Baxter himſelf in his Friendly accommodation with Mr. Bedford p. 361. hath theſe words. The text ſeems plainly to ſpeak of [their ſeed] not in their infant-ſtate, but in their adult, Deut. 30. For firſt, verſe 2. the condition of the promiſe is expreſly required, not only of the parent, but of the children themſelves by name.

2. And that condition is the perſonal performance of the ſame acts, which are required of the parents, viz. to return to the Lord, and obey his voice with all their heart and ſoul.

3. The circumciſion of the heart promiſed, is ſo annexed to the act, that it appeareth to be meant only of thoſe that were capable of the act, ver. 6. The Lord thy God will circumciſe thine heart, and the heart of thy ſeed, to love the Lord thy God; ſo that it is not meant of thoſe that are uncapable of ſo loving.

Mr. G. yet adds. And thus much that place, Act. 2. 39. doth hold forth and contribute to infant-baptiſm, to ſhew that children are comprehended in the Covenant with their fathers, and both theſe laſt promiſes being of Evangelical privileges they muſt needs be communicable to all under the Goſpel-covenant; ſo then it remains that God ſtill is in covenant with every believer, and his ſeed.

Anſw. That Acts 2. 39. neither ſhews that children (of believers) are comcomprehended (universally and necessarily) with their parents, nor contribute ought to infant-baptism, is shewed in the forepart of this Review s. 5. and notwithstanding any thing said by Mr. Geree it yet remains to be proved, that God is in Covenant with every believer and his seed.

The rest of that section of Mr. Geree, is about my expounding Mr. Ms. second conclusion, which I shall review as far as is meet when I come to it. I have dispatched at last the answering those that argue syllogistically from the covenant, and seal for infant-baptism. But most go another way by laying down conclusions, and framing hypotheses, and I proceed to take a view of their writings.

SECT. XVII.

Mr. Cottons, The Assemblies, and London Ministers way of arguing for Infant-baptism from the Covenant and Circumcision, is recited, and the methode of the future progress in the Review, expressed.

MR. John Cotton in his Dialogue, ch. 3. goes this way, and expresseth himself in four things,

That 1. God made a covenant of grace with Abraham, and his seed, Gen. 17. 7.

2. Gave him a commandment to receive the sign of circumcision the seal of the covenant of grace, to him and his seed, Gen. 17.9,10.

3. The Lord hath given that Covenant of grace which was then to Abraham and his seed, now to believers and our seed.

4. And hath given us baptism in the room of circumcision.

The Assembly at Westminster in their confession of faith, chap 25. art. 2. assert, That the visible Church consists of all the children of those that profess the true Religion, and cite to prove it, 1 Cor. 7. 14. Acts 2. 39. Ezekiel 16. 20, 21. Rom. 11. 16. Gen. 3. 15. and 17. 7. of these, one of the Texts, to wit, Gen. 3. 15. I meet not with in the writings of the defenders of infant-baptism, to my remembrance, except once in Mr. Baxter to prove a conditional covenant made with all Adams posterity. I do not imagine what use that Text is of to prove infants of those that profess the true Religion to be visible Church members.

Whether the seed of the woman be meant of all men, or by excellency of Christ, or of true believers (which are all the senses I conceive) yet how from any of these should be gathered that infants of professours of the true Religion, as such, and not as of humane kinde, should be meant by the seed of the woman, or that the bruising of the Serpents head should prove, infants of them that profess the true Religion to be visible Church-members is a riddle, which I cannot yet resolve. Ch. 28. art. 4. they say, Infants of one or both believing parents are to be baptized, and in the margin cite, Gen. 17. 7. 9. with Gal. 3. 9. 14. Col. 2. 11, 12. & Acts 2. 38, 39. & Rom. 4. 11, 12. 1 Cor. 7. 14. Mat. 28. 19. Mark 10. 13, 14, 15, 16. Luke 18. 15. what they would gather from

theſe texts may be gheſſed from the Directory about baptiſm, where they direct the Miniſter to teach the people, That baptiſm is a ſeal of the covenant of grace, of our ingrafting into Chriſt, &c. That the promiſe is made to believers and their ſeed, and that the ſeed and poſterity of the faithful, born within the Church, have by their birth-intereſt in the Covenant, and right to the ſeal of it, and to the outward privileges of the Church under the Goſpel, no leſs then the children of Abraham in the time of the old Teſtament, the covenant of grace for ſubſtance being the ſame, and the grace of God, and conſolation of believers more plentiful then before, that the Son of God admitted little children into his preſence, embracing them, and bleſſing them, ſaying, For of ſuch is the Kingdom of God; that children by baptiſm, are ſolemnly received into the boſome of the viſible Church, that they are Chriſtians, and federally holy before baptiſm, and therefore are they baptized.

Moſt of which propoſitions are ambiguous, few of them true, or have any proof from the texts alleged in the Confeſſion; and if they were all true (ſetting aſide one or two which expreſs the concluſion in a different phraſe) they would not infer the Concluſion.

The firſt propoſition is ambiguous, it being doubtful in what ſenſe baptiſm is ſaid to be a ſeal of the Covenant of grace, whether in a borrowed or proper ſenſe, ſo as it be the definition or genus of it, or onely an adjunct of it, or whether it ſeal the making of the Covenant, or the performing of it, or the thing covenanted, what they mean by the covenant of grace, which is that covenant; whether it ſeal all or a part of it, whether it ſeal Gods covenanting to us, or our covenanting to God. Nor is there any proof for it from Rom. 4. 11. which neither ſpeaks of baptiſm, nor of any ones Circumciſion but Abrahams, nor ſaith of his Circumciſion, that it was the ſeal of the Covenant of grace, as they, it is likely, mean.

The next propoſition is ſo ambignous, that Mr. M. and Mr. G. are driven to deviſe ſenſes which the words will not bear to make it true, as I ſhew in my Apology, ſ. 9. The words ſeem to bear this ſenſe, That the promiſe of Juſtification, adoption, &c. is made to believers and their ſeed. But ſo it is apparently falſe, contradicted by the Apoſtle Rom. 9. 7, 8. and by other texts, nor is it proved from Gen. 17. 7. compared with Gal. 3. 9. 14. Acts 2. 39. or any other of their texts, yea in that ſenſe it is diſclaimed by Maſter Marſhall, and Maſter Gree.

The next is ambiguous alſo. For how the ſeed of the faithful may be ſaid to be born within the Church, or what intereſt in the covenant, and right to the ſeal of it, and what outward privileges they have by their birth, or what outward privileges they have in like meaſure as the children of Abraham, is as uncertain as the reſt, and how any of the texts prove it, is uncertain. Surely Gal. 3. 9. 14. ſpeaks only of the privileges of Juſtification and Sanctification, which Abrahams children by faith, and no other, not every believers poſterity or natural ſeed have, nor is there a word Gen. 17. 7. of any privilege to our natural ſeed as ſuch.

The next too is doubtful, it being uncertain what they mean by the ſubſtance of the Covenant, what they make accidental in it, and what ſubſtantial; nor is it eaſie to conceive what they mean when they ſay, the grace of God and conſolation of believers is more plentiful then before, or how any of the texts

prove it, or what this is to their purpose, that the enlargement of a believers comfort intitles his child to baptism, nor what is meant when it is said, That children by baptism are received into the bosom of the visible Church, and yet after withheld from the Lords Supper without any Ecclesiastical censure, nor do I know how they mean or prove them to be Christians, or federally holy afore baptism.

For my part, in those propositions I deprehend little truth or plain sense; but that the Directory in that part is a meer riddle, fitter for Schollars to study than for teaching of the people.

So infants of Christian parents under the New Testament are commanded to be baptized by consequence, for that the infants of Gods people in the old Testament were commanded to be circumcised, *Gen.*17. For the privileges of believers under the New Testament, are as large as the privileges of believers under the old Testament, and the children of believers under the New Testament are federally holy, and within the covenant of God as well as the children of believers under the old Testament, Gen. 17. compared with Rom. 11. 16. 1 *Cor.*7.14. And what objections can be made from infants incapacity now against their baptism, might as well then have been made against their being circumcised. And why children should once be admitted to the like initiating Sacrament (the Lord of the Covenant, and Sacrament no where forbidding them) there can be no just ground. And baptism succeeds in the room of Circumcision, Col. 2. 11, 12. concerning which I say, there's no proof from *Gen.*17. compared with *Rom.*11.16. 1 Cor. 7. 14. to prove the children of believers federaly holy as they would, nor is there any proof from *Col.*2.11,12. to prove the succession of baptism in the room of circumcision. And though infants have not a natural incapacity to be dipped in water, yet they have a natural incapacity to profess faith in Christ, which is now required to baptism though not required to circumcision. And there is an objection that may be made against infant-baptism, to wit, the want of a command, which could not be objected against infant male circumcision: and this is a just ground to exclude infants from baptism, yea the very same ground they give for excluding them the communion, and the very same ground which Pædobaptists do continually, in books and Sermons urge against Popish and Prelatical ceremonies. But forasmuch as Mr. M. did direct his Defence of infant-baptism to the Assembly, and Mr. Pryn in his suspension suspended, p. 21. seems to have taken his book to be approved by the Assembly, and he is of any I meet with in print likeliest to have produced their strength, and for other reasons, therefore I conceive my self bound to examine his defence in the third part of it, referring the Reader to what of that or any other is already dispatched, taking in somewhat of Master Blakes, and some others by the way, and then to examine such parts of Mr. Cobbets Just Vindication, as are not yet examined so far as I find necessary, and at last examine so much of Mr. Bs. dispute about his second argument as is not yet dispatched.

SECT. XVIII.

Mr. Marſhalls reply to the firſt ſection of the third part of my Examen about the connexion between the Covenant, and ſeal, is reviewed.

MR. M. in his Sermon page 8. thus diſputed, My firſt Argument is this; The infants of believing parents are fœderati, therefore they muſt be ſignati.

They are within the Covenant of grace;

Therefore are to partake of the ſeal of the Covenant.

To this I anſwered by denying both the antecedent and the conſequence: and firſt I diſputed againſt the conſequence, Exam. part. 3. ſ. 1.

Mr. M. in his Reply would have the Reader to conſider my advantage from the much ſilence in the Scripture to make my work have a ſpecious probability, that the like ſpecious plea might be made againſt the juſtification of infants, eſpecially if his diſpute ſhould be carried as mine is, altogether in the way of making exceptions againſt arguments, but not poſitively affirming any thing.

Thus what others have counted my vertue, and have commended, beyond what it is fit for me to expreſs, Mr. M. unjuſtly ſeeks to draw into ſuſpition, as if there were ſophiſtry and guile in it, as he did in other things, as I ſhew in my Apology.

But me thinks a conſiderate Reader ſhould take this to be the courſe of a diffident man. If there be much ſilence in Scripture about infants, why do Mr. M. and others avouch their baptiſm; with ſo much peremptorineſs. If their juſtification could be no better proved then their bapriſm, it would be no article of my faith. My diſputation is carried in that way which is uſed by Diſputants that examine writings Scholaſtically, wherein it is defective Mr. M. ſhould ſhew.

That I made exceptions againſt arguments was agreeable to my work, being to anſwer as Mr. M. was to prove: no man is to expect regularly any more of a Reſpondent. Yet that I poſitively affirm nothing is an untruth with a witneſs: yea in many points where it was not neceſſary I poſitively ſet down my tenet and my proofs, and anſwer objections to the contrary. The reſolving queſtions about baptiſm how it ſhould be, could not reaſonably be expected in my Examen.

2. Mr. M. takes on him to prove his conſequence by mine own principles, to wit, that I yield that ſuch as are regenerate, ſanctified, &c. may be baptized, which he ſaith is in plain Engliſh, that ſuch as are covenanters ought not to be denyed the initial ſeal of the covenant.

But I do not think the ſpeeches the ſame, either in plain Engliſh, or Mr. *M*s. own Engliſh, or mine. Not in plain Engliſh. In plain Engliſh a Covenanter is one that makes a promiſe.

Is a Scottiſh Covenanter any other then one that makes a promiſe or ſubſcribes to the Covenant? But a perſon regenerate or ſanctified may make no propromiſe, nor do I think when Mr. M. calls infants federate, or in the Covenant of grace, he means they make a promiſe, but that a promiſe is made to them. Nor in Mr. Ms. own Engliſh. For when he ſaith, they are in covenant, he means, infants are in ſome ſenſe under the covenant of grace in reſpect of the outward adminiſtration and Church privileges, which is not all one as to be regenerate, ſanctifyed, &c. nor in my Engliſh. For the being in covenant which I grant, gives a title to baptiſm, is meant of their preſent ſtate, ſo as that not only the promiſe is made to them, what God will do for them afterwards, but for the preſent they are actually ſanctified, regenerate, believers, diſciples, as mine own words, cited by Mr. M. ſhew; So that Mr. M. doth but abuſe me, and the Reader, endeavouring to poſſeſſe him with this conceit, as if his conſequence were proved by mine own principles.

But Maſter Marſhall not truſting to this, anſwers, more particularly:

1. I grant with you that there is no neceſſary dependance between a promiſe and a ſeal, the addition of a ſeal to a promiſe is of free grace as well as the promiſe it ſelf. Which if true, then theres no neceſſary connexion between the Covenant and Seal, and ſo this propoſition is not true. All that have the promiſe are to be ſealed. For if it be true it is in ſome degree of neceſſity, to wit, de omni. As for his reaſon, it is frivolous; there is no neceſſary dependance, becauſe both are of free grace. For thoſe things that are of free grace have a neceſſary dependence as, to be predeſtinate, called, juſtified, glorifyed. But he means, the nature of the terms makes not a neceſſary connexion between them.

If that be his meaning, Mr. Baillee his Collegue is deſerted, who would infer a neceſſary connexion from the nature of the terms, which I have refuted in my Addition to my Apology, S. 3.

But Mr. M. addes. Nor 2. did I ever think, that by Gods revealed will this propoſition was true in all ages of the Church. All Covenanters muſt be ſealed, I carried it no higher than Abrahams time, when God firſt added this new mercy to his Church, vouchſafing a ſeal to the Covenant.

Anſw. If this be true, then there is nothing moral and perpetual in ſeals, as they call them, of the Covenaut. For ſuch thing are from the beginning, and belong to Gentiles as well as Jews, and therefore it is in vain to derive infants ſealing barely from the Covenant of grace. For ſith that, as Mr. Ms. firſt Concluſion ſpeaks, for ſubſtance hath alwaies been one, and the ſame both to the Jews and Gentiles, if there were a connexion between it, and the ſeal it ſhould have been as well before Abrahams time as ſince.

But he thinks in his third anſwer to make good the connexion, when he ſaith,

And 3. from Abrahams time, and ſo forward I ſay it was Gods will, that ſuch as are in Covenant ſhould be ſealed with the initial ſeal of the Covenant, ſuppoſing them only capable of the ſeal, and no ſpecial bar put in againſt them by God himſelf.

To which I anſwer. He ſaith after, if you pleaſe to ſtate the general Propoſition as you needs muſt, That all who ſince Abrahams time are fœderati, or Covenanters with God, muſt by Gods own appointment receive the ſeal of admiſſion into covenant, unleſs they be either uncapable of it, or are exempted by a particular diſpenſation. So that one of theſe two propoſitions is that which makes up his Enthymeme an entire ſyllogiſm, and his ſyllogiſm muſt

ſtand in one or other of theſe forms.

From Abrahams time all ſuch as are in covenant ſhould be ſealed with the initial ſeal of the covenant, ſuppoſing them onely capable of the ſeal, and no ſpecial bar put in againſt them by God himſelf.

But all the infants of believing parents are in covenant, and they are capable of the ſeal, and there is no ſpecial bar put in againſt them by God himſelf.

Ergo, They ſhould be ſealed.

Or thus; All who ſince Abrahams time are fœderati, or Covenanters with God, muſt, by Gods own appointment receive the ſeal of admiſſion into covenant, unleſs they be either uncapable of it, or are exempted by a particular diſpenſation. All infants of believers ſince Abrahams time, are fœderati or covenanters with God, neither uncapable of the ſeal, nor exempted by a particular diſpenſation: Ergo, all infants of believers ſince Abrahams time, muſt, by Gods own appointment, receive the ſeal of admiſſion into covenant.

To which I anſwer, Mr. M. tells me, I muſt needs ſtate thus the general Propoſition. But it is a pretty art he hath, as elſewhere to call that my Minor which was his own not mine; ſo here to ſay, I muſt needs ſtate the general Propoſition thus, which is of his own framing. However, he is not wronged, that it is thus framed. Let us then view it, and try whether (except in that of circumciſion) there be any truth, ſenſe or conſiderateneſſe in it.

As for circumciſion, if it be meant onely of it, then the Concluſion can be of it only, and as the truth is, his argument concludes only that infants of believers are to be circumciſed.

1. I had in my Examen noted a fault in his Argument in his Sermon, in that his Concluſion was of a ſign of the Covenant indefinite, and not of baptiſm only, whereas the Lords Supper is alſo a ſign of the Covenant, which he would not have delivered to infants.

And to it he anſwers, That he clearly in his Sermon ſhewed this Propoſition to be only meant of the initial ſign, and not of the other. But this doth not excuſe his fault, who taking upon him to prove infant-baptiſm, concludes another thing in the argument, though he might perhaps, ſome pages of, where the Reader looks not for an explication of his argument, limit his ſpeech to the initial ſeal.

And for what he tells me, he is ſure that I who durſt baptize an infant known to me to be regenerate, durſt not give the other Sacrament to it, there being ſelf examination and ability to diſcern the Lords body prerequired to the one, not to the other; I told him in my Apology §. 10. I durſt do the one as I durſt do the other, and that ſelf examination and ability to diſcern the Lords body is as well required to baptiſm, as the Lords Supper, Acts 2. 38. & 8. 37. Rom. 6. 3, 4. But were it, that I durſt not do the one as the other, yet this would not help Mr. M. who would prove the title to the initial ſeal, by that proof of intereſt in the Covenant, which will conclude as well title to the after, as the initial ſeal.

For the proof is uſually the ſeal muſt follow the covenant; which if true, then not only the initial, but alſo the after-ſeal muſt follow it. But waving this, is the fault mended in his Defence? doth he conclude definitely of baptiſm here? nay notwithſtanding he was warned, yet chorda ſemper oberrat eadem, he ſtill runs into the ſame fault, concluding in both forms of an initial

ſeal indefinitely, not definitely of baptiſm, and therefore may be interpreted to conclude of circumciſion as well as of baptiſm, yea rather his aſſertion (if there be any good ſenſe of it) is of the circumciſing then baptizing of infants, ſith all his proof is about the initial ſign of circumciſion, and the limitations he puts into the Major are, that it may be true of circumciſion.

But this is not all the fault in his new forms: notwithſtanding I complained in my *Examen ſect.*3. of his ambiguities, which I ſhewed in my Apology ſ. 9,10. and Poſtſcript ſ.6. yet as if either he could not, or would not, ſpeak diſtinctly, he retains the ſame fault in his Defence. Whereas I conceive the covenant of grace now contains only the promiſe of ſaving grace, he ſaith p 90. The Covenant of grace contains not onely ſaving grace, but the adminiſtration of it alſo in outward ordinances and Church privileges; but ſhews not where, nor in which covenant of grace there are promiſes of the adminiſtration of ſaving grace in outward ordinances and Church privileges. It is true, circumciſion is called the Covenant, *Gen.*17. 13. by a Metonymia as Mr. M. confeſſeth page 32 but not becauſe it was contained in the Covenant: it is not Metonymia continentis pro contento, but ſignati pro ſigno: now that the ſign ſhould be ſaid to be contained in the covenant, is ſcarſe good ſenſe; ſure it is not meet to be uſed in diſputes. And therefore whoever uſeth the covenant of grace for any other than the covenant of ſaving grace, or ſaith it contains any other than promiſes of ſaving grace, ſeems to affect ambiguities unmeet for diſpute, as not willing to be underſtood. Again page 92. he expreſſeth the covenant of grace he means to be that *Gen.*17.7. and he cannot but know it to have diverſe meanings; one that God will be a God to Abraham, and his ſpiritual ſeed, which he confeſſeth pag. 102. to be the elect, when he ſaith, Secondly by the word [ſeed] was meant the children of the promiſe the elect, *Rom.*9.8. and in this ſenſe it is denyed by him, that God hath made a promiſe of ſaving grace to the natural ſeed of believers, and ſo they are not in this covenant in this ſenſe. Yet the Directory when it ſpeaks of baptiſm, as the ſeal of the covenant, means it in this ſenſe, as the words before recited ſhew, for what elſe can be meant when they diſtinguiſh between intereſt in the covenant, and right to the ſeal of it, and the outward privileges of the Church under the Goſpel. And *Rom.*4.11. is alleged in the Confeſſion of Faith, for the proof of this, that it is the ſeal of the Covenant of grace; now that text ſpeaks of being a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, which is a ſaving grace, and in the Confeſſion of faith, ch.7.art.3. and in the greater Catechiſm, they make the Covenant of grace to offer life and ſalvation by Chriſt, to promiſe faith, and to be made with Chriſt, and in him with all the elect, as his ſeed; and ſo the Argument from the Covenant of grace to the Seal, muſt mean it thus, or elſe it is frivolous. For if the Seal muſt follow the Covenant; it muſt follow the Covenant which is ſealed by it, which is only the promiſe of ſaving grace, there being no ſhew of conſequence in it, infants of believers have not the covenant of ſaving grace, but of outward Ordinances and Church privileges, therefore they are to be ſealed with that ſeal, which ſeals only ſaving graces. And yet methinks they ſhould not have avouched as the Directory doth, that the poſterity of the faithful have by their birth intereſt in that Covenant, conſidering how the Apoſtle determines *Rom.*9.8 the children of the fleſh may not be the children of God, nor the ſeed, nor children of the promiſe. Another

ſenſe of the promiſe, *Gen.*17.7. is, I will be a God to Abraham, and his natural ſeed by Iſaac and Jacob: But in this ſenſe it is proper only to the Jewes, and the argument is as frivolous: God promiſed to be a God to the Jews, therefore infant-Gentiles who have nothing to do with that promiſe, muſt have baptiſm, which is no ſeal or token of that promiſe at all. If Mr. M. would have done ſomething to his purpoſe, he ſhould have ſhewed, not as he doth p. 106,107,&c. in many words quite beſides the buſineſs, how the Covenant is taken ſtrictly and largely, and how they may be ſaid to be in covenant in ſome ſenſe, who have a viſible right, without ſaving grace, but have ſhewed in which words there is any promiſe that may infer right to Gentile-believers infants to be baptized, Gen. 17.7. or how he can prove what he ſaith, page 103. That baptiſm ſeals that promiſe in which God engageth himſelf to be the God of believing Chriſtians, and their ſeed? I would fain know in what words, in reſpect of what bleſſings and gifts, and in what manner or upon what terms God thus engageth himſelf. The Apoſtle ſaith *Gal.*3.16. To Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made. I no where find they were made to a Gentile believer and his ſeed.

The like playing with ambiguities is in the uſe of the phraſes, fœderate, in Covenant, being under the Covenant, being in Covenant, Covenanters. When he ſaith, Infants of believers are fœderati or Covenanters with God, or enter into Covenant, according to the plain meaning of the word, they ſhould be aſſerted to be ſuch as make a promiſe to God. For what is a Covenanter but one that makes a promiſe? how do men enter into covenant, but by ſome act teſtifying aſſent to a promiſe? now in this ſenſe I ſhould grant his Major, and deny his Minor, which in this ſenſe is againſt ſenſe. For when did any hear or ſee, or otherwiſe perceive an infant of a believer make a promiſe to God, or by any act of his, ſhew his aſſent to own God for his God.

In the other form he ſaith, All ſuch as are in the Covenant ſhould be ſealed, and that expreſſion ſeems to have this ſenſe, That God by his act of promiſe as his words are page 103. engageth himſelf to be the God of believing Chriſtians, and their ſeed, which his words import, page 92. where having ſaid, All ſuch as are in the Covenant ſhould be ſealed, to prove it he allegeth, Gen. 17.7,9,10,14. Where the very ground why God would have them ſealed is becauſe of the Covenant, I will eſtabliſh my Covenant between me and thee, and thy ſeed after thee, &c.

So that the ſenſe of his argument ſhould be thus, All they who are in covenant, that is, to whom God hath promiſed to be their God, they ſhould be ſealed, &c. But all infants of believing, even Gentile parents, are in Covenant, that is, God hath promiſed to be their God: Ergo.

Of which I would deny both Major and Minor the minor being expreſly contrary to *Ro.*9.8 though it were underſtood of true believers, and moſt certainly falſe of believers only in profeſſion, to whom, eſpecially thoſe of the Gentiles, God never promiſed to be God, much leſs to their natural ſeed; yet the minor muſt be true of them, or elſe this argument proves not they are to be baptized, which is their practiſe.

But ſeeing the Argument for infant-baptiſm will not hold in theſe ſenſes of the promiſe, Gen. 17.7. (though the firſt ſenſe be that which they give of that promiſe, when they diſpute againſt Arminians, and apply it to the elect only, as the words of many ſhew, cited in my Examen part. 3. S. 4. in my Præcurſor S. 10. Mr. M. himſelf ſo expounds it with Mr. Bayn pag. 102. of his Defence) therefore Mr. M. hath another ſenſe to which he flies. He talks of an outward and an inward Covenant, page 120. and page 112. he tells us, That he means all the infants of believers are in the outward Covenant, that is, they are to be reputed as in the Covenant, in reſpect of the outward adminiſtration, outward Ordinances and Church-privileges, which when it comes to application is meant of no other than baptiſm now, and circumciſion heretofore, and therefore as I ſhew in my Apology S. 10. the Major propoſition is meerly nugatory in this ſenſe; All that are in the Covenant, that is, that are to have the initial ſeal ſhould be ſealed with the initial ſeal, which were true, but ridiculous. And in truth I may (how ever it be cenſured) apply to the diſcourſe in this argument, be it Mr. Ms. or the Aſſemblies, the Poets words, Parturiunt montes, naſcetur ridiculus mus.

And yet there is more ſhuffling in this thing. Mr. M. to make ſome ſhew of anſwering my inſtances of women and males under eight daies old, not being circumciſed, though in covenant, limits his Major in the firſt form thus [ſuppoſing them onely capable of the ſeal, and no ſpecial bar put in againſt them] in the other form thus [unleſs they be either uncapable of it, or are exempted by particular diſpenſation] By the Bar, he means Gods prohibition, as theſe words, page 93. ſhew, God forbad them to have the ſeal till they were eight daies old. But a prohibition and a diſpenſation are not all one: a Prohibition is of a thing, that may not be done; a diſpenſation ſuppoſeth the thing is to be done, yet frees the perſon from doing it in ſome caſes for ſome time. But letting paſs this exception againſt the expreſſions, I would know how God put a bar, or forbad infants under eight daies old to be circumciſed. I know no other but this, that God appointed the eighth day for them to be circumciſed. Now if this be a forbidding to circumciſe before (as I acknowledge it is, and ſo do many Proteſtant Divines, as Pareus Comment. in Gen. 17.11. Errant maſculi in fœdere ab utero, &c. anticipare vero ſignum nec licebat, nec opus erat) then that is forbidden, which is otherwiſe than God appointed: and ſith our Lord Chriſt hath not appointed any to be baptized till they be diſciples, he hath prohibited any to be baptized till they be diſciples, and ſo, what ever the London Miniſters ſay in their words above recited, there is juſt ground even a prohibition, againſt baptizing infants. And ſo the Minor of Mr. Ms. argument is not true. Upon all this debate I profeſs I find ſo much inconſiderateneſs, or confuſedneſs, or nonſenſe, or untruth, or trifling, if not juggling in Mr. Ms. arguing, that I muſt vary my anſwer, as I find his meaning ſometimes denying the Syllogiſm as being tautological, and not having three terms, or which is all one, any medium to prove his Concluſion by, but only repeating the Concluſion in different phraſes, and thoſe ſome of them new minted gibberiſh or non-ſenſe, ſometimes the Major, ſometimes the Minor, ſometimes both. However, ſith it is my task, I ſhall view what he ſaith.

Page 92. he ſaith thus, Which is apparent in the very firſt inſtitution of an initial ſeal Gen. 17. 7, 9, 10, 14. Where the very ground why God would have them ſealed is becauſe of the Covenant, I will eſtabliſh my Covenant between me and thee, and thy ſeed after thee in their generations for an everlaſting Covenant to be a God unto thee, and thy ſeed after thee: thou ſhalt keep my Covenant therefore: and this is my Covenant which ye ſhall keep; every man-child among you ſhall be circumciſed, and afterward in the fourteenth, the ſeal is by a metonymia called the Covenant, for that it is apparent, not only that God commanded them who were in covenant to be circumciſed, but that they ſhould therefore be circumciſed becauſe of the Covenant, or in token of the Covenant between God and them; and he that rejected or neglected the ſeal, is ſaid not only to break Gods commandment, but his Covenant. So that becauſe the initial ſeal was added to the Covenant, and ſuch as received it received it as an evidence of the Covenant, or becauſe they were in Covenant; I therefore concluded, that by Gods own will, ſuch as enter into Covenant ought to receive the ſeal, ſuppoſing ſtill they were capable of it. So that to lay circumciſion upon Gods command, and the Covenant of grace too, are well conſiſtent together; for the command is the cauſe of the exiſtence of the duty, but the Covenant of grace is the motive to it.

Anſw. Here is all Mr. Ms. ſtrength to prove his Major, that it was Gods will that ſuch as are in Covenant from Abrahams time, and ſo forward, ſhould be ſealed with the initial ſeal of the Covenant, which he after alters thus. Such as enter into Covenant ought to receive the ſeal. But there is nothing but confuſedneſs and impertinency in all this paſſage.

1. He tells us, There is the inſtitution of an initial ſeal Gen. 17. 7, 9, 10, 14. which he muſt underſtand of an initial ſeal in general or indefinite, or elſe it reacheth not to baptiſm, and ſo it is impertinently alleged. But it is palpably falſe that there is in thoſe words any other initial ſeal inſtituted then circumciſion, and I dare boldly ſay, it is a meer dotage to maintain that in thoſe words there is any rule about baptiſm or any other ordinance of God then circumciſion. The very words are, thou ſhalt keep my Covenant, and this covenant is demonſtrated to be male-circumciſion and no other, of which the time and part are preciſely ſet down.

2. He ſhould prove that all that were in covenant had title to the initial ſeal or right; but his Concluſion is of their duty, not of their title. Now it cannot be ſaid to be infants duty; the command was not given to them, nor doth M. M. I think, aſſert it as their duty, but as their privilege; and yet all that the text inferreth, or Mr. M. concludes from it, concerns the connexion between the duty of circumciſing, which belongs not to infants, and the covenant, not between the Privilege of circumciſion paſſively taken, which belongs to infants and the Covenant, which is another impertinency.

3. Be it granted that the propoſition to be proved is of duty in parents or Miniſters, yet he is neceſſitated to grant the command was the cauſe of the exiſtence of the duty, and more plainly page 182. The formal reaſon of their being circumciſed, was the command of God: which if true, there's no duty without the command, whatever intereſt there might be in the Covenant: and therefore the propoſition is true, all that enter into Covenant ought to receive the ſeal if it be commanded, not otherwiſe: and ſo neither infant-circumciſion nor infant baptiſm can be proved from the bare intereſt in the covenant, without a particular command for each of them.

4. He ſaith, the Covenant of grace was the motive, page 182. the Covenant of grace, or their Church-ſtate was the motive to it, and the thing it related to. But he tells us not to whom it was a motive. A motive is an impulſive cauſe, whereby a perſon is perſwaded or induced to do a thing. But it was not the motive to infants, for they conceived not of it. His words [the very ground why God would have them ſealed, is becauſe of the Covenant] do intimate: that he means the covenant was the motive to God to give the command. But what it makes to his purpoſe I do not conceive. For though that were the motive to God, yet Gods motive is not the rule of the duty, but his command to us; nor the evidence of our privilege, but his declaration of his Will. But be it a motive to Abraham, yet it was but a motive for the more full engagement of him to that which without that motive he had been to do by reaſon of the Command, nor any further evidence of privilege then was imported by other Declaration of Gods will.

5. Though Circumciſion did relate to the Covenant, and it was received as an evidence of the Covenant, yet this proves not that it was received by each perſon, becauſe he was in covenant, nor that the being in Covenant was the rule of the uſing that rite, that they which were in Covenant ſhould have it, and they that were not in Covenant, ſhould not have it, which is the thing to be proved, but is certainly falſe, as I have by many inſtances ſhewed.

6. If all this were granted, yet that this rule did reach further then the uſe of circumciſion is not proved here: and what is brought elſewhere ſhall be ſhewed in it's place to be much ſhort of proving any ſuch general rule about an initial ſeal, as is here by Mr. M. averred. But let us ſee what his proof amounts to about circumciſion.

1. He urgeth, That circumciſion is called a token of the Covenant; But this proves no more then this, that the uſe of Circumciſion was to be a ſign God made ſuch a Covenant, and would fulfill it: not that every one that was in Covenant was to be circumciſed, or that every one that was to be circumciſed was in covenant.

2. That it is termed the Covenant. But this proves no more than the former, ſith it is acknowledged to be ſo called only by a metonymia, of putting the thing ſignifyed for the ſign.

3. The particle [therfore] is thus urged: God not only commanded them who were in covenant, to be circumciſed, but that they ſhould [therfore] be circumciſed becauſe of the covenant, or in token of the Covenant between God & them;

But 1. The particle [therfore] though it be in our laſt tranſlation, yet in the Hebrew it is only ואתה, and may be rendered, And thou, or, But thou, as by the Tigur: it is & tu, by Pareus, tu autem, Piſcator, tu verò.

2. Let it be read [therefore] and the inference be from the Covenant; yet that the inference is from the promiſe in the ſeventh verſe onely, and not from the eighth verſe, which is next, or the reſt of the promiſes, v. 4, 5, 6, cannot be ſhewed.

3. Let theſe things be granted: yet that it imports this rule to be taken from the Covenant, thoſe who are in Covenant are to be circumciſed, not others, hath no colour of proof, nor any ſhew of truth in it, ſith it is clear in the caſe of Iſhmael to whom that promiſe did not belong nor any in that covenant, yet he was to be circumciſed, and others were not to be circumciſed, to whom the promiſes were made.

4. He urgeth thus: And he that rejected or neglected the ſeal is ſaid not only to break Gods commandment, but his Covenant: ſo that becauſe the initial seal was added to the Covenant, and such as received it, received it as an evidence of the Covenant, or because they were in covenant. To which I reply.

Two waies a man may be said to break Gods covenant: one by breaking the command, which was in reference to the Covenant, or enjoyned in testimony of it; and if this be his sense, then Mr. Ms. speech is trifling, when he saith, he that rejected or neglected the seal, is said not only to break Gods commandment, but his Covenant, it being all one to break the command and the covenant. The other sense is; he hath broken my covenant, that is, as Piscat. sch. on Gen. 17. 14 as much as is in him, by depriving himself of the grace of God, promised in the Covenant. For otherwise the incredulity of man doth not make void the faith of God, Rom. 3. 3. But take it either way, it proves not that which was to be proved, that the rule about circumcising persons was their interest in the Covenant. All that follows on this is, that the observance of circumcision was strictly enjoined under this penalty, that otherwise they should be cut off from Gods people, and so deprived of the benefit of the Covenant signified; but this doth not prove that every one circumcised was in the Covenant, and should have the benefit of the Covenant. So that though it be granted which Mr. M. saies, That to lay Circumcision upon Gods command, and the Covenant of grace too, are well consistent together; Yet his Major is not proved, That it was Gods Will that such as are in Covenant from Abrahams time, and so forward, should be sealed with the initial seal of the Covenant, supposing them only capable of the seal, and no special bar put in against them by God himself. Nor is Mr. M. more happy in answering my exceptions.

Whereas you allege, saith he, concerning Melchisedec, Lot, Job; we find no such thing, that they either received this seal of Circumcision or were tyed to it. I reply, its very hard for you to prove that Melchisedeck was then alive: and had he been alive, he was of an higher Order, and above that Pædagogy.

Answ. I grant it cannot be demonstratively proved, that he was alive: yet it being probable he was, who not many years before met Abraham, though he were in Covenant, yet being not appointed to be circumcised, it overthrows the proposition by which Mr. Ms. Enthymeme was to be proved, That all that are fœderati, must be signati. Yea Mr. Ms. answer here, That he was above that Pædagogy, doth plainly intimate that circumcision was peculiar to that Pædagogy, and so the rule about circumcision not obligatory to Christian Gentiles, to whom that Pædagogy is abolished, and who have a Priest of an higher Order, to wit, that of Melchisedec. As for Lot, he denies not that he then lived, but saith, That no Scripture saith he was not circumcised, which he saith of Job also, whose time is uncertain, by reason of the Scripture-silence, though probably he was of Esaus posterity. But in matters of fact, à non Scripto ad non factum non valet consequentia.

Nevertheless for Lot, it seems to me very unlikely he should be circumcised living then in Sodom, not in Abrahams house, and no mention made of him, when Abraham circumcised his own house, and Lots posterity being after uncircumcised Jerem. 9. 26. And for Job, what time soever he lived, it is likely he was an Edomite; who are reckoned for uncircumcised Ier. 9. 26. and there are no passages that give any intimation of his acquaintance with Israel. But if these serve not the turn, the example of Cornelius undeniably uncircumcised and not blamed for want of it, though undoubtedly in the Covenant of grace, being one that feared God with all his house, and his prayers and alms heard, therefore he was not to be circumcised though in the Covenant of grace, nor all that enter into Covenant ought to be sealed with the initial seal, though capable, and no bar put in against them by God.

I instanced in male infants of Jews under eight daies old, who were not to be circumcised, though in Covenant. Mr. M. answers, To that of infants there was a peculiar exemption of them by God himself; whether for any typical reason, or in regard they were not fit in nature to undergo so sharp a pain, as was to be endured in Circumcision before the seventh and Critical day was past, or whether for any other cause, I dispute not; it is sufficient, God forbad them to have the seal till they were eight daies old.

Answ. This is a grant of the objection, and overthrows the proposition of Mr. M. in his Sermon; All that are in Covenant are to be sealed. And the forbidding, being onely by not appointing it, the proposition can be true onely in this sense; All those in Covenant are to be circumcised, to whom it is appointed, and no other; But infants are in Covenant, and to them it is appointed to be sealed with the initial seal in the New Testament: Ergo.

Wherein I should grant the Major, and deny the Minor, and infer that without appointment interest in the Covenant did not make capable, no not of Circumcision, though it's likely infants might have born it in the end of the seventh day as well as on the eighth.

I alleged that no females in Abrahams family, though in Covenant, were to be circumcised. To this Mr. M. answers. For the women, they were not Subjectum capax circumcisionis, there was in them a natural impediment against it, therefore could it not be enjoined them: and suppose some men amongst them, or some who turned proselytes to them, had not had a præputium (as some sort of Eunuchs) this Ordinance had not reached them; whether the wisdom of God purposely chose a sign that women might not be capable of receiving it, for some typical use, as some conjecture, it is sufficient they were not capable of it, and were exempted from it by God himself.

Answ. If it be true, which many Authors relate, that the Habassines, and Iacobites do at this day, circumcise females; then it is not true, they were uncapable of it by reason of natural impediment. But if it be true which Mr. M. saith, yet Gods chosing a sign of which they were not capable, and that for a typical use, when he might have chosen one as baptism, of which both sexes were capable, it is an evidence, That it was not the Will of God since Abrahams time, and so forward, that all in Covenant should be sealed with the initial seal, which was Mr Ms. proposition. Nor do his two limitations added in his Defence help him. For if incapacity and non-appointment be a sufficient exemption from the initial seal, yea a prohibition of it, then his proposition is but what I contend for, that those in covenant to whom God appoints it and no other, are to have the initial seal; which is as much as I would evince, that it is not bare interest in the Covenant without institution or appointment that gives right to a person to claim either circumcision or baptism, nor warrants a baptizer to admit a person to baptism. And therefore though it were yielded that all infants of believers were in covenant, yet they have not right to either initial seal without a command, or institution concerning each rite.

As for Mr. M's. general proposition as he states it, as it advantageth it him not for the reason last given, so it may be granted, if he mean by exemption or particular dispensation, the non-appointment of it. For then I am sure infants of believers are exempted from baptism till they be proved disciples of Christ, or believers by profession; which if it could be proved, we need not fetch it from circumcision and the Covenant. From which they that deduce infant-baptism, do but in vain weary themselves and others, as they that seek to draw water out of a pumice stone.

But there is some more in Mr. M. about womens circumcision, which I must not omit. Mr. M. in his Sermon had answered, that women were circumcised virtually in the Males. To which I answered, that a virtual circumcision was not enough to make good his argument: For then his Syllogism must have four terms, thus. They that are in Covenant must be sealed actually in their now persons, or virtually in others. But infants of believers are in the Covenant, therefore they are to be sealed. If the Conclusion be meant of actual sealing in their own persons then there are four terms, and more in the Conclusion then in the premisses. But if it be meant disjunctively, they are to be sealed actually or virtually: then it is less than is to be proved, his business being to prove that they were to be sealed actually. For a virtual sealing is less than Mr. M. would have, and might be granted without any detriment to the cause of Anti-pædobaptism. To this Mr. M. makes no answer at all, but chargeth me with a scoff where there was none, tells me it is like refuting Bellarmine with, Thou lieſt: whereas I did shew wherein his answer was insufficient, and that by putting his Syllogism into form, according to his own meaning, and then shewing how it would not conclude what he should prove. And to this in his Defence he makes no answer, but tells us, what his plain meaning was, which is nothing to the present point: he should have shewed how, with that exposition or limitation his argument would prove actual sealing of infants in their own persons. But to slight a reason and speak nothing to it, is not to answer, but to shift.

But I also said, to speak exactly, women were not circumcised virtually in the Males: For that supposeth they might receive it in their own persons, whereas it had been a sin in them to be circumcised, God not appointing it: which is confirmed by the like, it would be sin for the male to be circumcised afore the eighth day, sith it was not appointed: which may now be confirmed by Mr. M's. words, that God forbad them to have the seal till they were eight daies old.

To this saith Mr. M. But first give me leave to observe by the way how you pinch me with a point of Law, that no man can be said virtually to have that by his Proxy or Attorney, which he might not actually receive himself in his own person. I question whether this be good Law; but I am confident it is bad Divinity; sure we sinned virtually in Adam, yet we could not actually, though the sin of Adam be ours by imputation. The Sun is virtually hot, yet Philosophers say, it's not actually. And the Jews of old offered to God such things by the hands of the Priests, who were their Proxies in that work, which they might not offer in their own persons, yea and received such things by the hand of the High Priest (who bare their names in the most holy place) which they might not receive in their own persons immediately: and the Saints now in this world do virtually and quoad effectum juris, receive some such privileges in Christ their Advocate, who in their right is at Gods right hand, which here they are not capable of receiving immediatrly in their own persons.

Answ. My words were not as Mr. M. recited them, but thus. He is said virtually to have a thing by another, as by a Proxy or Atturney, that might receive it by himself; yet quoad effectum juris, according to the effect of Law another's receiving it is, as if he had received it. In which I understand by [having a thing] that having a thing which is by possession of it, as a benefit, privilege, commodity, and by [might receive it] without any prohibition in Law, and that he receives it not in his own person, is onely from some temporary impediment, as minority, absence or the like. And this according to that skill I have in such terms, I conceive still to be the meaning of them. Nor do Mr. Ms. instances take me any whit off from it, being without fear of being chargeable with bad Law or Divinity. For our sinning in Adam is not receiving something as a benefit: the Suns heat is natural, not by vertue of any Political Law, it is not having as a proxy or atturney for another; the High Priests offering for the people was an action in their stead, not receiving a benefit for them, and what they received for the people which they might not receive in their own persons immediately was not by reason of any prohibition, but from some other cause, nor were they in imparting it, the peoples Proxies or Atturneys, but Gods: were it an answer from God or any other thing they received for them, if God had immediately communicated it to them, it had not been their sin. And the like may be said of what Christ receives for us as our Advocate. But the circumcising of women had been a sin forbidden, according to Mr. Marshalls and others doctrine before recited, they were prohibited to be circumcised, it being limitted to the males on the 8. day. Mr. M. addes.

I also obiter desire you to remember this expression of yours, that it had been a sin for a child to have been circumcised after the eight day was past, and try how you will reconcile this with another opinion of yours delivered elsewhere; viz. That Circumcision might be administred oftner then once; surely those other times must be after the 8. day.

Answ. Where I deliver this, that Circumcision might be administred oftner than once, I remember not, except in my Examen, page 118. However I conceive no necessity of Circumcision or baptism above once, yet I profess my self unsatisfyed in this, that there is either a command that a person be but once circumcised, or a person once onely baptized. And my reason of the speech is from hence. 1 Cor. 7. 18. the Apostle saith, Is one called circumcised, μὴ ἐπισπάσθω, Let him not be drawn up, that is, let him not draw up his fore-skin: we translate it, Let him not become uncircumcised. Whence it may be perceived, that some Jews had an art to draw up their fore-skin. Now in such a case, while the Law stood in force, I conceive he was bound to be circumcised again, because it was to abide in his flesh, Gen. 17. 13. Nor do my words at all contradict this, when I say more fully then Mr. M. recites them; It had been a sin for a child to be circumcised afore, or after the eigth day in them that altered or swerved from the appointment of God: where I make the sin not to be the doing of it, on the eighth day, and then doing it again (though I deny not but unneceſſarily to do it after the eight day had been ſin, that day being determined for it) but not doing it that day which God appointed by thoſe that altered or ſwerved from that appointment unneceſſarily: which in the caſe mentioned, and any other of the like, might be done after the eighth day.

But M. M. will confirm his proofs, that the women were circumciſed in the men.

My firſt, ſaith he to me, was, that the whole houſe of Iſrael are in the Scripture ſaid to be circumciſed. You anſwer, that by the whole houſe of Iſrael muſt not be meant all, but the Major part. But Sir do you imagine that any of your judicious Readers can be ſatisfyed with this anſwer, when (you know well enough) that the Circumciſion is put for the Church and people of God in oppoſition to the uncircumciſed, that is, all the reſt of the World who were not the people of God.

When Peter was to go to the circumciſion, and Paul to the Gentiles to preach the Goſpel; does not circumciſion include the women Jews as much as the men, in oppoſition to Gentiles, as well as the word Gentiles includes women Gentiles as well as the men, to whom Paul was ſent? *Gal.*2.8,9. Surely it muſt needs be granted, that not only the Major or nobler part, but the whole nation of the Jews both men and women, are there meant by circumciſion, which could not have been, if in ſome ſenſe they were not to be accounted circumciſed.

Anſw. My Anſwer might ſatisfie any judicious Reader, ſpecially if the texts had been fairly ſet down by Mr. M. wherein I ſhew all Iſrael, and all the houſe of Iſrael muſt be underſtood Synecdochically, 1 *Sam.*7.3. Acts 2. 36. Acts 13. 24. And if in the term [circumciſion] be not a Synecdoche of the whole for the part; not onely every individual in Iſrael muſt be in ſome ſenſe accounted circumciſed, but be actually circumciſed alſo in their own perſons. Nor againſt ſuch a Synecdoche doth it make, that circumciſion ſtands in oppoſition to the uncircumciſed, which is meant of every individual. For neither is it true, when the uncircumciſed are mentioned, it is meant of every individual, there being many of thoſe nations that were circumciſed; and if it were true, yet the oppoſition doth not prove every individual Jew circumciſed, any more then when they are called the holy Nation in oppoſition to the Gentiles: as when it was ſaid, Iſrael was holineſs to the Lord, Jerem. 2.3. every Iſraelite or Jew muſt be counted holy in ſome ſenſe: but the terms are attributed Synecdochically. And for the other inſtance, I grant circumciſion muſt include Gal. 2.8. women as well as men, becauſe Peter was to go to them: but this proves not that women were in ſome ſenſe accounted circumciſed in the males, but that they are part of the nation which were called the Circumciſion Synecdochically, becauſe of the males. And for the term Gentiles, there muſt be in like manner a Synecdoche conceived of the whole for a part, elſe he ſhould be ſent to preach to infant males as well as women of years.

Secondly, ſaith Mr. M. I argued thus, no uncircumciſed might eat the Paſſoever; Ergo their women might not have eaten it, if in ſome ſenſe they had not been circumciſed. Your anſwer is, This is to be limitted pro ſubjecta materia, none that ought to be circumciſed might eat the Paſſeover, unleſs they were circumciſed. But this anſwer is altogether inſufficient. For where is this diſtinction of yours found or founded in the word of God? other Diſtinctions about eating the Paſſeover are clearly found: the clean might eat it, the unclean might not eat it, the circumcised might, the uncircumcised might not: But of your limitation there is altum silentium.

Answ. Mr.Ms. conclusion is, That in some sense women were circumcised, and before in some sense they were counted circumcised, neither of which is the same with this [they were circumcised virtually in the males, or the males were circumcised in their stead as their Proxy or Atturney.]

2. My answer was right, and to his Demand, where it is found in the word of God? I answer by another demand, where is his limitation found in Gods word, that women might eat the Passeover, because they were in some sense accounted circumcised? Sure the words are, Exod. 12. 48. No uncircumcised person shall eat thereof, not as Mr.M. none but those that are counted in some sense circumcised may eat thereof: If there be in Scripture that which doth necessitate to a limitation of that speech, my limitation is as well in Scripture as his is: yea my limitation is plain and easie, whereas his limitation is liable to this objection, that when Gods Law requires persons to be circumcised that they might eat the Passeover, if Mr.Ms. limitation or explication be good, it should require no more but this, that persons in some sense should be accounted circumcised. For so Mr.M. understands the Law, and then, though the males were not actually circumcised, but virtually, in some sense, so accounted they might eat it, without breach of the Law, which absurdity doth not follow on my limitation, but follows inevitably on Mr.Ms.

2. Saith Mr.M. I demand further, where is there any command or institution for women to eat the Passeover (more than for women now to eat the Lords Supper) unless it be founded upon circumcision? yet in practice we know they did eat it? and if they eat it not as circumcised persons, tell me by what right they did it.

Answ. I have proved Examen part. 3. S. 12. pag. 112. Postscript to my Apology S. 11. that 1 Cor. 11. 28. & 10. 17. and 12. 13. Acts 20. 7. are expres precept and example for womens receiving the Lords Supper. And for eating the Passeover, there is an expresse precept, That all the Congregation of Israel shall keep it, Exod 12. 47. in which women were meant, and they were to eat according to the number of the Souls v. 4. and no leaven was to be in their habitation, v. 20. therfore either women must eat the Passeover, or else they must not eat bread: so that we need not go to circumcision for womens eating the Passeover. Yea, if we use no other way than that of Mr.M. it will not be proved that women ought to eat it. For Exodus 12. 48. no mention is made of any circumcised who are to eat it, but males; and though it be said, no uncircumcised might eat, yet it is not said, all circumcised must eat, much less they that are only in some sense counted circumcised. But Mr.M. seeks to make his advantage of this point thus.

If you say they were included in the Household Exod. 12. 3, 4. every household was to eat the Paschal Lamb, and there was no exception of women; I reply, first grant but the same consequence, that when we read so frequently in the New T. that whole households were baptized, and no exception of children, that therefore all the children in those households were baptized, and this Controversy is quickly ended.

Answ. If it were granted that we had no other way to prove women were to eat the Paschal Lamb (which yet we need not, as I have shewed) but from

*Exod.*12.3,4. in that every houſhold was to eat the Lamb, and there was no exception of Women, yet the conſequence were not good; whole houſholds were baptized, therefore infants, becauſe not expreſly excepted. For as Exod. 12. 3,4 infants are excepted from being required to eat the Lamb, though not in expreſs words, yet becauſe the thing to be done was not ſuch as could agree to infants of a few daies old, ſuppoſe eight or nine. So where *Act.*16.15,33. and 18.8. 1 *Cor.*1.16. the houſhold is ſaid to be baptized, beſides this, that no infants are expreſſed, in the ſame chapter or elſewhere, the ſpeech is plainly interpreted to be meant of thoſe that heard the word, and believed, as Acts the eleventh chapter, and fourteenth verſe, and ch.16. v.32,34. and 18.8.1*Cor.*16. 15. as if the holy Ghoſt had of purpoſe prevented this miſconſtruction and frivolous conſequence of Pædobaptiſts.

But ſaith Mr.M. I add further, it is not ſaid the whole houſhold ſhall eat it, for all uncircumciſed perſons were forbidden to eat it, and none but circumciſed perſons had warrant to eat it.

Anſw. It is ſaid, Exod. 12. 4. they ſhall eat the Lamb according to the number of Souls, i. e. hominum Piſc. Schol. in locum, every man according to his eating, which is a plain precept for women to eat who could eat.

Yea further, ſaith Mr.M. ſuppoſe ſome words in the inſtitution ſhould reach the Jewiſh women, yet how doth it reach the women Gentiles who ſhould prove Proſelytes to them? For Exodus chapter 12. verſe 48, 49. there is order taken for the male ſtranger, let all his males be circumciſed, and then let him come near and keep it, but there is not any word that takes order for the ſtrangers females.

Anſwer. It is ſaid verſe fourty ſeven, That all the Congregation of Iſrael ſhall keep it, and the Proſelytes of Righteouſneſſe, women as well as men were of that Congregation, and verſe fourty nine, it is ſaid, One Law ſhall be to him that is homeborn, and unto the ſtranger that ſojourneth among you: if then the Law appointed the Iſraeliti∫h women to eat, the ſame law appointed the Proſelyte Women to eat. So that notwithſtanding Mr.Ms. vain hope, my exception againſt the conſequence of his Argument, They are fœderati; Therefore they are to be ſignati, ſtand good and it is not yet proved, that bare intereſt in the Covenant Geneſis 17. or the Covenant of grace did intitle to Circumciſion, much leſs to baptiſm, which were enough to overthrow his firſt argument.

But ſith it is my task, I will now go on to the reſt of his Diſpute, taking in by the way Maſter Blakes third ſection of the 42.chapter of his Vindic. fœderis.

SECT. XIX.

Mr. Blakes exceptions againſt my Speeches in the point about the connexion between the Covenant, and initial ſeal, are refelled.

MR. Blake aſſerts a reality of connexion between the Covenant and initial ſeal, and firſt he meddles with my Examen, and then with my Anti-pædobaptiſm. To my objection that the Propoſition is not true, that all that were federate in Abrahams family, were to be ſigned, for neither Males afore the eighth day, nor females were to be circumciſed, beſides his avouching Maſter Marſhalls anſwer as ſufficient, which is reviewed before, he ſaith, Is there no connexion between them, becauſe he that receives into Covenant and appoints the ſeal, hath preſcribed a time when it ſhall be applyed?

To which I ſay, it proves that there is not a connexion between being federate, and to be ſigned, to make this Propoſition true, All that are federate are to be ſigned, barely in that they are federate. For they are federate the firſt, ſecond, third, fourth, fifth, ſixth, ſeventh day, as well as the eighth, yet not to be ſigned, whereas if there was ſuch a connexion between them according to Gods will, that the one being put, the other is to be put, they would be to be ſigned as ſoon as ever they are federate. And if it be Gods will that they ſhould be ſigned, but not till the appointed time after, I might ſay that though infants were federate, yet they were not to be ſigned with baptiſm till Gods appointed time, which is not till they be diſciples, and ſo infant baptiſm is not proved from their being in Covenant, the Major Propoſition, All that are in Covenant are to be ſigned, being true only with this limitation, in the appointed time, which is not for baptiſm till they be Diſciples. And whereas in anſwer to my objection, that if infants have right to the ſeal by being in covenant, then they have right to the Lords Supper, he anſwers.

1. That in baptiſm there is no more of neceſſity than to be paſſive. This is falſe, for baptiſm is enjoined as a duty, and ſuch as is to have repentance and faith antecedent Mark chap. 16. 16. Acts the 2. chap. 38. Act. chap. 8. verſe 37.

2. He grants that infants have true title to the Lords Supper, jus ad rem, not jus in re, a right to it, yet by reaſon of infancy have their actual intereſt ſuſpended.

But 1. ſtill Mr. Blake ſpeaks of the Lords Supper, and of baptiſm, as of priviledges meerly, whereas the Scripture ſpeaks of each as a duty as well as a priviledge.

2. By the ſame diſtinction an anſwer is given to him concerning infants baptiſm, that though they have the right to it, yet by reaſon of infancy, the actual intereſt of it is to be ſuſpended, they being no more able to profeſs the faith, till they be grown to ſome riper age then a Cradle King to rule a Kingdome.

So that Mr. Blakes anſwers yield more exceptions againſt Mr. Ms. argument, confirm it not at al, but ſhew how we may grant his Major, and yet ſo limit it that it will be too ſhort of proving baptiſm of federate perſons in infancy:

cy: and these passages of Master Blake appear to be Cavils and not Answers.

He next sets upon the fifth section of the first part of my Review, and excepts,

1. That I shew not where to find Mr. Baillees words. But if he had looked into my Letter mentioned, he had found them quickly in the third section.

2. That I denyed the Metaphor of a seal to be rightly made, the genus of a rite, as of baptism, to which he replies in his flirting fashion. We shall expect another letter to shew Saint Pauls definition, Rom. 4.11. to be alike light (who runs upon the same errour, if an errour) when he saies that Circumcision is a sign and seal, there is the genus and the differentia lies in these words to distinguish it from other signs, and seals of the righteousness of faith. The nature of a Sacrament stands in a figure, and the whole efficacy of it in the use. And how else then should the nature and use of it be held out?

To which I answer, Paul doth not give a definition, *Rom.*4.11. of circumcision, much less doth he define a Sacrament in general. Every Definition is reciprocal with the thing defined, but Mr.Bl. I presume will not say, every circumcision is a seal of the righteousness of faith, and every seal of the righteousness of faith is circumcision. Besides individuals are not wont to be defined, but what is there said is said of the singular circumcision of Abraham, and no other. The title given to Abrahams circumcision doth but shew what the use of it was to him, not what was the constant nature, and use of it on and to others. Which appears from the particularizing circumstances so exactly noted by the Apostle, to wit, the times of his justification and circumcision, which do shew that it was appropriated to Abrahams circumcision, on his own body, what he there said of Circumcision. There is no more reason to make this the definition of Circumcision [the seal of the righteousness of faith] then to make that [1 Tim 6.10. the root of all evil] the definition of the love of money, or that [*Heb.*6.16. the end of all strife] the definition of an oath, or that [v.19. the anchor of the soul firm and stable] the definition of hope, or that [*Heb.*11.1. the evidence of things not seen] the definition of faith A seal cannot be the genus of it, being a Metaphor, for a Metaphor shews not what it is, but what it is like. Circumcision is an action as it is from the agent, as in the subject a passion. The relation that comes to it is not from its nature, but by institution, and is the end of it, rather than the genus, rather for what it is, than what it is. A seal is an artificial body compound of a substance and figure, which cannot be said of Circumcision. What Mr.Bl. saith, that the nature of a Sacrament stands in a figure, cannot be true of such a figure as is in a Seal, for so baptism, the Passeover, the Lords Supper should be no Sacrament sith they do not make any figure on the body, nor of figure of speech, for so a Sacrament should not be a visible sign, but an audible. I grant the use of it is to resemble by a visible sign some other thing, as the breaking bread, Christs body broken, and in that sense it may be called a figure as Augustine called the bread the figure of Christs body. But the use belongs to the difference to distinguish it from the same action or passion used to another purpose, not to the genus. And yet sign and seal of the righteousnesse of faith, cannot be the difference to distinguish a Sacrament from the preaching of the Gospel, for the preaching of the Gospel by word or writing is a sign or seal of the righteousness

teousnes of faith. What is said *Rom.*4.11. that Abraham received the sign of circumcision, the seal of the righteousnes of faith, is not all one with this [a seal of the Covenant of grace] For it is added [which he had yet, being uncircumcised] and therefore was a sign not of a promise or covenant, concerning a thing to be done, but of a thing accomplished or already done. I see not how *Rom.*4.11. either the general nature of a Sacrament, or the special nature of circumcision may be said to be defined. Nor do I conceive it true which Mr. Bl. saith, the whole efficacy of a Sacrament is in the use: I suppose baptism, and the Lords Supper have their efficacy in comforting, moving to holines, love, &c. after the use. The nature and use of a Sacrament may be otherwise held out then Mr. Bl. doth, which I now omit. It is sufficient at present to shew the emptines of Mr. Bls. dictates. And for my rejecting of the common use of the terms of seals of the Covenant, and initial seals as Synonymous to sacraments and baptism, especially in disputes wherein proper terms should be used, I have given sufficient reason from the abuses of Pædobaptists inferring errours from a late devised term, and imposing on mens consciences: yet I profes, if baptism were granted to be a seal or initial seal, that I think that it would not follow, that it hath that relation to the Covenant; that infants in Covenant must not be denied it, but that it is a frivolous argument, infants are in covenant, therefore they must have the initial seal of the Covenant: for which if I had no other reason, yet that one of Mr. Bl. that though a person be in Covenant, and have right to the seal, yet he is not to have it till the appointed time, it were sufficient to justifie my censure.

Mr. Bl. excepts against my speech, that to have the promise, and to be a disciple or believer, are not all one, for he conceives to have a promise in Scripture phrase is to possesse it, as those Jews after the flesh did possess, Rom. 9. 4. And how to possesse a promise without faith, he doth not yet understand.

Whereto I reply, that I find the term [promise] used in Scripture sometimes metonymically for the thing promised,, as Luke 24.49. when Christ saith, I send the promise of the Father upon you, he means the Holy Ghost promised, and it is true in this sense, to have a promise is to possesse it. But in proper acception the term [promise] notes the act of the person promising, as Gal. 3. 16. to Abraham and his seed were the promises made, or spoken. So likewise v.17,18. And in this sense he hath a promise, who hath not possession of the thing promised, and thus we usually say, I have not yet such an office, revenue, estate, &c. but I have a promise of it. In which sense I took it, and so it is true, that in this sense, a man may have the promise, and not be a believer or disciple as yet. And thus I conceive it taken in all the three places in the new Testament 2 *Cor.*7.1. 1 *Tim.*4.8. *Heb.*7.6. and in this sense a person may have a promise afore he is a believer.

Mr. Blake further excepts against me:

That 1. I make these terms all one, to have a promise, and to be a child of the promise.

2. That I make a child of the promise, *Rom.*9.8. to be all one with to be an elect person, as Isaac and Jacob, v.10,11,12. were children of the promise, to whom the promise was made before they were born.

But Mr. Blake saith, That to have a promise, and to be a child of promise, are two different things in Scripture; yet shews not the difference between them.

In

In that expreſſion *Rom.*9.8. the child of the promiſe (according to the uſuall Hebraiſms, Child of light, Child of wrath, Son of perdition, which note the perſon who is the ſubject or object of thoſe ſeveral terms attributed) is a perſon of whom, or for whom, the promiſe is made, and ſo it is all one with [to have the promiſe.]

But ſaith M. Bl. if the child of the promiſe were all one with to be elect, then (according to me) all the Jews according to the fleſh were elect perſons; they had the promiſes, yea thoſe that were actors in Chriſts death Acts 2.39. which he muſt needs yield to be an abſurdity.

To which I reply, I do not conceive how this is true according to me, that if children of the promiſe be all elect, all the Jews according to the fleſh were elect perſons. Sure I no where make all the Jews according to the fleſh children of the promiſe.

Yea the text *Rom.*9.8. is ſo expreſs againſt it, that the children of the fleſh, are denied to be children of Gods, that is, children of the promiſe, which the words ſhew to be equipollent. Yea it is the expreſs determination, v.6. that all that are of Iſrael, to wit, by natural generation, are not Iſrael, to whom the promiſe was made; nor all children (that is, of God, and of the promiſe) who are the ſeed of Abraham, v.7. But that no other were children of the promiſe, though the ſeed natural of Abraham and Iſaac: but elect perſons, the Apoſtle doth not onely aſſert, but prove it in Eſau and Jacob, v.10,11,12, 13. It is true, *Rom.*9.4. it is ſaid the promiſes were the Iſraelites: but whatever the promiſes there meant were, whether of ſpiritual or corporal good things, yet it follows not that of every Iſraelite were the promiſes any more than that of every Iſraelite, v. 5. was Chriſt according to the fleſh. Nor Acts 2. 39. is it ſaid that all the Jews according to the fleſh had the promiſes. But that the promiſe was to them, their children and all afar off, whom God ſhould call: the promiſe is attributed to none but the called of God. The generality of Anti-Arminian Proteſtants make children of the promiſe to be all one with the elect, *Rom.*9.8. ſome I allege in my Exam. part. 3. ſect. 4. ſome more in my Præcurſor, and more I meet with in my reading. It is not true which Mr. Bl. ſaith, that Iſaac being born by promiſe, all his poſterity originally were of the ſame birth, for the Apoſtle concludes the contrary of Eſau, Rom. 9. 10, 11, 12. The text *Gal.*4.28. is rightly brought to ſhew that all Jews according to the fleſh, are not the children of the promiſe, but as Mr. Dicſon, we, that is believing Chriſtians, who were born after the ſpirit, and preſented by them that were born after the fleſh, v. 29. that is, by the unbelieving Jew, who ſtuck to the legal covenant. Nor need we ſay, that all the viſible Churches of Galatia were born after the ſpirit, but ouely that the true believers in them were ſo. Nor is there a word of any privileges inferiour to juſtification, as the ſeries of the text ſhews, and many learned Proteſtants cleerly expreſs. That which Maſter Blake ſaith, he will maintain, that every one in Covenant is a believer, a diſciple, that believers are ſame formally, ſuch as in act aſſent to Goſpel revelations; ſome virtually, ſuch as have the privileges of profeſſing believers, that infants in Covenant are virtually believers, in that they are honoured with the privileges of believers, and that this diſtinction the Scripture warrants, are all vain dictates, there being not one Scripture that ever calls any a believer from a privilege, but from the act of aſſent or profeſſion of faith, nor is there the leaſt colour for it out of Scripture to call infants in covenant believers without their own act of aſſent or profeſſion of faith, and therefore I let paſs theſe ſpeeches of M. Bl. as idle unproved talk, of which his book is full.

Mr. Bl. excepts againſt my ſpeech, ſome not yet born, ſome not yet called are in the covenant, have the promiſe of grace made to them. I have read (ſaith he) of a covenant entered with thoſe that at the inſtant time of the making of the Covenant were preſent, and with thoſe that were not preſent, *Deut.*29.15. with men of years, and them with their little ones, Deut. 29. 11. But I read not of a covenant actually made with any unborn.

Anſw. My expreſſion [are in Covenant] I confeſs that I remember not uſed in the Scripture, yet it is uſual in the writings of Pædobaptiſts, who uſually ſay, infants are in the Covenant of grace with their parents. The Aſſemblies larger Catechiſm avoucheth infants of parents, profeſſing faith in Chriſt within the Covenant. Mr. M. in his Sermon p.8.15, &c. And this expreſſion of theirs I knew not how to conceive they meant otherwiſe then thus, Infants have Gods promiſe of grace made to them, or for them, as in the Directory, the promiſe is made to believers and their ſeed. For infants ſaid to be in the covenant muſt be ſo by ſome act either their own, or the adminiſtrators, or Gods. Not by any act of their own, for they do nothing to that effect; not by the adminiſtrator of baptiſms act, for he doth nothing but baptize, and if his act be bringing into Covenant then bringing into covenant is all one with baptizing, and if an infidels child be baptized it is in Covenant. Beſides Pædobaptiſts aſſert they are within the Covenant afore they are baptized, as the Directory ſaith, they are fœderally holy before baptiſm. It remains then that it is by Gods promiſe. Now ſurely Gods promiſe to Abraham, and his ſeed *Gen.*17.7. which is uſually made the promiſe whereby infants of believers are in covenant, was many thouſand years ſince, 430. years before the law, Gal. 3. 16.17. Therefore even according to the uſual language of Pædobaptiſts infants of believers are in Covenant afore they are born: which Mr. Bl. had no cauſe to carp at (as he doth) but that it is almoſt all his art, eſpecially when I had to prevent it, ſo diſtinctly added to ſhew my meaning [have the promiſe of grace made to them] If Mr. Bl. have any other way whereby infants are in the covenant, as the parents vow, or profeſſion, or ſuretie for them, according to it; I ſuppoſe, infants may be ſaid to be in covenant afore they are born, ſith ſuch vows, profeſſion and promiſes may be made for them afore they are born. Let's conſider what Mr. Bl. ſaith. He tels us, he reads not of a covenant actually made with any unborn. And as I conceive by his Appendix to his Vindic. fœderis, as an addition to his firſt chapter, his reaſon is, becauſe he conceives that it is of the general nature of a covenant properly ſo called, that there be a mutual contract and agreement, which I ſhall examine when I conſider Mr. Cobbets part.1.c.3.ſect.9. of his Iuſt Vindic. For preſent, if this be true, neither can a Covenant be actually made with an infant born, ſith an infant born can no more contract, or agree, or conſent, then one unborn. Nevertheleſs I conceive, there is a covenant actually made with perſons unborn Gen. 9. 12. where God ſaith, This is the token of the Covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature, that is, with you, for perpetual generations: which doth expreſs a covenant actually made with every living creature of all fleſh for perpetual generations, therefore for thouſands of perſons unborn. Yea where he saith, he readeth of a Covenant entered into with those that were not present, *Deut.*29.15. he reads of a covenant made with persons unborn, as Piscator, Ainsworth, Iackson, Grotius, the New Annot. The notes out of the Arch-bishop of Yorks Library, &c. do conceive, and reason proves it: sith that covenant was made only with Israel, not with any other people then existent, but there was none of all Israel then born, which was not there that day, as appears from v.10.therfore those that were not there with them that day, can be no other then persons unborn, and so Mr.Blake saith not true, that he hath not read of a covenant actually made with any unborn. But were it granted that by them that were not present were meant persons existent then, there is no reason why a covenant may not as well be said to be actually made with the unborn as with the absent, who do not express any actual consent or agreement. Surely if it be true that the Covenant of grace was made with Christ afore the world for all the elect, or in the beginning of time, *Gen.*3.15. or at his death or resurrection, as many Divines speak, and sundry texts seem to intimate, Gal. 3. 16. 1 Cor. 11. 25. Tit. 1. 2. 2 Tim. 1. 9. Job. 6. 38, 39, 40. John 10. 15, 17, 18, 29, 30. Iob. 17. 9, 10, 20, 24. Isa. 53. 11, 12. Psal. 2. 7, 8. Heb. 1. 5, 6. Heb. 10. 7, 15, 16. Heb. 8. 6. Heb. 13. 20. it must of necessity be made with many persons unborn. But Mr.Blake adds.

Mr. Tombs seems here to make the Covenant and election to be one and the same, as by this passage, so by that which follows; but these Scripture still distinguishes.

To which I say, it is true that I make the elect and those that are in the Covenant of grace one and the same, but neither in that passage or any other, do I make the covenant and election to be one and the same, as Mr.Blake mistakes me.

He saith further; We find promises and prophecies, as to the taking into Covenant in time to come, *Ezek.*20. 37. but not any such respective to election.

To which I say, the prophecy of taking into Covenant, Ierem. 31. 33,34. is respective to election, or else God promises to write his Laws in their hearts, and not to remember their sins who are not elect.

He goes on. All the promises of call of the Gentiles is to bring them into the privileges of glory, formerly proper to the Jews. To be in covenant was their great privilege: And this is not conferred on the Gentiles before all time, but done in time, Isaiah 42. 6. when he brings them light, then he brings them into Covenant.

To which I say, The Jews privileges were some of them (as those Rom. 9. 4, 5.) such as God never promised to the Gentiles to bring them to, he never promised to make any entire nation little ones, servants, &c. to be his visible Church.

But God promised to the Gentiles the saving privileges of justification, adoption, regeneration, eternal life, *Ephes.*3.5,6. and this was onely to true believers or elect persons, verse. 11, 12. And these were in Covenant in respect of Gods act of promise before they were in being, in which sense alone infants may be said to be in the covenant of grace; but in respect of the conferring of the things promised and the possession of them by faith, so neither they then were in Covenant Ephes. 2.12. nor are infants now.

He

He adds, That text *Rom.*11. 26, 27, is too notoriously abused; a prophecy of their future call into covenant, is made a proof that they are already in covenant, upon that account we may make the resurrection (if not past, as the antient Hereticks Hymeneus and Philetus affirmed, 2 Tim. 2. 18. yet) at least present. There is like promise of the resurrection of the dead, as there is of the call of the Jews into Covenant, and resembled to the resurrection, as Ezek. 37. so also Rom. 11. 15. If by vertue of the text alleged they be already in covenant, by virtue of like Texts the dead are already raised.

Answ. Had Mr. Bl. either heeded my words, or been willing to give them any fair interpretation, he had forborn this censure, in which he doth too notoriously abuse me. I said, the Jews, Rom. 11. 26, 27. not yet born, or not yet called are in the Covenant, have the promise of grace made to them, which later words I put in on purpose to shew in what sense I said they were in covenant, to wit, in that they had the promise of grace made to them (in which sense I took the Pædobaptists to mean, that infants are in the covenant of grace, nor do I yet know how they can mean otherwise) and this is proved plainly from Rom. 11. 26, 27. That God hath promised to save all Israel, to turn away ungodliness from Iacob, and saith, this is his covenant unto them, when he shall take away their sins. I say not they are in covenant in respect of the things promised as already possessed, but that they are in covenant in respect of Gods act of promise, they have promise of that which they shall have when they are called, as I often express my self: which being rightly understood, the cavil of Mr. Bl. vanisheth of it self, for though the resurrection be not past, because of a promise of it, yet the term Covenant being the same with a promise they may be said to be in Covenant in respect of a promise made to them, who yet enjoy not the thing promised. Which is confirmed even from the common allegation of Pædobaptists, who say, that by vertue of the promise, Gen. 17. 7. to be a God to Abraham and his seed, infants of believers are in the covenant, which can be true only in respect of the promise made, which is as much before they are born as after.

To this Mr. Bl. answers, 1. That this can be an argument barely ad hominem; seeing though we affirm, yet he denies any such Covenant. I reply:

1. That it is true that I deny that Gen. 17. 7. there is a covenant made to believers and their seed, but I deny not the Covenant to be to Abraham and his seed, nor do I deny elect infants to be therein comprehended, and that afore they are born.

2. If it be only an argument barely ad hominem, yet it is sufficient, till the tenet on which it proceeds be disclaimed by them, which Mr. Bl. hath not yet the heart to do.

But he answers, 2. I say, as they were in being, so they were also in covenant, not actually, but potentially, which is nothing to Master Tombes his purpose.

I reply. To be potentially in Covenant may be meant either in respect of possession of the things promised, and so I grant they were in covenant onely potentially, or in respect of the making of the Covenant, and so they were in covenant actually, that is, the promise was made to them, and this is enough for my purpose to prove a person may be in covenant unborn, in which sense onely infants are in covenant, and therefore if infants thus being in covenant make them visible Church-members, and give right to their baptism, by the same reason unborn or uncalled infidels have right to baptism.

Mr. Bl. page 386. saith, he willingly closeth with me, where I say, that the judgement of charity is no rule to a Minister whom to baptize; not do I dissent from what he saith, if his meaning be as the words seem, I as well know when any man is in covenant, as he knows when he is a believer: when any man doth avouch himself to be one of the people of God, as he knows when they professe to believe. I do confesse that by the same knowledge whereby any man is known, and so far as he is known to be a believer, he is known so far to be in covenant; he that avoucheth himself to be one of Gods people, and that professeth to believe is in appearance, and to be taken as in covenant, and a believer. But how doth Mr. Bl. know that this or that infant is in covenant and to be baptized? not by Gods promise, for there is no such promise of any Gentile believer, that all his infants, or any one in particular shall be his people, either by regenerating grace, or outward ordinance: not by profession of believing or avouching himself to be one of the people of God, for no infant doth, or can without miracle do it; therefore it must be by a judgement of charity (which Mr. Bl. agrees with me to be no rule to a Minister whom to baptize) or no way. And consequently were it granted (which is not) that being in covenant in respect of Gods promise of being a God to some infants of believers did give a title to baptism, yet no Minister could upon this ground baptize this or that particular infant, nor any infant now existent, sith he neither doth nor can know without special revelation, that God hath made this promise or covenant to it.

What he addes, And it appears when it is brought home, this is all his ground of challenge of baptism of persons in covenant, because their interest in covenant is not manifest, is not right. For I assert first, that bare interest in the Covenant, that is, as I have often said, this thing, that God hath promised to be his God, doth not of it self intitle a person to baptism, sith God hath made this promise to thousands yet unborn, and of those that are born to thousands yet uncalled, perhaps Jews, yet professed unbelievers, whom no man can say rightly to have title to baptism. 2. That if it were granted this interest in the covenant did intitle to baptism, yet no Minister can by this rule justify his baptizing of an infant, sith he neither hath, nor can have, ordinarily, knowledge, that the infant he baptizeth hath this interest in the Covenant.

What he saith of me, that I seem to make election and interest in covenant commensurate; All elect are interessed in covenant, and all interessed in Covenant are elect; I do grant it, being understood of the covenant of Evangelical grace, of regeneration, justification, &c. in respect of Gods promise of it, and I have often shewed that both Paul, Rom. 9. 8. and many of the soundest Protestant Divines say the same. But what he addes of me, And elect infants (as he hath more then once acknowledged) might be baptized in case their election were known, is Mr. Bls. mistake of me, who do no where say, that they may be baptized in case their election were made known, but that infants born might be baptized in case their regeneration, faith, sanctification were made known. Whereas a person not yet begotten, may be known to be elect, but not to be regenerated, or made a believer. And by my tenet there is a bar against baptizing of infants, in that they want title to baptism; and if they have title, we want knowledge of it. As for Pædobaptists tenent I profess, I do not know what they count a bar against baptizing of infants according to their tenent, there being such uncertainty in their tenents, some holding all are to be baptized in case of danger of death, some all born in a Christian nation, some, all who are in families of persons professing the Christian faith, though the parents were infidels; some, onely the children of Church-members after the way they call Congregational; some judging of the interest in the covenant by a judgement of charity; some by a judgement of certainty. What my tenet is, I have shewed already. Though I conceive that Christs words, Mat. 19. 14. did import that the infants were elect, yet I do not say, that Christ was displeased with the disciples for being ignorant of their election and justification, and for that reason not admitting them to be blessed by him, but for that knowing Christ was the great prophet, who was sent to bless, they did hinder those that were brought to be blessed from access to him.

As for Mr. Bls. question, who say that the covenant of grace without any other command is a command to baptize infants, I think Mr. Stephens said it when he made a convertibility between the word of promise, and the word of command; and whereas Mr. Bl. saith, if Christ had never given a command for it, neither old nor young ought to have been baptized, it is true; nor in my speech of his, and Mr. Stephens tenet did I mean when I said [without any other command] to exclude the institution of baptism, but it being supposed to be instituted by Christ, Pædobaptists do frequently prove a command to baptise infants by vertue of being in covenant, without any particular command of baptizing them, or any other description that comprehends them, as Mr. Marshalls first argument in his Sermon, Mr. Bls. second argument, Vindic. fæd. chap. 43. sect. 1. shew.

Mr. Geree calls denying infant-baptism, A defalking the Covenant, and Mr. Bl. himself maintains the third speech, that the commaud to baptize disciples is all one as to command to baptize persons in covenant, when he saith, p. 335. every disciple is in covenant, and everyone in covenant is a disciple And for his Arguments asserting that infants are of Christs disciples what I have met with either are answered already in the second part of this Review, or will be answered in this part (if God permit) my conceit being still more confirmed by fuller examination of them, that they are very frivolous.

SECT. XX.

The exceptions which in the first part of my Review, sect. 5. are made against the proof of connexion between the covenant and initial seal, are confirmed against Mr. Blake, vindic. fæd. 42. ch. sect. 3.

Mr. Bl. proceeds to vindicate the proofs for the reality of connexion between the Covenant and initial seal from Gen. 17. and Acts 2.38,39. from my Answers.

And to my answer that the particle rendered [therefore *Gen.*17.9.] may be rendered [and, or, but thou] he saith, 1. we have no reason but that it may be an illative as well as a copulative; and being an illative particle, he hath no exception against the strength of it.

Whereto I reply: There need be no reason given, why it should be read [and or but] and not [therefore] but this, that either of those are the usual acceptions of the particle, that [and] is the most frequent use of it, that it may well be so in that place, and that learned interpreters do so render it. Which being not denyed, there is no strength in that proof which is made barely from the term [therefore *Gen.*17.9.] to infer that to them belongeth the initial seal, whether of the Jewish or the Christian Church, who have interest or title to the Covenant of grace. For he that will prove from it, must assert that it must be rendered [therefore] for a certain conclusion cannot be inferred from an uncertain medium.

Whereas Mr: Bl. only asserts, it may be an illative as well as a copulative particle, and not that it must be, he intimates a grant of what I answer, that it may be a copulative as well as an illative particle,

What he adds, that it being an illative particle, I have no exception against the strength of it, is manifestly untrue, sith I added three more exceptions against the proof of that proposition from thence.

But Master Blake proves the same from verse 10. taking in Acts 7. 8. and would have me at more leisure find answer to this argument. That which God himself calls by the name of a covenant ought not to be separated from it: but God calls circumcision by the name of a covenant; Ergo they ought not to be separated.

To which I answer, First, if the Conclusion be good, then circumcision and the Covenant ought not to be separated; but the covenant according to Master Marshall, Master Blake, &c. remains the same; therfore according to Master Blake circumcision ought to remain still to our children, they being in covenant.

Secondly, If the Conclusion were good, then the females and males afore the eight day being in covenant must be circumcised:

Thirdly, The conclusion is neither of those propositions, which were to be proved, to wit, 1. That the reason why Abrahams infants were to be circumcised, was their interest in the Covenant: For though it were granted that circumcision and the covenant ought not to be separated, yet it proves not the reason of this conjunction to be from interest in the covenant, sith it may be, yea, is indeed to be deduced from the command.

2. To them belongeth the initial seal, whether of the Jewish or Christian Church, who have interest or title to the Covenant of grace. For the Conclusion of Mr. Bl. doth not say any thing at all concerning the initial seal of the Christian Church, but only of circumcision.

Fourthly, To his Syllogism I answer, 1. That God calls circumcision the Covenant only by a metonymia of the thing signified for the sign.

2. That [ought not to be separated from it] may be understood of every person that hath interest in the covenant, or of every person to whom it is commanded, and when it is not dispensed with: in the former sense I deny the major, it is not true, that what God himself calls by the name of a covenant ought not to be separated from it, or that Gods calling any sign the Covenant, proves that all in covenant are to have that sign on them. For neither was it true of circumcision, sith neither were males afore the eight day or females in covenant, nor any in the wilderness to be circumcised, God either not commanding it, or dispensing with the observation of it; nor is it true of any other sign called the Covenant (if there be any) without Gods command undispensed with.

Mr. Blake saith further, 2. Let him consider the relation in which the Apostle puts this Sacrament of circumcision to the covenant *Rom.*4. 11. an instituted appointed sign and seal is not to be divided from that which it signifies, and seal is not to be divided from that which it signifies and seals; circumcision was an instituted appointed sign and seal of the covenant; therefore it is not to be divided from it.

Answ. 1. Neither doth the Apostle, Rom 4.11. make circumcision the sign and seal of the Covenant mentioned Gen. 17. nor of any covenant to be kept for the time to come, but of a benefit Abraham had before obtained *Gen.*15.6. to wit, righteousness by faith, being yet uncircumcised, nor is any ones circumcision besides Abrahams, on his own person, called, the seal of the righteousness of faith.

2. The Conclusion is, neither of the Propositions to be proved, that the reason why Abrahams infants were to be circumcised, was their interest in the covenant, that to them belongeth the initial seal, whether of the Jewish, or the Christian Church, who have interest or title to the Covenant of grace.

3. The Major proposition is true in this sense, an instituted appointed sign and seal, is not to be divided in our conceit of it, from that object or thing which it signifies or seals. But in this sense the Conclusion would be true only of an intellectual division from the object, which is nothing to the purpose. That sense in which it would be to his purpose is this, An instituted appointed sign and seal, is not to be divided, that is, not to be withheld or denied to any person or subject, who hath by promise or possession interest in the thing signifyed and sealed by that sign. But in this sense it is false, for circumcision was not to be to any female, to whom yet the promise of Canaan signified by it, belonged; Nor indeed doth any such sign belong to any person meerly from interest in the thing signified, but from the command and will of the Appointer.

I said if [therefore *Gen.*17.9.] were allowed to be the best reading, yet that the inference, v.9. should be made from the promise only, v.7. and not as well,

if not rather from the promise, verse 8. I find no sufficient reason given.

To this Master Blake replies, This reference engageth me, 1. in a contradiction to my self, Exercit. page 3. the promise of the Gospel was confirmed to Abraham by the sign of Circumcision, and that the covenant made with *Abraham Gen.*17. was a mixt covenant. 2. In a contradiction to the Apostle, who makes circumcision a sign and seal, not alone of the land of Canaan, but of the righteousness of faith.

Answ. Either I have lost all my skill in Logick, or else there is not the least colour of this charge, but Mr. Blake writes as one that scribles any thing that comes first into his fancy. A contradiction is of two propositions opposite in quantity and quality, the one universal, the other particular; the one affirmative, the other negative, my propositions are. If it were granted that [therefore *Gen.*17.9.] is the best reading; yet that the inference verse 9. should be made from the promise onely, verse 7. and not as well, if not rather from the promise verse 8. I find no sufficient reason given; the promise of the Gospel was confirmed to Abraham by the sign of Circumcision, the Covenant Gen. 17. was a mixt covenant made up of spiritual and temporal mercies: The Apostle *Rom.*4.11. saith Abraham received the sign of Circumcision a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised. If Master Blake shew in these propositions I will not say contradiction onely the greatest of oppositions, but any contrariety at all, let me be taken for a heedless Scribler; if not, let Master Blake bear the blame.

His other words [all that know the nature of Covenants, and use of seals know that the seal ratifies all that the Covenant contains. But the Covenant (Master Tombs being judge) contained not barely the promise of the land of Canaan, and therefore the reference must carry it further than the Land of Canaan] what are they but a grant of my exception, that the reference Gen. 17. 9. must be not onely to the promise verse 7. as if infants were circumcised meerly because of the promise, I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed, but also to the promise verse 8. and that they were circumcised also because of that promise of the Land of Canaan, which belongs not to us, and therefore the reason of circumcision of infants from the Covenant *Gen.*17. can be no rule to us to whom some of those promises belong not. If the seal ratifies all that the covenant contains, then it ratifies the promise of the Land of Canaan, and in respect of that it was to Abrahams infants, which not belonging to our infants the reason of circumcising infants, if it be taken from the covenant, it will not pertain to our infants to whom that promise belongs not.

I said, if it were yielded that the inference were made peculiarly from the promise, verse 7. to be a God to Abraham and his seed; it must be proved, that every believers infant-child is Abrahams seed, afore it be proved the promise belongs to them.

To this Master Blake saith, It must either be proved that they are Abrahams children, or have the privilege of the children of Abraham, which from Genesis 9. 27. Rom. 11. 17. is sufficiently proved, especially being confirmed by those texts that carry the covenant in Gospel times to the issue.

Answ. What privilege of the children of Abraham he should mean, except the promise, I will be a God to them, which should belong to every believers infant child, I understand not. The privilege of circumcision, or visible

Church-membership in the Christian Church is neither inferred from the promise *Gen.*17.7. nor from Genesis 9. 27. *Rom.*11.17. nor is there one text that carries the Covenant in Gospel times, I mean that covenant of which Christ is Mediator, mentioned *Heb.*8.10. Heb. 10. 16. (besides which I know no covenant in Gospel times) to the issue, that is, all the natural infant-issue of every believer, and that neither those texts mentioned, nor any other produced by Mr. Bl. Mr. M. Mr. Cobbet, or any other prove it, will be shewed in that which follows. For present my speech is right, the promise is not, I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed, and to him that hath the privilege of thy children. This is Master Blakes addition to the Text. And therefore no man can prove the promise belongs to the infant-child of a believer, till he be proved to be Abrahams seed: Whatsoever privilege of Abrahams children, any child may have, yet from that promise none can claim privilege, but Abraham and his seed, sith the promise is made to no other, and therefore no child of ours can claim an interest in that promise till he be Abrahams seed, which Master Blakes shift doth no whit avoid.

To my exception, that the Covenant was not made to every child of Abraham, he saith, Though it were true, yet it would not serve my purpose, provided, that we in Gospel times are under the same covenant as was Isaac; if some of Abrahams children were left out, that concerns not us, so that we are taken in.

But I reply, sure if it were true, it were much to my purpose to shew the insufficiency of the Pædobaptists inference, from Gen. 17. 7. that every child of a Gentile believer is not in covenant by vertue of that promise, if it be true that the Covenant was not made to every child of Abraham. No Pædobaptist hitherto that I know hath had the face to avouch that our children by vertue of that promise are more in covenant than Abraham children; Master Bl. himself saith, To make the inference good from *Gen.*17.7. that believers children by virtue of that promise have title to the initial seal, it must either be proved that they are Abrahams children, or have the privilege of Abrahams children; If then the covenant was not made to every child of Abraham, then every child of Abraham had not the privilege by the covenant, and then if it were granted that our children by that covenant had the privilege of Abrahams child, yet it could not be proved thence, that every child of ours hath the privilege of the Covenant, sith every child of Abraham had it not. Nor doth Mr. Bls. proviso at all help him.

For 1. it being granted, that we in Gospel-times are under the same covenant as was Isaac, and that we are taken in, (though without the limitations, first of the covenant onely, as it contains promises of saving grace; secondly, onely of true believers before God, I deny it) yet it follows not that our children are taken in.

2. Nor if it were true, that our children are taken in, doth it follow that all our children are taken in, by vertue of that promise Gen. 17. 7. sith neither all Abrahams children, nor all Isaacs children were taken in by it, Esau being expressly excluded, *Rom.*9 10, 11, 12, 13. and elsewhere, nor doth God stile himself the God of Esau as he did of Jacob.

But Mr. Blake saith, my instance from Gen. 17. 19. Heb. 11. 9. is very weak to prove, that the Covenant was not made to every child of Abraham, Ishmael

Ishmael himself was in Covenant, though not established in covenant (as God there, and verse 21. promised concerning Isaac) nor his seed never received, appears not alone by the sign and seal which he received vers. 23. which yet is sufficient (for God to seal to a blank is very strange; to sign a covenant to a man never in Covenant) but also from Gal. 4. 30. what saith the Scripture? cast out the bond-woman, and her son, for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman A man cast out of Covenant, was before casting out in Covenant; ejection supposes admission, unless we will give way to Mr Tombs his dream of ejection by non-admission. He was cast out after the time of the solemnity of his admission by circumcision, as may be seen, Gen. 22.

Answ. The Apostle Rom. 9. answering the objection, that if the Jews were rejected from being the children of God then the promise falls, or takes not effect, which God made to Abraham and his seed to be a God to them, answers verse 7, 8, 9, in these expres words, neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children, but in Isaac shall thy seed be called, That is, they which are children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise, are counted for the seed: For this is the word of promise, at this time will I come, and Sarah shall have a Son. Which words if they do not affirm, that the promise or covenant, Gen. 17. 7. was not made to all Abrahams seed, and particularly that it was not made to Ishmael, I cannot perceive any pertinency in the Apostles speech to the answering the objection made, nor know how to understand his words, nor do I remember that I ever met with an interpreter, which did not thence conceive, that the Apostle in those words did assert, that the promise or covenant was not made to Ishmael. Some I have produced Exam. part 3. S. 4. so conceiving, and many more might be alleged if it were necessary. But the words of God to Abraham, Gen. 17. 19, 20, 21. do sufficiently prove, that the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. was not made to Ishmael, and therefore he was not in Covenant by Gods act of promise. For when Abraham upon Gods promise concerning Sarah and her son, ver. 15, 16. had laughed verse 17. and petitioned for Ishmael, verse 18. God answers verse 19. by repeating his promise concerning Isaac, and saith, he would establish his Covenant with him for an everlasting Covenant, and with his seed after him, verse 20. Then tells him he heard him concerning Ishmael, and recites what he would do for him; which expresseth how far he had heard his petition. And then follows verse 21. But my Covenant will I establish with Isaac, which being adversative hath this plain sense, that he would do that for Ishmael which he had expressed, verse 20. But he would establish his Covenant, that is, confirm and perform what he had promised before verse 7, 8. in Isaac not in Ishmael; he promised not to be a God to Abraham and his seed, by Ishmael in their generations, nor to give them the Land of Canaan.

As for what Master Blake saith, that Ishmael himself was in Covenant, though not established in Covenant; it seems to intimate that he conceives, that God made the Covenant to him, but did not establish it. But sure God makes no Covenant with any which he doth not establish, if he did, he should not be true. Nor is there any such emphasis in the word אנים, I will establish, which doth intimate, that the Covenant was made to Ishmael, but established; that is, confirmed, and to be certainly performed onely to Isaac, for the phraſe uſed elſewhere, Gen. 9. 9, 11. doth expreſs no more than is meant v. 12. this is the token of the Covenant I make between, me and you.

As for Maſter Blakes proof that Iſhmael was in Covenant, becauſe he was circumciſed, Gen. 17. 23. it reſts upon theſe unproved falſe ſuppoſitions.

1. That circumciſion was appointed to men becauſe they were in covenant with God.

2. That God did by circumciſion ſign the covenant to him that was circumciſed.

3. That every one that was appointed by God to be circumciſed was in covenant. As for the ſpeech that God doth not ſeal to a blank, it is a ſpeech the Scripture uſeth not, and it having various ſenſes may be true in ſome ſenſe, in other falſe. A blank is ſuch a paper as hath no writing in it, or wherein there is ſome empty ſpace left to write more in, whether perſons names, or promiſes, or other matter. By Gods ſealing Mr. Bl. means the uſing of Circumciſion, baptiſm, the Paſſeover, the Lords Supper, according to Gods appointment. That which he conceives to be ſealed thereby is the Covenant, Gen. 17. 7. which he makes all one with the Covenant of grace, and by proving every Sacrament to be a Seal of the Covenant of grace, from Rom. 4. 11. his meaning ſhould be, that God ſeals in the adminiſtrators right uſe of every Sacrament to every perſon, that he is in Covenant, that he hath the righteouſneſs of faith, elſe God ſhould ſeal to a blank. But in that ſenſe I do aver it to be moſt true, that God doth ſeal to a blank, that is, that many thouſands had circumciſion, the Paſſeover, baptiſm, and the Lords ſupper, according to Gods inſtitution and appointment, who were never in Covenant with God, nor did God ſeal, that is, aſſure to them their intereſt in the Covenant, Geneſis 17. or the Covenant of Grace in Goſpel times, or the righteouſneſs of faith. But in this ſenſe I grant it to be true that God doth not ſeal to a blank, that is, when he appoints any ſign or ſeal of a Covenant, he doth not appoint it a ſign and ſeal of a Covenant that hath no promiſes, or wherein the perſons to whom, and the promiſes are not ſufficiently expreſt, yet he doth command that ſign to be uſed upon perſons to whom is no promiſe in that covenant, as well as thoſe to whom it is made, yea the uſing it on one perſon may ſeal to thouſands, who are not to have it on their own perſons, as the circumciſing of Abraham himſelf was a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith to all believers of the Gentiles, who were not to be circumciſed. And if every ones Circumciſion ſhould ſeal to him, the righteouſneſs of faith, then circumciſion ſhould by Gods appointment ſeal that which is not true, which is not to be ſaid of God.

Nor doth Mr. Blake prove from Galatians 4. 30. that Iſhmael was firſt in Covenant, becauſe he was after caſt out; for the caſting out is not appointed to be out of the Covenant, for that Abraham could not do, to whom this ſpeech is directed, it is God that puts in and out of his Covenant, but the caſting out is out of Abrahams family, which was to be done by Abraham. If it be replyed, that this was a ſign of caſting out of Covenant, and therefore ſuppoſed he was in Covenant, I anſwer ſo it was a ſign of caſting out of the inheritance, out of the righteouſneſs of faith, out of the Kingdom of heaven, which yet neither he, nor thoſe whom he typified, and ſo were caſt out with him, ever had.

What he calls my dream of ejection by non-admiſſion, doth but ſhew Mr. Blakes own oſcitancy.

For Matthew 8. 12. it is said, the children of the Kingdome, that is, the Jews shall be cast out, to wit, of the Kingdom of heaven, where Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob sit down, into outer darkneſſe; and yet thoſe children of the Kingdom, were never in the Kingdom of heaven, nor ever ſhould be.

Iſhmaels caſting out after the time of the Solemnity of his admiſſion by circumciſion, doth not prove he was in covenant before. Neither circumciſion, nor baptiſm, doth admit men into covenant with God. If they did, then adminiſtrators could put men in and out of Covenant with God; but that is Gods prerogative, not in mans power. Even according to Pædobaptiſts ſuppoſitions, perſons are firſt to be in Covenant afore they are to be baptized, therfore baptiſm doth not admit them into Covenant.

Maſter Blake addes; For tha tof Hebrews 11. 9. it is a myſtery, what he will make of it, unleſſe he will conclude, that becauſe Abraham ſojourned in the Land of promiſe, that therefore none were in Covenant, that were not taken into that Land, ſo Moſes and Aaron will be found out of Covenant.

To which I reply. The myſtery might have been unveiled, if Mr. Blake had heeded that the Author of that Epiſtle calls onely Iſaac and Jacob of thoſe that dwelt with Abraham in tents, heirs with him of the ſame promiſe, therefore Iſhmael and Eſau were not heirs with him of the ſame promiſe, though he dwelt in tents with them, and conſequently were not in the Covenant, or had not the Covenant or promiſe of Abraham made to them.

Upon thoſe words of mine; As for a viſible Church-ſeed of Abraham, that is neither his ſeed by nature, nor by ſaving faith, nor by excellency, in whom the nations of the Earth ſhould be bleſſed, to wit, Chriſt, I know none ſuch in Scripture, though ſome men have fancied ſuch a kind of Church-ſeed, as it is called.

Maſter Blake thus animadverts. I know not how ſaving faith comes in, when a faith of profeſſion will ſerve the turn. Abrahams ſeed had circumciſion as a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, when their parents had no more than a faith of profeſſion.

To which I reply, a meer faith of profeſſion will not ſerve turn to make any Gentile to be rightly according to the Scripture termed Abrahams ſeed. None of them in Scripture are counted Abrahams ſeed, but either true believers before God, or elect perſons. No where doth the Scripture ſay, that the Circumciſion which any of Abrahams ſeed had was as a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith to them, when their parents were true believers, much leſs when their parents had no more than a faith of profeſſion. Mr. Blakes talk, that all that which my three former exceptions gainſaid is made good, is but vain, as the reſt of his arguing. Let us here ſee what he addes further.

I had ſaid, Laſtly, were all theſe things yielded, yet the propoſition could not be made good from hence, ſith the inference is not concerning title or right of infants to the initial ſeal, as if the Covenant or promiſe of it ſelf, did give that, but the inference is concerning Abrahams duty, that therefore he ſhould be the more ingaged to circumciſe his poſterity.

Hereupon Mr. Blake tells me, I ſhould rather have left this to my adverſaries for the ſtrengthening of their propoſition, than have made uſe of it my ſelf for refutation of it. It was Abrahams duty to give them according to Gods command the initial seal: in this Master Tombs and we are agreed; whether it will thence follow that they had right and title to it, or without right, let the Reader determine.

Answ. The Adversaries propositions to be refuted were, first, That the reason why Abrahams infants were to be circumcised, was their interest in the Covenant, which they would gather from Gen. 17. 7, and 9. put together; secondly, That to them belongeth the initial seal, whether of the Jewish or Christian Church, who have interest or title to the Covenant of grace. But if the inference be not of title or right in the persons to be circumcised, but of duty in the administrator, and the propositions be of title or right from the Covenant, and not of duty, the adversaries propositions are not rightly gathered from that inference, which is not concerning right or title but duty. As for Master Blakes jeer rather than answer, it is unworthy a serious sober man. For my speech did not intimate that the infants were circumcised without right or title, but that the inference, Gen. 17. 9. was of duty, not of title or right, and that what title the infants had to circumcision it was not, as Pædobaptists suppose, from the interest in the Covenant which the circumcised had, but the command of God to the circumciser, and therefore there is not any connexion between interest in the Covenant and title or right to the initial seal without the command, nor this proposition true. All they who are in Covenant are to be sealed with the initial seal, unless this limitation be added, when it is commanded. Now if this limitation be put, then, though the infants of believers were granted to be in Covenant, yet they are not to be baptized, till over and besides their being in Covenant a command for their baptism be shewed, which hath not been yet, nor I think ever will be.

There are some more of Mr. Blakes jeers or flirts rather than sober and serious answers yet remaining. To what I said, that Abraham was engaged to circumcise only those that are males, and not afore eight daies, and not onely those that were from himself, but also all in his house, whose children soever they were, which apparently shews that the giving circumcision was not commensurate to the persons interest in the Covenant, but it was to be given to persons as well out of Covenant as in, if of Abrahams house, and not to all that were in the Covenant, to wit, females: which doth clearly prove that right to the initial seal, as it is called, of circumcision did not belong to persons by vertue of the Covenant, but by force of the command, Mr. Blake in his flirting fashion thus speaks. If he can prove that Abraham kept Idolaters in his house, professedly worshipping a false God, and gave Circumcision to them in that faith and way of worship; it would prove that a man might have the seal, and not be in Covenant. And it will prove a man might have the seal, and not be in covenant, though I cannot prove any Idolater in Abrahams house, if I can prove there were or might be infants or young persons who were children of Idolaters, for such were not in covenant as the seed of believers, or by their own profession.

But, saith he, it would not prove that he might be in covenant, and be denied the seal. True, but this that infant-males under eight daies old, and females in covenant might be denyed the seal, would prove it.

And then, saith Mr. Bl. infant-baptism might be of easier proof. Though they were not in Covenant, though they were not holy, yet they might be baptized. I reply, I grant that persons in Covenant might be denyed Circumcision, but think infant-baptism never a whit the easier proved. I ſtt-circumciſion is commanded of all in Abrahams houſe, whether in covenant or no, but baptiſm to none becauſe he is in covenant, or holy, but becauſe a diſciple, which is not true of any infant ordinarily.

But, ſaith Maſter Blake, I will not yield ſo much; I do not believe that Abraham carried circumciſion beyond the line of the Covenant, and that he had thoſe in his houſe which were aliens from God; ſeeing I find that teſtimony of the Lord concerning him, Geneſis chap. 18. verſe 19. and find that reſolution of Joſhua, Joſhua chap. 24. verſe 14, 15. I believe Abraham catechized all he took in as Heathens, and did not circumciſe them as Heathens.

Anſw. I believe he did not circumciſe them as Heathens, but as his own bought with his money, and of his houſe, and if he bought any infants, or young children (which was then, and hath been ſince uſual, where men and women are ſold as ſlaves) he did circumciſe infant or young males of heathen Idolaters. For the command of God was he ſhould, and yet thoſe infant or young males of heathen Idolaters could not be catechized, nor were in Covenant, either by their own profeſſion, or their parents right, or any promiſe of God to them; and therefore circumciſion in that caſe muſt be carried beyond the line of the Covenant.

To what I added of Maſter Marſhalls Confeſſion, That he granted the formal reaſon of the Jews, being circumciſed, was the command, and the covenant he makes only a motive, Defence page 182. Maſter Blake ſpeaks thus. I wonder what need there is of an argument to force ſuch a Confeſſion. The reaſon I ſay, why Jews were circumciſed, and Chriſtians baptized, is the command; were there a thouſand Covenants and no inſtitution of a ſign or ſeal, ſuch a ſign or ſeal, there could have been no circumciſion, no baptiſm. The command is the ground, and the Covenant is the Directory to whom application is to be made: we ſay, all in Covenant are entitaled to the ſeal for admiſſion; but we preſuppoſe an inſtitution.

I reply, If the formal reaſon why the Jews were circumciſed were the Command, and the Covenant onely the motive, then the command was the differencing reaſon; for the form diſtinguiſheth, and the formal reaſon is the reaſon which differenceth. Motives are not directions what to do, but commands, the ſame motive may be to contrary commands. The Command is the Directory to whom application is to be made both of circumciſion and baptiſm. The command doth expreſs not only the act to be done, but alſo the perſons to whom. The Covenant is no Directory to whom circumciſion, or baptiſm is to be applyed. The whole Covenant of Circumciſion is expreſſed, Geneſis 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. But there is not a word who are to be circumciſed, but after. There is not the leaſt hint in the inſtitution of baptiſm, Matthew chap. 28. verſe 19. Mark chap. 16. verſe 15. of any Covenant God makes to man. To imagine God commanded circumciſion and baptiſm, and yet not to tell who are to be baptized or circumciſed but from the Covenant, which no man knoweth to whom it belongs, is to imagine God gives a blind command, which no wiſe Maſter would do. It is not true, all in covenant are entitled to the ſeal for admiſſion, for then females, males under eight daies old, believers out of Abrahams house, Proselytes of the gate had been entitled to Circumcision, for they were in Covenant as well as those who were to be circumcised.

And it is as certain on the other side that Ishmael, Esau, the infants of strangers bought by Abraham, with his money, were to be circumcised, though they were not in Covenant, and therefore I inferre it as certain, that being in covenant or interest in the covenant, or having the promises of the Covenant, Genesis 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. or the new Covenant in Christs blood Heb. 8. 10, 11, 12. and 10. 16, 17. or any other Evangelical Covenant, all, or some of them made to a person did not intitle a person to circumcision, nor doth now to baptism, nor can be without the command or institution of Christ, or primitive example, a rule, Directory or sufficient warrant for any to baptize a person, nor acquit him from profaning and abusing baptism, and therefore there is no such reality of connexion between the Covenant and seal, that this proposition is thereby proved true, All in Covenant are intitled to the seal for admission: or this false, some of those who are not in covenant are intitled to the seal (as they call it) for admission: and Master Blakes censure of my exceptions as frivolous trifles shews his weakness in disputes, there being very little in his arguings or answers but flirts, quips, dictates and impertinencies.

What he addes of my grants discovers the like vanity; For though I say that believers, and disciples are to be baptized, not barely on their faith and knowledge, but upon the Command to baptize such, yet how it follows which Mr. Blake saith, so that the command is with reference to the Covenant, with reference to the interest in the Covenant, is to me a meer inconsequence, unless he imagine the command and Covenant all one, which to assert were ridiculous. And who will believe that I attribute as much to the Covenant respective to this seal, when I say Examen page the seventieth eight, That the common privilege of Circumcision belonging to the Jews, did not arise from the Covenant of grace, according to the substance of it, but according to the administration that then was, as Master Marshall to the Command, when he said, The Command was the formal reason of the Jews being circumcised.

When I do not at all make circumcision to arise from the Covenant as any reason of the duty, much less the formal reason of it, but as from the occasion of it, whereas Master M. makes the command, the very formal reason of the existence of the duty.

Sect.

SECT. XXI.

The ten Exceptions of the first part of my Review against Pædobaptists exposition and allegation of Acts 2. 38, 39. for the connexion between Covenant and seal are vindicated from Master Blakes answer, Vindic. Fœderis, ch. 37, 43.

MR. Blake addes some snatches against my ten exceptions to Pædobaptists exposition of Acts 2. 38, 39. To the first which was, that the promise is not proved to be that Genesis 17. 7. and Acts 3. 25. Acts 2. 30. lead us to some other, he saith, when a promise is mentioned and a seal, any man but he will presently understand that promise, which is ratified by such a Seal.

To which I reply. Where is there mention of a seal? or of a promise sealed or to be sealed as he speaks? If there were, is there no other promise to be ratified by such a Seal but that? Did circumcision seal no other promise but that? Doth the Scripture give the least hint of sealing that promise, Gen. 17. 7. understood as Pædobaptists expound it, that God would be a God to every believer, and to his seed, in respect at least of visible Church-membership, yea though he be a believer onely by profession? They use to tell us that Circumcision seals the righteousness of faith, from Rom. 4. 11. But to seal this and to seal the promise, Gen. 17. 7. (as Pædobaptists do rack rather than expound the words) are as much different as are the payment of Gold, and lead. Have not learned men expounded the promise, some of that mentioned, ver. 38. of the gift of the holy Ghost, some of other promises? why then doth Master Blake so ineptly intimate me to be singular in my conceit? why doth he so falsely insinuate that no more than bare words can be found for my exposition; when I bring two texts to confirm it, and Mr. Bl. saith not a word to infirm my alleging them? what he refers me to in his 37. ch. and Mr. Cobbet shall be examined in its place.

To the second, which was that [the promise is Acts 2. 39] is expounded,

1. of a promise of a thing to come, whereas it may seem rather from Acts 13. 32, 33. to be meant of a promise already fulfilled.

2. That the thing to come promised was some outward privilege to be conferred on them and their children.

Mr. Blake saith, yet he quotes no man for this exposition of a thing to come, but on the contrary quotes Mr. Cobbet in the margin against it. It is meant of a present right; for as yet they were not broken off from the olive, nor Gentiles grafted in.

Answ. 1. That Pædobaptists do understand the words Acts 2. 39. of a promise of some thing to come appears, 1. in that many of them make it the same with this, I will be a God to a believer, and his seed.

So Master Marshall Defence page 126. Mr. Drew ubi supra, Mr. Blake out of Calvin, Vindic. fœderis page 270. and others. Now a promise that he will be a God to them is a promise of a thing to come. 2. In that they disclaim the ſupplement [is fulfilled] as Mr. Cobbet Juſt. Vindic. part 1. ch. 2. ſect. 3. and uſually, as Beza, the Engliſh Directory, Mr. Blake and others expound it, the promiſe is made, which proves it is, according to them, meant of ſomething to come, not of a thing paſt, for if it were it ſhould be a promiſe fulfilled. Mr. Cobbet, it is true, ſaith, the promiſe in præſenti is to you in reſpect of external right; but then he muſt needs mean it, that the promiſe was in præſenti made of external right to come, or elſe he muſt mean it of a promiſe fulfilled, which he denies.

And for the other, that Pædobaptiſts do expound it of outward privilege to be conferred on them, and their children, beſides Mr. Cobbets words cited, and other in the ſame ſection; Mr. Hudſon Vindic. page 223. ſaith, This promiſe Acts 2. 39. is that external covenant to which baptiſm doth belong, and the Aſhford Diſputants for Infants-baptiſm, grant, That the promiſe of the eternal inheritance, life and ſalvation is not made, much leſs made good to any upon terms of the parents faith, but upon our own perſonal belief, and obedience, but the promiſe of outward privileges, and of right to participation of Ordinances as to be baptized, and inchurcht, this belongs to children upon their parents faith, and in this laſt ſenſe it is, that Peter ſaies the promiſe is to you and your children, &c. i. e. you and yours have the privilege of right to baptiſm.

To my third exception, that [to you] is taken, as if it were meant of thoſe perſons to whom he ſpake, as then believers, and under that formal conſideration, Mr. Blake ſaith, I do not interprete it of any preſent explicit faith in Chriſt as the Meſſiah; but now this conviction, that ſo evidently appeared, did evidence them to be in an hopeful way, and with that Scribe not to be far from the Kingdom of God, and therefore he takes his opportunity, and preſſeth it on to come into the way of believers in Chriſt Jeſus.

Anſw. This grant is ſufficient, firſt, to juſtify my exception, ſecondly, to overthrow Mr. Blakes, and other Paedobaptiſts inference from this text,

1. That in this text the Covenant in New Teſtament times is held out in this latitude to believers and their ſeed, Vindic. fœd. chap. 37. For if they had not any preſent, explicit faith in Chriſt as the Meſſiah, then they were not believers.

2. That this ſpeech [the promiſe is to you, and to your children] is equipollent to this promiſe [I will be a God to believers and their ſeed] for if they were not then believers, it had been falſe if the Apoſtle had ſaid as they would have him, the promiſe that God will be a God to believers and their ſeed, is in præſenti to you and your children, when they were not believers.

To my fourth Exception, that [your children] is expounded of their infant-children; yea it is carried as if of them onely, he ſaith, to this is ſufficient ſpoken, ch. 37. I ſhall therefore look back to that chapter, page 270. he ſaith, Acts 2. 39. an effectual call cannot be meant (which the Apoſtle calls a call according to purpoſe) proper onely to the elect, ſo the viſible ſeal would be limitted to inviſible members. But this is not true, for then the being of the promiſe would be limitted to them, not baptiſm.

It is falſe which Maſter Blake ſuppoſeth, that baptiſm is limitted to them to whom the promiſe is, and that the being of the promiſe to a perſon intitles to his baptiſm. He ſaith; it is a call unto ſuch a Church-ſtate as the whole

tion of the Jews did then enjoy as the first-born in the family. To which I reply, The whole Nation of the Jews enjoyed a Church-state, by which they were joyned in one national society under an high Priest, and other Priest offering sacrifices at the Temple, whither the Church-members were to bring their gifts, and to observe the Levitical rites. It is a dotage with a witness to conceive that Peter meant Acts 2. 39. that the promise was to them or those afar off, whom God should call to this Church-state. It is certain that the calling of the Jewes and Gentiles, by the Gospel was to remove them out of that society, and Church-state, as appears by v. 40. nor did the Apostles ever associate the Christians to the Jews as Proselytes to them, nor did they ever draw them into any such Church-state, as the Jews had to take in a whole Nation, City, or Family, comprehending Infants into the Christian church, but onely so many as believed as v. 41. 42, &c. shew: yea to call them to such a Church-state as the Jewes had, had been to call them not to baptism, but to circumcision and the observation of Moses Law. The call of God, Acts 2. 39. is no other then what is mentioned in the new Testament to be Saints, to his Kingdom and Glory, to the fellowship of his sonne by his word and spirit, or one of them at least, yea the promise being meant of Christ, which Master Blake doth not deny, as will appear in that which followes, it can be expounded onely of those that are effectually called, sith to them onely Christ belongs: on the other side to understand it of a call unto such a Church-state as the whole nation of the Jewes did then enjoy, is to limit the promise to Jewish proselytes, or to national Christian Churches, which is a wild conceit, unfit for a serious and sober Divine. But Master Blake goeth on from whence this Argument may be drawn, those to whom the Covenant of Promise appertains have a right to baptism, But the Covenant of Promise appertains to men in a Church-state and Condition and to their Children. The Major cannot be denied by any that will not make themselves the Apostles opposites. The Minor proposition is now onely to be considered, that the Covenant of promise to men in a Church-state and Condition is in that latitude as to comprize their Children, For which the words of the Apostle are full and clear. To you is the promise made, and to your Children, on which Calvin rightly comments. Peter observes (saith he) a due order when he assignes the first place of honour to the Jewes, that it takes in Children, it depends on the word of promise Gen. 17. 7. I will be thy God and the God of thy seed, where God joynes children with their parents in the priviledge of Adoption, where Adoption is taken in the Apostles sense, Rom. 9. 5. to the inheritance of privileges belonging to all Church-members, as he after explains himself.

Ans. The Major is ambiguous, and in some sense it is true, and in some sense false. It is true in this sense, Those to whom the Covenant of Promise by their beleiving, and Covenanting to be Christs Disciples, appertains, have a right to baptism. But in this sense (in which Master Blake seems to understand it, for he comprehends Infants in the Covenant) Those to whom the Covenant of Promise by Gods Acts of Promise, whether of saving Grace or Church-privileges, appertains without their personal believing or covenanting, have a right to baptism, it is false. Nor is the Contradictory thereto opposit to any thing the Apostle saith, who doth indeed exhort to repentance and baptism, but doth not from the promise without each persons repentance ascribe a right to bap-baptiſm to any parent or child, the promiſe is not urged by him to declare a right to baptiſm of it ſelf without repentance, but to encourage to repentance and baptiſm into the Name of Chriſt as their duty. The Minor alſo is ambiguous, it being uncertain what he means by the Covenant of Promiſe, whether the Covenant whereby the perſons promiſe to God, or God to them; and if of this latter, whether the Covenant wherein God promiſeth to them, be of ſaving-graces, or of Church-priviledges; if he mean it of the former, & underſtand it univerſally, it is manifeſtly falſe, contrary to Scripture and experience; whether the Church-ſtate be in reſpect of the viſible or inviſible Church, there is no ſuch promiſe of God, that if the Parent be in a Church-ſtate or condition, ſo as to be elect, or true beleiver, much leſs if he be onely in the viſible Church, that his child, as his child, ſhall be in the Covenant of ſaving grace, have Chriſt, his Spirit, remiſſion of ſins, and life everlaſting by him. Nor is it true of the promiſe of Church-priviledges, that God will take the child of him who is in a Church-ſtate and condition for a viſible Church-member, capable of the initial ſeat, (becauſe he is his child) without the childs perſonal faith and repentance. Nor do I know of any Covenant of Promiſe now under the Goſpel of ſuch outward Church-priviledges, but take it to be a faction of Pædobaptiſts; nor is there in the Apoſtles words any thing to prove the Minor. For neither doth the text ſay, the promiſe is that, Gen. 17.7. nor that it is made, but onely [is] nor doth ſay, it is to you as in a Church-ſtate and condition, and to your children as the children of men in a Church-ſtate and condition. And for Calvins words neither are they plain for Mr. Bls. purpoſe, nor if they were, ſhould I take them for an oracle, but ſhould expect better proof then his or Maſter Bls ſayings. As for the Adoption, Rom. 9.5. it is clear from the text, and confeſſed by Maſter Rutherford, Due right of Presbytery ch. 4. Sect. 4. pag. 192. to have been a prerogative of the Jewes, as was the giving of the Law, the deſcent of Chriſt, &c. and therefore it is untruly ſuggeſted by Maſter Blake to be an inheritance of priviledges belonging to all Church-members, or that the Apoſtle doth after ſo explain himſelf; and Maſter Blake continues his want of dictating without prooſe. He next takes on him to anſwer objections. One is, that the children are the ſame with ſons and daughters mentioned, v. 17. from Joel 2. 28. and conſequently the promiſe is of the ſpirit of prophecy, and appertaining to none but thoſe of age and capacity for prophecy. To which he anſwers, 1. That the promiſe cannot be that extraordinary gift of the Holy Ghoſt in that viſibie way, becauſe it is enlarged to all the Lord ſhall call: but all theſe have not the Holy Ghoſt in that extraordinary way, nor any promiſe of it. I confeſs, this anſwer is good againſt thoſe that expound the words thus, the promiſe of the gift of prophecy, Joel 2. 28. is to you and your children, and to all afar off, as the ſubjects to whom this gift is promiſed; for then it would not be true, ſith all had not that gift, 1 Cor. 12. 28. yet it may be true in this ſenſe. The promiſe of the gift of the Spirit in that viſible way, is fulfilled to you and your children, and all afar off called by God, as the perſons who had benefit by it, and ſo were the Finis cui of thoſe gifts promiſed as having the benefit of them, though not the ſubjects in whom they were. 2. Saith Maſter Blake, however the promiſe be extended, yet that promiſe is on condition of their baptiſm, and is an encouragement to baptiſm, and in that latitude as they had formerly known the command of circumciſion. To which I ſay, 1. If the promiſe be interpreted ſo as to belong to all that are beleivers, and call on the Name of the Lord, as here followes, then the promiſe is to the elect onely, and the call into the viſible Church, which Maſter Blake before denied. 2. Though extraordinary gifts were given after baptiſm often, yet they were given alſo before, Acts 10. 44, &c. and therefore I doubt it is not true which Maſter Blake ſaith, that promiſe of extraordinary gifts is on condition of their baptiſm, nor doth the text aſſert it. 3, As the promiſe is an encouragement to baptiſm, ſo it is to repentance, which is firſt required afore baptiſm by the Apoſtle. 4. There is not a word in the text, Acts 2. 38, 39. which yields a proofe of any of thoſe poſitions which Maſter Bl. ſo importunely obtrudes, 1. That baptiſm is there urged as a ſign and ſeal of the promiſe. 2. That they were encouraged to baptiſm in that latitude as they had formerly known the command of Circumciſion. 3, That the Scripture delivereth, and the Apoſtle urgeth the promiſe as to men and their poſterity, to them and theirs, ſo as that God promiſeth to be a God in Covenant to his and their ſeed. 4. That the Apoſtle holds this out to draw them on to this ſeal of the Covenant, to accept baptiſm on the ſame terms that Abraham did circumciſion.

But Maſter Blake his chiefeſt oppoſition about this text is againſt me, and therefore he bends himſelf againſt the fourth Section of my Exercit. And firſt. he excepts againſt my words, that the promiſe made (which reading I then followed, but ſince like rather the ſupplement [fulfilled] is the ſending of Jeſus Chriſt and bleſſing by him, as is expounded, Acts 3. 25, 26. Acts 13. 32. Rom. 15. 8, 9. Thus I anſwer, it is true that Jeſus Chriſt is the moſt eminent mercy promiſed, and may be called the promiſe virtualiter, being the ground of all promiſes, and therefore ſome Interpreters have mentioned the gift of Chriſt on this occaſion. But it is plain that Gods Covenant and this gift are to be diſtinguiſhed; Chriſt is promiſed in priority to the Jew, before the Gentile; The Jew then is taken into Covenant before this gift of Chriſt can be of them expected: It is therefore the covenant it ſelf (entred with parent and child, root and branch) that is here meant, as Calvin in the words before obſerves, from which the giving of Chriſt in the fleſh followes. And therefore Diodati fully pitches upon the true ſenſe of it, ſeeing as you are Abrahams children, you are within the Covenant, you ought to acknowledge Chriſt to be the head and foundation of the covenant. The covenant I will be thy God and the God of thy ſeed is here meant, which from Abraham had been the Jewes priviledge, Rom. 9.

To which I reply, If Chriſt may be called the promiſe virtually, then it is no obſcuring the text, to interpret the being of the promiſe to them of the ſending of Jeſus Chriſt and bleſſing by him, nor doth this hinder the diſtinguiſhing of Gods covenant and this gift, or the promiſing of Chriſt to the Jew before the Gentile, or the Jewes taking into covenant before this gift of Chriſt can be expected of them, or that the giving of Chriſt in the fleſh followed the covenant it ſelf entered with parent and child, root and branch, meaning Abraham and his ſeed, as the Apoſtle, Gal. 3. 16. underſtands it; and therefore in all this there is nothing brought by Maſter Blake, which makes void my interpretation, but confirms it rather. But for ſuch a covenant as Maſter Blake imagines of Gods being God to every believer and his infant child, in reſpect of Church-membership in the Church viſible of Chriſtians, and other outward

Church-priviledges, I find no word in all the Scripture. And for Diodati his words, if he ſo meant what he ſpeaks of their being in covenant, becauſe they were Abrahams children by natural deſcent, he anſwered from the ſenſe of the place; but Maſter Blake hath more to ſay to me.

I had ſaid, the limitation, as many as the Lord our God ſhall call, ſhewes that the promiſe belongs to them, not ſimply as Jewes, but as called of God, which is more expreſly affirmed, Acts 3. 26. To this Maſter Blake anſwers, I wonder how it came into Maſter T. his head to call this application a limitation; it plainly enough ſpeaks his boldneſs in dealing with the Scriptures; had the Apoſtle ſaid, to you is the promiſe made, and to your ſeed, in caſe God ſhall give you a call, he had ſpoke to Maſter T. his purpoſe: but ſaying, to you and to as many as the Lord your God ſhall call, it plainly ſhewes that he does not limit, but amplifie the mercy, extending it not barely to the Jewes (who in preſent by reaſon of fruition of ordinances were a people near to the Lord, Pſal. 148. 14. but alſo to the Gentiles, who, Epheſ. 2. 17. were afarre off.

To which I reply, A limitation of a propoſition is the determining of it according to what the predicate agrees to the ſubject, or doth not agree, as Keckerm. ſyſt. Log. l. 2. ſect. 1. c. 4. And thus do the words [as many as the Lord (not as Maſter Blake, your, but) our God ſhall call] limit the copulative propoſition [the promiſe is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off] determining to which of each of theſe, and in what reſpect the promiſe is to them. And to take away Maſter Blakes wonderment (the fruit of ignorance, and often of folly) which he and his brother Baxter do often expreſs about me, that they may deſcribe me as ſome ſtrange example of Gods judgment in blaſting my intellectuals, I will tell him how it came into my head to call thoſe words a limitation of the propoſition. Firſt, the placing of the words at the end of the propoſition, did give me occaſion to take them for a limitation. Secondly, the term ὅσοι as many as] is a limitting term, appropriating the thing ſaid to thoſe ſubjects forenamed, who were ſo qualified as to be called by the Lord. Thirdly, (which was the prime inducement) I conceived the ſpeech of Peter had not been true without that limitation, And this I long ſince told Maſter M. in my Exam. part. 3. Sect. 6. pag. 60. If the promiſe be of ſaving graces, if of Chriſt ſent, if of the outward ordinances of baptiſm, &c. if of the Holy Ghoſt in extraordinary gifts, it is none of theſe wayes true without that limitation. For neither God promiſed ſaving graces, nor outward ordinances, nor extraordinary gifts, , nor ſent Chriſt to them, their children, or all that are afar off without calling them, and every of them. And but that Maſter Bls. Maſter Bs. and ſuch like wonderers heedleſneſs and peeviſhneſs are no ſtrange thing to me, I ſhould wonder that Maſter Blake ſhould no better heed my words in my Examen, nor Diodati his words (who, he ſaith, fully pitches upon the true ſenſe of it) which in his Annot. on Acts. 2. 39. are theſe, ſhall call, namely by his Goſpel. So he doth reſtrain the Iſraelites to whom the promiſes are directed onely to thoſe, who by Gods gift believe in Chriſt; ſee Rom. 9. 8. Gal. 4. 28. which had Maſter Blake faithfully ſet down in ſtead of ſome other words I find in him, his Reader might have diſcerned how falſe it is, that the promiſe is to an infant child of a believer, as his child, without calling; and have diſcerned that it is not my device onely, but that which others before me apprehended, and ſo no more boldneſs in my dealing with the Scriptures then was meet, and the Apoſtles words to have this plain ſenſe, the promiſe is to you, being called of God; and to your children, being called of God; and to all afar off, being called of God; and to no other. And to requite Maſter Blake, I may more truly ſay, It's a wonder how it came into Maſter Blakes head to call this limitation an amplification. For though the words [to all that are afar off] contain an amplification of the mercy either to the poſterity of the Jewes, or to thoſe in the diſperſion, or to the Gentiles (of which I will not now diſpute) yet the words [as many as the Lord our God ſhall call] are a plain limitation of his ſpeech, as I have proved. But Maſter Blake addes of me, 2. In that he ſaith, this promiſe belongs to them not ſimply as Jewes, but as called, is a full contradiction; A Jew uncalled (at this time before the Kingdome was taken from them) is as much as a convert unconverted, or a Gentile diſciple undiſcipled: In caſe he think to come off by limiting it to an effectuall call, the Scripture by himſelf quoted doth evidently contradict it; Chriſt came to give them that effectuall calling, and not onely to thoſe that were thus called.

Anſ. Maſter Blakes charge of contradictions is as frivolous as his wonderment. Maſter Blakes conceit of a calling into ſuch a Church-ſtate, as the whole nation of the Jewes did then enjoy, is but a dream of his own, for which he hath not one Scripture nor other proofe. The calling is to communion with Chriſt, and an effectuall calling, elſe the propoſition were not true; nor is there any contradiction in any of the places byme quoted, to this expoſition, the promiſe of Chriſt is fulfilled for the remiſſion of your ſins, and your childrens, and all that are afar off, as many as the Lord our God ſhall effectually call, and no other; nor hath Maſter Blake ſhewed any. For though Chriſt came to give effectual calling, yet it is true alſo, he came to give remiſſion onely to thoſe that were thus called; nor is there any oppoſition, much leſs contradiction in thoſe ſpeeches.

Maſter Blake goes on. He yet ſaid, Peter doth exhort to repentance and baptiſm together, and in the firſt place perſwades to repentance, then to baptiſm, which ſhewes repentance to be in order before baptiſm. To which he anſwers, not by denying it, but by giving a reaſon of it, becauſe they had crucified Chriſt, &c. To which I reply, this grant ſhewes that they had not right to baptiſm without repentance, though the promiſe were to them, they were in the Church-ſtate of the Jewes, &c. and conſequently Maſter Blakes propoſition falſe. Thoſe to whom the Covenant of promiſe appertains (in his ſenſe) have a right to baptiſm. What he addes, And yet he ſhewes that they and their ſeed are under the promiſe of God, and puts them into a way in acceptation of Chriſt in the Goſpel-tender, in his preſent way of adminiſtration, to be continued his people ſtill in Covenant, and that (as is plainly enough ſignified) that they might enjoy it in their former latitude to them and to their children; that the Jewes (even thoſe that had not yet embraced Chriſt) were not yet diſpoſſeſt of the promiſe, but ſtood as a people of God in viſible covenant, and their children, in the ſenſe in which Maſter Blake means is falſe; and yet were it true, it is againſt Maſter Blakes propoſition, ſith notwithſtanding this being in covenant, yet were they not admitted or to be admitted to baptiſm without repenrepentance. He addes, Maſter T. hath yet this evaſion, and ſaith, the text ſpeaks not expreſly of infants, but of children indefinitely; and if infants be not children, we will be content that they be caſt out of covenant, and will hold no plea for their Church-memberſhip and baptiſm.

Anſ. As infants are children, ſo are men and women of twenty, or more years old, and therefore the term (children) unleſs it be proved to be taken univerſally or particularly of infants, the Covenant-ſtate (as they call it) though we ſhould grant ſuch an eſtate there meant, would not be thence concluded. And yet infants were to be circumciſed not ſimply becauſe they were Abrahams ſeed, nor becauſe in Covenant, but by reaſon of Gods command. And though a woman and diſciple be not Synonyma, yet women being numbred among diſciples, it is an expreſs example of womens coming together to break bread, which mentions the diſciples breaking bread; nor was I at all put to it, much leſs hard put to it, when this came in for an anſwer. For without this an anſwer was given before to the Argument, and this was added as an over-plus, and ſo was that which Maſter Blake nibbles at in that which followes.

I had ſaid the text ſpeaks not of the children of the Gentiles at all, (of whom we are) but of the children of the Jews; and therefore if that promiſe be extended to infants, which doth not appear, the promiſe is to be expounded ſo as to note ſomething peculiar to the Jewes infants. To this Maſter Blake thus ſaith, If the Goſpel held out any ſuch tranſcending priviledges appertaining to the ſeed of the Jewes above the Gentiles, Maſter T. may do well to produce a text for it, otherwiſe we ſhall take it for granted from Saint Paul, that there is none at all, that there is neither Greek, nor Jew, circumciſion nor uncircumciſion, Barbarian nor Scythian, bond nor free.

To which I reply, there is no need I ſhould ſhew any ſuch priviledge held out in the Goſpel to the Jewes ſeed above the Gentiles, but that Maſter Blake ſhould ſhew ſuch priviledge as he ſpeaks of, to the Jewes ſeed held out in the Goſpel. But this I ſay, if he will have the text, Acts. 2. 39. to be for his purpoſe, he muſt ſhew that the children of the Gentiles (of whom there is not a word) are mentioned as thoſe to whom the promiſe is as well as the children of the Jewes, which he thus attempts.

And when the Apoſtle addes, to thoſe that are afar off, even as many as the Lord ſhall call, he plainly means the Gentiles, as appears, comparing Epheſ. 2. And though I take not the boldneſs to adde to the words, and to their children, as Maſter T. challenges Doctor H. yet it is clear, that the ſame is underſtood there in reference to the children of the Gentiles, that is expreſt before to the children of the Jewes. If any ſhall grant an inheritance to Titius and his heirs for ever, and to Caius, every one will underſtand that the heirs of Caius are meant as well as the heirs of Titius, eſpecially if it can be proved out of the grant it ſelf, that the priviledge conveyed to Caius, is as ample as that to Titius. We can prove the priviledges granted to the Gentiles in the Goſpel to be equal to thoſe granted to the Jewes; when the Jewes children are under the promiſe with their Parents, the children of believing Gentiles cannot be excluded.

To which I reply, that it appeared not plainly to Beza, Annot. in locum, that by thoſe afar off, Acts 2.39. are meant the Gentiles, but rather the poſterity of the Jewes, which ſhould be in after Generations, or thoſe in the diſperſions

among the Gentiles. For it seemes unlikely that Peter did then consider or declare the calling of the Gentiles, who was so averse from preaching to Cornelius, Acts 10. or that it would have been born with them, when even the brethren expostulated with him for that fact, Acts. 11. 3. nor do I think πᾶσι τοῖς εἰς μακρὰν Acts. 2. 39. the same with οἱ ποτὲ ὄντες μακρὰν Ephes. 2. 13. this latter noting manifestly remoteness from God in respect of knowledge and communion, the former remoteness from them to whom he spake, either in descent or distance of place. However were it resolved that the Gentiles are meant, Acts. 2. 39. as many Interpreters conceive, yet it is too much boldness to adde to the text [and to their children] and not much less in Master Bl. that it is understood, when there is neither word in the text, nor defect of sense without it, nor any ancient copy, which necessitate that addition or supplement. And for Master Blakes case in law, it is not opposite. For, Acts 2. 39. there is no mention of a grant to them and their heirs for ever, but only a promise to them and their children, which there is no necessity, nor I think intention in Peter in those words to extend to any other then were then existent. But if it were opposite, yet so far as I know their mindes, either by such experience in law-cases, or converse with Lawyers, (with whom I sometimes lived) I presume they would say otherwise then Master Blake, that a grant of an inheritance to Titius and his heirs for ever, and to Caius, without mentioning his heirs, is not a grant to the heirs of Caius, no not though it could be proved the priviledge conveyed to Caius is as ample as that to Titius. As for what Master Blake tells us, he and others can prove of the priviledges of the Gentiles granted in the Gospel equal to the Jewes, I yield it, if meant of believing Jewes and Gentiles, and saving spititual blessings in Christ, according to that, Ephes. 3. 6. But meant (as Master Blake would have it) of visible Church-membership, and the initial seal, I take it to be a vain brag, neither he nor any other having yet proved it, or that the Jewes or Gentiles children are or were universally under the promise of the Covenant of Grace, which is Evangelical, with their believing Parents, and by reason of their faith, I know no more about Act. 2. 38, 39. in that ch. to be answered. I return to his answer to my exceptions ch. 43. pag. 393. he thus dictates after his fashion, Children as theirs whether they be called or no, is (he knowes with us) a contradiction; children are called in their Parents call, and we say they are in covenant, the promise is made to them, they are visible Church-members till they reject the covenant, and deny their membership.

To which I say, I know many things to be taken for truths and contradictions with Pædobaptists, which were neither truths, nor contradictions: but this conceit that [Jewes children uncalled, as calling is meant, Acts 2. 39.] is a contradiction. I had not so mean an opinion of Master Blakes and other Pædobaptists intellectuals, as to imagine they would own it, till Master Blake vented this foppery, which how vain it is was shewed above. In like manner I was secure of ever meeting with such a foolery as this of Master Blake, children are called in their Parents call, till I read the like in his brother Baxters vain-mocktitled-book plain Script. proof, &c. ch. 3. that he that converteth the Parent, maketh both him and his infants disciples: to which I have said somewhat in my Review, part. 2. sect. 12. And for the other speech that they are in covenant, the promise is made to them, they are visible Church-members

till they reject the Covenant, and deny their membership, it contains sundry inconsistencies with Pædobaptists hypotheses. For first, they say, the children of believers are in covenant, and visible Church-members as theirs; children as theirs, whether they be called or no is (he knowes with us) a contradiction, saith Master Blake here. If so, then they are in covenant, and visible Church-members while theirs, Quatenus ipsum includes de omni & semper. But they are so when they reject the covenant, the relation to their parents ceaseth not then; therefore neither their Church-membership, if the hypothesis be true. Secondly, they suppose the visible Church-membership of believers children, is by vertue of Gods promise to be their God, Gen. 17. 7. and this promise requires no other condition but the parents faith, no condition from the child; for then it could not agree to infants; therefore if the parent be a believer, and the Child be not a visible Church-member, God keeps not his promise which he hath made, according to their hypotheses, and so they do make God a lyar, which is blasphemy. Thirdly, they magnifie the priviledge of infants visible Churchmembership, they enveigh against anti-Pædobaptists, as robbing them, thereof, and parents of their comforts, though they grant the Parents as much ground of hope for them, as the Pædobaptists grounds can truly give them; and for reality of priviledge, setting aside an empty title and rite as to them in infancy, they grant them visible Church-membership, when they profess the faith, which in respect of Church-communion Pædobaptists themselves grant them, not before; but mock both Parents and children, telling them they are in covenant, and visible Church-members by their parents faith without their own, yet denying them Church-communion, which is due to every visible Church-member, without their own personal avouchiug the faith; besides, their injurious dealing with them in their mock-baptism of them, when it is not due, nor does them any good, and denying baptism to them, yea, persecuting them for seeking it after when it is due, and might do them much good by engaging them to Christ, and thereupon assure Christ to be theirs.

My fifth exception Master Blake passeth over as fore-spoken to, ch. 37. which hath answer before, and my sixth as falling in with my tenth, where I shall overtake him. To my seventh, wherein I excepted against Master Stephens for holding the command [Be baptized every one of you] in a covenant-sense as he calls it to be, as if he had said, Be baptized you and your children, which I said to be a new devised non-sense, such as we have no Dictionary yet to interpret words by. To this saith Master Blake, I am sure here is a non-sense device, to talk of Dictionaries; does Calepin or Scapula, Rider or Thomasius help us to compare covenant and seal, promises and Sacraments?

I reply, that speech is non-sense, in which the words used to signifie that which the speaker would signifie by them, do not in the use of them so signifie. But this speech [Be baptized every one of you] doth not in the use of the words signifie [be baptized you and your children] therefore that speech so used in that which Master Stephens calls Covenant-sense is non-sense. This appears by Dictionaries, in none of which [every one of you] is as much as [you and your children] Therefore that speech in that sense is a new devised non-sense. As for Master Blakes words, either they are non-sense, or as bad. For first, to talk of Dictionaries is not a device, an action of the mind; but a speech, an action of the tongue or hand; and therefore it is non-sense to call it so. Secondly, ly, to talk of Dictionaries is not non-ſenſe; for then all ſpeech of Dictionaries ſhould be non ſenſe, and ſo all the verſes before Riders and others Dictionaries ſhould be non-ſenſe. But to ſpeak of Dictonaries otherwiſe then the words ſignifie, ſo as the meaning cannot be perceived by them, which he cannot ſay of my ſpeech of Dictionaries. As for Maſter Blakes queſtion, it is frivolous, as much of the reſt of his writing here is. For though Dictionaries do not help us to compare covenant and ſeal, promiſes and Sacraments, yet they do help us to know the ſenſe of words, and diſcover to us the non-ſenſe of words uſed otherwiſe then their ſignification is. Maſter Blake himſelf in the 43. ch. ſect. 2. refers me to the Dictionary about the word Pax. To my eighth exception that there is not a word of any ſcruple in the text, as ſome have imagined, if we be baptized our ſelves, and not our children, they will be in worſe caſe then in the former diſpenſation, in which they had the ſeal of the covenant; nor is it likely that they were ſollicitous about ſuch an imaginary poor priviledge of their children. He ſaith, I am of his minde, that there was no ſuch ſcruple in their heads. Maſter T. his unhappy conceit of caſting the ſeed out of the Covenant was not then in being, though I think the reaſon he gives is little to purpoſe, yet I ſay, this ſcruple raiſed by Anti-pædobaptiſts, and heightened by Maſter T. as in many other, ſo in this text is removed.

Anſ. My exception then ſtands good againſt thoſe who make that ſcruple the occaſion of Peters mentioning their children. And for my reaſon, Maſter Blake had done better to give a reaſon of his cenſure, then barely to ſay he thinks it to little purpoſe. It is his calumny that I have any conceit of caſting the ſeed out of the covenant, and his conceit that the ſcruple mentioned is in this text removed, hath been ſhewed to be but his dream.

My ninth exception was that Pædobaptiſts make [for v. 39.] to infer a right to baptiſm, whereas it infers onely a duty, which is proved in that [v. 38. baptized] is in the Imperative Mood. To this ſaith Maſter Blake, Maſter T. does groſſely abuſe his judgment in this way of refutation, as though the right in which they ſtood, could be no Topick, from which in a moral way the Apoſtle might perſwade them to baptiſm; when Shecaniah perſwaded Ezra to the reformation of the marriage of ſtrange wives in theſe words: Ariſe, for the matter belongeth to thee, Ezra 10. 4. here was a motive in the moral way to call upon him to do it, and an argument inferred, that it lay upon Ezra as a duty by command from God to ſet upon it. And to my reaſon he ſaith, he hath quite forgotten, that the words holding out their right are in the Indicative Mood. For the promiſe is to you and your children. And here is a notable correction of the Apoſtle, he ſhould have ſaid, if this had been his meaning, you muſt be baptized; and he ſaies, Ariſe, and be baptized.

Anſ. Sure I am Maſter Blake doth moſt groſſely abuſe me, in inſinuating as if by my refutation, the right in which they ſtood could be no Topick, from which in a moral way the Apoſtle might perſwade them to baptiſm, when I proved that the Apoſtle did not from v. 39. infer a right to baptiſm, which in a legal way they might claim, but a duty, to which in a moral way he perſwades. And therefore he ſhootes wide from the mark, when he goes about to prove that a right may be a motive in a moral way to a duty. And yet as if he could write nothing to the point, his own allegation, Ezra 10. 4. is not to his own purpoſe, the motive as himſelf alledgeth, it being not a right to a priviledge, lege; but a command from God. The like roving talk is in his answer to my reason. For whereas I alleged that verse 38. a right is not inferred from verse 39. but a duty, because [be baptized, v. 38.] is not in the Indicative, but the Imperative Mood, tels me the term [is v. 39.] is in the Indicative Mood, which is nothing to my objection, but like as in the contention between two deaf men in Sir Thomas Mores epigram, he that was charged with theft answered, his mother was at home. The like random talk is in his insinuation of my notable correction of the Apostle, who corrected not the Apostle, but shewed the Pædobaptists conceit incongruous to the Apostles words; He himself seems (I think out of heedlesness) to correct the Apostle, when he speaks thus, And he saies, Arise and be baptized, which are not Peters words, Acts. 2. 38. but the words of Ananias to Saul, Acts. 22. 16.

My tenth exception was, usually Pædobaptists in their paraphrases put not in any thing to answer [repent, v. 38.] which is true, though Master Stephens be alleged in my sixth exception, as paraphrasing it by covenant, for your selves and your children, Master Blake grants the Apostle presseth to a duty, and such as was to have repentance precedent in his then hearers: If so, then he doth not infer a right to bapeism barely from their interest in the promise. What he saith, right and duty very well stand together, and that the Apostle fitly makes use of their interest as a motive, I deny not. It is true, the Apostle mentioned more to whom the promise was then, he then perswaded to repent, for he mentions the promise as pertaining to the absent, or unborn; but he perswades none to be baptized but the penitent, nor mentions any to whom the promise was, but the called of God.

To my Argument from the precedency of repentance to baptism, Acts. 2. 38. against infant-baptism, he answers as before, ch. 37. to which I have replyed before. As for Master Stephens his paraphrase avowed by Master Blake as the Apostles meaning, that if the Jewes who had crucified Christ, would receive him as the particular Messiah, the same promise should still continue to them and their children in the new dispensation, it is far from the Apostles minde. For the Apostle doth not make the continuance of the promise as the benefit consequent on their receiving Christ, and the receiving of Christ the condition of continuance of the promise: but the being of the promise is alleged as a thing already existent, nor is there any likelyhood that the Apostle Peter would urge them to so hard duties as repentance, receiving Christ by so slender a reason as the continuance of the promise of visible Church-membership and baptism to them and their infant children, yea, the text it self shewes that the things by which he would perswade them to receive Christ, were the assurance of remission of sins, and receiving the Gift of the Holy Ghost, and the alleging the promise, v. 39. is to take away the great objection against these great benefits from their crucifying of Christ, and their imprecation on them and their children, Matth. 27. 25. If then Master Stephens build his word of command to baptize father and child, on that paraphrase, he builds on a foundation which will not hold. Master Blake addes; To this the word repent refers, as may be made plain. But what he means by this assertion I do not well understand, it being ambiguous, what he means by [this] whether the paraphrase of Master Stephens, that the same promise should still continue to them and their children in the new dispensation, if they would receive Jesus as the particular Messiah, or the word of command to baptize father and child, and in like manner what kind of reference he means, whether as a medium to prove it, or as a motive to it. If he mean the same with that which his allegations seem to tend to, his meaning is, that the promise of visible Church-state, was to the Jewes as they had been formerly, if they did receive Christ, and the term [repent] refers to it as the motive. Now though I grant that the promise, Acts. 2. 39. is alleged as a motive in a moral way to repentance v. 38. yet I deny such a promise to be meant, v. 39. as Mr. Bl. and Mr. Stephens fancy. Nor do any of Mr. Blakes allegatione prove it. For Acts 3. 25. doth not speak of such a covenant as Master Blake means, but of that Evangelical covenant wherein God promised Christ and saving blessings by him. Nor are the Jews there termed children of the Covenant onely, but also of the Prophets. Now the Prophets there are the same with all the Prophets, v. 24. and those Jewes to whom, Peter spake, were no otherwise their children, then in that they had been raised up of, and sent to that nation in their predecessors times, and they are in like manner called children of the Covenant, because they were the posterity of those ancestors, specially Abraham, to whom that Covenant was made. But this doth not prove that they were then Gods visible people, that the Covenant of visible Church-state did belong to them and their children, or that such a covenant is meant, Acts 2. 39. What Master Blake allegeth from Matth. 8. 12. Matth. 21. 43. that they were in danger to be cast off, doth prove rather the contrary, that the nation or body of the Jewish people who had rejected Christ, were not in covenant with God; and although those particular persons, Acts 2. 37. to whom Peter spake, v. 38, 39. were more awakened then others, yet they could not be then said to be in the covenant of visible Church-state, being not then believers in Christ. What Master Blake allegeth and infers from Matth. 21. 31, 32. Luke 7. 29, 30. I assent to, but know not what it make for his purpose. Yea, me thinks his calling baptism to which Peter exhorted, entrance into a new covenant-way, crosseth Master Stephens paraphrase of continuing the same promise to them and their children. In his third allegation he misreports me, as if I excluded all consideration of right in the Jewes and their children from those words which are, Acts 2. 39. Whereas that which I said was this, that from the promise, Acts 2. 39. (what ever right beimported by it) Peter doth not infer their being baptized as a right or privilege, accruing to them in manner of a legal title and claim, but as a duty to which he perswades in a moral way. What good interpretation I give of those words, v. 39. suitable to Peters exhortation, I have set down, Exam. pag. 61. Review part. 1. pag. 41. and elsewhere Master Blake, if he could, should have overthrown it. Master Cobbets exception is answered in the next section. Mr. Bl. hath been oft told that the children are mentioned Acts 2. 39. because of the imprecation, Matth. 27. 25. That the words, Acts 2. 38, 39. are carried in that way, that interest in Covenant and Covenant-Seals in Mr. Bls sense formerly ran, is supposed, but not proved by him. That the Jews yet persisting in their adherence to Moses, not embracing Christ, should be in covenant and have thereby a right to baptism, is such a dotage as me thinks Master Blake should disclaim. That the words of the text, Acts 2. 39. hold out such a covenant-right, as Master Blake imagins, in Scripture-language, according to the grand charter of heaven, I will be thy God and the God of thy seed, is said, but not proved by Master Blake. Whether my exceptions against the Pædobaptists expoſition of Acts 2. 38, 39. or Maſter Blakes anſwers are frivolous ſhifts the intelligent Reader will perceive. My Antipædobaptiſm is enough to refute Maſter John Goodwins charge, and my cenſure of his interpretations others have made good. As for the text Maſter Blake mindes me of, Job 38. 2. it may appear from my writings to be more pertinently applyable to himſelf, then me. Had ever any man ſhewed me ſo much confuſed ſcribling, ſo many irrational unproved dictates, ſo many impertinent allegations in my writings as I and Maſter Blake have ſhewed in his, I would have ſilenced my ſelf from writing any more, except a retractation of my former bookes.

Animadverſions on ch. 2. part. 1. of Maſter Thomas Cobbet his juſt vindication touching the explication of Acts 2. 38, 39. in which his expoſition is ſhewed to be vain, and mine juſtified.

TWo points the Pædobaptiſts do endeavour to confirm from Acts 2. 38, 39. 1. That the children of believers are in the Covenant. 2. That this being in covenant gives them right to baptiſm. This latter point is that which I am yet upon, for which how inſufficient that text is hath been ſhewed in anſwer to Maſter Blake. My intent was in this place to have ſaid no more of this text till I came to examine Maſter Ms. 2. Concl. But ſith Maſter Blake tels me Maſter Cobbet hath, p. 23. ſaid that which utterly overthrowes my expoſition, I ſhall examine what he ſaith, Juſt vindic. ch. 2. part. 1.

Sect. 3. He argues thus againſt my expoſition. Firſt, the promiſe is to you, that is, fulfilled to you accordingly as made to Abraham, for ſending of Chriſt, &c. there wants Scripture-proof, to make this ſenſe of the promiſe, is to you, (i. e.) is fulfilled to you, nor yet doth that in Acts 3. 25, 26. ye are the children of the promiſe, &c. prove this ſenſe.

Anſ. My ſenſe of the words is this. The promiſe of raiſing up of Chriſt is now fulfilled to you, that is, for your benefit in the remiſſion of your ſins and bleſſing you, being called of God, and in like manner to your children, and to all that are afar off This to be the ſenſe I gather, 1. From Scriptures which ſeem to me to ſpeak ſuitably thereto. The firſt is Peters ſpeech in the ſame ch. v. 30. of David. Therefore being a Prophet, and knowing that God had ſworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loynes he would raiſe up Chriſt to ſit on his throne, &c. Hence I argue. It is moſt likely that Peter, v. 39. meant a promiſe mentioned before, and known to them to whom he ſpake. Not the promiſe of the miraculous gift of the Holy Ghoſt, for reaſons to be preſently expreſſed; therefore the promiſe mentioned, v. 30, 31, 32. The ſecond is Acts 3. 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. whence I argue. It is moſt likely that ſenſe is beſt which hath moſt conſonancy with the ſpeech of the ſame Author to the ſame perſons, to the ſame purpoſe, on the like occaſion. But the words, Acts 3. 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. are ſuch, and my ſenſe of Acts 2. 38, 39. hath moſt conſonancy with thoſe words. For in that ſpeech he exhorts to repentance, v. 19. becauſe that was fulfilled which was foretold by the Prophets, to wit, Christs resurrection; and v. 25. the covenant mentioned is that of blessing all the kinreds of the earth in Abrahams seed, that is, Christ. And that this was fulfilled, v. 26. in raising up Christ, and this was first to them, to wit, for their benefit, by blessing and converting them: which hath much consonancy with my sense of Acts 2. 38, 39. therefore my sense is most likely. A third is Acts 13. 32, 33, &c. which though it were spoken by another, to wit, Paul, and to other company, yet by one endued by the same Spirit, to persons in respect of their nation, and estate like, alleging v. 35. 36, 37. the same text and almost in the same words which Peter used, Acts 2. 27, 31, 32. Now in that place Paul makes the promise to the Fathers to be the raising up of Christ, and speaks of it as to them, in that it was fulfilled, and that for their benefit, the forgiveness of sins, v. 38. and thereupon exhorteth to repentance and embracing of Christ v. 40. Somewhat to like purpose might be alleged from Rom. 15. 8, &c. But this is enough to shew that my exposition doth not want Scripture-proof. 2. I gather my sense thus. The term [is] is in the present tense. This Master Cobbet takes notice of when he saith, that the Apostle doth not say, the promise was to you. The proposition must be understood either as a proposition secundi adjecti, as Logicians speak, the promise is to you, that is, the promise exists to you, so as that the Verb substantive should note meer existence: But this construction [the promise existes or hath existence to you] seems to me to be defective in sense or truth. For the promise being a transeunt act, was not then existent. Nor were it true, do I conceive to what purpose he should mention the bare existence of the promise, which could be neither comfort to them, nor motive to the duty he pressed. Or else the proposition must be tertii adjecti; and if so, there must be a supplement either of the term [made] or the term [fulfilled] For I know no third. But not the term [made] For then the sense should be [the promise is now made to you, &c.] but this is not true, the promise was not then made to them, but to their fathers, Acts 13. 32. therefore the supplement [fulfilled] is most probable, it being the term used, Acts 3. 18. and 13. 33. 3. This exposition of mine seems to me to be right, because it is opposite to the Apostles scope, which was to direct ane erect those affrighted Jewes to whom he spake. Now the sense that I give is very proper to comfort them against the horrour of their fact in crucifying Christ, and wishing his blood to be on them and their children, Matth. 27. 25. by telling them as Peter did, Acts 3. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. that though they did unwittingly kill Christ, yet God had thereby fulfilled his promise, even for their good and their children, even as Joseph when he told his brethren, Gen. 45. 5. Gen. 50. 19, 20, that though they thought evil against him, yet God meant it unto good, to bring to pass; as it is this day to save much people alive. And this sense is a very fit motive to move them to repent and be baptized in the Name of Christ for remission of sins, by testifying that the promise of sending Christ was fulfilled in the raising of Christ from the dead. 4. My exposition is confirmed, because all other expositions have less evidence, and are more liable to exceptions. The most likely exposition after that which I give, seems to be that which expounds the promise to be that of giving the holy Ghost in the miraculous gifts, which is called, v. 33. the promise, Luke 24. 49. and was mentioned in the next words before, Acts 2. 38. And of this I confess the sense may be good thus understood. The promise of giving the holy Ghoſt, Joel 2. 28. is fulfilled in that which ye ſee and heare, Acts 2. 33. to you, and your children, and all that are afar off, that is, for their benefit, by moving them to own Chriſt. But me thinks if the promiſe were meant of that gift, it ſhould be meant thus, The promiſe is to you, that is, God hath promiſed to give to each of you, &c. this gift of the holy Ghoſt, becauſe the words immediately before, v. 38. are, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the holy Ghoſt. But thus the propoſition ſhould not be true; For all afar off who were called of God, had not that gift, and therefore it was not promiſed them. Nor had this ſenſe been ſo fit as to comfort them, ſith that gift might be given, and was to perſons whom God rejected. As for the other expoſition, that the promiſe is, that God will be a God to them and their children, as to Abraham and his ſeed, Gen. 17. 7. it cannot be the promiſe meant, Acts 2. 39. For, 1. there is not the leaſt intimation in the text of that promiſe. 2. There was no ſuch promiſe in all the Scripture, that God would be a God to thoſe to whom Peter then ſpake, and to their children as their children, no nor ſuch a promiſe as this, I will be a God to a believer and his ſeed. For if this promiſe were made to the ſeed of every believer, then either God keepes it, or not. If not, then he breaks his word; if he do, then he is a God to them. But that is not true: For neither in ſaving graces, nor in Eccleſiaſtical priviledges, v.g. Church-membership and baptiſm, is God a God to every one that is the ſeed or natural child of a believer. Yet if it were true, it had been falſe, being ſpoken to thoſe Jewes, who were not then believers, nor perhaps many of them evet believers in Chriſt. And it is moſt falſe, that the Chriſtian Church-membership and baptiſm did belong to the Jews as Jews, by vertue of any covenant made with that nation. For then John Baptiſt did ill to expoſtulate with them for coming to his baptiſm, Matth. 3. 7. and to diſſwade them from alleging they had Abraham to their father, v. 9. and to tell them of another ſort of children of Abraham that had more right to it then they. Yea, John the Baptiſt and the Apoſtles did ill to require perſonal repentance and believing, if they had right to ſuch priviledges by a promiſe without them. Nor is the promiſe ſaid to be to any children, but thoſe that are called of God, and therefore not to infants uncalled, and conſequently this Scripture is very ill applyed to prove federall holyneſs of believers infants. Maſter Cobbet addes, Secondly, it is ſending of Chriſt or of Chriſt ſent. But let it be conſidered, 1. That the Apoſtle doth not ſay, the promiſe was to you, as in reference to the time of making it to the Fathers, with reſpect unto them, or in reference to Chriſt, who was not now to come, but already come, as the Apoſtle proveth from v. 3, to 37. Nor is it the uſe of the Scripture, when mentioning promiſes as fulfilled, to expreſs it thus in the preſent tenſe: the promiſe is to you, or to ſuch and ſuch, but rather to annex ſome expreſſion that way, which evinceth the ſame, for which let Rom. 15. 8. 1 John 2. 25. Epheſ. 3. 6. Nehe. 9. 8, 23. 2 Chron. 6. 15. 1 Kings 8. 56. Acts 2. 16, 17, 33. and 13. 32, 33. Joſh. 21. 45. and 23. 14. Matth. 1. 22, 23. and 21. 4. Luke 1. 54, 55, 68, 69. and Pſal. 111. 9. Rom. 11. 26, 27. be conſidered.

Anſ. 1. How the verb ſubſtantive [is] in the preſent tenſe, and the promiſe referred to Chriſt, who was now come, agrees with the words and ſcope of the Apoſtle, is already ſhewed. And my ſenſe is like or the ſame with Maſter Ms. when he ſaid in his Sermon, pa. 17. The plain ſtrength of the argument, is

God hath now remembred his covenant to Abraham in sending that blessed seed, and the new Annot. in Locum; The promise is to you, Christ is promised both to Jewes and Gentiles: But the Jewes had the first place. Which is agreeable to the speeches of, Mary, Luke 1. 54, 55. and of Zacharias, v. 68, 69, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75. 2. It is true, that the expression in that manner is not usual, and it is confessed that in the places cited and many more the fulfilling of a promise is otherwise expressed. But what then? doth it follow that is not the meaning which I give? If it did, by the same reason, neither Master Cobbets is right. For it is usual to express a promise belonging to some of a thing yet to be done in some other expressions, as 1 John 2. 25. 2 Pet. 1. 4. yea, in the place Rom. 9. 4. of which Master Cobbet p. 31. saith, for the promise is to you or belongs to you, as Rom. 9. 4. hath it, the expression is not in the Dative case, as Acts 2. 39. but in the Genitive. But it is needfull to consider how Master Cobbet himself expounds the words, Sect. 1. He saith thus, The promise is to your children: not, was to you, &c. as intending any legal blessing, but, a promise then in force after Christs ascension, to effect some promised blessing [ἐπαγγελία] used to signify the free promise, or covenant of grace, to which they had visible right. Sect. 3. remission of sins may not be excluded, but must be one principal thing intended. It is that promise to which baptism the seal is annexed. Sect. 4 Nor was Abrahams charter less then what here avowed by the Apostle, scil. that the promise even of sins, did belong to the Jewes, and to their children in respect of external right and administration, and no more is pleaded for. But repent and be baptized de futuro; for the promise in præsenti is to you, scil. in respect of external right, Sect. 7. And this promise here mentioned, Acts 2. 38, 39. containing in it remission of sins, and so the righteousness of faith. The promise of remission of sins is or belongeth to you; scil. in the external right and administration of it. So then according to Master Cobbets exposition the promise meant is remission of sins, and of this it is said that it is, not, it was to them, and the manner how is, that it is to them, or it belongs to them in the external right and administration of it. The promise or covenant he means here belonging to them to be Abrahams charter, Gen. 17. 7. Jerem. 31. 33. 34. holding out at least an external interest therein to them being Jewes, not yet believing Fathers, or repenting: for that is rather mentioned as exacted after many words besides, v. 40, 41. yea, rather they were offensive members of the Jewish Church (which was then a true visible Gospel-Church) they were as persons under censure, though they had jus ad baptismum, yet not jus in baptismo without repentance, yet they were covenant-Fathers, and dispensers of the external right of it to their children, though their children were not called. And herein is the difference between them and those afar off; the Gentiles; it is to the Jews actually, to the Gentiles de præsenti, onely intentionally, till they be called of God, which he understands not of an effectual saving call, but calling into visible covenant and church-estate, and then it belongs to their children as to the Jewes. This I gather to be his meaning out of scattered passages, Sect. 4, 5, 7. I shall, 1. observe some things concerning the exposition in general. 2. Clear my own exposition from objections. 3. Make some animadversions on several passages in the latter Sections of this ch. of Master Cobbet.

I observe that he brings no proof but his own saying, that the promise is that, Gen. 17. 7. or that it belongs to any in external right or administration, or that the Apostle meant the belonging of the promise to them in respect of external right and administration. For to say, it is the promise to which baptism seals, is to prove an unknown thing by a more unknown, sith baptism neither there, nor elsewhere is termed the seal of the promise or covenant, nor doth the Apostle mention baptism as sealing or administring the promise, nor do I understand that there is any such thing as an external right and administration of the promise, or by vertue of the promise, but by vertue of the command. And therefore I judge all this talk to be a parcel of gibberish, which the Scripture yields no hint of, but Pædobaptists have formed it from those leading errors, that the nature of Sacraments is to be Seals of the covenant, that the reason of a person being circumcised, was interest in the covenant, Gen. 17. 7. that there is the same reason of baptism as of circumcision Besides, I would know to what the right is, and of what the administration is which he cals external, and in what sense it is called external. External he seems to make all one with quoad homines, & in foro Ecclesiæ, and the promise is of remission of sins; the sense then is, you have a right and administration of remission of sins in respect of men, and in the Court of the Church. A right is a title to a thing which a man may claim, an administration is a serving or bringing in, as when a Deacon gives money to the poor, Gehazi reacheth water to Elisha. If there be sense in Master Cobbets exposition, this should be the meaning. You Jewes who crucified Christ, and your children, though neither yet believers, nor repenting persons, have a right and administration of the promise of remission of sins, Gen. 17. 7. though not in respect of God or the Court of heaven or your own consciences, yet before or by men or in the Court of the Church, so that you may claim absolution from them, and they do or ought to administer it to you by a sentence or baptism or some other way. Which were to make the Apostles speak non-sense, and impious falshood: Non-sense, the words bearing no such meaning according to the Scripture-use or other approved authors; Falshood, in that he should tell them they had such a right and administration as they had not, and this impious, sith it tends to harden them in impenitency and unbelief, and to justify Preachers or Churches in an unrighteous sentence, wherein remission of sins is pronounced to belong to persons impenitent and unbelieving in sensu composito while such. The like may be said if the right be meant to visible Church-membership, and baptism and administration of them, the speech would be non-sense; neither Scripture, nor any Author at that time expressing these things by that which Peter spake, Acts 2. 39. and the speech were false, they then having no right or administration of either, and it had been impious to say so to them; for it had tended to move them to assume that to them, and to justify the yielding it to them, which had been injuriously and profanely both arrogated and yielded to them. Yet further, what a ridiculous salve had this been to consciences so tortured with the sense of that most horrid act of killing Christ, to tell them, the promise of remission of sins was to them in respect of external right and administration before men or in the face of the Church, though not before God or in their own consciences, or that they had outward right and administration of visible Church-membership and baptism, I may use his own words, mutatis mutandis? Sect. 6. They were not troubled for want of externall right and administration, and to tell them:

them of such right and administration was both impertinent and unsatisfactory, and it could minister but little comfort to sin-sick soules to promise them such things, which they might have, and yet die in their sins, Matth. 7. 23. Besides, it seems to be a contradiction to say, the promise is to you de præsenti, in respect of external right and administration, and yet you have not jus in re, and in like manner to say that the promise is to all afar off de præsenti, in respect of external right and administration, and yet it belongs not to them actually, but intentionaly. And whence hath Master Cobbet warrant to say that the promise belongs one way to the Jewes, and another way to the Gentiles? or that the promise belonged to the Jew and his child in respect of external right and administration, though uncalled? Lastly, that I not grate any further on this soare, where doth Master Cobbet find in Scripture any mention of Gods calling into visible covenant, and Church-estate? or how can it be true that the Church to which those Jewes who crucifyed Christ joyned, containing the unbelieving Scribes and Pharisees and High Priests, and the people of the Jewes consenting with them, was a Gospel-Church, visibly interested in the covenant of grace, the Subject of the Gospel, and the same essentially with that Gospel or Christian Church, and that there was no other visible Church, then that of the Jewes? Credat Judæus apella, non ego. But of these somewhat in the animadversions following.

Master Cobbet against my exposition writes further thus. 2. They knew already to their cost, that Christ indeed was sent amongst them, and to be that Jesus or Saviour of his people from their sins, Acts 2. 36, 37. compared with Matth 1. 21. And this was cold comfort to them, to tell them of that which wounded them, unless there be withall some promise annexed and supposed in his being come. The promise meerly of Christs coming could not comfort them, unless also in and by Christ come in the flesh, there be some promise made to them touching the removall of those burdens of guilt which lay upon them. 3. The blessing principally propounded to them, for their reviving, healing, succour, and support, it was not Christs sending, nor his being sent, but remission of sins, v. 38. wherefore unless the Apostle argue impertinently, this may not be excluded, but must be one principall thing intended. 4. It is that promise to which baptism the seal is annexed, now the seal is ever to the covenant, which is not barely to Christs being sent in the flesh, but to benefits contained in promises by his coming.

Ans. Had Master Cobbet heeded my words in my Exam. pag. 60. And was it not a comfortable Argument for men in that case to be told, that notwithstanding all this the promise of Christ and remission of sins by him, was yet to them and their children, &c. And pag. 61. The promise which is made to Abraham is now fulfilled in sending Christ to you and your children, and to all that are afar off as many as the Lord our God shall call, that they might be turned from their iniquity, and baptized in his Name for the remission of their sins, these objections had been spared, they proceeding all against me upon this mistake (which my words heeded might have rectifyed) as if I had expounded the promise, Acts 2. 39. of Christs being sent and coming without some promise annexed, and particularly that of remission of sins by Christ. Whereas I did expresly include it in my paraphrase (as my words recited shew) gathering it from the mention of it, v. 38. and conceiving it to be

implyed in the expreſſion [to you, v. 39.] that is, for your benefit by remiſſion of your ſins. And therefore theſe three objections are anſwered by ſhewing how according to my expoſition the promiſe of Chriſt ſent includes alſo the benefit of remiſſion of ſins. But on the contrary all theſe objections are againſt Maſter Cobbets own expoſition. For, 1. It had been but cold comfort to tell them of a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins onely in external right and adminiſtration. 2. It had not been avaiſable for their reviving, healing, ſuccour, and ſupport. 3. According to Pædobaptiſts ſuppoſitions, baptiſm is not a ſeal of that covenant in which remiſſion of ſins in external right and adminiſtration onely is promiſed, but, as it is in the Directory, it is a Seal of the covenant of grace, of our ingraſting into Chriſt, and of our union with him, of remiſſion of ſins, regeneration, adoption, and life eternal. Therefore the promiſe, Acts 2. 39. according to Maſter Cobbets own arguments, and Pædobaptiſts hypotheſes is not of remiſſion of ſins onely in external right and adminiſtration. Maſter Cobbets third exception, Sect. 3. about thoſe afar off, whether Iſraelites in the diſperſion, or in after ages, or the Gentiles be meant, hath been conſidered before. But whereas he ſaith, The Apoſtles afore Peters Sermon, Acts 10. knew by Chriſts declaration of his minde to all his Apoſtles touching the diſcipling and inchurching of the Gentiles the converſion of them, onely they knew not whether it might be by joyning them firſt by way of addition, as proſelytes to the Jewes, rather then by gathering them into other diſtinct Churches; his ſpeech is not right. For, 1. Though it is true, Chriſt had declared his minde, Matth. 28. 19. Mark 16. 15. about converſion of the Gentiles, yet either Peter underſtood not Chriſts minde, or did not remember it afore the viſion, Acts 10. 2. It is apparent from Acts 11. 3. that the exception againſt Peter was not for that he had gathered Cornelius and his company into a diſtinct Church, and not joyned them as Proſelytes to the Jewes, but that he went in to men uncircumciſed, and did eat with them, which ſhewes they held it unlawfull ſo much as to preach and converſe with any uncircumciſed, though he were a proſelyte of the gate, as Cornelius appears to have been. As for not joyning the Gentiles as proſelytes to the Jewes, they knew that well enough, that they were not to be ſo joyned, ſith neither John the Baptiſt, nor Chriſt or his Diſciples did ever by baptiſm joyn any as proſelytes to the Jewes, but did take even the Jewes themſelves (who embraced their Doctrine) into diſtinct Churches or Schooles, though they did not erect any new political States or Common-wealths, as the nation of the Jewes was.

Maſter Cobbet further excepts againſt me in theſe words. 4. It's affirmed, that this promiſed of ſending Chriſt was to them, their children, and thoſe afar off, as many as our God ſhould call, that they may be turned from their iniquity, and be baptized for remiſſion of ſins, and yet alſo that the promiſe, what ever it be ſuppoſed to be, was to them all, with that limitation, that they repent, or that they be called. What? is it to as many as the Lord ſhall call, or convert, or cauſe to repent? and yet is it, that they may be turned from their iniquity? is it to perſons called, and yet alſo to uncalled perſons? is it to them that they may be called, yet the perſons to whom the promiſe is, are as many as are ſuppoſed to be called? how can theſe two be right? yea, it is to them all, upon condition that they be called, and yet alſo, that it is to them, that they may be called. Why, if it be to them, that by Chriſt they may be called, then is that promise to persons as yet uncalled, and their calling is an effect following their interest in that promise as a cause, and not preceding their interest in the promise as a condition.

Ans. the promise is of sending of Christ for remission of sins, their calling is a consequent of Christs being sent, who was sent to turn them from iniquity, that is, to call them; and this calling was for a further benefit, remission of sins through Christ sent, and so their calling is a condition of the remission of sins by Christ sent, nor is the promise of remission of sins by Christ sent to any but those who are called. The calling is a consequent to Christs sending as a prior benefit, and an antecedent to remission of sins as a subsequent. And thus the knot Master Cobbet conceives is easily loosed.

THere are other passages in the following Sections, on which I animadvert, Sect. 4. he saith, Acts 2. he doth not intend it thus, your children (i.e.) Abrahams children; for Abraham is considered rather by him as a patern, having the precedential Copy of the Covenant mentioned. And it had been incongruous to have said; It is to your children, that is, to Abrahams children. Concerning which passage I say, that though I conceive it a mistake to understand by [your children] Abrahams children, yet Master Cobbets words intimate sundry things which are liable to animadversions. 1. The promise, Acts 2. 39. is supposed by others, and by Master Cobbet, Sect. 7. to be that, Gen 17. 7. I will be a God to thee and thy seed after thee, but this was the covenant it self, and not a precedential Copy of the covenant mentioned. I think Master Cobbet cannot shew any other after Copy, in which God promised to be the God of a believer and his seed, which it is confessed he did to Abraham. 2. That Abraham should be considered rather as a pattern to fathers, then as a particular person is said without any proof; nor is it true, 1. Because it is understood in Scripture as meant of Abraham as a particular person, Gal. 3. 16, &c. 2. Because if he were considered as a pattern, the promise should be to others as to him, Gen. 17, 7. but that is not true, the promise is made to none besides as to Abraham, Gen. 17. 7. And whereas Master Cobbet observes that the promise to them and their children cannot be meant of the children as their children after the Spirit, because they could not be such spiritual fathers to any children of theirs, themselves being not yet such relates, as believing fathers, nor having such correlates as children after the Spirit; this doth plainly shew that the promise to them and their children is not all one with a promise to believers and their children, and the mention of the children, Acts 2. 39. is not to intimate any priviledge arising to the child from the faith of the parent. For, as Master Cobbet saith truly, as yet they acted not faith and repentance, nor doth Peter say, The promise is or belongs to you, for you have repented, pented, and consequently believed. As for Master Cobbets inference that if th imprecation of the Jewes, Matth. 27. 25. were the occasion of Peters words Acts 2. 39. then the promise must be also to their babes, on whom they wished Christs blood, else the plaister were too narrow for their wounds rising from the guilt of bloud wished upon their children, including, and not excluding their babes; it followes not. For, 1. Though babes be children, yet children indefinitely put without any universal sign may be meant of others then babes or infants. 2. The wish may be meant of infants, and the promise also, yet not to take place or to be accomplished on them or to them in their infancy. That curse and that promise which is made to a mans children being for present infants, is verifyed if it happen to them at twenty years old, they being then the same persons, which they were when they were but a day old. 3. Will Master Cobbet assert, the promise must be as large as the curse? If so, then the promise must belong to their children, elder or younger, whether believing or unbelieving, penitent or impenitent, for the wish was on all absolutely. But Master Cobbet (I presume) will not assert the promise of remission of sins was in præsenti to all the children of the Jewes to whom Peter spake, elder and younger, believing and unbelieving, penitent and impenitent in respect of external right and administration. Therefore he must limit the term [your children] if he will have his own exposition to hold good, and consequently the children, Acts 2. 39. must be fewer then those the imprecation lighted on, Mat. 27. 25.

Sect. 5. That which Master Cobbet saith, that those who say the promise made to Abraham of sending Christ and now fulfilled, is to them, in effect say as those that expound [the promise is to you] that is, is offered to you, is not right. For the fulfilling notes something past, the offer is of something to be yet done or attained, yet it is true that the speech of Peter did contain not onely an offer, but also an assurance of remission of sins to the called by vertue of the promise fulfilled in Christs coming.

Of the sense of the words, Acts 3. 25. I have spoken somewhat before. The terms [children of the prophets and of the covenant] are appropriated to the Jewes, as Rom. 9, 4. they being the onely people to whom the prophets were sent, as Beza annot. in locum, id est, Ii estis quibus peculiariter destinati fuerunt prophetæ, & quibuscum fœdus est sancitum, ex Hebræorum idiotismo, quem supra aliquoties annotavimus. Huc pertinet quod ait Paulus, Rom. 9. 4. And when he saith, they were children of the covenant made with the fathers, and not of the fathers with whom the covenant is made, the intent is not to shew that it's meant of Church and federal interest in them, as covenant-fathers and dispensers, or to shew that the covenant was as seed, by vertue whereof they considered as fœderally and ecclesiastically priviledged, did spring in Master Cobbets sense of outward Church-membership and initiating ordinance: but the plain meaning is, that they were the people to whom the first exhibition and tender of the Gospel did belong, in that they were the posterity of the Fathers with whom the covenant was made: and so the Jewes had a priority of not onely external interest in the covenant, but also internal, though when the Gentiles were called, the priviledges of the covenant were equal to the Gentiles with the Jewes, and the condition of the promise, that is, the obtaining remission of sins by the fulfilling of the promise, is equally to Jew and Gentile savingly believing,

Sect. 7. Master Cobbets conceit of the term [afar off, Acts 2. 39.] that it is, meant of their being strangers from actual interests in the covenants of promise, and Common-wealth of Israel, or the visible political Church, Ephes. 2. 11, 12, 13. supposeth, 1. The terms τοῖς εἰς μακρὰν those afar off, Acts 2. 39. to be the same with οἱ ποτὲ ὄντες μακρὰν who were sometimes afar off, Ephes. 2. 13. But the phrases are not the same, and it is for reasons formerly given more likely that the remoteness, Acts 2. 39. is meant of place or descent. 2. that the remoteness, Ephes. 2. 13. was in respect of external Church interest, and so in like manner, Acts 2. 39. But Ephes. 2. 13. the remoteness was such as was taken away by the blood of Christ, which is more then external Church-interest, and the nearness such as [you and your children, Acts 2. 39.] had not then attained to, but were then afar off from God, or as it is, v. 18. had not access by one Spirit unto the Father. And therefore Master Cobbets sayings that the Jewes and their children, Acts 2. 39. were not then when Peter spake afar off, as the term is meant, Ephes. 2, 13. but rather nigh in that sense, and that the promise is to them actually, & quoad hominem, and to the other, that is, the Genteles, afar off intentionally, & quoad Deum, even whilest afar off, and uncalled, are but conceits arising from the mistakes of Peters speech, Acts 2. 39. and Pauls, Ephes. 2, 13. It is true, to the Jewes indefinitely, that is, to that nation or people did the Adoption and promises belong, yet not to every particular person of that nation; For as it is said, Rom. 9. 4. To whom pertaineth the adoption, and the promises; so it is said. v. 4, 5. To whom pertain the service of God, of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came: and yet these things not true of every Israelite.

It is true, Moses made a covenant, Deut. 29. 15. with the unborn which were not actually existent in Church-estate and humane being, but that this was a covenant wherein Covenant-grace is expressed, and that it is verified intentionally, & quoad Deum, is besides the text, which speaks not of Gods making a covenant, but of Moses, v. 14. and this covenant was obliging to duty, not expressing covenant-grace. That which Master Cobbet saith, that the righteousness of faith according to the covenant, Gen. 17. 7. which containeth the promise of justification, was by circumcision visibly sealed unto the Jewes & their children by Gods own appointment, circumcision being in the Sacramental nature of it, a visible seal of the righteousness of faith it self, and not meerly in a personal respect to Abraham, as applyed by his faith to justification, hath either none or very little truth. For though it be true that the promise, Gen. 17. 7. was of the righteousness of faith according to the more hidden sense of the words, yet it was so onely to the spiritual seed of Abraham by faith, Rom. 4. 12, 16. Gal. 3. 7, 9, 29. Nor was circumcision appointed by God to seal it to Jewes and their children, nor circumcision in the Sacramental nature of it, a visible seal of the righteousness of faith, nor is any mans circumcision termed in the Scripture a seal of the righteousness of faith, but Abrahams, which was not a seal as applyed by his faith to his justification, but as a seal to him that he had the righteousness of faith before he was circumcised, and that all that believe as he did shall be justified, as he was, Rom. 4. 11, 12. Master Cobbet addes, Nor will it suffice to say, that covenant was a mixt covenant. It held forth temporal things indeed, but by vertue of a covenant of grace, Psal. 111. 5. as doth the promise now, 1 Tim. 4. 8. But it holds forth alſo ſpiritual things in the external right and adminiſtration thereof to all, albeit in the internal operation, as to ſome. The promiſes are to them all, Rom. 9. 4. Scil. in the former ſenſe; and yet, ver. 8. ſome onely are the children of the promiſe, and the choice ſeed in that general covenant, Scil. in reſpect of the ſaving efficacy of the covenant upon them, v. 6. And the ſame diſtinction is now held out in ſuch ſort, amongſt perſons in Church-eſtate.

Anſ. It ſufficeth againſt thoſe that make the covenant, Gen. 17. to be a covenant of Evangelical grace onely, and make other promiſes of temporal things to be onely adminiſtrations of it, and make circumciſion a ſeal of the covenant of grace, becauſe it was the token of that covenant, to ſay, that the covenant, Gen. 17. 7. was a mixt covenant containing promiſes proper to Abrahams natural poſterity as well as Evangelical to his Spiritual, and that the covenant is rather to be denominated from the former, which are more manifeſtly held forth in it then the latter, and that the reaſon why circumciſion was appointed, was the ſignifying and aſſuring the former rather then the latter, and ſo the circumciſing of infants was not from intereſt Evangelical, but national or proper to the people of Abraham. Nor is Maſter Cobbets exception of any validity, that becauſe there is a promiſe of the life that now is, 1 Tim. 4. 8. therefore the covenant now is mixt. For the promiſe of the life that now is, is not of any outward inheritance peculiar to the godly and their children, as Abraham had of the Land of Canaan for him and his, but of fatherly care, and ſanctified uſe of outward things. Nor doth Pſal. 111. 5. prove that the inheriting Canaan, being great and proſperous, Gen. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. were by vertue of a covenant of grace, but it rather appears from many places, Deut. 28. &c. Heb. 8. 6. that they were by the covenant of works in keeping the law of Moſes, unto which circumciſion did oblige, Gal. 5. 3. The promiſes Gen. 17. ſo far as they were Evangelical did belong to Abrahams ſeed by faith onely, nor doth the Apoſtle any where interpret that promiſe, Gen. 17. 7. as holding forth ſpiritual things in the external right and adminiſtration of it, and the ſpiritual things aſſured therein are by the Apoſtle determined, Rom. 9. 8. to belong onely to the elect, not to all. Nor doth Rom. 9. 4. ſay, the promiſes pertained to all the Jewes, nor to any in reſpect of external right and adminiſtration. And though I deny, not but that perſons may be ſaid to be outwardly in the covenant of grace in appearance to men, when they make a profeſſion of faith, though not in reality, yet I deny that God hath made the covenant or promiſe of grace to any other then the elect & true believers, nor appointed any way of ſealing it to any other. Nor is it true that baptiſm as a covenant-ſeal preſuppoſeth a covenant-right, or that the Jewes, Acts 2. 38, 39. had any covenant or Church-right to baptiſm, jus ad rem, though not jus in re, afore they were believers on Chriſt, nor had they any right to baptiſm in that they were members of the Church of the Jewes, nor was the commiſſion of baptiſm firſt given by God to John Baptiſt in reference to that Church of the Jewes, as a ſeal of their membership therein, but of their owning Johns doctrine, becoming his diſciples, and joyned into a School or Church diſtinct from the Phariſees, and other Jewiſh Church-rulers, though they adhered till after Chriſts death to the law of Moſes and temple-ſervice. Nor is there any truth in it that Peter required of the Jewes repentance afore baptiſm, Acts 2. 38. becauſe though they had covenant or Church-right thereto, yet being adult members under offence, and admoniſhed thereof by Peter: they might for their obstinacy against such an admonition notwithstanding Church or Covenant-right have been debarred that seal. For, 1. The Christian Church and the Jewish Church of which those Jewes were members were in their profession not onely distinct, but also opposite; therefore there was no Church-right from being members in the one to be members of the other. 2. For their fact of which they were admonished by Peter, they were so far from being in danger of being cast out of the Jewish Church in which they were members, that they were more sure of being cast out for repenting of their sin, and being baptized into the Name of Christ, John 9. 22. 3. Peter doth not act in his speech, Acts 2. 38, 39. as an Elder in the Jewish Church, for he was none, but as an Apostle of Christ: nor was their fact objected to them as an offence to the Church of which they were, but confessed by themselves as an heavy burden that lay on their conscience: nor was Peters advice given to remove a Church-censure for re-admission to a seal, but to ease their consciences, and to bring them to the faith of Christ and communion of that Church into which they had never been admitted.

But Master Cobbet against my first exception saith, those Jewes were offensive members of that Jewish Church, which was a true visible Church, and not yet dischurched and divorced by the Lord; they were then in the Church of the Gospel, and so externally in covenant and Church-estate also, as being yet in the Olive and Kingdom of God, and not cast out, untill their unbelief, or total and final rejection of the covenant as ratified in Jesus as that promised Messiah, Rom. 11. 20. to which the Jewes had not as yet come.

Ans. A Church of the Gospel is such a company as avoucheth the Gospel, the Gospel was that Jesus was the Christ; to the being in the Church of the Gospel, it is not sufficient that there hath not been a total or final rejection of the covenant, but it is necessary there be an explicit believing and owning of Christ, John 8. 24. To be a people so cast off as to have the offer of grace taken from them, presupposeth such a rejection, Acts 13. 46. Mat. 21. 43. But to be a Gospel-Church or member of a Gospel-Church, requires more then a non-rejection, to wit, an expres avouching of the Gospel. Non-rejection doth not make a Gospel-Church or Church-member; if it did, the salvage Americans that never heard of the Gospel, and so have not rejected it, should be a Gospel-Church and Church-members. Yet that Jewish Church of which the Jewes, Acts 2. 37. were of, and those Jewes themselves had rejected Christ with much violence, John 9. 22. Acts 3. 13, 14, 15. and therefore they could have no covenant or Church-right, no not externally quoad homines from their standing in that Church, by which they might have claimed admission into the Christian Church by baptism without repentance, and faith in Christ, no not though they were supposed to have been without any scandalous sin deserving excommunication or suspense from the seal.

But Master Cobbet is bold to avouch, that this Church was a Gospel-Church visibly interested in the covenant of grace, the subject of the Gospel, and the same essentially with that Gospel, or Christian Church: which to me is such a paradox, as is by no means to be received. For then that Church should be a Gospel-Church, which did obstinately adhere to the law, and they interested in the Covenant of grace, who sought righteousnes by the works of the law, and they a Christian Church who denyed, persecuted, killed Christ, and avouched vouched themselves Moses his disciples, John 9. 27. not Christs. And if that Church and the Christian be the same essentially, he that was admitted to the Jewish Church was admitted to the Christian, then baptism was needless, yea, irrigular for the entering and admission of a believing Jew into the Christian Church, contrary to that, 1 Cor. 12. 13. for they were in the Christian Church before, in that they were in the Jewish Church essentially the same, then did Peter ill to exhort them to save themselves from them, Acts 2. 40. then was Luke mistaken in saying v. 47. The Lord added them daily to the Church after they were converted and baptized, for they were in the same Church before; all which are in my apprehension palpable absurdities.

But Master Cobbet thus backs his assertion; Unless, whilst the Jewish church stood, any will say, there was no Evangelical visible Church in the world, but a legal Church; for there was no other visible Church, then that of the Jewes.

Ans. the perpetual visibility of the true Church is a point in which Papists and Protestants differ. The Papists assert a perpetual visibility of the Church in Pastors and people, as sensible as any other society of men; so that at any time one may point with his finger and say, this is the Church, the Protestants, that though it abide always upon the earth, holding the whole faith without change, and containing a certain number that constantly profess it, yet this number may be very small, and their profession so secret among themselves, that the world and such as love not the truth, shall not see them, they remaining so hidden as if they were not at all. Thus Doctor John White in his Way to the true Church, sect. 17. digres. 17. sets down the difference. If Master Cobbet mean (as he seems to do) a visible political Church in the former sense, then it is no absurdity to say, at some time while the Jewish Church stood there was no Evangelical visible Church in the world. For at the time of Christs passion when the Disciples were scattered, the shepherd being smitten, Matth. 26. 31. there was no such visible Evangelical Church; yea, some of the Papists themselves quoted by Doctor White in the same place, hold that about the time of Christs passion, the true faith remained in none but onely the Virgin Mary. Alsted. suppl. panstr. cath. Chami. de eccl. l. 2. c. 16. s. 10. Deinde tempore passionis Christi ecclesia non erat visibilis, talis scilicet, in qua erant prælati & subditi, pastores & oves. Nam ecclesia visibilis non erat apud pharisæos & scribas: Illi enim impudenter, & scelerate errarunt. But in the latter sense which the Protestants follow, we can assign an Evangelical visible Church in the world, distinct from the Jewish, while the Jewish Church stood. Alsted. ubi supra. Ergo ecclesia externa etiam tota deficere potest, remanentibus occultis fidelibus; quales tum temporis erant Simeon, Anna, Nicodemus, &c. At the time of Christs incarnation and before there was in the Protestant sense a true visible Evangelical Church in Simeon, Anna, and those to whom she spake, who looked for redemption in Jerusalem, Luke 2. 38. In the time of John Baptists and Christs Ministery, many baptized by John and Christs Disciples, John 4. 1, 2. In the time of Christs passion, besides the Apostles, and those women who professed, Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus are expressed, John 19. 38, 39. to have owned Christ. And these were a distinct Church from the Jewish, I mean the Priests, Scribes, Pharisees and people who denyed Christ, though not in their political government, yet in their profession of faith, which is ne-

se quence is there in this, God sent John to the Jewes, he had his authority to baptize those of the Jewes, who repented, therefore he sealed their membership in the church of the Jewes, and baptism was administrable in, or by, or to that church of the Jewes? It seems to me that the contrary followes, John was sent ro baptize, he preacheth repentance, tells them that it availed not them to say Abraham was their father, gathers them into a distinct School or society from the Pharisees and Lawyers, Luke 7. 29, 30. directs them to Christ, who should sever chaffe and wheat; therefore he was not given by God in reference to that church of the Jewes as a seal of their membership therein, but severed a people from them by repentance and baptism, and that baptism was not administrable in, or by, or to that church of the Jewes, but in a distinct company, by a select officer, to a severed people from that church. Nor do I know it to be true that baptism is a church-ordinance, to be in ordinary dispensation administred onely in and by a church of Christ, but conceive it a ministerial ordinance to be administred by one single Minister without the presence or consent of a church of Christ: nor do I think baptism was at that time the Jewish ordinance being neither appointed in their law, nor by Ministers chosen by them, nor by their authority, nor according to their direction, nor for the setling of their church-discipline, or authority, but in these and all other respects opposite or distinct from the Jewish church. And although I grant the Jewish people or church (though Pareus com. in locum saith, Dominus areæ suæ, h. e. ecclesiæ. imo totius mundi) Christs floor, yet from hence it followes not they were Christs visible Church, there being other reason why they are called Christs floor, because Christ imployed his fanne, to wit, his preaching among them, being Minister of the circumcision, Rom. 15. 8. though they were not Christs visible church, that is, a company or people professing themselves to be his Disciples. Nor is it true that in John Baptists and Christs time, all sorts which John baptized, hypocrites, or upright ones, were interessed in the Jewish church as Christs floor, nor any such thing proved from Matth. 3. 11, 12. the being in the floor importing onely their position, no benefit or interest accruing to them thereby. But Master Cobbet goes on.

Into this Church-fellowship also did Christs own Disciples by that new way of initiation, visibly seal persons, which were the reformed part of that Jewish church, continuing still their relation to those officers of the Jewish church, and their fellowship in the Church-ordinances, then dispensed, and not separating from the same, either gathering into distinct churches, or calling to them other ordinary church-officers, which yet were not actually given by Christ, untill upon his ascension, Ephes. 4. 8, 11, 12.

Ans. The Disciples of Christ did not visibly seal persons by that new way of initiation into the Jewish Church-fellowship; the fellowship they had in the Jewish church, was by their birth and circumcision and the law they were under, which they submitted to, while it was in force, and observed such legal ordinances as were appointed them, acknowledging the Priests and other Officers of the Jewes according to their place: yet in respect of profession of Doctrine they were by baptism separated from the Jewes, and were gathered into a distinct church, had Christ and his Apostles and the 70. as their Officers in ordinary afore the ascension of Christ: nor is there one jot of Scripture that doth in the least countenance this fond conceit of Master Cobbet, that Jewish Church-

Master Cobbet having cashiered the spurious reasons (as he imagins) why Peter required of the Jews, to whom he said, The promise is repentance afore baptism, he takes on him to assigne the genuine reasons thus.

But the reason rather was, partly because (as was said) they were under such offence. Ans. He required repentance, because they had sinned in crucifying Christ, but repentance was not required to take away the offence of the church the Jewes were of, nor for the removing of a suspension from the seal. For Peter was no Jewish Church-officer, neither did any of the Jewish church in way of Discipline deal with those Jewes by any church-act, tending to their correction for that sin, yea, the rulers of the Jewes with the people did generally avow that act as well done: nor was any thing more offensive to them then the profession of Christ, and repentance for the killing of him. But Peter requires repentance as a necessary prerequisite universally to baptism, and as the way to remission of sins, which their perplexed soules needed. Master Cobbet addes: And partly because, albeit their church were a true Evangelical church, yet it was not so pure and perfect, but had many gross mixtures both of ceremonial administrations, which were now to be laid aside, and of most palpably and openly corrupt, and rotten members.

Ans. Neither doth Master Cobbet offer any proof for this his speech, neither is there any likelyhood that Peter ever intended to urge repentance by reason of these things, sith in none of his speeches he doth take exceptions at their church by reason of them, nor had this been a sufficient reason to urge them to repentance afore baptism, because though they had covenant and Church-right to baptism, yet their right was to be suspended to the seal without repentance, because they had gross ceremonial mixtures, and openly corrupt members, the Jewish church of which they were members being a gospel-church & essentially the same with the christian, if Master Cobbet say true; for if this were a reason, the New-England Elders do ill to admit godly persons to the seal with them, which came from a Parish-church in England, in which were the like mixtures, and corrupt members without like repentance: nor doth it appear that those Jewes had any hand in those ceremonial administrations; and though they sinned a great sin in crucifying Christ, yet it was through ignorance, Acts 3. 17. In a word, were it granted Master Cobbet that Peter did require repentance for any of these reasons, yet the argument is no whit infringed thereby, that bare interest in the covenant doth not give title to baptism without repentance, sith it did not give title to these Jewes, even then when notwithstanding their offence, and the corruptions in their church, yet the promise was asserted to belong to them de præsenti in respect of external right and administration, if Master Cobbets exposition hold good, which is directly opposite to the requiring of repentance to baptism by reason of a suspension of their right to the seal by reason of offence and corrupt mixtures. But let's hear Master Cobbet a little further.

And partly, saith he, because it was now requisite, not onely to acknowledg the promised Messiah of Abrahams loynes, to be he alone, which by his bloud should come actually, as well as virtually, to ratifie the covenant of grace, visibly made with them, as they did in receiving the seal of circumcision, but ſequence is there in this, God ſent John to the Jewes, he had his authority to baptize thoſe of the Jewes, who repented, therefore he ſealed their membership in the church of the Jewes, and baptiſm was adminiſtrable in, or by, or to that church of the Jewes? It ſeems to me that the contrary followes, John was ſent to baptize, he preacheth repentance, tells them that it availed not them to ſay Abraham was their father, gathers them into a diſtinct School or ſociety from the Phariſees and Lawyers, Luke 7. 29, 30. directs them to Chriſt, who ſhould ſever chaffe and wheat; therefore he was not given by God in reference to that church of the Jewes as a ſeal of their membership therein, but ſevered a people from them by repentance and baptiſm, and that baptiſm was not adminiſtrable in, or by, or to that church of the Jewes, but in a diſtinct company, by a ſelect officer, to a ſevered people from that church. Nor do I know it to be true that baptiſm is a church-ordinance, to be in ordinary diſpenſation adminiſtred onely in and by a church of Chriſt, but conceive it a miniſterial ordinance to be adminiſtred by one ſingle Miniſter without the preſence or conſent of a church of Chriſt: nor do I think baptiſm was at that time the Jewiſh ordinance being neither appointed in their law, nor by Miniſters choſen by them, nor by their authority, nor according to their direction, nor for the ſetling of their church-diſcipline, or authority, but in theſe and all other reſpects oppoſite or diſtinct from the Jewiſh church. And although I grant the Jewiſh people or church (though Pareus com. in locum ſaith, Dominus areæ ſuæ, h. e. eccleſiæ. imo totius mundi) Chriſts floor, yet from hence it followes not they were Chriſts viſible Church, there being other reaſon why they are called Chriſts floor, becauſe Chriſt imployed his fanne, to wit, his preaching among them, being Miniſter of the circumciſion, Rom. 15. 8. though they were not Chriſts viſible church, that is, a company or people profeſſing themſelves to be his Diſciples. Nor is it true that in John Baptiſts and Chriſts time, all ſorts which John baptized, hypocrites, or upright ones, were intereſſed in the Jewiſh church as Chriſts floor, nor any ſuch thing proved from Matth. 3. 11, 12. the being in the floor importing onely their poſition, no benefit or intereſt accruing to them thereby. But Maſter Cobbet goes on.

Into this Church-fellowſhip alſo did Chriſts own Diſciples by that new way of initiation, viſibly ſeal perſons, which were the reformed part of that Jewiſh church, continuing ſtill their relation to thoſe officers of the Jewiſh church, and their fellowſhip in the Church-ordinances, then diſpenſed, and not ſeparating from the ſame, either gathering into diſtinct churches, or calling to them other ordinary church-officers, which yet were not actually given by Chriſt, untill upon his aſcenſion, Epheſ. 4. 8, 11, 12.

Anſ. The Diſciples of Chriſt did not viſibly ſeal perſons by that new way of initiation into the Jewiſh Church-fellowſhip; the fellowſhip they had in the Jewiſh church, was by their birth and circumciſion and the law they were under, which they ſubmitted to, while it was in force, and obſerved ſuch legal ordinances as were appointed them, acknowledging the Prieſts and other Officers of the Jewes according to their place: yet in reſpect of profeſſion of Doctrine they were by baptiſm ſeparated from the Jewes, and were gathered into a diſtinct church, had Chriſt and his Apoſtles and the 70. as their Officers in ordinary afore the aſcenſion of Chriſt: nor is there one jot of Scripture that doth in the leaſt countenance this fond conceit of Maſter Cobbet, that Jewiſh Church-membership gave title to baptism, or baptism visibly sealed persons into Jewish Church-fellowship.

Master Cobbet having cashiered the spurious reasons (as he imagins) why Peter required of the Jews, to whom he said, The promise is repentance afore baptism, he takes on him to assigne the genuine reasons thus.

But the reason rather was, partly because (as was said) they were under such offence. Ans. He required repentance, because they had sinned in crucifying Christ, but repentance was not required to take away the offence of the church the Jewes were of, nor for the removing of a suspension from the seal. But Peter requires repentance as a necessary prerequisite universally to baptism, and as the way to remission of sins, which their perplexed soules needed. Master Cobbet addes: And partly because, albeit their church were a true Evangelical church, yet it was not so pure and perfect, but had many gross mixtures both of ceremonial administrations, which were now to be laid aside, and of most palpably and openly corrupt, and rotten members.

Ans. In a word, were it granted Master Cobbet that Peter did require repentance for any of these reasons, yet the argument is no whit infringed thereby, that bare intereſt in the covenant doth not give title to baptism without repentance, sith it did not give title to these Jewes, even then when notwithstanding their offence, and the corruptions in their church, yet the promise was asserted to belong to them de præsenti in respect of external right and administration, if Master Cobbets exposition hold good, which is directly opposite to the requiring of repentance to baptism by reason of a suspension of their right to the seal by reason of offence and corrupt mixtures. But let's hear Master Cobbet a little further.

And partly, saith he, because it was now requisite, not onely to acknowledg the promised Messiah of Abrahams loynes, to be he alone, which by his bloud should come actually, as well as virtually, to ratifie the covenant of grace, visibly made with them, as they did in receiving the seal of circumcision, but that they own the Lord Jesus, who was crucified by, and among them, as he which alone did thus: which amongst other testimonies baptism witnesseth, therefore more was now required of the adult Jews than formerly, which yet was not required of their unripe children.

Ans. I deny not circumcision to have had this use, that it might signify, that the promised Messiah should come out of Abrahams loynes, and I take it as certain that baptism was appointed, that thereby the baptized should own the Lord Jesus, and witness that he was the Messiah, and that this wasth e reason why even the Jewes circumcised, what ever their interest in the promise should be, were bound to witness by baptism Christ to be come: But this though true, and such as shewes a manifest difference between circumcision and baptism in their use; and confirmes the necessity of faith or owning of Christ by the baptized at his baptism, yet is not pertinent to the intent of Master Cobbet. sith thereby neither is the argument from Peters requiring repentance to baptism infringed, which argues that therefore covenant-interest is not sufficient title to baptism without repentance, nor is thereby any reason given of repentance being required by Peter afore baptism: Nor is there any proof in Master Cobbet why more should be required to baptism of the adult Jewes, then of their unripe children, onely he tels of their practice in New England, that when any are received to fellowship with them, though they being as transient members by vertue of communion of churches, are admitted upon their former church-ingagement, yet desirous to be fixed Members, they require testimony of their repentance of their former church-sins and personal scandals therein committed, not so of their children not sui juris, nor capable of personal satisfaction, so it was with them, Acts 2. being to be incorporated into a purer company, exhibiting the ordinances of Christ in a more perfect Evangelical way. But setting aside the question, whether this course in New England be justifiable and by what rule they require more of the fixed member then of the transient, the defilement being alike in both. 1. It is not true that it was so with the Jewes and their children as with fixed and transient members in N. E. For neither was the church of the Jewes then an Evangelical church less perfect then that of the Apostles, but openly opposite to Christ and the christian church: Nor was that which those Jewes perplexed did propound, that they might be of their church as a purer church, but what Peter and the Apostles would advise them to do to free them from the guilt of crucifying Christ. Nor doth Peter at all as an Elder assign repentance to them for admission to outward Church-priviledges, but as an Apostle preacheth to them repentance for remission of sins and easing their consciences, which was an act of doctrine, not of jurisdiction. 2. If it had been so, yet neither doth this prove that the Apostle required more of the aged Jewes to baptism then formerly, nor that he did it because they were to be incorporated into a purer company exhibiting the ordinances of Christ in a more perfect Evangelical way, nor that he did require more of the Fathers then the children to baptism; nor is the argument infringed, that if covenant-interest intitle to baptism of it self without repentance the Father to whom the promise is as well as the child, yea, in priority to the child, who derives his title from the Fathers covenant-interest, then it should much more intitle the Father to baptism without repentance: Idem qua idem semper facit idem, so that after so many shifts, absurdities, unproved dictates, vain dreames of making the case of the Jewes like persons received into fellowship in N. E. and the overweening conceit of the purity of their church, and exhibition of the ordinances of Christ in a more perfect Evangelical way, there is nothing yet produced to invalidate the argument from Peters requiring repentance of the Jewes afore baptism, against the connexion between covenant-interest and right to baptism.

Master Cobbet goes on thus: nor must that needs follow, that because it's said, they were added to the church, that therefore they were not of the church before, but after Peter spake those words, v. 39. the promise is to you, &c. for this is as well spoken after that expression that they were baptized, as after that mentioned, of their receiving the Word gladly, and yet will our opposites conclude, that therefore they were not of the church, nor in the covenant before they were baptized, but came into that estate by baptism. If baptism were the form of the church, or that which they so much urge wholly failed, that a person must be first discipled, and so in covenant and Church-estate before he be baptized.

Ans. Either I understand not the force of words, or else it is a cleer argument, Acts 2. 41. And there were added in that day souls about three thousand, v. 47. And the Lord added the saved daily to the church, and these were of the Jewes, therefore Jewes were not of the church before that day, and that addition. For what is addition to a company but a joyning or bringing one more to them then was before? even as in arithmetick addition is putting to another member then was before reckoned. And this argument seems so plain to me, that I count the denial of it as the denial of a common notion. That which Master Cobbet answers is to the argument framed thus, they are not said to be added till after Peters speech, v. 39. therefore they were not of the church before; and I confess the argument so framed is not so cogent, sith historians do not alwaies relate things in order as they were done. Yet supposing Lukes relation orderly (of which there is no cause to doubt, sith the particles μὲν οὖν then v. 41. shew it) the argument is good, after Peters words it is said, then, and that day were added, therefore they were not before of the church. Nor do I know any absurdity in it to say they were added by baptism to the church, it being one means of addition to the church, and though I say not that baptism is the form of the church, but that there may be a church without baptism, nor the onely way of adding to the church, for the preaching of the Word is also a means of adding to it, yet this I say, that neither is a church regular, nor the addition as it should be without baptism. And though I say a person is to be discipled afore he be baptized, yet he may be baptized afore he is in some sense in covenant and church-estate, meaning in covenant by Gods promise to him, and in church-estate, that is, so as to be reckoned a member of a visible church in compleat fellowship of other ordinances with it.

Master Cobbet proceeds thus. Nor is that cogent, which is urged against the childrens right in the promise, and unto baptism, that they should be so privileged, when they came to be effectually called, and to be turned from their sins, as if this were quoad homines, their onely rule of judging of persons visible interest in the covenant of grace, or visible right to the initiatory seal thereof: or at least the onely way of having such a visible interest in the visible churches cour'. For besides that it was not so of old, in applying of circumcision, as Gods appointed seal of the parties visible covenant-estate and right:

even with us also it is not the rule in foro Ecclesiæ; for then none are by the church to be by rule admitted to baptism, but such as are effectually called, and then John which knew, that the most of them, which he baptized, would be as chaffe in the floor, he kept not rule in baptizing of them. Or if calling be taken for external inviting in the Word preached, and offer of Christ, that I suppose will not be pleaded; for then every hearer should be forthwith baptized, albeit an Indian or Blackamore; but calling as taken in reference to baptizing unto remission of sins, seemeth to be rather calling into visible covenant, and church-estate; unto which some, whose was the promise intentionally, yet were afar off from that estate actually at present, but when called to it, they were then to be baptized.

Ans. The objection answered here by Master Cobbet (if this passage here relate to my Examen, as it's likely it doth) was thus formed, Exam. pag. 60, 61, 62. Exercit. sect. 4. the promise, Acts 2. 39. is neither to fathers, nor their children, nor those afar off without calling, therefore nor to infants, who are not called by the Lord, and this calling I conceive an effectual calling to the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ, as the Apostle speaks, 1 Cor. 1. 9. Master Cobbet doting on his own frivolous exposition of the being of the promise in respect of external right and administration, propounds the objection as if the objectour agreed with him therein, and then the absurdities I confess would follow, which Master Cobbet drawes from the objection as thus interpreted [The promise is in respect of external right and administration, to none but the effectually called] that the onely rule to judg a persons visible right to baptism, and the onely way of having such a right is effectual calling. But Master Cobbet might have understood that I still disclaimed this, that right to baptism is from interest in Gods promise or covenant, and have asserted; that is onely from the persons own profession of Christ and covenanting to be his Disciple, and for the promise, Acts 2. 39. I understand it of Christ sent for remission of sins, and thus it is most true, that the promise is neither to father nor child uncalled; what therefore Master Cobbet refutes is not owned by me, yet his refutation I count not valid. For that which he allegeth, it was not so in circumcision, therefore it must not be so in baptism, proceeds on this mistake that the rule of circumcision is a rule about baptism. And for that which he saith, that John knew that the most of them which he baptized, would be as chaffe in the floor, I conceive not true, nor doth it appear that John did admit to baptism those he knew were hypocrites and reprobates. Pareus, Comm. in Matth. 3. 7. non ad baptismum indignos admisit, and of all others me thinks a New England teacher should not alledge that, which, if it were true, would condemn their strictness in admission of members into their churches, excluding them whom they are not satisfied to be truly regenerate, so far as they can discern. For doubtless whom John baptized they may and ought admit to Church-membership. And this plea is made by Master Norton, Resp. ad Apollon. c. 1. propos. 1. for the New English strictness that John Baptist repelled hypocrites from baptism. Now to the objection as I conceive it in the answer is insufficient, Master Cobbet denies that the words [as many as the Lord our God shall call] do circumscribe [to you and your children] as well as [all that are afar off, Acts 2. 39.] But then he would have it to be meant of calling into visible covenant, and Church-eſtate, in which he would have infants included? But the Scripture ſpeaks of no ſuch calling, and both that conceit, and Maſter Cobbet expoſition conformable to it, have been ſo fully refuted before, that I ſhall add no more. Onely whereas he ſaith, that if calling were taken for external inviting in the Word preached, and offer of Chriſt, then every hearer ſhould be baptized forthwith, albeit an Indian or Blackamore. I conceive it will not follow, ſith they that would have all outwardly called by the offer of Chriſt baptized, it's likely do mean it of ſuch a calling as is with effect, ſo as that the perſon called be brought to outward profeſſion at leaſt of the faith of Chriſt.

Maſter Cobbet addes three conſiderations to prove, that infants not capable of actual repentance. were not in defect of that repentance, excluded from the promiſe mentioned, Acts 2. 38, 39. which I might grant underſtanding it of the promiſe of remiſſion of ſins before God and of elect infants, and yet no proof thence for infant-baptiſm. But becauſe Maſter Cobbet takes the promiſe to be in reſpect of external right and adminiſtration, and that from it there's a title derived for infant-baptiſm. I ſhall conſider what he ſaies.

1. Such a ſuppoſed excluſion of their babes had been, to lay an occaſion, and addition of more cumbers and trouble to the darkened diſquieted ſpirits of his hearers, then to clear and eaſe them, ſuppoſing, as is undeniably evident that their wiſh againſt their poor children, preſſed them ſore, as well as other guilt. It was all along thitherto, a received truth, that God was a God to their ſeed externally, by vertue of Abrahams covenant they were his adopted children, Ezek. 16. 21. and the churches children, which ſhe bare to the Lord, v. 20. ſee Deut. 29. 29. and it was evident, by Gods own appointment of circumciſion, to be the initiatory ſeal, not to a blanck, but to his covenant of being a God to them whileſt babes, and before circumciſed in heart, ſo as actually to repent, Deut. 30. 6. this their babes had external right unto whileſt theſe their parents were convinced or unwrought upon, remaining uncut off by cenſures from the church, as of old, Ezek. 16. 20, 21. is mentioned of thoſe Idolaters. Now if not ſo when their Parents are wrought upon by Peters Sermon, as the parents were thus far loſers, by Chriſt and his Goſpel, and the efficacy thereof, loſing that precious parental priviledge which they had before this of their childrens federal iniereſt, and priviledge of Abrahams covenant, ſo alſo their children are loſers too, by their Parents coming ſo far on to Chriſt, coming now thus to be excluded their former Covenant-right and neither Parents nor children to have any Covenant-right and priviledge in lieu hereof. How ſuch doctrine might well ſtumble, and trouble ſuch Parents, let any ſober and judicious mind judg; to be ſure they have a load of guilt, and given a deadly wound unto their poor Babes, by that curſe of theirs: now if they are as Pagans, ſtrangers from the covenant, then there is no hope, in reference to ordinary and revealed grounds and wayes of hope and life, Epheſ. 2. 11, 12, 13.

Anſ. This long tale hath more of childiſh affection then manly reaſon, ſetting aſide the new language of initiory ſeal ſet to a blanck, childrens federal intereſt, precious parental priviledge, cavenant right, and ſuch like gibberiſh according to the Pædobaptiſts ſuppoſitions about the imagined covenant to father and child, right of infants to the firſt ſeal thereby, and this a great priviledge without which no revealed grounds ordinary of hope and life, this is the

ſubſtance of the tale, that if Peter had told them their infants were not to be baptized, who before were circumciſed he had added more grief to the ſpirits of the Jewes preſſed with the ſenſe of their wiſh againſt their children, Matth. 27. 25. and therefore he is to be conceived, Acts 2. 39. to have told them of their infants right to baptiſm. Now ſurely in my apprehenſion if Peter had told them ſuch a tale, as Maſter Cobbet imagins he did; even then when ſo great perplexity of ſpirit was upon them by reaſon of the horrid ſin of crucifying Chriſt, and their imprecation on them and their children, they being then indiſpoſed to laughter, muſt in all likelyhood have been much moved either with grief, or anger againſt ſuch a Doctor, as would mock them with ſuch a receipt, as was no more to their diſeaſe then the promiſe of a feather to weare is to revive a man almoſt dead with the pain of the collick. For what comfort could this be to them concerning themſelves, who expected the heavieſt wrath due to them for their ſin, or concerning their children on whom they wiſhed a moſt heavy curſe, to be told of a priviledge for them and their children, which as it was to them before, was painfull in the uſe, ſo was it a heavy yoke in the obligation, to be continued in an other rite which of it ſelf was but waſhing with cold water, and in the fruit of it before God yielded no benefit without faith and repentance, and in the church yielded at beſt but a tjtle of church-membership, by which they had no benefit, but what they might have without it, nor would ſtand them in any ſtead for church-communion without their actual believing? It is clear, Acts 2. 39. is an encouragement to the duties, and expectation of the good mentioned, v. 38. Now what encouragement is it to repent, to be told that the promiſe was already to them in external right and adminiſtration, and to their infants, though not as yet penitent or believers? ſuch a motive might rather have tended to keep them in impenitency being in ſo good caſe already in the eſtate they were in. And for baptiſm into the Name of Chriſt, ſuch a motive tended rather to diſſwade them from it, as might fill their mindes with high conceits of their and their childrens covenant-right, even by vertue of their being in the Jewiſh church without faith in Chriſt, or joyning to the chriſtian church. And for the good of remiſſion of ſins before God which they needed, what aſſurance could they have of it by telling them of their and their childrens having the promiſe already as Jews, without perſonal faith and repentance in external right and adminiſtration before men? As for the falſity of the ſpeech as expounded by Maſter Cobbet, it is ſhewed before, what he would burden his oppoſites with, as if denyeng infant-baptiſm, they counted them as Pagans, ſtrangers from the Covenant, without hope, in reference to ordinary and revealed grounds and ways of hope and life, Epheſ. 2. 11, 12. 13. is a meer Calumny. For ſetting aſide their talk of initiatory ſeal, and external covenant (which they cannot ſay aſſure life to the infants of believers without election) we aſſure as much by the covenant of grace, juſtification by Chriſts bloud, and ſanctification by his Spirit, which is effectual calling, and they can in trueth aſſure no more, nor any other way, though to uphold their credit, and to win the affections of credulous parents, they befool them with idle talk of a covenant which the Scripture never mentions, and of ſealing that covenant by baptiſm, which the Scripture is ſilent of. The texts Ezek. 16. 21, 20. Deut. 30. 6. will be examined afterwards. Why he bids ſee Deut. 29. 29. I know not. unleſs it be that we may diſcern his weakneſs in alledging the Scriptures

pertinently, sith it cannot be meant of infants to whom the revealed things do not belong, that they may heare them and do them in infancy.

The second consideration is in brief this, that the Apostles who as yet preached not for the abolishing of Mosaical rites, but were indulgent to the Jewes, Acts 21. 20, 22, 23, 24. would not give such manifest and just offence to them as to hold forth an exclusion of their babes from right in that covenant of Abraham it self, whereof circumcision was a visible seal, as the places quoted in Gen. 17. 11, 13. and Acts 7. 8. declare.

To which I answer, By my exposition there is no exclusion of babes from the promise, Acts 2. 39. though it be restrained to those who are effectually called, sith babes may be said to be effectually called by the Spirit of God according to election: nor doth my exposition exclude the Jewes infants from the Covenant, Gen. 17. 7. or circumcision, or in the least manner meddle with that point. Nor do I think the promise, Gen. 17. 7. to be the same with that, Acts 2. 39. If it were, yet how it may be understood otherwise then Master Cobbet conceives is shewed above.

The third consideration, setting aside his phraseology is this, that if Peter should intend to exclude infants from baptism, it were to be cross to Pauls doctrine, Rom. 15. 8. who makes it Christs end not to evacuate, undermine, or abolish by his coming, [the promises] indefinitely made to the fathers whether in, Gen. 17. 7. or Deut. 30. 6. or the like, or respecting parents or children, but to confirm the same, Ibid. But how this consequence is made good I cannot conceive, but do deny it, and expect a proof of it ad Græcas Calendas.

Master Cobbet concludes the chapter with an answer to the objection, that if this were granted of those Jewish children, what is this to our childrens federal interest in the daies of the Gospel? and he answers, 1. That it proveth that by the Apostles since Christs ascension, this tenent of the children of visible members of the church are visibly interessed in the covenant of grace is of divine authority, and is no humane invention.

Answ. 1. In the objection, the concession was that those Jewish children were never before denyed to be visibly in Abrahams covenant, which Master Cobbet alters, thus [are visibly interessed in the covenant of grace] now it may be granted those Jewish children were visibly in Abrahams covenant, and yet denyed, that they are visibly interessed in the covenant of grace, the covenants being not the same every way, and it being certain, as in the case of Saul and others, a person may be visibly interessed in the covenant of Abraham, and yet not in the covenant of grace. 2. Infants visible interest in the covenant of Abraham I know no otherwise, then by circumcision, and this sure the Apostles taught of no other then the Jewish children. 3. The text, Acts 2. 39. speaks not of visible interest in the covenant of grace by external administration. 4. If it did, yet it speaks of none other children, but Jewish, and so not of ours, and therefore the tenent may be an humane invention notwithstanding this text and the concession of the objectour.

2. Saith Master Cobbet, these Jewes are eyed by the Apostles, as persons to partake of priviledges of a Church of Christians, as was baptism; and therefore what extent of federal right and priviledge is granted by the Apostles to them and their in that way is equally belonging to Gentiles in a like way.

Anſ. the Jewes were not tyed by the Apoſtles to partake of baptiſm without the repentance of each perſon to be baptized, nor is it by the Apoſtle made a federal right and priviledge, but a duty to which the promiſe did encourage, nor is the promiſe ſaid to be to them or any of their children, but the effectually called, ſo that were the concluſion granted Maſter Cobbet, yet his purpoſe is not gained that the Gentiles infants are to be baptized.

3. Saith he, to ſuppoſe God by Apoſtolical ratification, to allow to children of Jewiſh parents coming on to Chriſt, &c. a larger priviledge then to Gentile parents, as came on to Chriſt, &c. is to make God a reſpector of perſons.

Anſ. 1. It is not yet proved that the Apoſtle allowes to children of Jewiſh parents the priviledge Maſter Cobbet means. 2. the Jewes, Acts 2. 39. were not conſidered as coming on to Chriſt, but as guilty of crucifying him, and under horrour of conſcience for it. 3. The priviledge of baptiſm or the promiſe in reſpect of external right and adminiſtration (as Maſter Cobbets phraſe is) could not belong to the Jewes at that preſent, & therefore the Apoſtles ſpeech had been falſe in Maſter Cobbets ſenſe. For he cannot aſſert they were then come to Chriſt, but coming on to Chriſt, nor is it certain that many of them ever came to Chriſt. But [the promiſe is de præſenti in reſpect of external right and adminiſtration, which is Maſter Cobbets ſenſe] is falſe of perſons which were not come to Chriſt, except he will have the Apoſtle aſſert a right of baptiſm to them without faith. 4. The Jewiſh parents children had then a larger priviledge then the Gentiles in the firſt offer of the Goſpel, as they had larger priviledges before, Rom. 9. 3, 4, 5. and they ſhall have larger priviledges at their calling hereafter if I underſtand the Apoſtle, Rom. 11. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. And herein God is not ſuch a reſpector of perſons as Peter, Acts 10. 34. denies him to be ſo, as not to accept a Gentile who feareth him and worketh righteouſneſs as well as a Jew. Acts of ſpecial grace undue to ſome perſons, not to others, argue not unjuſt reſpect of perſons in God, but acts of judgment awarding good to one that fears him and works righteouſneſs, becauſe of ſuch a Nation, and not to another, who doeth the ſame, becauſe he is not of that nation, contrary to his declarations, promiſes, lawes, by which he hath bound himſelf; would argue unjuſt proſopolepſy, his declarations, promiſes, and lawes being general, and ſo the being of that Nation extirnſecal to the cauſe.

Saith he, the force of the words ſeem to carry it, that the ſame promiſe which was to thoſe Jewes actually in Church and Covenant-eſtate, was intentionally to theſe afar off, which were ſtrangers actually from a like eſtate, whether thoſe of the ten tribes, or rather thoſe of the Gentiles, and ſhould be actually to them, when they came to be called actually into the fellowſhip of that covenant and Church-eſtate. Now what promiſe was that? verily a promiſe which carried with it a partial reference unto their children: The promiſe is to you, and to your children: And the ſame is unto them afar off, whom God ſhall call; Scil. in reference to their children alſo.

Anſ. There is no colour from the words that, Acts 2. 39. the promiſe is meant to be actually to thoſe Jewes, and intentionally to thoſe afar off, nor doth this conceit agree with Maſter Cobbets expoſition, who will have it to be de præſenti to belong to the perſons recited, and conſequently actually to all there named; Nor do I know how to make true ſenſe of this his ſpeech. For the promiſe is either ſaid to be in reſpect of the act of the promiſer, or of the thing promised. In the former sense the meaning of Master Cobbet should be this, that God had made the promise to the Jewes already actually, but he had not made the promise to those afar off, but intended to do it afterwards. But this sense agrees not with Master Cobbets and other Pædobaptists conceit, who would have the promise to be that to Abraham, Gen. 17. 7. But that promise was made almost 2000 years before, not made to those Jewes then, nor to any afar off afterwards that can be shewed. In respect of the thing promised, whether it be (as I say) Christ manifested in the flesh for the remission of sins before God, it is not true that it was actually then to the Jewes mentioned, Acts 2. 39. For they were not yet repenting believing persons, or it be meant of remission of sins in respect of external right and administration, it is not true that the promise was actually then to them, in external right, they had no right then to claim baptism, being not then believers, neither had they the promise in external administration de præsenti, for they were not actually baptized (which I think is the external administration meant, I cannot imagine Master Cobbet would be so vain as to conceive Peter told them, they were circumcised) but Peter exhorts them to be baptized, and therefore the promise was no more actually to the Jewes then present, then to those afar off. Nor is it true that the Jewes present were then actually in Church and Covenant-estate, if it be meant of the Christian Church, and Covenant of grace in Christ, for they were not repenting believers; and if it be meant of the Jewish Church, and Covenant-estate which they had as descended from Abraham by natural descent, and by reason of circumcision, so the Gentiles were never called or to be called actually into that fellowship of that Covenant, and Church-estate, but rather out of it: Nor if they had been called into it, had that Church and Covenant-estate at all conduced to their interest into the Christian Church and Covenant of grace, but rather to the contrary. And for the promise it is true, there is a reference to their children, but not because they were believers children or their children, but by vertue of Gods call, and it is true the promise is to Gentiles children and Jewes when called of God, and no otherwise, and consequently no Birth-priviledge to either intitling to baptism. And thus is that magnified chapter of Master Cobbet abundantly answered.

I Shall adde a consideration of what Master Sidenham notes on Acts 2. 39. that I may at once shew the impertinency of its allegation for connexion between the covenant and baptism, and infants of believers as covenant-interest upon that consideration. I agree with him that the promise is of remission of sins and so of salvation. Nor do I deny it to be suitable to what is promised, Gen. 17. 7. understanding it not, as Pædobaptists and among them Master Sidenham conceives, as a promise to each believer and his natural seed, but as a promise

miſe to Abraham as the father of believers, and his ſpiritual ſeed by the following of his faith of righteouſneſs before God repeated at large, Jerem. 31. 34. Nor do I miſtake his making it the ſame with the promiſe of Chriſt, and the Spirit, as, Gal. 3. 14. is meant including juſtification, ſanctification, and all graces. And his words I conceive very oppoſite to overthrow Maſter Cobbets and others conceit of external right and adminiſtration, when he ſaith, it would be but a poor comfort to a wounded ſoul for to tell him of a promiſe of gifts, not of ſpiritual grace, and the Holy Ghoſt is a better Phyſician then to imply ſuch a raw improper plaiſter to a wounded heart, which would hardly heal the skin, this promiſe is brought in as a Cordial to keep them from fainting, and to give them ſpirits to believe, and lay hold on Jeſus Chriſt. And truly no other promiſe but that of Free-grace, in order to Salvation, can be imagined to give them comfort in that condition. And after, and it muſt needs have been a mighty low, and diſproportionable way of perſwaſion, to put them upon ſuch high things in the former verſe, and to encourage them onely by the narration of ſome temporary gifts in the following, when their eye and heart was ſet on remiſſion of ſins, and ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; and nothing but a promiſe holding forth theſe mercies could have been conſiderable to them. Nor do I deny that the children as well as the Parents are included in this promiſe, nor do I deny but that the children are invited to baptiſm by the promiſe as well as the parents. But I deny, 1. That the mention of the promiſe to them and their children was alluſive to the expreſſions in the Old Teſtament, when God ſaid to Abraham I will be the God of thee and thy ſeed, Gen. 17. 7. or that, Iſai 44. 3. and ſuch like, nor hath Mr. Sidenham proved it, and there is this reaſon againſt it. For in thoſe expreſſions the Fathers are mentioned as righteous perſons, and believers: but here the parents could not be conſidered as righteous and believing perſons, for they were not ſuch, but then charged by Peter, and at that time under the ſenſe of the great ſin of killing Chriſt, and admoniſhed to repent of it, and therefore the words have clearly this ſenſe, The promiſe is to you, and your children as bad as you have been, and the mention of their children is not alluſive to Gods expreſſions in the Old Teſtament, but to their own curſe on them and their children, Matth. 27. 25. and ſo cannot note a priviledge to them and their children as perſons better then others, bnt an aſſurance to them of that good which they feared their ſin debarred them of, by telling them of Gods inrent for good according to his promiſe, though they meant it for evil, as the ſame Apoſtle doth, Acts 3. 17, 18, 19. and Joſeph did, Gen. 45. 5. and 50. 20. 2. I deny that the children are invited to baptiſm by the promiſe as giving title to baptiſm of it ſelf, for the promiſe is urged as a motive to a duty, not as a plea whereby they might claim, nor was their intereſt in the promiſe the antecedent to baptiſm, but the conſequent on it. For the promiſe whether it be of remiſſion of ſins, or of the ſaving gift of the holy Ghoſt allowing Maſter Sidenhams obſervation that it is δοθεισα not χαρισμα it is certain that Peter did aſſure them of it not as yet already attained, but as attainable, not before, but upon their repentance and baptiſm, neither to them, nor to their children as their children; but to them and their children, and all afar off as many as the Lord ſhould call. 3. He doth not invite them to baptiſm, but ſo as that he firſt puts them in minde of repentance. Now if the promiſe had been alledged as giving title of it self to baptism, he had left out repentance: But putting it in first, he plainly shewes, that the alledging of the promise was as well to move them to repentance as to baptism, and first to repentance, then to baptism; nor is any other course taken with the children then the parents, the promise and duty are declared in like manner to both. And therefore Master Sidenhams talk of Peters speaking in the known dialect of the Old Testament, that if he had not meant upon their believing and baptism without any other consideration of Gods calling or their repentance the children to be in the promise, he had deceived them, and that there was no other intent in mentioning the promise but to intimate that as the Jewes and their infant males were circumcised by vertue of the promise, so it should be to them in baptism, is but vain without proof, and without truth.

But Master Sidenham affirms that the words [as many as the Lord shall call] can in no sense be referred to the former part of the verse, either to parents or children; which if true, then according to his own interpretation of the promise the Apostle asserts, that the promise of remission of sins and of the Spirit including justification, sanctification, and all graces, was to them and their children, whether called or no. But let's view his reasons for this audacious assertion. For, saith he, 1. He changes the sense in both parts of the verse; in the first part unto the Jewes, he speaks de præsenti, of the present application of the promise; repent you and be baptized ——; for the promise is to you and your children: even now the promise is offered to you; and they were then under the call of God; But when he speaks of the Gentiles, because they were yet afar off, and not at all called, he speak de futuro, as many as God shall call, even of them also; which is the first hint of the calling of the Gentiles in all the Acts of the Apostles.

Ans. The Apostle changeth not the tense of the same verb in either part of, v. 39. For there are but two verbs in the verse ἐστὶν and προσκαλέσηται, and neither used above once, so that he might have said, he useth two verbs in two teases, but neither changeth in one or both parts of the verse the same verb or the same tense of the same verb. But what if he had changed the tense, and had said, the promise is to you and your children whom he now calls, and the promise shall be to all that are afar off as many as God shall call even of them also, did it follow that in no sense the words (as many as the Lord shall call) can be referred to the Former part of the verse, either to parents or children? Surely if I have any understanding, the contrary followes, that if the meaning were, the promise even now is offered to you, and they were then under the call of God, but not yet called, the words may be referred to the former part of the verse to parents and children, thus the promise of remission of sins is now offered to you and your children under the call of God to be attained by as many as the Lord our God shall effectually call at this time, and hereafter. But how stands it with other Pædobaptists applications of this Scripture, as if the promise did de præsenti belong to the children in external right and administration, and a covenant-right in them, and title to the initial seal, and yet the promise onely offered to them, and they not called, but under the call of God. If the offer of the promise, and a call in fieri which is not in facto esse be sufficient to intitle men to the promise in external right, and to the initial seal, then had those Jewes which believed not, Acts 28. 24. and the Athenians ons, Acts 17. 32. such right and title. Master Sidenham will have infants by the words [your children] will he say the promise was then offered to them, and they then under the call of God? If he did, he should tell how that we might understand it. And there is need he should shew some reason and proof of thathisparaphrase, which is not yet done, ere his Reader (if he be wise) will receive it. And for what he saith that in that verse there is an exact distribution of the world into Jew and Gentile, the Gentiles being usually those afar off, it requires better proof then this, sith neither is the term Jew expressed, nor the term [afar off] used of the Gentiles that I know but, Ephes. 2. 13. where it is ὁι ποτὲ ὄντες μακρὰν, which may be questioned whether it be the same with πᾶσι τοῖς εἰς μακρὰν, in the text. But Master Sidenham addes.

2. How unequal would the distribution be of this verse, not suitable to the lawes of expression among rational men? If as many as the Lord shall call, should be a limitation to the former part of the verse, the word children, must needs be redundant and superfluous; for Jewes and Gentiles comprehend all the world. Now children must either be one part of the world, or comprehend under one or both names, or be a distinct world by themselves, neither Jewes nor Gentiles: And this must needs follow on such a reading of the words; for the design of the Apostle is to hold forth the freeness of the promise to Jew and Gentile, and their children, to these Jewes at present, to the Gentiles and their children when God shall call the parents, as he did these Jewes.

Ans. Master Sidenham hath printed here such a toy as might please himself, but is fit for nothing but to be slighted. For, 1. He supposeth that [you and those afar off] is as much as Jewes and Gentiles, which is not proved. 2. He supposeth consequently [you and those afar off] to comprehend all the world, because Jewes and Gantiles comprehend all the world. But this followes not, though the term [you] note Jewes, if it note onely some Jewes, to wit, those to whom Peter then spake. 3. That if [as the Lord shall call] should be a limitation to the former part of the verse, the word children, must needs be redundant and superfluous, for Jewes and Gentiles comprehend all the world. Which indeed followes on his conceit that here is an exact distribution of the world into Jew and Genrile. But this is manifestly false, for though [they afar off] should be the Gentiles, yet all the Gentiles are not therein comprehended, but those that are called; and if the term [you] note the Jewes, yet in notes not all the Jewes, but such as were parents, and therefore the term [children] is necessary being not comprehended under the term [you] and it is alike necessary to expres them distinctly, whether the limitation [as many as the Lord shall call] be applyed to the former part of the verse or to the latter onely, so that I can yet see no reason of Master Sidenhams conceit, that such a referring of the limitation [as many as the Lord our God shall call] to the first part of the v. as I make, would cause the distribution of this v. to be so unequal as not to be suitable to the lawes of expression among rational men. And to what he addes further I say [children] were one part of the world, and comprehended under Jewes, but how this must needs follow on such a reading of the words as puts [as many as the Lord shall call] to the first part of the verse any more then to the latter onely I see not? nor if it did, do I know any absurdity in it, no nor any opposition to what he makes the Apostles designes. But let's see what he

he makes of all this to his purpose. He tels us, now put children by themselves a third party, and add, whom the Lord shall call, and you exclude them from being either Jewes or Gentiles, and so excommunicate them from any hopes of calling, or being saved. To which I say, if I doated like Master Sidenham, making [you and those afar off] synonymous to Jewes, and Gentiles in general, when the terms note onely some in particular, and put [children] by themselves as a third party, I should exclude them from being Jewes or Gentiles, whether I added to the first part of the v. the words [as many as the Lord shall call] or did otherwise. And if I made all that are called and saved to be comprehended under [you and those afar off] as Synonymous to Jewes and Gentiles in General, and excluded [children] as neither I should excommunicate them as he saith. But that either any such thing followes on the limiting of the former part of the v. by those words [as many as the Lord our God shall call] or any other of my sayings, is neither proved by Master Sidenham nor any other, nor ever will.

But Master Sidenham goes on: Now this is, 1. Contrary to that known rule in Logick, That Omnis bona distributio debet esse bimembris; onely of two members, and those opposite one to another; to bring in a third marres all. This then he imagines that if [your children] be a third party, and not either [you or those afar off] a Logick rule would be broken. But whose Logick rule is that he mentions? I confess there have been Logicians who have affected dichotonie, but when they have tyed themselves to it, they have been censured as guilty of accurate vanity by Burgersdicius Inst. log. l. 2. c. 5. Keck. Syst. Log. l. 1. part. 2. c. 3. and others. Scheibler Top. c. 29. n. 36. bounds it with sundry cautions. And indeed we must cashier many received divisions if that rule hold as e. g. in morality of good into honest, pleasant and profitable, in divinity of the law into moral, ceremonial and judicial, of the divine persons into the Father, Son and holy Ghost, of the Bookes of the Old Testament into Moses, the Prophets and the Psalmes and so blame Christ himself. What Master Sidenham infers, so that it is most clear the words must be understood, as they are translated, is not denyed by me, and yet the words, [Acts 2. 39. as many as the Lord our God shall call] limit the first part of the v. Nor do I deny the promise is to you Jewes, and your children at present, to express the Apostles meaning in the sense I have given, nor do I gainsay what he addes, and to those afar off also and their children, when God shall call them, if he mean it of the calling the chileren as well as the parents; though withall it is to be noted, that in the text there is no mention of the children of those afar off. But what he saith further, else (that is, if the promise be not to the children of those afar off when God shall call the parents) calling can with no sense be applyed to any tittle of the former part of the verse, without you make it monstrous, and unlike it self, is either false or unintelligible by me. For though the promise should not be to the children of those afar off, when God called the parents, yet this is in my apprehension good sense, The promise is to you being called, and to your children being called, nor is any monstrosity or unlikeness to it self more in this sense then if the term [called] were applyed onely to the latter part: But there would be non-sense, if the distribution were reduced to dichotomie as Master Sidenham would have it, and the proposition would be false, that the promise (which Master Sidenham makes to be of remission miſſion of ſins, Chriſt and his Spirit, juſtification, ſanctification, and all graces) is to them or their children without calling, or though God ſhould not call them.

There is ſome more of the like ſtuff in that which followes. 2. It's againſt another rule about diſtribution which is, that partes diviſionis ambulent equali paſſu, that the parts of a diſtribution ſhould be equally ſet together. Now here will be a mighty inequality, as to the communication of the promiſe; if the words ſhould be taken in their ſenſe, the Jewes will have a greater priviledge then the Gentiles, if children be not equally added to both, the Jewes had the promiſe made to them, and their children at preſent, theſe afar off ſhall onely have the promiſe to themſelves, but not their children.

Anſ. It is one of the vexations that befals men that write bookes that they are neceſſitated to anſwer ſuch ſilly ſcriblings: But ſo we muſt do or elſe the world will be befooled with that which is moſt vain. The objection to which this Author anſwers is, that the latter clauſe, as many as the Lord ſhall call, is a limitation of the verſe, and no more are under the promiſe, and ſo children, if God ſhall call them, ſhall alſo enjoy the promiſe; now that which he contends for is, that [children] is to be added equally to both parts of the v. (which was not in queſtion) but ſhewes not the promiſe to be to the children if God call them not, which is the thing in queſtion. And as he ſhootes beſides the mark, proving what was not to be proved, ſo his argument is nothing to that he takes on him to prove. He ſets down a rule in Logick, which I find in Scheibler, top. c. 29. n. 39. with this explication, hoc eſt, ſumentur ex eodem genere. But in this ſenſe it ſeemes this Author meant it, that the thing divided be communicated equally to the parts of the diviſion, it is not true. For then the diviſion of being into ſubſtance and accident, God and the Creature, with many more, were not right diviſions. But were his rule right, as he means it, (as it is not) yet it is nothing to his purpoſe. He would prove, if children be not equally added to both parts of the v. Acts 2. 39. then the Jewes will have a greater priviledge then the Gentiles (which might be granted without abſurdity) for there would be a mighty inequality, as to the communication of the promiſe, which is againſt the rule of Logick he mentions, as if the promiſe or the communication of the promiſe were a whole divided into parts, and one part were the Jewes and their children, and the other were the Gentiles and their children, which were ridiculous; nor do I know any other way he can underſtand his arguing from this Logick rule, but that it will appear alike frivolous. But the Reader (I doubt) will think I inſiſt too much in anſwering ſuch trifles. I go on therefore.

3. Saith he, conſider, how comes this word (your children) to be kept in, for what end and uſe, if it were not to ſhew ſome ſpiritual priviledge they have with their parents, when God calls or converts the parents? what ſtands it for but a ſtone of offence to conſciencious hearts?

Anſ. 1. he aſſerts in this paſſage that (your children) is kept in to ſhew ſome ſpiritual priviledge they have with their parents, when God calls or converts the parent? but a little before he obſerved a change in the tenſe in both parts of the verſe; in the firſt part unto the Jewes, he ſpeaks de præſenti, of the preſent application of the promiſe, and ſuppoſeth under the call of God already; here (your children) is to ſhew a ſpeciall priviledge, when God calls or converts the parent, which intimates that he had not then called or converted the parent. and therefore the one passage crosseth the other.

2. He had said before, that (as many as the Lord shall call) can in no sense be referred to the former part of the verse either to parents or children, and yet here he refers it in a necessary sense, as he conceives, to the parent.

3. If the special priviledge to the children doth suppose the parents call, why not also the childrens call?

4. Yea the special priviledge in the Text to the father and child is the premise, and that Master Sidenham makes to be of justification, sanctification, and all graces, and can he imagine this promise to be to a child barely on the parents call without his own personal calling by God? I think he durst not assert it: If he did, I am sure it is false as being contrary to *Rom.*8.30. and therefore of necessity to make his own exposition good, we must limit the former part of the verse, in what is said both of parent and child by the words [as many as the Lord our God shall call]. As for his questions, why [your children] is in the verse, it hath been answered, because of their imprecation, *Matth.*27. 25. to which he replies thus:

To see the sad shift of errour is wonderful: Can any man imagine, that the parents could doubt more, or so much of their childrens being accepted, and saved, when God should call them who were innocent, and only under the sudden rash curse of their parents, when they saw that the promise was to themselves, who were the actual murtherers of the Lord Jesus.

Answ. To me who am so well acquainted with the shifts of Pædobaptists, it is not wonderful to see the shifts of errour. This very reply what is it but a vain shift? For he supposeth the children were innocent, which he cannot prove, and that the curse was sudden and rash, which seems rather to have been deliberate, and that they saw the promise was to themselves, and Christ offered pardon to themselves, when there was nothing but horrour on their consciences for crucifying Christ till after Peters speech to them, and that if the parents were not imagined to doubt more or so much of their childrens being accepted and saved as themselves, then there was no reason to insert [your children] by occasion of the imprecation, Matth. 27. 25. whereas if they doubted any whit, yea if for the present they did not think on that curse, yet might afterwards as there was cause they should, there was reason enough for Peter to insert those words whether they tended to take away a present, or possible fear in them concerning their children. But there is more of his trifling yet behind.

2. Saith he, Such a consideration would rather sadden them then refresh them, to mention the calling of their children: For they might more doubt of that, then of any thing, whether God would call them or no, and be as far to seek as ever they were, that they would have but cold comfort upon this account; this was enough to break their hearts if that were in their eye.

Answ. The phrase [and be as far to seek as ever they were] intimates the Jews had attained some comfort before this speech of Peter (which is manifestly false from the Text) and that telling them that the promise was to their children if called by God would rather sadden them, then refresh them, it was cold comfort, enough to break their hearts if that were in their eye: which is in effect all one as if a man should say, when a man is in a swoon hot water will rather sadden him then refresh him, or when a man is sad, it is cold comfort enough to break his heart to give him a cup of Sack. But Mr. Sidenham will not be thought sine ratione delirare. For, saith he, they might doubt more of that, then of any thing, whether God would call them or no. What? was it likely they should doubt more of their childrens calling and pardon, if they were called, then of their own pardon, who were then under horrour of soul for their own grand crime of killing Christ? or if they did thus doubt, would it break their heart to be told that there was a possibility and hope that the promise was to their children, who might be called? I have heard that if it were not for hope the heart would break: but I never heard that the telling of a person of a thing of which there was hope, though he might doubt of it, would break his heart. But Master Sidenham addes.

The old way of conveying the promise is cut off, no promise but to called ones: our poor children are uncalled, and God knows whether ever they may be called of God: thus might they reason.

Ans. Its true, they might thus reason: But that they did, or by Peters words, as expounded by me, were likely to reason thus, is against reason to imagine. The old way of conveying the promise I imagine he means the giving the initial seal to their infants, that is, Circumcision. Now will any sober man think that in that perplexity they were in through conscience of their guilt, and danger of wrath impending on their children by reason of their impious curse, when Peter tells them to stay them from despair, that yet in Christ sent the promise was fulfilled for remission of sins to them and their children, if each of them were called of God, that is, did repent and believe, that they would repel this comfort by questioning the losse of Circumcision, and bemoaning the want of it to their infants? I know the Jews were zealous after for Circumcision and the Law, even those who became Christians, yet sure in that perplexity there was not the least thought of such a poor privilege as an initial seal, but of the freedome of themselves and children from their guilt and curse. But I would know where this doctrine is, that Circumcision conveys the promises, or is the old way of conveying them, and what Scripture saith the promise (of remission of sins here meant, as Master Sidenham himself expounds it) is to any but called ones. Paul saith, Rom. 8. 30. whom he hath called, them he hath justified. Hos & non alios, saith Augustine, and Orthodox Protestants, as from the Text may be evinced, saith all these agree to the same persons to be predestinate, called, justified, glorified. Is this such doctrine as were enough to break their hearts? But let's hear him out.

But when he includes them in the same promise with parents, and exhorts the parents to repent upon this ground, that the promise is to them and their children; this savours like a Gospel comforting-exhortation, and could not be but of great efficacy upon their spirits.

Answ. Me thinks it should be comfortable to them, that the promise was to them and their children upon condition of calling, that is, sanctification, repentance, repentance, believing: It is Antinomian doctrine, not Gospel, to say, justification is to a person uncalled, that afore he believes he is justified actually before God, even while he lives in the height of sin. It is true the promises of the land of Canaan and other benefits were to Abrahams natural seed: but the Gospel-promises of remission of sins and everlasting life in Christ, were never to Abrahams or any believing parents natural seed as such, but only to Abrahams spiritual seed, elect and true believers. Master Sidenham addes.

4. What strange mysterious tautologies would be in this one verse? if that last sentence should refer to all the former expressions, we must read it thus to make out their sense. The promise is to you parents of the Jews, when God shall call you, (and they were then under call) and to your grown children, when God shall call them; and to all which are afar off, when God shall call them: Can any man with his understanding about him think the holy Ghost should faulter so much in common expression of his minde, when there was no need of adding of calling to any part, but to those that are afar off, who never were yet under Gods Gospel call?

Answ. There's neither tautology, nor mystery in limiting the promise to the called of the Jew parents and children, nor doth any thing make it seem strange, but ignorance. Tautology is not, sith the Propositions are three distinct ones in words and sense, it is not the same to say, the promise is to you called, the promise is to your children called, the promise is to all that are afar off called you, your children, all that are afar off being different tearms. Mystery is no more, if it be added to the former part of the verse then to the latter. The calling in the latter part of the verse can be understood of no other than effectual calling, whether inward onely, or both inward, and outward, for to none other of the Gentiles is the promise of remission of sins. And for the same reason the limitation is necessary to be added to the former part of the verse; nor can any good reason be given why the promise should be to the Jews and their children without calling by God, and not to those afar off without it; The Jews were then under call, but were not then called, nor doth Mr. Sidenham say they were, and therefore Peter might aptly enough say to them, The promise is to as many of you as the Lord our God shall call. The manner of expression is usual to put after a distribution of persons the limitation in common. There is the like, Acts 3.24. where as many as have spoken limits the Prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after. Had Mr. Sidenham understanding in him of these things, he had not charged my exposition with making the Holy Ghost faulter in common expression of his mind. Such censures ill become such a smattering scribler. But who so bold as blinde bayard? It follows

Lastly, saith he, the word, children, may and must be understood of little ones, infants, not of adult and grown persons, for these reasons.

Answ. Boldly said like a young horspur. Belike then when persons are ten, twelve, or more years old, they cease to be their parents children and seed. But I am willing to hear reason: 1. saith he, the word here (τέκνοις) properly signifies an off-spring, any thing brought forth, though it be but of a day, of a moment old: Thus when a woman is said to be in pain, and to bring forth, this word is used, John 16.21. Luke 1.31. Matth. 1.16. Luke 1.57.

Answ. How heedlesly did this Authour scribble when he said, this word (which can be no other then τέκνοις) is used, John 16. 21. Luke 1. 31. Matth. 1, 26. Luke 1. 57. when it is used in none of those places, though the verb whence it comes is used in them. But were it used there, yet the reason is frivolous: τέκνον signifies a thing brought forth, ergo τέκνοις children, Acts 2. 39. may not, must not be understood of adult and grown persons. He might as well have said, it must be understood but of those that are in this moment brought forth, not of an infant of a day old, and that the person brought forth is only the mothers τέκνον, or child, because she only brought him forth, not the father. I did think till I met with this new Master, that the Holy Ghost spake properly when he called persons grown to ripe age their fathers τέκνα or children, Ephes. 6. 1. Col. 3. 21. &c.

2. Saith he, Its an indefinite word, and therefore may not be restrained to grown children, except God had expresst it in a peculiar phrase.

Answ. Mr. Sidenham alters the conclusion he undertook to prove, and concludes that which he findes not denied: His reason is as well against his own conclusion: Its an indefinite word, and therefore may not be restrained to infant-children except God had expresst it in a peculiar phrase. And indeed the reason is good only thus, Its an indefinite word, therefore its to be restrained as the subject matter directs. But Mr. Sidenham shifts as it may serve his turn. His conclusion set down at first excluded adult children, because he knew the promise had not then been to them without calling, and so his project of drawing thence a priviledge for infants intituling them to baptisme had failed, but here his proof coming short he alters the conclusion into that which might be granted him without detriment to the cause.

3. Saith he, It must needs be especially meant of little ones, because they are distinguished from themselves, who were men of years. Now when we distinguish between men and children, we suppose the one adult, the other under age, and not grown up; and it is contrary to all ways of expression to think otherwise.

Answ. Belike then we must think that where it is said, Matth. 10. 21. the fathers shall deliver the children to death, and the children shall rise up against the parents, and Luke 1. 17. to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, it must be especially meant of little ones, because they are distinguished from themselves who were men of years, and to think otherwise if the Dr. of New-Castle say true, is contrary to all ways of expression, which you may imagine he knew.

4. Saith he, It cannot be rationally conjectured otherwise, because the Apostle doth join them with their parents in the same promise, and not leave them to stand by themselves, as grown persons must.

Answ. Belike then if any understand the promises to Abraham, and his seed, to David and his seed of any other then infants it is not rationally conjectured. I have done with this Writer about this Text, of which he vainly talks, as he doth in the rest; so that all things weighed, this text of Scripture if there were no more, holds forth (not to be seen) the sameness of the promise to believers of the Gospel, both Jew and Gentile and their children, as ever it was to Abraham and his natural seed.

SECT.

SECT. XXV.

Mr. Marshal's Reply to my Examen about his first Conclusion is reviewed, and the Covenant Gen.17. still maintained to be mixt, and that Gentile self-justiciaries though reputed Christians are not termed Abraham's seed, nor Gal.4.29. proves it, and that the distinction of outward and inward Covenant is not right.

1 Now reassume the Review of Mr Ms. Reply to my Examen of his Sermon; Next, saith he, come we to examine the truth of the Antecedent, which I manifested in those five Conclusions opened in my Sermon. But I supposed he had intended to prove by his five Conclusions not onely his Antecedent, but also his Consequence. If I apprehend him rightly, there are none of his five Conclusions but the two first that are for proving of the Antecedent. But let's view what he writes.

The first whereof is this, That the covenant of grace for substance hath always been one and the same both to Jews and Gentiles. The first Conclusion you grant, and therefore there were no need to have stayed the Reader any further about it, were it not that some of your Exceptions do almost recall your grant. If it be in substance the same, though you should reckon up a thousand accidental and local differences, it were nothing to the purpose.

Answer. It is true, I granted this Conclusion understanding it according to the Explication in his Sermon, pag.9,10. in these words, That the new and living way to life was first revealed to Adam immediately after his fall, and that blessed promise concerning the seed of the woman often renewed, and the Patriarchs faith therein, and salvation thereby plentifully recorded in Scripture: But the first time that ever it was revealed under the express name of a League or Covenant was with Abraham; who because he was the first explicite Covenanter is called the Father of the Faithfull; and ever since clearly hath all the world been divided into two distinct bodies and families, the one called the Kingdom, City, Houshold of God, to which all who own the way of life were to joyn themselves; and these were called the children of God, the sons of Abraham, the children of the Kingdom; all the rest of the world, the Kingdom of the Devil, the seed of the Serpent, strangers from the covenant of grace, without God in the world, &c. The substance of this covenant of grace on Gods part was to be Abraham's God, and the God of his seed, to be an all-sufficient portion, an all-sufficient reward for him, to give Jesus Christ to him, and righteousness with him both of justification, and sanctification and everlasting life, Gen.17.1, &c. Gal.3.15. Rom.4.3. John 8.56. On Abraham's part the substance of the covenant was to believe the promised Messiah, to walk before God with a perfect heart, to serve God according to his revealed will, to instruct his family, &c. Gal.3.16. Gen.17.1. & 18.19. Gal. 3.17,19. In which passage I did conceive that Mr. M. meant by the substance of the covenant of grace the promise as it is purely evangelical, which I conceived to be the same with the new covenant mentioned Heb.8.9,10,11,12. & 10.16,17. And this I was sure was not made with all Abrahams natural posterity, much less with any believing Gentiles natural posterity as such, but

onely so many of either as are elect and believe, as Rom.9.6,7,8. Gal.3.29. is determined, and so none of a believing Gentiles children are in this covenant, but they that are believers, or elected to faith in Christ. But then this would not serve Mr. Ms. turn. And therefore notwithstanding those words in his Sermon, yet in his Defence pag.90. he saith, The covenant of grace contains not onely saving grace, but the administration of it also in outward ordinances and Church-privileges: but in what sense he means it contains them he declares not. That which is contained in a covenant is either the promise or the condition. The seal, writing, writer, pen, and such like adjuncts are never called the covenant, nor contained in it, though they be instrumental to hold forth the covenant. Now where any promise is of outward ordinances and Church privileges, or how they should be a condition of the promises I understand not. He distinguisheth pag.106. of the covenant of grace thus,

The covenant of grace is sometimes taken strictly, sometimes largely: as it is considered strictly, it is a covenant in which the spiritual benefits of justification, regeneration, perseverance, and glorification are freely promised in Christ. Secondly, as the covenant of grace is taken largely, it comprehends all evangelical administrations, which do wholly depend upon the free and gracious appointment of God, and this administration is fulfilled according to the counsel of Gods will; sometimes it was administred by his appointment in types, shadows, and other legal ordinances; this covenant of administration God said Zachary 11.10. he did break with the people of the Jews, and at the death of Christ he did wholly evacuate and abolish, and in stead thereof brought in the administration we live under, where also he rejected the Jews, or broke them off from being his people in covenant, and called the Gentiles and grafted them in ramorum defractorum locum, into the place of the branch, and broken off as your self, pag.65. do with Beza rightly expres it.

But herein Mr. M. confounds what in his Sermon he distinguished the covenant of grace and the administration of it. He saith, The covenant of grace largely taken comprehends all evangelical administrations; and saith, This administration is fulfilled. By the evangelical administrations he means the old legal ordinances afore Christs death, and the administration we live under which is baptism and the Lords Supper, pag.126. he saith, Our Divines own the outward administration of the covenant under the notion of fœdus externum, the outward covenant.

Now if there be sense in these passages, I must needs charge my self with dulness, who cannot discern it. Is it sense to call that a covenant without a Tope, which is neither a promise nor a condition of a covenant? to say that the covenant contains or comprehends evangelical administrations, and yet to call it the administration it self? to say, this administration was administred, and not something by the administration administred?

But let us consider what others make of this distinction of covenant strictly and largely taken, or which is all one, the inward and outward covenant. I have met with none that speaks more distinctly than Mr. Anthony Burges in his Book entituled Spiritual Refining, Sect.8. Serm.64. pag.393. who was one of the Assembly.

The external covenant is that whereby in an outward visible manner God doth own a people, and they externally profess their owning of him; but yet in in their hearts and ſouls they do not ſtedfaſtly cleave unto God, and faithfully keep this covenant in the conditions thereof. The internal or inward covenant is that whereby God doth in a ſpiritual powerfull manner take a people to him working in their hearts all thoſe gifts and graces promiſed in the covenant as regeneration, remiſſion of ſins, adoption, and the like. And in this ſenſe onely the truly godly are in the covenant, and they are onely Gods people, and he their God. This diſtinction of a covenant into outward and inward is not a diſtinction of a genus into its ſpecies, ſo much as a diſtinction of a thing into the ſeveral adminiſtrations and diſpenſations of it.

In this paſſage there is want of clearneſs as well as in M. Marſhals. He tels us negatively, that it is not a diſtinction of a genus into its ſpecies, yet with ſome mincing of the matter (ſo much) as if it might be the diſtinction of a genus into its ſpecies, though not ſo much, which is an expreſſion of a man who would ſay ſomewhat bnt cannot well tell what to ſay. But if it be not a diſtinction of a genus into its ſpecies, what diſtinction is it? Is any man the wiſer for a meer Negative? It is, ſaith he, a diſtinction of a thing into the ſeveral adminiſtrations and diſpenſations of it.

But this tells us not what ſort of diſtinction this is, whether nominis of the word or rei of the thing. If he had meant to be a diſtinction of the word he ſhould have ſhewed where the word is ſo taken, if of the thing, what kinde of diviſion or diſtribution it is. To me it ſeems againſt all Rules of Logick to divide thus. A covenant is either the outward or the inward adminiſtration and diſpenſation of it or the inward, which without Trope of ſpeech (which ſhould be abſent from men that ſhould rationally explain things) is non-ſenſe, affirming one covenant to be one adminiſtration and another another, whereas the covenant is one thing and the adminiſtration another thing. But his meaning is this, one covenant is outward being outwardly adminiſtred, or adminiſtring outward things, another inward adminiſtring inwardly or inward things. But neither is this right ſith the covenant doth not adminiſter but the covenanter, nor doth he do it by the covenant but by ſome other act according to the covenant, the covenant is onely an agreement and promiſe to do it, the adminiſtring is the keeping of the covenant, not the covenant it ſelf.

But let that be yielded that the covenant doth adminiſter, yet the deſcription of the external covenant as made by Mr. Burges doth not include adminiſtration. For God may in an outward viſible manner own a people, and they externally profeſs their owning of him, and yet neither adminiſter one to another any thing promiſed, or if the owning be adminiſtration, the people adminiſter to God as well as God adminiſters to them. Beſides his deſcription makes an external profeſſion of owning God requiſite to the external covenant. If that be right, no infant is in the external covenant till it profeſs owning God, and in what outward viſible manner God doth own infants except by baptizing them (which God doth not but the Miniſter, nor ever commanded or declared his approbation of it) I know not, and then the outward covenant is nothing elſe but baptizing, and an infants being in covenant is his being baptized or to be baptized, and the argument from the covenant comes to this ridiculous tautology, all infants of believers are in the outward covenant (for they dare not ſay they are all in the inward) that is, they are in the outward adminiſtration, which is no other than baptiſm, and ſo the antecedent is equipollent to this, they are or are to be baptized; and the conclusion is, ergo, they are to be baptized.

But Mr. Marshal it seems conceives the outward Covenant, as he describes it, meant *Zach.*11.10. where the Prophet saith, And I took my staff even Beauty, and cut it asunder, that I might break my Covenant which I had made with all the people. And he interprets it thus, that at the death of Christ God brake his covenant with the Jews, wholly evacuating and abolishing the legal Ordinances, and bringing in the administrarion we live under.

But if this be the sense, then this Prophesie doth not foretell any thing penal to the Jews; for the abolishing of legal ordinances was a mercy to them, they being a yoke intolerable, Acts 15.10. whereas the Text speaks of it as an evil that should befall them.

Piscator in his Analysis, Eventus fuit desertio Judæorum, *v.*9,10,11, & 14. Diodati and after him the New Annotations in *Zech.*11.10. My Covenant] the peace which I had granted to my Church, that she should not be assaulted no more, nor be molested by any strange Nation, which was verified from the Maccabees time, untill a little before the coming of Christ.

Grot. Annot. in locum. Abstuli protectionem illam specialem. Irritum facere fœdus suum Deus dicitur, cum ruptis a populo fœderis conditionibus, ipse quoque a sua parte promissa non implet.

Mr. Ms. conceit is, as if by the Covenant were meant legal Ordinances, and so the breaking off is meant either de jure onely, and then it is not a Propheste of what should happen; or else de facto, in the event, but then it is not true; for the Jews retained the legal Ordinances of the Covenant he made with them, and do still at this day even circumcision, and as many other of the legal Rites as they can in their present dispersion. It is true, God brake off the Jews from being his people in Covenant, and called the Gentiles and grafted them in ramorum defractorum locum, and how this is to be understood I have shewed before at large in the first part of this Review. But without a Trope to call outward Ordinances Gods Covenant is without example of Scripture (the Covenants Rom.9.4. say Beza, Piscator, New Annot. &c. are the Tables of the Covenant) and can hardly be acquitted from non-sense. Onely perhaps it seems Mr. M. for a shift, as *v. g. pag.*103. he saith, God makes good his promise sealed in baptism in which he engageth himself to be the God of believing Christians and their seed; which in his Sermon pag.10. he makes the promise of saving grace, yet when it is proved that cannot be true of Gentile believers and their children he runs to this vain shift, that the outward Covenant belongs to them (which is nothing to the promise Gen.17.7. in which outward administrations are not promised) though not the inward. Nor is it Mr. Ms. manner alone but the common course of Pædobaptists in their writings to play fast and loose with the ambiguity of the term Covenant and Covenant of grace, as hath been formerly shewed, and may appear more in that which follows. But to keep to Mr. M.

He tells me, If the Covenant of grace be in substance the same, though you should reckon up a thousand accidental and local differences it were nothing to the purpose.

To which I reply; Though I grant the Covenant of grace be always the same in substance, meaning thereby that the elect are saved in all Ages by the same

ſame promiſes of evangelical grace, that is righteouſneſs, regeneration, adoption in Chriſt, and the promiſe Gen.17.7. hath an evangelical ſenſe, which is this, that God will be a God to Abraham and his ſpiritual ſeed by election and faith, and am unjuſtly charged of ſpoiling all infants of all intereſt in the Covenant of grace, and confining the Jews promiſes to earthly and temporal bleſſings, of which I have acquitted my ſelf in my Letter to Mr. Baily, Sect. 1.2. yet I never granted that the Covenant with Abraham did contain no other than evangelical promiſes of grace in Chriſt, nor that theſe very promiſes Gen.17 4,5,6,7,8. were all evangelical promiſes, nor any of them in that ſenſe, which is obvious to the underſtanding, according to common Rules of Grammar, but onely according to the Apoſtles Expoſition, who never ſo expounded the promiſe, Gen.17.7. as if it were made to any mans ſeed but Abrahams, not to every believing Gentile and his natural ſeed. And certainly this difference between the covenant Gen.17. and the covenant of grace will be much to the purpoſe to ſhew the Covenant, Gen.17 not to be to a believing Chriſtian and his ſeed; and that though circumciſion of male infants ſhould have its reaſon barely from the intereſt of the circumciſed in that Covenant; yet ſuch a Covenant-intereſt not belonging to our children who are of the Gentiles cannot be a reaſon to entitle them to baptiſm though it ſhould be granted (which is not) that our baptiſm ſucceeds their circumciſion, and ſeals the covenant of grace as theirs did that made with Abraham.

This mixture of the Covenant, and the inference thence, that Circumciſion did not belong to all believers and their children, but as in Abrahams family is obſerved by Mr. Allen and Mr. Sheppard in their Defence of the Anſwer to the nine Poſitions, chap.8. and becauſe their words are appoſite to my purpoſe, though otherwiſe applied by them, I ſhall recite them.

Now that we hold the right proportion in the perſons may appear, firſt, in that (as was granted) Circumciſion ſealed the entrance into the Covenant, but this Covenant was not ſimply, and onely the Covenant of grace; but that whole Covenant that was made with Abraham, whereby on Gods part they were aſſured of many ſpecial bleſſings (whereof Lot and others not in this Covenant with Abraham were not capable) and whereby Abraham and his ſeed, and family were bound for their part to be a people to God, and to obſerve this ſign of the Covenant, which others in the Covenant of grace were not bound to. Secondly, (as is granted) it was Abraham and his houſhold and the ſeed of believing Jews that were to be circumciſed, and therefore not viſible believers, (as ſuch) for then Lot had been included; ſo by right proportion not all viſible believers as ſuch, but ſuch as with Abraham and his family are in viſible Covenant to be the people of God, according to the inſtitution of Churches when and to which the ſeal of Baptiſm is given; and therefore as all family-churches but Abrahams being in a new form of a Church were excluded, ſo much more ſuch as are in no viſible conſtituted Church at all.

In which it is expreſly yielded, that the Covenant with Abraham was mixt in my ſenſe, that Circumciſion did not belong to all viſibly in the Covenant of grace, that it belonged peculiarly to the Church in Abrahams family, that Baptiſm follows the Chriſtian Church conſtitution (which ſure is much different from the Jewiſh) and therefore not the Covenant made with Abraham. But Mr. M. ſeems to be ſenſible of this, and endeavours to prevent it in that which follows.

But, saith he, the first doth almost recall it, wherein you charge me to carry the narration of the Covenant made with Abraham, *Gen.*17. as if it did onely contain the Covenant of grace in Christ; whereas it is apparent (say you) out of the Text, that the Covenant was a mixt Covenant consisting of temporal benefits, the multiplying of Abrahams seed, possession of Canaan, the birth of Isaac, besides the spiritual blessings.

To which I reply, I meant so indeed, and so I plainly expressed my self, that all the difference betwixt the Covenant then made with Abraham, and the Covenant made with us, lies onely in the manner of administration of the Covenant, and not in the Covenant it self. The Covenant it self in the substance of it holds out the same mercies both spiritual and temporal to them and to us.

Answer. By mixt Covenant I mean a Covenant consisting of some temporal blessings proper onely to Abrahams natural posterity and some spiritual blessings common with him to all believers whether Jews or Gentiles. And I say, those promises of temporal blessings were of the substance of the Covenant made with Abraham, that they cannot in any fit sense be called the manner of the administration of the Covenant, that the Covenant it self in the substance doth not hold out the same mercies both spiritual and temporal to them, and to us. And all these things I thus prove.

1. Those promises were of the substance of the Covenant, which are in Scripture called the Covenant it self, without mention of the spiritual promises; but this is true of the promise of the Land of Canaan, &c. Psalm 105. 8,9,10,11. *Nehem.*9.8. *Gen.*26.3. & 28.3,4,13,14. 1 *Chron.*16.15,16,17, 18, &c. In which places the Text expresly saith, God made a Covenant with Abraham; and then recites the Covenant, that it was to give the Land of the Canaanites, &c. which were temporal mercies not now promised or performed to us. Ergo, To deny those promises to be of the substance of the Covenant, and to call them administrations, which the Scripture calls the Covenant it self so often, if it be not to thwart the Scripture, sure it is unwarrantably to alter its expressions: God himself so expresly calling the giving of Canaan his Covenant, *Exod.*5.45.8. refutes this conceit.

2. Those promises are of the substance of the Covenant made with Abraham, which are integral parts of the Covenant. But those promises of temporal blessings are integral parts of the Covenant made with Abraham. Ergo, the major is in it self manifest, for the Covenant is nothing but a promise or an aggregate of promises; and so if a Covenant have any substance in it, it must be the integral parts. The minor is apparant from the very words, Gen,17.4, &c. where God having in general terms told Abraham, My Covenant is with thee, he expresseth to the 9. verse, wherein his Covenant was with him, and that is set down in those peculiar blessings to Abrahams natural posterity, Verse 6. 8.

3. The promise of Canaan can be called no other way the administration of the Covenant of grace than in that in the hidden sense under that promise spiritual good was intended to be shadowed. But this very thing shews that the promise of an earthly inheritance was in the first place thereby intended to Abrahams natural posterity, and the other onely as an additament or appendix to the promise in its first meaning. Now then if the promise of Canaan in the first sense be not of the substance of the Covenant, neither is the promise onely implied mysteriously in the more hidden sense, which is but an appendix to it, of the substance of the Covenant.

4. The Covenant made with Abraham, holds not out the same mercies both spiritual and temporal to Abrahams natural posterity and to us. Ergo, there is more difference than in the administration. The Antecedent is apparant; for the promise of the Land of Canaan, the birth of Isaac, Christ to come of him according to the flesh, &c. are not made to us. Ergo,

But Mr. M. thinks to prevent this by telling us, Godliness having all the promises both of this life and that which is to come; and that they and we have our right to all these promises upon the self same condition.

Answer. Thes things are manifestly false; for though godliness have the promise of this life and that which is to come, 1 *Tim.*4.8. yet the promises, *Levit.*26.6, &c. are not made to every godly man, that he shall ly down and none shall make him afraid, that he shall chase his enemies, &c. but rather assurance is given that he shall be persecuted, 2 *Tim.*3.12. Mark 10.29,30. Nor have they promises upon the same condition; for *Exod.*34.24. it is promised, that none should desire the Israelites Land while they did appear thrice in the year before the Lord, but to us there is not that promise nor upon that condition.

But, saith he, earthly things indeed were to them promised more distinctly and fully, heavenly things more generally and sparingly than they are now to us; and on the contrary, spiritual things are more fully and clearly promised to us than to them; and earthly promises more generally and sparingly.

Answ. This is not all the difference; for I have shewed that to us an earthly rest is not promised at all, but the contrary assured to us, to wit, suffering persecution.

Mr. M. adds, And that these temporal benefits which you mention, viz. multiplying of Abrahams seed, the birth of Isaac, and possession of Canaan, were all of them administrations of the Covenant of grace, they were figures, signs, and types of spiritual things to be enjoyed both by them and us. These things I not onely asserted, but proved in my Sermon. If you mean no more than this, that all these temporal blessings were promised and given as flowing from the promise of Christ, and were subservient to it, or were types and shadows of it, you mean no more than what we all grant, who yet deny any more mixture in the Covenant made with Abraham for the substance of it, than there is in that made with us; and that the difference lies onely in the manner of administration.

Answer. I deny not but that the possession of Canaan, birth of Isaac, multiplying Abrahams seed were figures, signs, and types of spiritual things to be enjoyed by elect Jews and Gentiles according to the mystical hidden sense of the words; nor do I deny that they were subservient to the promise of Christ, whether it be to be said they flowed from the promise of Christ, or tended to the fore-signifying of Christ to come, the grace of the Gospel, and the heavenly inheritance and rest is a doubt. Surely they flowed from Gods special love to Israel above any other people, *Deut.*7.6,7,8. And I grant that Circumcision ratified spiritual blessings chiefly, that is as the chief thing promised; yet in the sense in which I think Cameron meant it, Thes 78. de triplici fœdere primarily, rily, that is according to the first and manifest sense of the words it sealed earthly promises peculiar to Abrahams natural posterity, and that Ciacumcision of infants was specially for that reason, to wit, the peculiar promises to Abrahams natural posterity; nor do I see cause to mislike Grotius his speech Annot. in Luc. 1.59. Infantium autem circumcisio ostendebat fœdus esse gentilium.

And this mixture of the Covenant with Abraham, to wit, that it contained not onely promises common to all believers, but also promises so peculiar to Abrahams natural posterity, that all of them were not according to the Law to be made good to any Gentile though a Proselyte circumcised, namely, the inheritance of the Land of Canaan, of which none but the natural progeny of Israel were to be inheritours, is so manifest, that the denial of it I can hardly impute to any thing but dulness or meer pertinacy. Yet why these promises so peculiar to them should be denied to be of the substance of the Covenant made with Abraham, I see no reason they being integral parts. Christ it is true is the substance of the things promised as they were Types; yet the things promised in respect of their natural being had a substance besides, and in relation to the Covenant were as much the substance or substantial parts of it as the spiritual promises; yea, sith those spiritual promises (if I may so speak) did subsist in the expressions of temporal blessings, it follows in my apprehension, that if the promises of the spiritual blessings were of the substance of the Covenant, then surely the promises of temporal blessings, which those very promises did express, and under the shadow of which they were made should be much more of the substance of the Covenant. Nor do I conceive any grosness in it to imagine of God, that he should in a Covenant of grace founded in Christ intend in the seal of it to ratifie temporal blessings, when he intended to assure spiritual blessings under the covert of words in the first sense importing onely temporal. As for the terming of the administration of the Covenant of grace it is neither according to Scripture, nor is it very handsom sense, specially according to Mr. Ms. doctrine, who calls Circumcision the old administration of the Covenant, and if it were an administration of the promises, which were administrations of the Covenant of grace, then Circumcision was an administration of an administration.

But Mr M. speaks to me thus. I desire to know of you what Scripture ever made circumcision a seal of Canaan; we have express Scripture that it sealed the righteousness of faith whereby he was justified, but I no where reade that it sealed the Land of Canaan.

Answer. To gratifie him I tell him, that I read Circumcision called a token of the Covenant, *Gen.*17.11. which Covenant was the Covenant mentioned before in that chapter, and in that v.8. the promise of the Land of Canaan is made, and Acts 7.8. Stephen calls it The Covenant of Circumcision, which he shews not how it was otherwise fulfilled in that speech but by bringing them out of Egypt, and placing them in Canaan, in which he fulfilled his promise to Abraham, *vers.*6,7,16. It is true, the Apostle calls Abrahams Circumcision A seal of the righteousness of faith which he had yet being uncircumcised, Rom 4.11. But I finde not this said of any ones Circumcision but Abrahams: surely it cannot be said truly of any ones Circumcision but a believers. As for what he saith, That we have now carnal promises, and therefore our covenant may be as well mixt as that with Abraham.

I answer it is true, We have promise of the life that now is and that which is to come; and so our Covenant is in a sort mixt of spiritual and temporal promises: but these promises are common to all godly persons both Jews and Gentiles, not proper onely to Abrahams natural posterity inheriting, in which sense I called it a mixt Covenant, Exercit. pag.2. Sect.1. I grant, we have outward privileges and ordinances, as Baptism and the Lords Supper, and that many now are members of the visible Church, and partake of them who are not elect nor true believers. But none but elect persons have the promises of the new Covenant made to them; none but an elect person hath the promise, that God will write his Laws in his heart, be his God, &c. And therefore none but such in truth are in the covenant of grace, though others may be in shew in it and accounted so by us.

Mr. Josiah Church in his Book forenamed pag.41. interposeth thus, 1. Spiritual and temporal promises may be said to make a mixt Covenant, but not a mixt Evangelical Covenant; for a mixt Gospel Covenant is a Covenant partly of works, and partly of grace, and the Covenant of which Circumcision was the initial Sacrament was not mixed after that manner; for the Law was not given untill four hundred and thirty years after it, and then it was not mixed with it, but onely annexed to it, Gal.3.17.

Answer. Mr. Church his Confession, that spiritual and temporal promises may be said to make a mixt Covenant, is as much as I need to justifie my speech Exercit. pag 2. who did not call the Covenant made with Abraham mixt in any other sense.

But, saith he, 2. the difference was onely in the dispensation, and not in the substance of the Covenant: the Covenant of which Circumcision was the initial Sacrament was as purely Evangelical as this, whereof Baptism is the initial Sacrament: for the Gospel is said to be preached unto them as well as to us, and the temporal promises were Evangelical and belonged to believers, as such; for because of unbelief many obtained them not, Heb.3.19. Also there are temporal promises in this dispensation, and the people of God have Christ and all other things by the same charter, Matth.5.5. & 6.33. Rom.9.32. Ezek.36. 25,30.

Answer. If there were difference in the promises, there was difference in the substance of the Covenant made with Abraham and ours. It is proved from Gal.3.8. that the covenant made with Abraham was Evangelical, but not purely Evangelical. It is not true, that the temporal promises Gen.17.4,5,6,7,8. belonged to believers as such. For though many through unbelief entered not into Canaan, Heb.3.19. yet neither all nor onely believers entered in. The Gospel was preached to them as well as to us, Heb.4.2. but not either by so purely Evangelical a covenant, nor in so perspicuous a way. We have temporal promises now, but not the same, nor by the same charter.

As for what he adds, that the promises sealed in the former dispensation were principally spiritual. I grant it, but deny it any absurdity, to say, that no promise was sealed to many circumcised infants, that their souls were not profited, nor any benefit to them by circumcision, though there was profit by it attainable and attained by many; more than which to the present purpose is not gathered from Rom.2.1,2.

I return to Mr. M. I take his grants pag.99. That Circumcision was comprehended bended in his, &c. as belonging to the manner of administration of the Covenant together with sacrifices, and that the Covenant of grace was administred by sacrifices and other types before Circumcision was instituted; and so blot out my second exception against his first conclusion, onely it is to be observed that *pag.*187. he doth cross himself. For whereas here he grants it to belong to the manner of administration, not to the substance of the covenant, there he will have it to belong to the substance of the Covenant not as a part of it, but as a means of applying it. And this is in effect all one as in his language to say, it belongs not to the substance of the covenant, for of it onely are the parts, but to the administration. For how doth it administer it but as a means of applying it?

But my third Exception requires more reviewing. Mr. M. in his *Sermon pag.*14. had mentioned besides Christ and true believers a third sort of Abrahams seed not born Jews, but made Proselytes, who were Abrahams seed by profession who sought justification by the works of the Law did not submit themselves to the righteousness of God; and alleged *Gal.*4 29. for it.

Against this I excepted 1. that I thought he could not shew where in Scripture such are called Abrahams seed.

To this he replies, 1. That he named not Proselytes to add any strength to the argument, it had been enough for his purpose to have said, Some in the Church of the Jews were visible members, yet not inwardly godly, and these were called Abraham's seed as well as others.

Answ. I should have yielded to call such, if they were Jews by birth or nature, Abrahams seed; but not so of any Proselyte, and so Mr. M. had not his purpose, of applying the term [Abrahams seed] to Gentiles who were believers onely in profession, much less to Gentiles who did not so much as profess faith in Christ, but sought righteousness by the works of the Law.

2. He saith, He never expected to have met with a quarrel for calling them, who joyned to the Church by that common name whereby the Church-members were called, viz. the seed of Abraham or the children of Israel.

Answer. There was no quarrel in my words: but if Mr. M. did not expect that, his sayings in that Sermon would be sifted to the bran; it was his oversight. They that doubted of the divine warrant of Pædobaptism had very great cause to discuss that Sermon being preached and printed at that time by such a man, and taken to be the sense of the Assembly of Divines then sitting at Westminster.

He says, The seed of Abraham or the children of Israel were the common name by which Church-members joyned to the Church of Israel were called: but he proves it not, and till he do prove it, I reject it.

3. Saith he, And could no place of Scripture be produced where Proselytes are expresly called by this name, the matter were not Tanti.

Answer. It would follow then that the promise *Gen.*17.7. of being God to Abraham's seed is not meant of Gentile Proselytes, who were onely by profession Gods people, not in reality; much less of their natural seed, and this would make most of the infants baptized unbaptizable by Pædobaptists own principles; for sure the do not take the natural infant-children of them that are not Abrahams seed to be in the covenant, *Gen.*17.7. and therefore must confess them unbaptized.

4. Saith

4. Saith he, But if it were a thing of any moment, it would be no hard matter to produce evidence sufficient to prove that Proselytes were called Israelites and the seed of Abraham, as Acts 2.10. & 22. compared Acts 13.26. compared with v.43. but I forbear.

Ans. Of what moment it is, hath been said. I think it would be a very hard matter out of those Texts to prove any Proselytes, much less such as were onely visible Church-members of the Jews, seeking justification by works, not submitting to Gods righteousnes, Abrahams seed. In the former of the Texts is not the term Abrahams seed, which was the term in question, nor do the Verses compared prove that the Proselytes mentioned *v.*10. are called *v.*22. Men of Israel, any more than Men of Judea and dwellers at Jerusalem, *v.*14. nor doth it appear they were called Men of Israel, *v.*22. in any other sense than as Israelite by generation.

The later Text mentions the children of the stock of Abraham, *v.*26. but so called by natural generation opposite to the Gentiles, as *v.*46. shews, not Proselytes called Abrahams seed, though self-justiciaries and Gods people onely, so far as outward profession, yea, children of the stock of Abraham are there distinguished from those among them that feared God, that is, Proselytes.

I told Mr. M. that he joyned with Arminius, in calling self-justiciary Proselytes Abraham's seed: which Mr. Bayn denied.

He saith, He joyned not with Arminius, that I miss-allege Arminius, joyn with Servetus.

To which I reply no more than I have done in my Apology, *pag.*22. *Sect.*5.

To acquit himself from what I charge him with, that Mr. Bayn opposeth him, he brings words six lines before of Mr. Bayns, that say [children of the flesh] in some other Scripture doth note out justiciaries, and that these words clear him, and that I was guilty of negligence or falshood.

But sure I must continue still this charge against Mr. M. and add further an imputation of negligence at least, if not of falshood, who heeded not that the words of Mr. Bayn which I alleged say as much, that the term [children of the flesh] elsewhere signified self-justiciaries though not there; yet the seed of Abraham without any adjoyned is never so taken. Now I did not charge with this that he had no Scripture to prove self-justiciaries to be called children of the flesh; but that he had no Scripture to prove self-justiciary Proselytes called Abrahams seed, which Mr. Bayn saith, is never so taken, and therefore Mr. Bayns words clear him not but condemn him.

Mr. M. says, I speak of Abraham's seed by calling, and that the promise [I will be the God of thy seed] was made good in the calling the Gentiles, all which were not partakers of an inward calling, and therefore yield a seed of Abraham onely by profession. But that which I say I mean not of a meer outward calling, nor of all the Gentiles who are outwardly called.

I excepted also against Mr. Blake for making some Abraham's seed in the bosom of the Church now, who are born after the flesh, and thereby have a Church-interest or a birth-right to Church-privileges: and that he grosly alleged for this *Gal.*4.29.

And Mr. M. in his *Sermon pag.*14. saith, We have also some (meaning in the Church) *who are onely a holy seed by external profession, Gal.*4.29.

What Mr. Blake replied hereto in his Answer to my Letter is answered in the Postscript.

Postscript to my Apology, *Sect.*5. what he hath said in his *Vindic. Fœd. cap.*11. is answered in the second part of this *Review Sect.*18.

Mr. M. wonders at my calling those passages very gross, and tells me,

1. That it is apparant Ishmael and the civil justiciaries, of which he was Type, had a visible standing in the Jewish Church, and were the same of whom Paul speaks, Rom.10.3. and that in the same place Paul himself saith, Even so it is now (even in the Church of Galatia it was so) and Paul by his doctrine laboured to make them better) I see not why Mr. Blake might not use this as an argument, that some have a visible Church-membership, and ought to partake of outward Church-privileges, notwithstanding they will not have the inheritance of children unless they repent.

Answer. If this had been all Mr. Blake inferred from *Gal.*4.29. I should have granted the conclusion, though I deny his Exposition, and the proposition he raiseth from the Text.

But it is another thing that Mr. Blake and Mr. M. in his *Sermon pag.*14. would have. Mr. M. that Gal 4.29. There is mention of some who are onely a holy seed by external profession, and here expounds [even so it is now] in the Church of Galatia, there is a different seed of Abraham, one which is holy onely by external profession, seeking righteousness by the works of the Law, and have thereby a visible Church-membership, and ought to partake of outward Church-privileges, which is clean besides the meaning of the Apostle, who doth not say, Even so it is now in the Church of Galatia, but simply [Even so it is now] that is, it so happens in the world, they that seek the righteousness by the works of the Law persecute them that are born after the spirit, that is, who through the spirit do wait for the hope of the righteousness which is by faith: which was true in the Jews, who persecuted the Apostles and other Christians out of zeal for the Law. Now these had no visible standing in the Christian Church, nor is the term [born after the flesh] taken in the better part so as to import a privilege a holy seed by external profession, but in the worser part, for an unholy seed by external profession and practice persecuting the Christian faith and hope.

Mr. Blake exponds [being born after the flesh] as if it imported a privilege, whereas it imports a cursed estate opposite to [being born after the spirit] and would have derived a title to Church-interest of some in the bosome of the Christian Church, particularly believers infants: whereas to be born after the flesh is applied there to persecuting unbelievers, who were not in the Church, but cast out, nor had any Church-interest by virtue of being born after the flesh, but had an opposing enmity to it thereby. Nor is it said of infants that they were born after the flesh, but of such as persecuted them that were born after the spirit; nor is there a word intitling them that were born after the flesh in that respect Abrahams seed, though Ishmael their Type, and the Jews his Anti-type were Abrahams natural seed. So that M.M. is mistaken in conceiving that which offends me in Mr. Blakes expression is, that he thinks there is a fleshly seed of Abraham; for I grant the Jewish self-justiciaries were such. But I conceive a gross absurdity in Mr. Blake, that he takes [being born after the flesh] in the better part, as importing the privilege of Church-interest to infants of believers, and calling such as are born after the flesh Abrahams seed by way of privilege derived from that birth, importing the seed of such to be visible ble members in the Christian Church, of which I still conceive I passed a right censure in my Examen for the Reasons given, however Mr. Blake and his Seconds take it.

SECT. XXVI.

The mixture of the Covenant Gen. 17. as by me asserted is vindicated from Mr. Blake's Exceptions, Vind. Fœd. c. 26.

But I am necessitated to have more work with Mr. Blake, of whom I may say, (whatever his worth be, and how excellent soever his Treatise be accounted of by those who have commended it in their Epistle, and others in other respects) that not onely in his Preface to the Reader he doth unchristianly accuse me of scorn, and disrespect, of falsifications such as a man might think I had at once cast off all regard either of conscience or reputation without either cause or shew of proof, but also of a high spirit, of bloudy revenge, of uttering reviling words against the Church of Christ, having the same spirit with the Jesuits, from those things which were innocent of any such spirit, and one grain of charitable candour with a little heed of my carriages and speeches might have freed me from, who do not any where charge him or my Antagonists with such kinde of accusations, though I censure their arguings somewhat more freely than they think meet, who are not to be judges in their own cause.

And for the Book throughout there are so many misconstructions of my words, and so many satyrical quips and taunts instead of any clear disputing, that I can discern little or nothing of any brotherly affection to me, or study of truth in that part of his Vind. Fœd. wherein he opposeth me. In his Preface to the Reader after those hard speeches of me forementioned, after his venting his conceit, as if that wherein he opposeth me were of least use in regard that point to great satisfaction hath been spoken to at large: of which I wish he had told in what part, and by whom such satisfaction is given, that I might have found it in his, Mr. Bs. or others writings, who yet finde no cause to recede from this opinion, that they have perverted the truth, and insufficiently handled the argument of infant-baptism) and having contemptuously mentioned me, As one generally looke upon low enough under hatches, saith thus, I must assert the spirituality of the old Covenant, and maintain that the Gospel was preached as well to them as to us, that they ate the same spiritual meat and drank the same spiritual drink, and here by him I am opposed.

To which I answer, In this charge I may say truly in words of meekness, having answered this very crimination in my Addition to my Apology in answer to Mr. Baily, Sect. 2. that I am impudently belied, supposing that by the old Covenant he means the Covenant made with Abraham, Gen. 17. which is termed the promises, the Covenant that was confirmed of God in Christ before the Law four hundred and thirty years after, and distinguished from it Gal. 3. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And this Mr. Blake might have discerned, yea, I conceive did discern, when he from my words Exercit. pag. 2. conceived my meaning to be that Abraham had promises of bliss and in reference to eternal salvation, Vind. Fœd. cap. 26. pag. 181. But that I may vindicate my self and the truth more fully from Mr. Blakes injurious dealings I shall take a view of that Chapter.

First, Mr. Blake saith falsly of me, that I am loth to yield to so much truth as to confess the old Covenant (meaning that Gen. 17.) to be a Covenant Evangelical, when as I grant Exercit. pag. 2. some of the promises were Evangelical, and that the Covenant hath denomination from the promises. Then he calumniates me in his spitefull fashion to make me odious and my writing suspected, as if I went in company with Jesuits, whom he calls my old Friends and saith untruly I glean so much from them in this controversie; and adds that I cast infants out of the Covenant and Church-membership, and so exclude them from Baptism: whereas I have often acknowledged they are many of them in the Covenant of grace truly so called, and the invisible Church of the elect, which Protestants assert against Papists to be most properly termed the Church of Christ; nor do I exclude infants from baptism because they are cast out of the Covenant and Church-membership, but because they are not Disciples whom Christ appointed to be baptized, Matth. 28. 19.

Next he excepts against me for saying, The Covenant made with Abraham is not a pure Gospel-covenant, but mixt; concerning which, 1. Mr. Blake saith, This expression of Mr. T. is very untoward, and such that will bear no sain sense without the utter overthrow, even of that difference between the Covenants, which he would build on this distinction. The untowardness is in denying purity of Gospel the first Covenant and affirming a mixture. That which is not pure but mixt, is a compound of pure and impure; such that hath some ingredients such as they ought, and others such that make all adulterate; as silver mingled with dross, or wine with water, Isai 1. 22.

Answer. Mr. Blake me thinks should know that there are mixtures which do not adulterate. There's a natural mixture defined by Aristotle, The union of bodies miscible altered, as in mixt bodies compound of the four Elements reduced to a just temperament, without adulterating all. There's an artificial mixture in Medicines, of Wine and Sugar, of divers Metalls in Bells cast, in which and many more there's no such impurity as that there are some ingredients, such as they ought, and others such as make all adulterate; and therefore there's no untowardness in the expression; yea, the expression is so usual in morality, as when voluntary is divided into purely voluntary and mixt, in Divinity the state of grace is either pure or mixt, &c. that I presumed none would have quarrelled with it, if my meaning be right. Let's see what Mr. Blake saith of my meaning.

He tells us, that the false Teachers (St. Paul's Adversaries) preach such a mixt Gospel, a compound of that which was pure and impure, when they urged with such vehemency a mixture of works. But do I call any where the Gospel mixt? or do I preach any such mixture? Mr. Blake himself acquits me, when he saith, This sure is not his meaning. What then doth Mr. Blake take my meaning to be? I will set down his own words, that the Reader may judg of his dealing with me. What then can be his meaning but that Abraham had promises, not onely of bliss, and in reference to eternal salvation, but he had promises also of earthly concernment, as that of the Land of Canaan, and his plantation there? This seems to be his meaning by the words that presently follow:

low: The Covenant takes its denumination from the promises, but the promises are mixt; some Evangelical, belonging to those to whom the Gospel belongeth; some are domestick or civil promises, specially respecting the house of Abraham, and the policy of Israel, to this I readily agree.

Answer. If Mr. Blake readily agree to that which in his own conceit seemed to be my meaning, with what conscience or with what face could he so falsly charge me, as opposing him in these things, that spirituality of the old Covenant, the preaching of the Gospel as well to them as to us, their eating the same spiritual meat, and drinking the same spiritual drink, as he doth in his Preface, and here of untowardness in my expression, and such as will bear no fair sense without the overthrow, even of that difference between the Covenants which I would build on this distinction. But let's consider his Reason of this last Speech.

To this, saith he, I readily agree, and then his distinction falls to nothing.

Answer. I should rather have imagined that the contrary follows, that if Mr. Blake do readily agree to my explication of the mixture of the Covenant, that my distinction comes to somethtng, being confirmed by Mr. Blakes suffrage, unless he take it for nothing.

But let's follow Mr. Blake, Seeing in Gospel-times, in New Testament days, this will denominate not a pure but mixt Gospel, we are under such a Gospel.

Answer. 1. Mr. Blake alters the term distinguished. I did not distinguish of a pure Gospel and a mixt Gospel, as he intimates I did, but of a pure Covenant and a mixt Covenant, and asserted not the Gospel preached to Abraham to be mixt, but the Covenant made with Abraham. 2. It is false, that we are under such a mixt Gospel, as he imagined I asserted; but Mr. Blake confirms his Assertion thus.

I know not how we could pray in faith, Give us this day our daily bread; in case we were without a promise of these things, or how man could live by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God, in case we had no word from God.

Answer. A believer may pray for daily bread in faith trusting on Gods goodness, as he is a Creatour, as our Saviour argues *Matth.*6.26. as he is a Father in *Christ, Matth.*7.11. as he hath made general promises, Mark 10 30. *Matth.*7.7.8. as he hath made special promises, *Prov.*10.3. Psalm 34.10. confirmed by constant experience, Psalm 37.25. by the great assurance of the gift of *Christ, Rom.*8.32. though the special promises domestick or civil specially respecting the house of Abraham and the policy of Israel, belonging not to him The *word, Deut.*8.3. I take to be his word of power or command, such as that Psalm 33.5. not his word of promise; yet if it be meant of his word of promise, there are other promises by which the Patriarchs afore Abraham, and the believers since have lived without the domestick or civil promises specially respecting the house of Abraham, and the policy of Israel.

But Mr. Blake adds, *The Apostle tells us, Godliness hath the promise of this life, and that which is to come, 1 Tim.*4.8. It would trouble many a perplexed man in case he could not make good, that those words, Verily thou shalt be fed, Psalm 37.3. did not at all belong to him. There is no believing man in any relation but he hath Gospel-promises in concernment to that relation, as appears in that speech of Paul's *encouragement of Servants, Ephes.*6.8. It were ill with all sorts, had not they their domestick relation-promises.

Answer. All this is true, and yet it is true also that the special promises domestick or civil specially respecting the house of Abraham and policy of Israel belong not to every believer.

Mr. Bl. saith, I place great confidence in my proof this mixture of the Covenant. And sets down my words Apolog. 127. averring my proof so full as that I wonder Mr. M. Mr. Blake, and others, are not ashamed to except against it, that what I deliver is plain according to Scripture, that there were some peculiar promises made to Abraham, Gen. 17. which are not made to every believer, that the words 1 Tim. 4. 8. is not to the present purpose, for it doth not follow therefore that godliness hath the promise of the Land of Canaan, or that Christ should be every godly mans seed. And then adds, I think I shall more gratifie the Reader in leaving this to his smile, than in giving any refutation of it; if he could assume that there is no earth but that of Canaan, or at least that no other promise of earth but that will serve to make a mixture, then he spake somewhat to the purpose; otherwise it will be believed, that our promises under the Gospel of things of earth as well serve to make up a mixture as Abraham's promise of the Land of Canaan.

Answer. Whether Mr. Blakes talk or mine be ridiculous the Reader may judg. My speech is to purposes aimed at by me, to wit, the enervating the arguings from Abrahams Covenant and Circumcision for infant-baptism, by shewing that the Covenant Gen. 17. was not a pure Gospel-covenant, that is, having no promises but what belongs to every believer, and consequently Baptism not sealing the same covenant every way which circumcision did, and therefore there is not the same reason from the covenant why infants should be baptized though they were circumcised. And this purpose I doubt not to attain though I grant there is other earth than that of Canaan, and that there may be other promises of earth besides that which will serve to make a mixture, and yet the promises of things of earth as now extant under the Gospel do not as well serve to make up the mixture I assert in Abrahams covenant, promising the Land of Canaan to be in the covenant of pure Evangelical grace as now it stands, sith those promises of earth and this life are made to every believer or godly man now, whereas the promises of Canaan and other things specially respecting the house of Abraham and policy of Israel Gen. 17. and elsewhere were not made to Lot and other godly believers it is likely then living, nor to Gentile-believers now under the Gospel. Mr. Bl. goes on thus.

2. As his expression is untoward, so taking him at the best his proof is weak, that the Covenant takes its denomination from the promises; but the promises are mixt. The most eminent promises (which contain the marrow of all) give the denomination, and not such that are annext as appendants to them.

Answ. Though the most eminent promises may give the denomination of the covenant to be an Evangelical covenant, yet to denominate it a pure Evangelical covenant it is necessary that not onely the most eminent, but also that all the promises be Evangelical: as though a man may be termed a Saint from the habitual purpose and bent of his heart, and the constant course of his actions, yet he is not denominated purely a Saint but from the entire and universal purpose, bent, inclination of his heart, and entireness of holiness in his actions without the least inconformity to it.

Mr. Bl. proceeds thus, Such as is the promise of the Land of Canaan, an

appendant to the great Covenant made of God with Abraham, as Chamier with good warrant from the Text Gen 17.7,8. calls it lib. de baptiſ. cap. Sect. The Covenant being made of God to be a God of Abraham and his ſeed (which might have been made good whereſoever they had inhabited or ſojourned) the promiſe of Canaan is over and above added to it. The reaſon given by M. T. for his diſlike of Chamier's expreſſion, calling it an Appendix to the Covenant, is little to purpoſe, Pſalm 105.10,15. The gift of the Land of Canaan is called a Covenant, and therefore not an appendant to it. By the ſame reaſon Circumciſion muſt be the Covenant, and not a ſeal appendant to it; ſeeing Circumciſion is called a Covenant, Gen.17.10. Mr. T. is not ignorant of theſe Scripture Metonymies.

Anſw. I finde *Chamier lib. de baptiſ. cap.*10. *Sect.*23. ſaying, That the promiſe of Canaan is not the Covenant, but an Appendix to the Covenant.

But I finde not that he produceth any warrant from the Text *Gen.*17.7,8. to call it ſo, nor that he doth any other way go about to prove it, but that the words Gen.17.7. I will be thy God and of thy ſeed. Which he calls the covenant, is ill explained of earthly happineſs, either as the chief or onely happineſs, there meant which he proves from *Matth.*22.32. Nor is there any force in this Reaſon, The promiſe of Canaan is added, *v.*8. over and above the promiſe *v.*7. therefore it was an appendix and not the covenant. For if this reaſon be good, it might be ſaid, The promiſe *v.*7. is not the covenant, but an appendix to it, cauſe it is added over and above the promiſe, *v.*4. Add as for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou ſhalt be a father of many Nations, which is termed Gods covenant with him, Gen.18.8. yea, me thinks the argument is good to the contrary, the promiſe Gen.17.8. was added over and above the promiſe *v.*7. and cloſed with this Epiphoneme, And I will be their God; therefore it was a part of the covenant, yea a main part of it. Nor becauſe the promiſe *v.*7. might have been made good whereſoever they had inhabited or ſojourned. Doth it follow that the promiſe *v.*8. was not a part of the covenant, for by the ſame reaſon neither the promiſe *v.*4. that Abraham ſhould be a father of many Nations, had been a part of the covenant, ſith the promiſe *v.*7. might have been made good though he had been father of one Nation onely.

Mr. Blake doth not rightly form my Reaſon from Pſalm 105.8,9,10,11. thus, The gift of the Land of Canaan is called a covenant, and therefore not an appendant to it, but thus it is in my Examen part 3. *Sect.*2. the Pſalmiſt calls the promiſe of Canaan the covenant made with Abraham, Pſalm 105.8,9, 10,11. therefore it is a part of the covenant, and not onely an appendix. Nor doth it follow that then circumciſion muſt be the covenant, for it is confeſſedly called the covenant Gen.17.10. by a Metonimy, and *v.*11. ſhews it where it is ſaid, And it ſhall be the token of the covenant between me and you. But it cannot be expounded by a Metonimy Pſalm 105.8,9,10,11.

For, 1. The gift of the Land of Canaan was not a ſign of the covenant, nor can with any good ſenſe be called the covenant according to any other ſort of Metonimy beſides that of the thing ſignified for the ſign.

2. If it could, yet the phraſes uſed ſhew it cannot be underſtood Metonimically; For it is called as well, the word which he commanded to a thouſand generations, the covenant which he made with Abraham, the oath unto Iſaac, which he confirmed to Jacob for a Law, and to Iſrael for an everlaſting covenant, nant; and when it is recited the Psalmist prefixeth v.11. לאמר which our Translation reade, saying, Junius, Piscator, dicendo, which doth directly tell us wherein it was that the covenant he made did formally consist, which he is said to remember v.8. which thing is so clearly expressed Nehem.9.8. Gen.26.3. & 28.3,4,13,14, &c. that I should wonder Mr. Bl. should persist in this wrangling course to question a thing so plain, but that I see him tenacious of absurdities he vents though never so gross, as from his exposition and inference from *Gal.*4.29, and other passages hath been made appear.

Mr. Bl. adds, 3. As his proof is weak, to make the covenant not a pure Gospel-covenant, but mixt; so in the third place, he is not constant to himself, pointing that out which he makes pure Gospel, (Gen.17.5. Gen.12.3. Gen. 18.18. illustrated by some New Testament Scriptures Rom.4.17,18. Gal.3 8,9,16. Acts 3.25.) he observes, yea it is to be noted, that those promises which were Evangelical according to the more inward sense of the Holy Ghost, do point at the privileges of Abrahams house in the outward face of the words, and thereupon raises a doubt, whether any covenant made with Abraham be simply Evangelical? And so he can finde out Evangelical promises in the inwards of that covenant, which is non-evangelical in the outward face; so Bellarmine, with whom he so much (to speak in his own language) symbolizeth, can finde out spiritual Evangelical promises in that which he concluded to be of another nature; denying that the promise made to Abraham in the letter, was any promise of forgiveness of sins, but of special protection and government, and earthly happiness; yet confesseth that in a mystical sense they were spiritual promises, both of pardon of sin and life eternal, and that they belong to us, *Bellar. de Sacram. Bapt. lib.*1. *cap.*4. whereof Chamier observes, that which is promised mystically God in covenant doth promise; but Heaven is here promised mystically; therefore in this covenant here is a promise of Heaven; so the inward and outward face will be all Evangelical.

Answ. Mr. Bl. mis-recites my words; 1. in saying, That I point out in the Texts Gen.17.5. & 15.5. & 12.3. & 18.18. that which I make pure Gospel; for my words are, that was Evangelical which we reade Gen.17.5, &c. not that it was pure Gospel.

2. That I raise a doubt whether [any] covenant made with Abraham be simply Evangelical? whereas my words are, whence it may be well doubted, whether [this] covenant made with Abraham may be called simply Evangelical, not whether [any] which is the same with that speech forecited Sect.25. of Mr. Allin, This covenant was not simply and onely the covenant of grace. But what inconstancy to my self giving and taking, not knowing what to determine, is in those speeches, or in that other which he most excepts against: yea, it is to be noted, &c. I am yet to learn. Do I either by saying that the promises were Evangelical say that they were purely Evangelical not mixt) or by doubting whether they may be called simply Evanglical revoke what I said, that they were Evangelical? I think Mr. Blake will as soon extract water out of a Flint as such inferences from my words. Young Logicians do know that to argue a dicto secundum quid ad dictum simpliciter is fallacious. As for my speech which he saith symbolizeth with Bellarmine, if it be true, it is not the worse for that: nor did I blame Mr. M. for symbolizing with Arminius in a truth truth, but for agreeing with him in that explication which doth undermine the true explication of *Rom.*9.8. which the Contraremonstrants prove from the Text. If Bellarmine did by mystical sense mean the same which I did by the more inward sense of the Holy Ghost, and by the Letter what I express by the outward face of the words, I see not that either Chamier or Mr. Bl. have or can prove it false. The sense in the outward face of the words I call that which a Linguist who knows what words signifie wou'd conceive upon reading without any other revelation from the Holy Ghost. But I cannot believe that any Linguist without other revelation than what the bare words hold forth would ever have understood these promises, A father of many Nations have I made thee, I will be a God to thee and thy seed. Thus Gentiles as well as Jews shall believe in Christ, I will justifie, raise thee up, and all that are my Elect, or who believe as thou dost to eternal life. I grant Chamiers conclusion, In this Covenant here is a promise of Heaven, and yet deny that the outward face of the covenant *Gen.*17. is all Evangelical, nor is there a word in Mr. Blakes that proves it.

Mr. Blake proceeds thus, Lastly, Mr. T. yet knows not how to bring any thing home (were all granted) to serve his interest. And then sets down what he conceives to be my meaning, which he thus opposeth.

First, that orthodox Divines both ancient and modern have made Circumcision to be of the same signification and use as Baptism, and till Anabaptists closed they had no Adversaries, but Papists, who to advance their opus operatum in the Sacraments of the New Testament will have them as far to exceed the Old, as Heaven doth Earth, and the substance doth the shadow; and then cites a speech of *Chamier Panst. Cath. tom.*4. *lib.*2. *cap.*9. *sect.*58. and prosecutes his calumnies of my borrowing my weapons I use against infant-baptism from the Jesuits, to all which I answer.

1. That I grant that Circumcision and Baptism are in part of the same signification and use, nor did I ever deny it; but in as many and more things they differ, which I have shewed *Exercit. Sect.*2. *Examen part.*3. *Sect.*9. in this part of the *Review, Sect.*11. and those disparities I prove out of Scripture and the best learned and approved Protestant Writers. Nor do I agree with the Jesuits in holding Baptism to confer grace ex opere operato, nor do I undervalue the Covenant with Abraham and his seed as no Gospel-covenant, nor do I deny Circumcision to have been the seal of a Gospel-promise. As Mr. Blake doth calumniate me, and to make odious doth falsly and injuriously suggest I took from the Jesuits. But this I confess I hold *Exercit. Sect.*1. that there is not the same reason of Circumcision and Baptism, in signing the Evangelical Covenant; nor may there be an argument drawn from the administration of the one to the like manner of administring the other, of both which speeches I have given an account in that place which I finde not yet invalidated; and if they hold, the analogy between infant-circumcision and infant-baptism is evacuated, there being difference between the covenant made with Abraham and the new covenant though both be in some sort Evangelical; and therefore the mixture of the covenant will serve my interest in this point.

2. It is false which Mr. Blake saith, That my conformity with the Jesuits about the difference between Circumcision and Baptism to maintain the opus operatum of the one to the disparagement of the other, as if Baptism exceeded Circumcision cumcision as far as the substance the shadow, did put me upon it to affirm, that what all Protestant Divines defend against the Papists must be truth undeniable is no undeniable axiome: for neither do I conform to Jesuits in that point, nor was such conformity any reason of that speech, but the words of Mr. M. in his Sermon, as the reading of the words of my *Examen pag.*113. shew. And I say still that speech is a truth, and necessary to be avouched by all those who ascribe onely authentick authority to the holy Scripture. Nor is it reasonable to require that I should shew any such errour as is maintained by all Protestant Divines against Papists.

For, 1. it is not possible for me to shew what all Protestant Divines hold against Papists.

2. Nor is it necessary to verifie my speech which avoucheth not any such errour in act, but onely the possibility of it, which is sufficiently made good by proving them not infallible.

And to the demand how Popery should be known if that be not Popery which all Protestant Divines defend against the Papists.

I answer. 1. it may be counted Popery and yet perhaps a truth which all Protestant Divines oppose.

2. What is Popery which we have engaged our selves to extirpate is better known in the ways I set down *Ap.p.*133,134. *Sect.*13. than in Mr. Blakes way.

For, 1. it is not possible for any man no not the greatest Reader in Controversies to know what all Protestant Divines defend against Papists.

2. If that be the Rule to know Popery by, many things will not be taken for Popery which are, there being many Tenents which are counted Popery which Protestants Divines and those of good note have not opposed, but have granted many things favourably to them, as not onely the Collections of Brerely and such like Papists, but also the Treatises of the Cassandrian writers, and late Episcopal Protestant do shew, which yet I do not approve of.

I agree with Mr. Blake that there is less likelihood that the truth should be with the Papists than with the Protestants, and yet there may be some truth which some Papists may discern which many Protestants do not. It is the saying of Doctor *Twisse Vind. Grat. lib.*1. *part.*2. *sect.*25. *digress.*8. *num.*3. But I would not that those things should be rejected of us, because the Schoolmen hold them; for neither do the Cretians fain all things. Augustines judgment was esteemed better than the Pelagians as being the oracle of his time, yet he is censured as the hard father of infants for maintaining their damnation if they died unbaptized. Calvin was in high esteem as the great Light of the Protestant Churches, who have many of them followed him in the point about usury, yet the Popish and Prelatical Divines are generally counted by our most zealous Preachers more right in that point than the transmarine Calvinists.

It is a wicked calumny which Mr. Blake vents whe he saith of me, that I step in upon the party of these sons of Anak, meaning the Jesuits. Had he any other than a malignant spirit towards me, he would have judged that not to side with Jesuits, but to keep my Oath which I took in the solemn Covenant I did oppose infant-baptism, in maintaining of which he and the rest of the Pædobaptists have broken the covenant, whereby they bound themselves to reform the worship of God after the Word of God. And for what he chargeth me with, that I borrow my weapons from the Jesuits, though my denial is enough to acquit quit me from it, there being none but knows my actions better than my self, and with men not malevolent to me I think my words at least deserve as much credit concerning my own actions as Mr. Blake, yet as I said so I repeat it, it appears to be a loud calumny in that all along in my Examen, and now in my other writings almost in every point I produce Protestants of good note concurring with me, not onely in the point about the extent of the covenant Examen sect.4. part.3. and the holiness of children, 1 Cor.7.14. Exam. part.3. sect.8. Exerc. sect.5. Review part.1. sect.22. but also about the institution, Mat.28.19. Review part.2. sect.5. even in this point of the mixture of the covenant in the section next before this. Yea, the Principle upon which I found all my dispute is that which Mr. Cotton in his Preface to his Dialogue for infant-baptism confesseth to be a main principle of purity and reformation. And though Protestant writers do many of them oppose my conclusion, yet they do agree with me in the premisses on which I build it, to wit, that Baptism is to be after the institution, and that neither the institution nor practice in the New Testament was of Pædobaptism, and all Pædobaptists whether Presbyterians or Independents who do hold that infants belong to the visible Church as the posterity of Abraham to the Jewish Church do injuriously keep them whose Baptism they avouch to be good, and to be visible Church-members, from the Lords Supper for want of knowledg; as for what he tells me, He can trace me out of some Jesuit in what I deliver about the Covenant and Seal, though I do not yet believe it, yet there is no reason therefore to reject it, as Doctor Twisse saith truly.

Bishop Morton in his Apology hath produced Popish writers and many of them Jesuits who deliver the same things which the Protestants do; yet this is so far from discrediting their cause that it is justly counted a good plea for them, and why should not the like plea be good on my behalf, sith Jesuits are Adversaries to me, as well as others? But enough if not too much in answer to these calumnies sufficiently answered before, Postscript. Sect.13.

Mr. Blake proceeds thus, Secondly, if Circumcision have respect to those promises that were no Gospel-mercies, but civil, domestical, restrained to Jews, and not appertaining to Christians; How could it be a distinction between Jew and Gentile respective to Religion, it might have made a civil distinction, and the want of it have been an evidence against other Nations, that they had been none of the multiplied seed of Abraham according to the flesh, and that their interest had not been in Canaan. But how could it have concluded them to have been without Christ, strangers from the Covenant of promise, having no hope and without God in the world, as the Apostle determines upon their uncircumcision, Ephes.2.11,12. cannot be imagined.

Ans. 1. Circumcision did not make such a distinction between Jew and Gentile respective to Religion, as that every circumcised person was of the Jewish Religion: for if the posterity of Ishmael and Esau were not circumcised as Mahometans at this day (which some Historians say of them at least for a time that they were) yet Ahab and other worshipers of Baal were of the posterity of Jacob, and the Samaritans, as Mr. Mede in his Discourse on John 4.23. were circumcised, yet were not of the Jewish Religion, or at least there was a distinction in Religion between them John 4.22. Nor every one that worshipped the same God with the Jews was circumcised. Cornelius and many other Proselytes of the gate owned the God and spiritual worship, and moral Law of the Jews, though they were not circumcised, as Mr. Mede proves in his Discourse on Acts 17.4. nor doth the Apostle *Ephes.*2.11,12. determine upon their uncircumcision, that is, conclude them without hope, without God, barely from their uncircumcision, as if he held all uncircumcised were without hope, without God: but he onely sets those things down as concurrent, not one the certain cause or sign of the other.

2. Circumcision did distinguish between Jew and Gentile respective to Religion, not because it sealed Gospel-mercies, nor because it sealed promises of civil or domestick benefits. but because it bound to the observance of the Law of Moses, in respect of the observation of which the distinction in Religion was known by Circumcision not by its sealing the covenant-promises, either Evangelical, or civil and domestick.

3. If the distinction between Jew and Gentile respective to Religion were made by Circumcision as sealing the covenant, *Gen.*17. it might have made a religious distinction by my Tenet, who hold it signed the spiritual promises, though not them onely, as well as by Mr. Blakes.

The next thing which Mr. Blake urgeth against me from *Jerem.*4.4. Rom. 2.28. *Deut.*10.16. *Deut.*30.6. *Ezek.*44.9. is that Circumcision had relation to promises spiritual, which is not denied, nor any thing against the mixture I hold in the covenant, nor to evacuate any inference I make from it.

In like manner the fourth tends to prove, that Circumcision did not respect alone the civil interest of the Jews, which I grant. But the fifth thing urged by Mr. Blake needs some examination.

Fifthly, saith he, How is it that the Apostle giving a definition of Circumcision refers it to nothing rational, civil or domestick, but onely to that which is purely spiritual, speaking of Abraham, *he saith, he received the sign of Circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised? The righteousness of faith is a promise purely Evangelical, Rom.*3.22. & 3.30. & 10.3. *Phil.*3.8. and this Circumcision sealed, the self-same thing that our Sacraments seal.

Answer. The Apostle doth not give a definition of Circumcision, *Rom.*4. 11,12. For, 1. that which is to be defined is, say Logicians, a common term, but Circumcision *Rom.*4.11. is not a common term, but a singular, or individual, to wit, that which Abraham had in his own person, it is that which he received, and the time is noted to be after he had righteousness by faith, which he had yet being uncircumcised, for a singular privilege to be the father of believers.

Ergo 2. There is no genus, nor difference of Circumcision from other things, therefore no definition. No genus, for the term [seal] cannot be the genus, it being a meer Metaphor, and so not declaring what it is, but what it is like, in respect of the use. Besides, Circumcision is an action, but Seal is in the Predicament of relation, as being a sign, or a figure in the Predicament of quality, or an aggregate compound of a material substance, having a figure for signification. But the genus is in the same Predicament with the species, and so is not [Seal] with [Circumcision] Ergo. For doth Seal of the righteousness of faith agree to all Circumcision, nor difference it from the Spirit of God; nor according to the Pædobaptists Hypothesis, from the Pass-over, Baptism, or the Lords Supper.

Mr. Blake adds, So that their extraordinary Sacraments are expresly affirmed

to be the ſame with ours by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor.10.3. They eat all the ſame ſpiritual meat, and did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink, ſo are their appointed eſtabliſhed Sacraments, Circumciſion and the Paſs-over.

Anſwer. 1. The extraordinary Sacraments are ſaid to note the ſame thing with ours, not expreſly affirmed to be the ſame with ours.

2. It is no where ſaid in Scripture that Circumciſion and the Paſs-over did note the ſame thing with our Sacraments, much leſs that they are the ſame Sacraments with ours.

Mr. Blake adds, Will Mr. T. with his old friend Bellarmine lib.1. cap.17. de Saramentis in genere, and Mr. Blackwood in his Reply to the tenth Objection, deny that Circumciſion was an univerſal ſeal of faith, but was onely an individual ſeal of the undividual faith of Abraham, and ſo all falls to the ground which is ſpoken from that Text of the uſe of Circumciſion to the Jews. All that is there ſpoken, having reference onely to Abraham in perſon.

Anſwer. Mr. Blake tells me of an old friend of mine whom I never knew, and have hitherto made him mine adverſary, although perhaps we may agree in ſome things, and I think Mr. Blake and he agree in more than I do with him. It ſeems not to me to be Bellar. opinion, or Mr. Blackwoods that circumciſion was onely an individual Seal of the faith of Abraham, but Bellarmines opinion is, that his circumciſion did teſtifie not his individual faith, but his individual privilege to be father of the faithfull, which Mr. Blake agrees with him in, when he ſait h, This priority of receiving the faith and the ſign and ſeal, is proper to Abraham. And then he is as much his old friend as mine.

Mr. Blackwood in his Reply to the *ſecond part of the Vind. of the Birth-privilege, pag.*47. ſaith thus, So that Circumciſion was a ſeal of the righteouſneſs which Abraham had, not in perſona propria, but in perſona relativa, it ſealed unto him not his own perſonal righteouſneſs, which he had long before, but the righteouſneſs of all believers. In which I diſſent from him, conceiving it ſealed both: however his opinion ſeems to be otherwiſe than Mr. Blake repreſents it. For my ſelf I do not make it any ſeal of faith either univerſal or individual, nor know I well what ſenſe to make of either, but this is my opinion, that Abrahams individual Circumciſion, and no others is made *Rom.*4.11,12. the ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith to Abraham as the father of believers, and to all believers of all Nations as his ſeed. Now to this opinion of mine I finde nothing oppoſite, but againſt another point that Abrahams Circumciſion was a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith and of the Covenant to him onely, which I diſclaim, and therefore let his arguments paſs without gain-ſaying, onely I requeſt the Reader to take notice that Mr. Blake hath many ways miſ-repreſented my opinion in this Ch. but hath not at all overthrown the mixture in the Covenant *Gen.*17. which I aſſert; but where he ſets down my opinion rightly ſaith *pag.*181. To this I readily agree, nor hath at all ſo much as brought one reaſon to ſhew that my diſtinction ſhews not my turn for which I bring it, which he undertook to do, but leaves that thing and runs out in calumnies of me, and proving that which I deny not.

SECT. XXVII.

The four first Chapters of Mr. Sidenham's Exercitation are examined, and his vanity in his conceits about consequences proving Infant-baptism, the purity of the Covenant Gen. 17. Infants of Believers being Abraham's seed and in Covenant, is shewed.

I Think it necessary for many Reasons afore I review the dispute about Mr. Ms. second conclusion to consider what Mr. Cuthbert Sidenham hath said in the four first Chapters of his Exercitation.

1. He forestalls his Reader with things palpably false, that there is nothing in all the New Testament against the baptizing of Infants, not one hint from any expres word dropt from Christ or his Apostles; not one phrase, which though never so much strained doth forbid such an act. The contrary whereof is abundantly proved in the second Part of this Review, Sect. 5. &c. nor can any Pædobaptist finde so much against infant-communion, Bell-baptism, baptizing of dead persons, Baptism of Midwives, the Cross in Baptism, and many other Prelatical and Popish usages as there is in the New Testament against infant-baptism.

2. That all his Opposites have onely this to say, that they can finde no syllabical precept or word of command in terms, saying, Go baptize Infants, or any positive example where it is said in so many words Infants were baptized, all that they say besides is to quarrel with and evade their arguments, and that this argument is built on this false principle, that no direct consequences from Scripture are mandatory: the contrary whereof is so manifest out of my Examen part. 3. sect. 12. Apol. sect. 11. (which Mr. Sidenham often quotes, and therefore cannot be ignorant of unless wilfully) and throughout all my writings, that a man can hardly conceive but that he shamelesly vented these things against his own knowledg. And therefore I need not answer his Reasons to prove the use of consequence. Let any Pædobaptist give me one good consequence whereby infant-baptism is proved, and I shall yield: the consequences of Mr. Baxter and others I finde to be meer fallacies, and have, and doubt not with divine assistance to shew them to be so.

That which he saith, pag. 6. That where we have a promise laid as the foundation of a duty that is equivalent to any expres command; for as commands in the Gospel do suppose promises, to encourage us to act them, and help us in them; so promises made to persons do include commands, especially when the duties commanded are annexed to the promises, as all New Testament Ordinances are as well as old; is ambiguous, and in what sense, it is true it serves not Mr. Sidenhams turn to prove infant-baptism. By foundation of a duty may be understood either a motive to encourage to a duty named, as when it is said, Him that honoureth me I will honour, this promise doth suppose it a duty to honour God, and is a motive to encourage to it, and so is a foundation in that sense of the duty: or by foundation of a duty may be understood the Rule according to which that duty is to be performed, and this may be understood either thus, to whomsoever there is a promise of that thing by which a duty is urged on others they are bound to do that duty, and then it is false: for Christ promised Matth. 28. 19, 20.

28.19,20. to the Apoſtles whom he bid preach the Goſpel and baptize, that he would be with them, and *Matth.*18.20. to two or three gathered together to be in the midſt of them, doth it therefore follow that every two or three gathered together in his Name are commanded to preach and baptize? or it may be underſtood thus, that he to whom the promiſe is upon the doing of that duty is bound to do it; and this I grant to be true: but this will not ſerve Mr. Sidenhams turn: for there is no promiſe to infants that upon their baptizing themſelves they ſhould have remiſſion of ſins, nor is Mr. Sidenham ſo abſurd as to make baptiſm infants duty, but their right: now as Mr. Sidenham would have it, that becauſe there's a promiſe to infants, therefore others are in duty bound to baptize them, as having right to it, it is falſe, ſith the inſtitution of Baptiſm is not to whom God hath promiſed to be a God, for that is according to his election which is unknown, *Rom.*9.6,7,8. but to them who are Diſciples or believers in Chriſt, *Matth.*28.19. Mark 16.15,16. There are ambiguities in the ſpeeches that commands in the Goſpel do ſuppoſe promiſes, that promiſes made to perſons do include commands, that all the New Teſtament Ordinances are annexed to promiſes, which would be too tedious and unneceſſary to unfold, it is ſufficient to ſhew they will not ſerve Mr. Sidenhams turn in the ſenſe they are true, and will as well ſerve to prove infants right to the Lords Supper, as to Baptiſm.

That which he ſaith, We have as much in the New Teſtament to prove infant-baptiſm, from the true principles of right to Ordinances, as they have for thoſe whom they baptize; for they baptize grown perſons on ſuch and ſuch conſiderations; and we ſhall hereafter ſhew we baptize on as ſtrong and equivalent grounds, is notoriouſly falſe: for we baptize according to the qualification required in the inſtitution of Chriſt, and the Apoſtles and other Preachers baptizing and directing the uſe of Baptiſm in the New Teſtament which are acknowledged the true principles of right to Ordinances, and it is acknowledged even by Pædobaptiſts that they have neither precept nor example in the New Teſtament of infant-baptiſm, and therefore cannot have as ſtrong and warrantable grounds as we who are Piſtobaptiſts, that is, baptizers of believers. Nor is it true that it is requiſite we ſhould ſhew them expreſs command againſt Infant-baptiſm, it is enough that they cannot prove in its inſtitution. Infants never by divine warrant enjoyed Baptiſm, and for Circumciſion it was more unlike than like to Baptiſm, and of it an authentique repeal is eaſily ſhewed Acts 15. and elſewhere.

In the reſt Mr. Sidenham ſhews not why infants ſhould not have been baptized at firſt, as well as grown men if it had been Chriſts minde; Iſhmael and all Abrahams males were circumciſed the ſelf ſame day in which Abraham was, *Gen.*17.26,27. and therefore if Pædobaptiſts Hypotheſis were right, infants as well as perſons of years ſhould have been baptized by the Apoſtles, which they did not, for in that it is not expreſt, it is enough to ſhew it was not done, unleſs we make the Spirit of God defective in what was needfull to have been ſet down, and to ſay as Mr. Sidenham doth, There is enough to ſhew it was done though not written, is with the Papiſts to maintain unwritten traditions Rule of manners. There is no hint left by Chriſt or the Apoſtles to deduce as a infant-baptiſm from. And it is falſe which he ſaith, God hath always ordained ſome Ordinances in the adminiſtration of which, for the moſt part, the subject hath been purely passive. He names nor can name any till the institution of Circumcision, which was not till after the world had been above two thousand years. The rest of his speech savours of this corrupt principle, that what we conceive fit in Gods worship is to be accounted his minde. This is enough in answer to the first Chapter.

In the second he saith untruly, that the Covenant Gen.17. was first made with Abraham and his seed in the name of all believers and their seed, both Jews and Gentile; nor is it true that if he should finde the same Covenant reaching Gentile believers and their children as Abraham and his they cannot be denied the new external sign and seal of the same Covenant, that is, Baptism.

And for what he saith, the Covenant *Gen.*17. was a Covenant of pure grace, I grant it so far as it was Evangelical, but deny it to be a pure Gospel-covenant, nor do any of his Reasons prove any more than I grant, that there were Gospel-promises meant by God under promises of temporal mercies proper to Abraham and his natural posterity, and those that joyned with them in their policy; which I have proved before, out of Scripture to be termed the Covenant it self without a Metonymy, and God is said to keep that Covenant by establishing the Israelites in Canaan, and therefore it is but vain talk that the promise of Canaan was but an additional, appendix, added ex superabundanti, if he mean it of the Covenant Gen.17. if he mean it of the Gospel-covenant it is more true that was added to the other as a more hidden sense under the promises of civil and domestick privileges. I do not make a mixture in the Gospel-covenant, but in the Covenant made with Abraham, Gen.17. nor by mixture do I understand any other than a composition of various parts, not a mixture in the nature of it, or substance or circumstances: but that the Covenant made with Abraham had promises of two sorts, some promises in the first obvious sense of the words proper to Abrahams natural posterity, some spiritual common to all believers in the more hidden sense of the words, which with what hath been said before is enough to answer that Chapter also, proceeding upon mistakes of my meaning in the term [mixt] in many passages, and the rest if not answered before, I let pass, because dictates without proof.

In the third, after he hath allowed the distinctions of Abrahams seed into carnal and spiritual, natural aud believing, he sets down six considerations.

1. That Abraham's spiritual seed were as much his fleshly seed also, Isaac as Ishmael except Proselytes and Servants: which may be granted with these limitations.

1. That it be not understood universally, for Christian believing Gentiles neither Proselytes to Israel, nor servants to them, are Abrahams spiritual seed, yet not at all Abrahams fleshly seed.

2. That Isaac was as much Abrahams fleshly seed as Ishmael according to the meaning Rom.9.8. as fleshly seed is called from natural generation simply considered: but not as *Gal.*4.23. it is meant of fleshly seed called so from natural generation in some respect, to wit, as begotten in a baser way.

The second consideration of Mr. Sidenham is this, [The Covenant was administred to all Abrahams natural and fleshly children, as if they had been spiritual, and before they knew what faith was, or could actually profess Abrahams faith.]

If

If he mean by the Covenant onely Circumcision I grant it of all Abrahams natural male children: if he mean the covenant of grace which is Evangelical, though I deny not that it was administred by the mediation of Christ, and the work of the Spirit, to many elect infants afore believing, yet I deny that it ever was or shall be administred to any but the elect of God, who have the denomination of Abrahams spiritual seed. For I know not how the Covenant which promiseth remission of sins, justification, regeneration, adoption, eternal life is said to be administred but by giving these, which are given onely to the elect, not to Abrahams meer natural or fleshly seed. Meer outward Ordidances and outward gifts and privileges as they are not promised in the Gospel-covenant, which we call the covenant of grace, either as made to Abraham, or confirmed by Christs bloud, so neither are they administrations of it, but arise from Gods command or providence without the Covenant as Evangelical.

His third consideration is, It's no contradiction in different respects to be a seed of the flesh by natural generation, and a childe under the same promise made with the parent; for they both agreed in Abraham's case: which I grant, if meant of Isaac and Jacob, and such other Heirs of the promise, as the Scriptures term them. But I reject that which follows, that none was a childe of promise, but as he came of Abraham's flesh: for believing Gentiles are children of the promise though they come not of Abrahams flesh, yea it is not onely true to the contrary, but expressly avowed *Rom.*9.8. That none are children of the promise as they come of Abraham's flesh. Nor is it true, that as he came from Abraham's flesh, so every one had the seal of Gods Covenant on his flesh; for this is not true of males under eight days old, or females, and therefore this inference is vain: Thus a spiritual promise was made with Abraham and his carnal seed.

His fourth consideration is, There was no distinction of Abraham's fleshly seed and his spiritual seed in the Old Testament, but all comprehended under the same Covenant, untill they degenerated from Abraham's faith, and proved themselves to be meer carnal, and rejected the promise.

But this is manifestly false, Esau was Abrahams fleshly seed, but never his spiritual seed. The Apostle determines *Rom.*9.11. afore he had done good or evil he was rejected, and with the Apostle a childe of the promise, and an elect person are the same. No man is Abrahams spiritual seed but an elect person, or true believer: Scripture makes none else his seed spiritual *Rom.*4.12,16. & 9.7,8. *Gal.*3.29. John 8.39. This very Authour makes the distinctions of fleshly and spiritual, believing and natural taken out of *Rom.*9.7,8 *Gal.*4.23. & 3.16. most true. And if a person may be Abrahams spiritual seed a while, then the degenerate the elect, and true believers may fall away finally and totally, and if they that be Abrahams fleshly seed be under the same covenant with the spiritual till they degenerate, then a person may be in the covenant of grace, and be meerly carnal, having not the Spirit of God, then a man may be in the covenant of grace and not abide in it, then the covenant of grace may be defective, mutable, and if there be no distinction of Abrahams fleshly seed and his spiritual in the Old Testament, untill they rejected the promise, then there is no distinction of elect and reprobate till in time they embrace or reject the promise contrary to *Rom.*9.11. He that holds this position must become an Arminian.

His fifth is, There is a carnal and spiritual seed of Abraham, even under the

New

New Testament, as our Opposites must acknowledg, as well as Infants; so are the most visible Professours which they baptize; which may have no grace; and many prove carnal indeed, through the predominancy of their lusts and corruptions.

Answer. It is ackdowledged that there is a carnal seed of Abraham under the New Testament in the Jewish Nation: but visible Professours of the Gentiles which are baptized although they be many of them carnal men (and so are many of the congregational Churches not baptized) yet they cannot be termed the carnal seed of Abraham, being not his seed either by nature or by believing as he did.

His sixth is, when there is mention of Abraham's carnal seed in opposition to spiritual seed, it cannot be meant primarily or solely of those that descended from Abraham's flesh; for then Isaac and Jacob were the carnal seed, yea Christ himself, who as concerning the flesh came of Abraham; it must be therefore of those of Abraham's seed which degenerated and slighted the Covenant of the Gospel, and these were properly the carnal seed.

Answer. The distinction of Abrahams carnal and spiritual seed is as the distinction of the Church into visible and invisible, in which the members may agree to the same persons, though on the other side also they may not agree. The same persons may be of the Church visible and invisible, and yet some persons may be of the Church visible who are not of the invisible, and some of the invisible who are not of the invisible: so some are Abrahams carnal seed who are also his spiritual, as Isaac, Jacob, Christ; some are his spiritual seed but not his carnal, as Gentile believers; some his carnal seed but not his spiritual, as unbelieving Jews; some neither his carnal nor spiritual seed, as unsound Professours of faith of the Gentiles, who are no way Abrahams seed, nor ever called his carnal seed in Scripture.

There are but two places I know in which the term of Abrahams fleshly seed or childe is used *Rom.*9.8. *Gal.*4.23. in both which is meant of his seed by natural generation, though in the later in a worse way. In the former way, those that embraced the Covenant without degenerating from Abrahams faith, being descended from Abraham by natural generation, are as properly termed Abrahams carnal seed as those Israelites that did backslide.

I grant, Abraham was a natural father to many of these to whom he was a spiritual father, as to Isaac and Jacob and the godly of their posterity, but not to all. He was a spiritual father to believing Galatians, though not a natural, *Gal.*3.29.

But what Mr. Sidenham saith, That all to whom Abraham was a natural father were under the Covenant, and had the seal untill they rejected themselves, is in no part true: not the former, for Ishmael was never under the Covenant, whether it be meant of the spiritual promises or temporal, unless Mr. Sidenham means by being under the Covenant being circumcised, which is all one with having the seal, and then he useth an inept tautology in his speech without good sense. Nor is the latter true of females and males under eight days old.

I grant that both Abrahams natural and spiritual children were circumcised, which Mr. Sidenham means when in the Pædobaptists gibberish he saith, The promise took in both relations, as to outward administration: but *Rom.*3.1,2,3,4. speaking of the spiritual childe of Abraham but the natural.

And

And for what Mr. Sidenham saith, And if men truly state things, you may argue as much against Abraham's natural seed from enjoying these privileges, as believers natural seed now, and with as much evidence of truth.

I know not what he means by truly stating things, the privileges mentioned *Rom.*4.1,2,3,4. are Circumcision, and the commission of the oracles of God to them, and this later is reckoned as the Jews advantage; and though it be true, that we have the benefit of the oracles of God, yet it is not true of our children in infancy, nor of any of us or our children, that to them were the oracles of God committed as to the Jews. And for Circumcision it is true, we may argue as much against Abrahams natural seed from enjoying it as believers natural seed now, and with as much evidence of truth, since Christ is come, Circumcision the shadow is to cease, both to Jews and Gentiles: and me thinks Mr. Sidenhams arguing should be the same with ours if he were a Christian (as I doubt not he was) and not a Jew. But that which Mr. Sidenham would have is, that a believers natural childe should be Abrahams seed, and this is the true stating of things, which perhaps he means. But afore I state things after Mr. Sidenhams minde, I must see some proof, as yet I see no one proof to make good any of his (inconsiderate) considerations.

He takes upon him to weigh the Scriptures brought by his opposites to prove, that they onely are Abrahams seed meant in the Covenant as it was Evangelical Gen,17.7. to be true believers or elect persons.

The first is *Rom.*9.6,7,8. in the setting down of the occasion of which words he saith, *Here (Rom.9.4,5.) is a catalogue of high privileges which belonged to the* Jews, which they were to be cut off from, which lay on Paul's heart, and was like to sink him. But this is a frivolous conceit, for the privileges there reckoned are all or most of them of things already past, such as they could not be deprived of, for that which is already done cannot no not by God himself be not done, for it would imply a contradiction: so those that were Israelites, whose were the fathers, who had the giving of the Law, of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, could not be cut off from these privileges which were things past, yea to imagine that the Jews should be deprived of those privileges is to overthrow the faith of the Christians, who believe that Christ came of the fathers of the Israelites according to the flesh, of which the Jews could not be deprived but by making it false. And for the rest of the privileges though our Translators reade [to whom pertains the adoption and the glory, not as Mr. Sidenham, the adoption of glory] yet the Greek being ὧν ἡ υἱοθεσία, which leaves out the Verb to be supplied, it is clear that it should be read whose were the adoption and glory, and the Covenants and the giving the Law, and the service and the promises, and *v.*5. whose were the fathers, as well as it is read from whom Christ came, though the Verb be not expressed, sith otherwise the speech were not true. For to the present Israelites did not pertain the adoption, as if they then living were adopted or to be adopted children of God: for the Apostle bemoans their rejection and cutting off. And the glory being meant of the Ark, 1 Sam.4.21. or the cloud that covered it *Ezek.*10.4. long before lost, and the Covenants meant of the two Tables of the Law, being lost, and the giving the Law, to wit, the judicial Laws being an act cannot be expounded but of the time past, and so the service, to wit, the ceremonial worship now Christ was come was no privilege to the present Jews, but a heavy yoke, yet it was a great privilege to their anceſtours, and the Verb is to be read in the Præter-tenſe, and in like manner the promiſes were the Iſraelites, that is, they had them firſt given to them, and had the benefit of them, and accordingly it is to be expounded thus, whoſe, that is, to which Iſraelites were the promiſes firſt made, and they injoyed the benefit of them. The thing then that afflicted Paul was, not that the preſent Jews were to be cut off from thoſe privileges, but that the people who had formerly ſo great tokens of Gods peculiar reſpect to them ſhould not be broken off from the Olive-tree, rejected from being Gods people, and hardned in unbelief.

1. Saith he, The Apoſtle is ſadly troubled for his kinſmen after the fleſh, for their rejection; his reaſon is, becauſe of the Covenant and the promiſes made to them, becauſe they were the natural ſeed of Abraham; which holds forth that the promiſes and privileges of the Covenant were indefinitely to all the Iſraelites.

Anſwer. It is true, the Apoſtle was ſadly troubled for the Jews rejection, but the reaſon given is ſuch as is ſcarce competent to a ſober minde. For the reaſon, as he makes it, muſt either refer to his trouble or their rejection. If it refer to Pauls trouble, the ſenſe is, that Paul was troubled becauſe of the Covenant, &c. But this ſhould be a matter of rejoycing to him, not of trouble, unleſs he were troubled that God brake his Covenant with them, becauſe they were the natural ſeed of Abraham; but ſure God never brake his Covenant with them for that reaſon, nor is it to be imputed to God without imputing unfaithfulneſs to him, which were blaſphemy to affirm. If it be referred to the Jews rejection, then the ſenſe is, they were rejected becauſe of the Covenant, &c. But ſure they were not rejected becauſe of the Covenant made to them, but becauſe of their unbelief in not being ſtedfaſt in the Covenant, Rom. 11.20. There's the like wit in the illation.

For, 1. how were the promiſes made indefinitely, and yet to all the Iſraelites? [all] is not an indefinite note but an univerſal.

2. What is the meaning of that expreſſion, the privileges of the Covenant were made to all? The making of privileges is ſomewhat an uncouth phraſe.

3. What were the promiſes and privileges made to all the Iſraelites, he tells us not, and ſo the Reader is left to gueſs.

4. How Pauls trouble or the reaſon given ſhould hold that forth is another Riddle which needsan Oedipus, if ſuch nonſenſe ſcribbling be counted worth ones ſtudy to unfold it.

2. Saith he, That it's a moſt ſad thing to be excluded from the outward and general adminiſtration of the Covenant. Why ſhould Paul thus break out in his affections, for the loſs of outward privileges, if it were not ſuch a mercy to be under them?

Anſwer. It is I confeſs a ſad thing to be excluded from any mercy of God, much more to be excluded from though but an outward adminiſtration of the Covenant of grace. But it is a ſad thing to me that I finde a Teacher of a Church pretending ſo much zeal for truth to vent in print ſuch a ridiculous conceit, as if Pauls great ſorrow and continual pain in his heart, by reaſon of that, for the remedy whereof he could wish himself accursed from Christ, were for the exclusion from outward privileges, which they might have and yet be damned, and might want and yet be saved. If the outward privilege were Circumcision they had it, if Baptism they might have it, and yet be damned. And shall we think the Apostle so foolish as to be thus troubled for such a loss?

3. Saith he, The Apostle holds forth, that persons may be under the outward administration of the Covenant, and yet not get the efficacy of it, vers.6. They are not all Israel that are of Israel; the Covenant was with Abraham and his seed, all that were of him; and yet all were not Israel, that is, partakers of the inward life and efficacy of the Covenant.

An. That which the Apostle holds forth is not, as this man dotingly scribles, that persons may be under the outward administration of the Covenant, that is, circumcised, &c. and yet not get the efficacy of it, that is, have the Circumcision of the heart, justification and eternal life: for though this be a truth, yet there's not a word in the Apostles answer *v.*6,7,8. which gives any colour for such a Paraphrase, there being no mention of Circumcision or any such rite as they call the outward administration of the Covenant, nor any words equipollent thereto. For to be of Israel is to be descended of Jacob by natural generation, as in like manner *v.*7. to be the seed of Abraham, and *v.*8. the children of the flesh: nor could such an Answer have met with the Objection, which was not, if the Jews were deprived of the outward administration, how could Gods word stand to be a God to Abraham and his seed? But thus, if they were not his people to be justified and saved by Christ, how could the word of God stand, *Gen.*17.7. *Jer.*31.36,37. which seemed to promise they should be his people to be justified and saved by Christ? And therefore to answer, they had the outward administration, though not the inward efficacy is to confirm the Objection, which is, that they had not that inward efficacy which the Covenant promised: nor doth the Apostle deny that those saving mercies were in the promises, nor think the promises salved by alleging that all had outward privileges though not saving mercies; but by shewing that the saving mercies in those promises were not assured to every natural childe of Abraham, or of Israel, but to the choice seed distinguished from the rest by promise, and peculiar calling according to election, whether of Jews or Gentiles, and thereby made the Israel of God, *v.*7,8,11,24. and so Gods words of promise stands firm to that seed of Abraham and Israel to whom it was made, though the natural seed of Abraham, and Israel be rejected from being Gods people. It is therefore expressly cross to what the Apostle saith *v.*7. which Mr. Sidenham saith, that the Covenant was with Abraham and his seed, all that were of him.

And that which he saith, And so though they were under the outward dispensation of the Covenant, yet God was not mutable, nor his promise, though he rejected them because of their own degeneration; is directly contrary to the Apostles determination that they were rejected meerly out of the absolute liberty of Gods will, *v.*18. which the Apostle proves in the rejection of *Esau vers.*11, 12,13. afore he had done good or evil, yea, afore he was born, and the speech to Moses, *v.*15. and the hardening of Pharaoh, *v.*17. And indeed if this Paraphrase of Mr. Sidenham were good then the Arminian doctrine of conditional reprobation were here expressly taught, that their rejection was because of their own degeneration, and consequently the election of the other, to wit, the Gentiles must be, because of their own believing, and Gods promise to be a God to them must presuppose their believing as the reason of his promise to them, which is the very dregs of Pelagianism founding the difference between the called and rejected in mans will and not Gods.

What Mr. Sidenham saith, that the Covenant was made in general with Abraham's seed, to all that came from him, meaning by natural generation, is contrary to the Apostles resolution v.6,7,8. and would make God a breaker of his promise, (which was not of outward privileges, but of saving grace) and supposes the Covenant and the election not commensurate, contrary to the Apostle, yea, to Mr. Sidenhams own words where he summs up the Apostles resolution, when he saith, that none are the children of the promise (to whom the Covenant was made) real saints but those that have the true effects of the Covenant in their hearts.

And what he saith, to all children of believers the promise visibly belongs to them as to Abraham and his seed, it's a piece of non-sense gibberish, such as Pædobaptists use, according to their false Hypotheses, no whit agreeing either with the promise Gen.17.7. or the Apostles determination Rom.9.6,7,8. so often refelled by me, that it is superfluous to say of it any more now.

As for what he adds, But here is nothing at all to demonstrate that infants, because children of the flesh, are not under the promise.

I grant it, but say, there is enough to demonstrate that the promise of being a God Gen.17.1. is not made to every believers childe, sith it was not made to all Abrahams natural seed, but to the elect of them, which is enough for our purpose.

Mr. Sidenhams proceeds to the Text Gal.3.16. which he grants not to be meant barely of Christ personal, if, saith he, the promises were to Christ mystical, then to all the elect as in him, and so to infants as well as grown persons, [which I grant] but thus the promise is conveyed under ground as it were, none knows the veins of it, which I also grant, untill the calling shews who were elect, nor do I count it any absurdity to yield it.

But, saith he, take the promise to be made to Christ, the seed, as the Head of a visible Church, then still it speaks for us.

Answer. This is doughty disputing, likely to turn the edg of our weapons against our selves, when the Antagonist must yield him what he would have; and me thinks he should have brought some Expositour or some argument for him, and not so pitifully beg what he should prove. To the contrary I urge that by [Christ Gal.3.16.] is meant either Christ personal or Christ mystical, or both, and not as the Head of a visible Church.

1. That the promises said to be made to Abraham's seed, that is, Christ are of the blessing of Abraham, which is righteousnes and the spirit, Gal.3.8,9,14. the inheritance v.18. life v.21. not bare outward privileges. But these things belong onely to Christ and his mystical body, not his meer visible Church. Ergo, they are not the seed there meant.

2. From the condition or means by which the promise is made good, and that is faith, v.14,22. But the meer visible Church may be without faith, therefore the promise is not made to it.

3. By the expres determination of the Apostle v.7. Know ye therefore, that they they which are of faith are the children of Abraham, verſ.29. And if ye be Chriſts (that is by faith, v.26,27.) then are ye Abraham's ſeed and heirs according to the promiſe: which a man would think were enough to ſilence thoſe that make the promiſes to belong to unbelievers as Abrahams ſeed.

4. The current Proteſtant interpreters of note, ſuch as Beza, Piſcator, Perkins, &c. go this way.

But Mr. Sidenham thinks to evince his purpoſe from v.14. where the bleſſing of Abraham is ſaid to come on the Gentiles through Chriſt, and this bleſſing of Abraham was not perſonal, but to him and his ſeed, this very bleſſing is come on Gentile believers, as on Abraham; therefore it muſt come on believers of the Gentiles and their ſeed. For it cannot be called Abraham's bleſſing, except it come on the Gentiles according to the ſubſtantial terms of Abraham's Covenant: now this was the abſolute form of Abraham's bleſſing, I will be a God of thee and thy ſeed; and this very bleſſing is come on the Gentiles through Chriſt, as it came on Abraham; and therefore it muſt be to believing Gentiles and their ſeed; elſe it will neither be Abraham's bleſſing in the form nor fulneſs of it; Abraham's bleſſing will deſcend on the Gentiles clipt half off, not like it ſelf: and it muſt needs be a very uncouth ſaying to all judicious ears, to ſay, that Abraham's bleſſing is come on the Gentiles by Chriſt, as it was on the Jews by Abraham, and to exclude half the ſubjects at once from any right to it; for ſo you muſt, if you caſt out the ſeed of Gentile believers.

To which I anſwered, that had not the Aſſembly at Weſtminſter, Confeſſion of Faith, chap.28. art.4. cited Gal.3.9,14. with Gen.17.7,9. to prove infant-baptiſm of a believing parent, I ſhould not have tranſcribed ſo much of this arguing. The bleſſing of Abraham muſt come on the Gentiles, ſaith he, according to the ſubſtantial terms of the Covenant, Gen.17.7. Ergo, on Gentile believers and their ſeed. Now what is the bleſſing of Abraham? and what the ſubſtantial terms of the Covenant? and what ſeed of Abraham did it come on? and how?

1. The bleſſing is plainly expreſſed v.8,9. to be juſtification v.14. to be the receiving the promiſe of the ſpirit. The ſame Apoſtle Rom.4.6,9. placeth the bleſſedneſs of Abraham in the imputation of righteouſneſs through faith, Beza Annot. in Gal.3.14. Et ſpiritus nomine benedictionem æternæ ſpiritualis vitæ intelligo. Perkins Comment. on Gal.3.14. That the bleſſing of Abraham, that is, righteouſneſs and life everlaſting, Piſcat. Schol. in Gal.3.14. Ut benedictio illa Abrahæ promiſſa (de qua ſupra v.8.) ad Gentes perveniret in Chriſto; quatenus nimirum illæ Chriſto inſeruntur per fidem, Dieſon in Gal.3.14. benedictio Abrahæ, id eſt, juſtitia & vita æterna.

2. The ſubſtantial terms of the Covenant Gen.17.7. are thus ſet down by Mr. M. in his Sermon, pag.10. The ſubſtance of the Covenant on Gods part was to be Abraham's God, and the God of his ſeed, to be an all-ſufficient portion, an all-ſufficient reward for him, to give Jeſus Chriſt to him, and righteouſneſs with him, both of juſtification, and of ſanctification, and of everlaſting life. On Abraham's part the ſubſtance of the Covenant was, to believe in the promiſed Meſſiah, to walk before God with a perfect heart, to ſerve God according to his revealed will, to inſtruct his family, &c. Not one that I know that makes the bleſſing or the ſubſtance of the Covenant to be an initial ſeal, viſible Church-membership and ſuch like meer Eccleſiaſtical privileges.

3. The

3. The seed of Abraham to whom the blessing is promised is his spiritual seed, and it onely. Diodati Annot. on *Gal.*3.14. of Abraham] namely, promised to Abraham, and to his spiritual posterity onely. Trapp. Comment on Gal. 3.14. *v.*14. The promise of the spirit] that is, the spiritual promise made to Abraham, and his spiritual posterity. The Text it self *Gal.*3.7. Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham.

4. The means is *through faith, Gal.*3.14. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithfull Abraham, *vers.*9. From which I infer, that he that would conclude from hence that the blessing of Abraham comes upon the Gentiles, fathers and infant-children, and that this is according to the substantial terms of the Covenant, *Gen.*17.7. must hold that all children of Gentile believers are elect and believers, and that they are justified as Abraham was, which Mr. M. and Mr. G. disclaim, and indeed is manifestly false being contrary to Scripture and experience. But Mr. Sidenham thinks to infer hence a meer Ecclesiastical privilege of right to an initial seal, which is not at all meant *Gal.*3.14. by the blessing of Abraham, nor ever meant by the Covenant *Gen.*17.7. nor would the promise be true, if meant of it; for many of Abrahams seed had no right to Circumcision or visible Church-membership. Surely according to Pædobaptists Hypotheses all the posterity of Abraham by Ishmael, the sons of Keturah, Esaus were excluded; and therefore the word of Gods promise so expounded had been false.

As for Mr. Sidenhams Reasons, there's no force in them. The first may be retorted, The first is come on Gentile believers, as on Abraham; therefore it must not come on believers of the Gentiles and their seed also universally, for it came not on Abraham and his natural seed universally, nor is it true this very blessing is come on Gentile believers as on Abraham, for it is come on Abraham not simply as a believer, but as a father of believers, not as father of men, but it comes on no Gentile as father of believers, but as Abrahams childe by faith.

The next also may be retorted, if the blessing come on the Gentiles according to the substantial terms of Abraham's Covenant, then not in a meer outward Ecclesiastical privilege, for that is no part of the Covenant, *Gen.*17.7. much less the substantial term of it, it is neither Abraham's blessing in the form nor fulness of it; yea, if it be meant by Abrahams blessing it, is clipt half off not like it self, it's made an empty thing, a meer outward privilege without salvation, and so is in a manner reduced to nothing, and half the seed of Abraham, all the females and many more are excluded from any right to it. For they had no right to the initial seal, to wit, Circumcision.

And to his question, And to what end should the Apostle say, The blessing of Abraham, and not the Promise or Covenant is come to the Gentiles, but that he intended it to the Gentile believers and their seed, as formerly it came to Abraham and his seed?

I answer, he saith, The blessing of Abraham (not the Promise or Covenant of Abraham) because he in the Chapter before mentioned it, and it was the proper effect of Christs being made a curse for us, though he after mention the Covenant and Promise according to which it is bestowed. But that the use of that term of [the blessing of Abraham] should intimate an outward privilege of an initial seal to Gentile believers and their natural seed is such a reason as I am out of hope ever to understand. Me thinks the use of that term *vers.*14. compared with *v.*7,8,9. doth overthrow the fond conceit of the Assembly and Mr. Sidenham, and is so plain a determination, that the Promise of being God to Abraham's seed, is meant onely of true believers of the Gentiles, and not their natural seed, that if there were no more Texts, it seems enough to me to overthrow their interpretation of *Gen.*17.7. and the inference they make thence.

And in this I commend Mr. Sidenhams wit and the Assemblies, that they let pass *Gal.*3.7. without mentioning, finding perhaps that it is expresly contrary to their conceit of Gentile believers children being reckoned for Abrahams seed.

I think it not amiss to add the word of Mr. Stalham Vindic. Redempt. against Otes, *Gal.*3.13,14. Behold here a Gospel-blessing comes upon all those who are freed from the legal curse, and if then the non-elected by this mans doctrine have the one, he must yield the other also; if freed from the curse they are blessed, justified, and saved ones; this is worse than non-sense, even impure blasphemy against the truth: which shews all these to be connex to be freed from the curse, to be blessed with Abrahams blessing, to be justified and saved, and therefore cannot be interpreted of a meer outward privilege belonging even to believers children who may be, as Esau was, non-elect.

There's another Text which Mr. Sidenham takes upon him to turn the edg of it against Antipædobaptists who produce it against Pædobaptists, and he speaks thus, *But in Gal.*3.29. the Apostle (say they) describes who are the seed; if you be Christ's, then you are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise; so that now no children born of believing parents can be the seed; for they must be Christ's, *according to that in v.*26. we are all the children of God through faith in Christ Jesus.

Answer. This Text is clear not to prove (as Mr. Sidenham represents our conclusion) that now no children born of believing parents can be the seed, but that none of the Gentiles are Abrahams seed but those who are Christs by their faith or election, and adoption to be the children of God, for such are all that are Christs, and heirs according to the promise. But the children of believing Gentiles are many of them not such, nor any of them in that he is the childe of a believing Gentile; therefore all the children born of believing parents are not Abrahams seed, as Pædobaptists suppose.

To this Mr. Sidenham opposeth, 1. That the Claromont Bible hath it, if ye be one in Christ, then are ye Abraham's seed, and that the Apostles endeavour is to take away all difference between Jew and Gentile, and to hold forth their unity in Christ, where there is no distinction as formerly: but now the Gentiles being one in Christ are Abraham's seed as well as the natural and believing Jews.

Answer. It is granted, that the Apostle takes away the difference between Gentiles and Jews who are in Christ, and asserts that now the believing Gentiles being one in Christ are Abraham's seed as well as the natural and believing Jews. But this makes for our purpose; for as none of the natural Jews but the elect and believing were Abrahams spiritual seed, so it is concerning the Gentiles, none of them either of their children are Abrahams seed in the sense in which the Gentiles may be termed Abrahams seed but the elect and believing.

2. Saith,

2. Saith Mr. Sidenham, The Apostle here hath no intent to shew the distinction of Abraham's seed as the subject of the outward privileges, and administrations of ordinances, but to shew that none are spiritually and really Abraham's seed and heirs of promise, but such as are Christ's, one in him with Abraham: for if this should be the distinction of seed as the subject of outward ordinances, it would be as much against professing believers as infants; for there is a carnal profession as well as a fleshly generation, the former more abominable.

Answer. I confess it is not the Apostles intent to shew the distinction of Abraham's seed as the subject of the outward Privileges and administration of Ordinances: for neither doth he make there any distinction of Abrahams seed, there being in that passage no seed of Abraham mentioned but such as are spiritual, nor doth he mention Abrahams seed as the subject, meaning the adequate subject of outward Ordinances and Privileges, there being many that were not Abrahams spiritual seed, who might be circumcised, baptized, admitted to the Pass-over and Lords Supper, and at least in some of these many who were might not, though v. 26, 27. compared together shew who were wont then to be baptized, to wit, believers, and such as at least in profession put on Christ. And I conceive Pauls intent was to shew, that none are spiritually and really Abraham's seed and heirs of promise, but such as are Christ's, one in him with Abraham.

Now this manifestly proves the thing we would have, that none of our children are Abrahams seed in the Gospel-sense according to which the promise Gen. 17.7. is to be understood, but elect and true believers, and so not in that Covenant, and consequently not by virtue of interest in that Covenant baptizable, as Pædobaptists would have it. But I know not any who reason thus, None but these who are Christ's are Abraham's seed; and none are Christ's but real believers, and therefore none but they must be baptized. For though it is true, that before God none have right to Baptism but such, yet sith the Minister of Baptism cannot distinguish between a believer in reality and one in profession he is without fault in baptizing a believer onely in profession, whom he takes to be a believer in reality.

If any say, Baptism knows no flesh, the meaning likely is that Baptism is not allotted to any for its natural birth though of a believer. So that I need not answer Mr. Sidenhams arguments to the contrary, sith I do not assert that none but Abrahams seed may be baptized.

Nor is it true, that we have the same ground of charity to act on in sons of believers as on grown men. For though infants may be Christs, yet we have not the same evidence that they are Christs which we have of grown persons, whose words and actions shew that the Spirit of God dwels in them. Nor would God have us 1 Cor. 7.14. to account the children to be holy as visible professours are for the parents faith, but to be legitimate from the lawfulness of their generation. Nor can it be proved that any one infant of the most godly person is taken into the same Covenant with the parent: nor doth Christ's respect to infants when brought to him give warrant to any to judge better of a believers infant than of a visible professour, or to account of such an infant as baptizable.

Nor is it true, that a general Scripture-assertion, and the ground of an indefinite promise, is more than all our Reasons to judg a visible Professour Christ's or Abraham's seed, or a subject of Baptism, sith the words and actions of such a one do shew more of Christs spirit and faith than any speeches of God or promises miſes do of infants now exiſtent, and he that baptizeth a viſible profeſſor of faith, proceedeth nppon certain knowledge according to a certain rule of baptizing Diſciples, which is more to aſſure the conſcience in the doing the will of God, then any Charitable judgement or any probable likelyhood of an infants being Chriſts, or in covenant for the preſent, or certain revelation of the infants election and being in covenant, and ſo will be a believer hereafter can be to warrant a man to baptize it at this inſtant. Nor is it true that he that baptizeth a viſible profeſſor, goes by the purblind eye of his probable judgment. For he baptizeth upon an unerring rule of baptizing manifeſt diſciples, according to an unerring knowledge, that thoſe he baptizeth are ſuch under the Goſpel; the Jewes are Abrahams fleſhly ſeed, though they be not viſible profeſſors of faith in Chriſt, no meer Gentile viſible profeſſor is Abrahams ſeed, nor any true believers natural ſeed as ſuch, nor doth the covenant make every believer in reallity, or any, except Abraham, much leſs every viſible believer a ſpiritual Father. I confeſs, the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham takes its denomination from the covenant; I mean the future ſeed, and from their believing the actual, but the natural ſeed takes not its denomination from the covenant, but Abrahams begetting, nor is it true the Covenant made with Abraham and his natural ſeed, is renewed in the new Teſtament with believers and their ſeed, neither formerly nor now are infants of believers non-elect Abrahams ſeed, nor is there in the word of God one paſſage either in the old or new Teſtament either of thoſe alleaged by Maſter Sidenham or any other, I know, wherein infants of believers are viſibly owned as we own viſible profeſſors. There will be found viſible ſubjects of baptiſm. though neither infants of believers, nor meer viſible profeſſors be Abrahams ſeed. I conclude my animadverſions on this chapter of Mr. Sidenhams with theſe conſiderations, that none but elect or true believers of the Gentiles are the ſeed of Abraham with whom the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. is made, nor are perſons to be baptized for their intereſt in that Covenant, except it be made manifeſt by their profeſſion of faith, and therefore neither can we ſay of any infant of a believing Gentile that he is in that covenant, nor if we could, were it to be baptized till by profeſſion or other waies, its faith did manifeſt it to be a Diſciple of Chriſt.

In the 4. chapter Mr. Sidenham tells us of a being in Covenant according to the purpoſe of election in Gods heart, which I allow, and of being in Covenant in the face of the viſible Church by the perſons own viſible profeſſion, which I deny not, but for the other ſort of being in covenant with God as in a political moral conſideration, as in the right of another through a free promiſe to him and his heirs, it's a meer figment, there being no ſuch kind of being in Covenant in the time of the new Teſtament, nor doth Mr. Sidenham bring one text of Scripture to prove it: and for his reaſons they prove it not, 1. Saith he, If men deny an external as well as internal being in covenant, none can adminiſter an external ordinance an outward ſign to any, for we muſt go by external rules in theſe actings. But this reaſon is nothing to prove a political moral being in covenant without any act of Covenanting by either of the parties in Covenant. I deny not, but that all the elect are in Corenant with God in his purpoſe and ſo infants are in Covenant with God by Gods promiſe, either to his ſon when he gave them to him, or at ſome other time. And I grant that visible professors of faith in Christ are in Covenant externally by their own act of covenanting, and such may be baptized they being Disciples of Christ. 2. Nor did I ever say that no Ordinance must be administred to these which are not internally in Covenant. 3. Nor do I count it any absurdity to say we may set a seal to a blank (though I like not the expression) in this sense a man may lawfully be baptized to whom God hath not promised to be his God. 4. And I have shewed we have certain evidence of visible professors being in covenant, for we hear their profession and see their actions, and their rule by which baptism is to be administred, but of infants we have no evidence of their being in covenant by profession of faith, according to which we are to be baptized, yea we have evidence to the contrary, and their being in covenant according to election is uncertain, and if it were certain, yet till they be actual believers or Disciples of Christ we have no rule to baptize them by, nor is there a jot brought by Mr. Sidenham to prove they are in Covenant by their parents faith onely in Gospel times. Nor doth any thing Mr. Sidenham hath said answer that which he saith is the great question : and we all urge, that if God made the Covenant with believers and their seed, they must be all saved, &c. But in stead of answering me poseth me thus, doth God make the covenant of salvation with every visible professor whom they baptize? or with every visible Saint. Answ. No; Or do they baptize them out of Covenant? Answ. Yea; If by being out of Covenant be meant, that the Covenant of salvation is not made by God to them; then how come any to fall off and be damned? Answ. None of those God made the Covenant of salvation with fall off and be damned, others though baptized rightly and were visible professors, yet fall off and are damned, because the Covenant of salvation was never made by God to them, Or what rule have they to baptize by? Answ. That which is, Mat. 28. 19. Mark 16. 15, 16. Acts 2. 38, 41. and 8. 12, 37, 38. Why should it be thought more hainous to set a seal on (i. e. baptize) infants, as in the covenant, then on these professors which afterwards prove not to be in Covenant. Ans. because infants are not Disciples of Christ, when visible professors are, though they be not in covenant with God by his promise of saving grace. The being or not being in Covenant is not the reason of the baptizing or not baptizing of them, but their being or not being Disciples of Christ, or do they baptize because that persons are in the covenant? Answ. not because they are in the covenant that is Gods covenant to them, but because they covenant to be Christs by their own Declaration and promise, which is certainly known upon hearing their words and seing their actions, nor is it any trick to evade, but a clear truth, that it is not being in covenant (by Gods promise of saving grace to us) but being an actual believer, gives right to baptism; Nor doth it follow if the covenant be the ground (i. e. the object) of faith, it may well be the ground (i. e. adequate reason on the baptizer and the baptizeds part) of an outward privilege i. e. baptism, for the institution is not to baptize men in covenant by Gods act of promise, but Disciples or persons in covenant by their professing of faith. Nor is there danger of separating the Covenant from the conveyance of actual privilege; for the Covenant of it self, till it is fulfilled by the making a person a known Disciple of Christ, doth not give right to baptism any more then to the Lords supper. Nor is there reason why infants without faith should now be baptized because they were

circumcised, the institution of the one being different from the other, neither do we account Simon Magus, &c. Abrahams spiritual seed, nor deny elect infants to be so, if God doth administer all his graces by covenant, yet not all outward ordinances by the persons interest in it, and if he did, then infants by this reason should have the Lords supper as well as baptism. The invisible design of God may be known to us, and is carried on secretly in an outward visible dispensation, and some may be condemned by an outward rule, and yet persons not admitted into or ejected out of the Church by their being or not being in Covenant through Gods act of promise to them, but by their profession and practise we say not, none are to be baptized but real believers, the spiritual seed, nor that none are the spiritual seed but visible believers, nor do we conceive infants no spiritual seed of Abraham because no visible believers; But we deny that an infant of a believer is as visible by promise as a believer by profession. For on the one side no infant is of the visible Church barely by Gods promise of regeneration, justification, salvation.

1. Because that promise is according to Gods election, which is secret, so as that no man can know who are they to whom the promise pertaines, till it appear by some others declaration then the promise or act, an infant can ordinarily perform.

2. That which makes a thing or person visibly must be something existent in act, for then a thing or person is visibly when it is the object of sense, but sense is onely of singular things actually existent. But persons may have a promise afore they are in being, as Isaac was in Covenant afore he was begotten or born, yet not a visible Church-member, therefore an infant is not visible by promise.

3. On the other side profession makes a person manifestly visible, and therefore Mr. Sidenhams speech is palpably false, that an infant is as visible by promise, as a believer by profession.

SECT. XXVIII.

It is proved from Luke 1. 54, 55. and 19. 9. John 8. 39. Rom. 4. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Gal. 3. 7, 16, 29. and 4. 28. Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. Mat. 3. 9. That the seed of Abraham to whom the promise as Evangelical is made, Gen. 17. 7. are onely true believers or elect persons.

TO those texts in the foregoing Section alleaged to prove that the seed of Abraham to whom the promise, Gen. 17. 7. as it is Evangelical belongs, are only true believers or elect persons, which have been vindicated from Mr. Sidenhams answers, I shall adde some more in the new Testament.

1. In Maries song, Luke 1 54. 55. It is said, He hath holpen his Servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever.

That seed of Abraham is onely meant in the promise, Gen. 17. 7. As it was evangelical which he hath holpen by Christ in remembrance of his mercy; this is manifest from the text. But they are onely true believers or elect persons. Pisc. Schol. in Luk. 1. 55. Semini. [illegible] id est posteritati nempe spirituali, id est electis; sive sint ex judeis, sive ex gentibus, ut docet Apostolas Rom. 4. v. 16. and ch. 9. v. 8. New annot on Luke 1. 55. to his seed for ever, that is to the faithfull and holy. See Gal. 3. 16. 26, 27, 29. They only are holpen by Christ in remembrance of his mercy, which is confirmed from the words of Zacharias, Luke 1. 71, 72, 73, 74, 75. 76, 77, 78. wherein the holy Covenant and Oath God sware to Abraham was, that he would grant them that is (Abrahams seed) salvation, deliverance, to serve god in holyness and righteousness before him all the daies of their life, the salvation is expressed to be by remission of sins, through the tender mercy of God, whereby the day Spring from on high visited them, which shewes, the Covenant as it was Evangelical, promised not outward privileges but saving graces, which are not promised to any but elect persons, therefore by Abrahams seed in the promise, Gen. 17. 7. As it was Evangelical are, meant onely elect or true believers.

2. It is said of Zaccheus, Luke 19. 9. This day is salvation come to this house, for so much as he also is the son of Abraham, for the son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost; In which words the term [son of Abraham] is made to infer salvation, and Zaccheus in that he was the son of Abraham, proved to be one that the son of man came to seek and save which can agree onely to elect persons, therefore the term [seed of Abraham] equipollent to [son of Abraham] as Evangelically such notes onely elect persons or true believers. Piscat. Analys. Luc. 19. 9. Electio Dei patris significatur v. 9. his verbis, eo quod ipse quoque filius Abrahæ est, ubi intelligitur non simpliciter filius secundum carnem, sed filius secundum promissionem Dei, qua promiserat ipsum futurum patrem credentium, schol. filius Abrahæ, nempe filius secundum promissionem, id est electus, vide, Rom. 9. v. 7. and 8. New Annot on Luke 19. 9. Is the son of Abraham, to be a son of Abraham is to be chosen freely, Rom. 9. 8. To walk in the steps and faith of Abraham. Rom. 4. 11, 12. And generally to do the good works of Abraham, John 8. 39. Whereby we may be assured of Election to eternal life, Rom. 8. 29, 30. 2 Pet. 1. 10. Trap com, in Luke 19. 9. He also is a son of Abraham that is freely elected, Rom. 9. A follower of Abrahams faith, Rom. 4. 12. And a doer of his works, John 8. 39.

3. It is said by our Lord Christ, John 8. 39. If ye were Abrahams children ye would do the works of Abraham, he granted them ver. 37. To be Abrahams seed by nature, but not the seed of Abraham according to the Covenant Evangelical, because their practise was unlike Abrahams. Whence I inferre, they Onely Evangellically are Abrahams children or seed even of those who descended from Abraham by generation who are like unto Abraham in their Actions. But such onely are true believers or elect persons, therefore true believers or elect persons onely are Abrahams children or seed Evangelical. Diodati. Annot. on John 8. 39. children, namely true and lawfull imitators of Abrahams faith: Father of all believers; wherein consists the true meaning of this name of children of Abraham, Rom. 4. 16. and 9. 6, 7. Gal. 3. 7.

4. With our Lord Christs words accord the words of Paul, who doth plainly determine that the seed of Abraham to whom the promise, Gen, 17. 7. That God would be the God of Abrahams seed, as it was Eavngelical belongs, are believers or elect persons and no other, Rom. 4. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Is so plain to prove it that the very reading the words is enough to clear it to a heedfull reader. For therein the Apostle doth shew how the promises, Gen. 17. 7. Are true of the Gentiles as well as the Jewes. in that Abraham is considered therein as the father of believers, v. 11. And the father of circumcision, that is as Beza of the circumcised, yet not a father to all of them, nor to them onely, but to those circumcised ones onely, and with them to all other that believe, or walk in the steps of that faith, which our father (of us believing Gentiles) Abraham had being yet uncircumcised, v. 11. 12. Now if Abraham be considered in the promises as Evangelical onely as the Father of believers of either sort circumcised, or uncircumcised, then the seed of Abraham are onely believers or elect persons. And to this purpose doth Master Dickson paraphrase the words thus. Abraham received from God the sign of circumcision to seal the Covenant of grace, or the righteousness of faith, which he had uncircumcised to that end, that he might be father of uncircumcised believers. and in like manner of circumcised, to wit, who are both sons of the flesh, and sons of the faith of Abraham. Therefore the righteousness of faith is common to the circumcised, and uncircumcised believers, or them that follow the steps of the faith of Abraham not yet circumcised. But Abraham is said to be the father of believers, in that he is the first eminent example of faith, and of righteousness imputed by faith, and by his example an Author to all that they may believe. Beza in his note on Rom. 4. 12. For as speaking of the uncircumcised, he said not simply that Abraham was the father of them all, but of them onely who should believe, he also hath deservedly kept the same distinction in the Jewes, because (as I said before) it is not simply the Apostles purpose to teach Abraham to be the father of both the uncircumcised and the circumcised, but also especially by what reason he is the father of both, which is his scope. For to be a child of Abraham before God, and to be justifyed by faith cohere, Again v. 13. shewes the same. For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. I shall use the words of the same Authors. Dickson thus paraphraseth, v. 13. He proves Abraham to be Father not but of believers onely, uncircumcised alike and circumcised, and together addes a third argument. The promise made to Abraham and his seed, that he should be heir of the land of Canaan in time, and of the world and heaven in truth, came not to him by the Law, or by the condition of works, but happened to him by an absolute promise to him already justified by faith, and having the righteousness of faith. Therefore his sons are not they which are of the Law seeking to wit righteousness by works, but they onely who are by faith, seeking righteousness by faith, that is all and onely believers, circumcised alike and uncircumcised, to whom equally the common righteousness of faith and the inheritance is promised. The argument is of force, for if father Abraham be not the heir of the world, nor have righteousness but by faith, certainly none are his sons but believers, who have righteousness by faith, and by righteousness the inheritance. Beza Annot. ad Rom. 4. 13. But in these words there is a continuation of the former conclusion, the application of the example of Abraham neither to the circumcised, neither to the uncircumcised, otherwise not availing unless two things be shewed: to wit that God made that Covenant not with

Abraham alone, but with his heirs also, and that under the name of his posterity, any who shall believe that covenant like Abraham are understood. Therefore Paul conjoynes the promises of God made to Abraham, as it were into one body, and when he had taught all believers whether circumcised, or uncircumcised to be Abrahams sons, he verily deservedly calls Abraham the heir of the world, by the term world understanding all Nations, and therein following the Lords steps. For when the Lord had said to Abraham that he would be the God of him and his seed, after he expounded what he understood by the term seed; to wit all the nations of the earth, when he said that it should be, that in him he would vouchsafe them all his grace. The next v. also confirms it, v. 14. For if they which are of the Law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect, which Mr. Dickson thus paraphraseth, if they which are of the Law, or which seek righteousnes by works, were the sons of Abraham, and heirs of life, and partakers of righteousnes, then faith should be made void, and the promise vain: But this is absurd. Therefore they which are of the law are not heirs, but alone believers are sons of Abraham, and heirs of life and righteousnes. The 16. v. doth yet more plainly express that the seed of Abraham to whom the promise, Gen. 17. 7. As Evangelical is made are believers onely. Therefore it is of faith that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed, not to that onely which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all. Upon which saith Mr. Dickson with that very counsel God appointed that the inheritance should be of faith; that it might appear to be of grace or by grace. Therefore onely and all believers uncircumcised, and circumcised alike, are heirs. The inheritance is of faith and by grace by the Counsel of God, that the promise might be sure to all the seed, not onely to that which is the seed of Abraham by the law of nature and hath faith also, that is the circumcised Jewes believing, but also to that seed which is not by the law of nature or the flesh, but onely by the faith of Abraham, that is the uncircumcised believing Gentiles.

Therefore, unless suspending the promise of righteousnes, and the inheritance upon the condition of the law to be performed, we would make it unsure and uncertain, the whole seed of Abraham, or all and onely believers circumcised and uncircumcised, are heirs by faith with father Abraham, who according to faith is father of all us believers of Jewes and Gentiles. Beza Annot. ad Rom. 4. 16. Paul manifestly devides into two members that which in general he had said of the whole seed of Abraham, that is believers both circumcised and uncircumcised, Pisc. Sch. to all the seed] that is of Abraham, to wit all believers, Diodati, to all, namely to the spiritual seed according to the faith, of which God intended to speak in that excellent promise, I will be thy God and of thy seed after the, Gen. 17. 7,

Lastly the Apostle interprets the promise, Gen. 17. 5. That Abraham should be the father of many Nations, thus that the Gentiles should be his seed by faith, v. 17. as it is written, I have made thee a father of many Nations, on which Master Dickson. By force of the divine promise, promising that he should be the father of many Nations. Abraham embraced for sons all believers to be ingrafted into his seed, and so in vertue of the promise, as it were begat or conceived believers to himself as sons promised. The new Anni.

Annot on Rom. 4. 17. I have made thee a Father, See Gen. 17. 5. Not of those only that should issue from him according to the flesh, but also of those among all nations that by faith should be adopted and received into his spiritual family.

5. The texts also which are; Gal. 3. 7, 16, 29, and 4, 28. Are very pregnant to the same purpose, that the seed of Abraham to which the promise, Gen. 7. 7. as Evangelical is made, are only true believers, or elect persons. The rst of these places is that which is asserted in terms. Know ye therefore that ney which are of faith the same are the children of Abraham, where the peech is equipollent to an exclusive. For having, v. 2. 5. told them they must have the spirit, and be Abrahams children either by the works of the law by faith, and determined that they had not the spirit by the works of the w, but by faith, supposing that they who are children have received the spirit as it is, v. 14. it plainly followes that they only are the children of Abraham which are of faith, even as Protestant divines conclude from Gal. 2. 16. that justification is by faith only, because the disjunction being sufficient, justifycation is either by faith, or by works, and works excluded, it followes, we are justified by faith onely. And so Mr. Dickson conceives that the Apostles argument is, Gal. 3. 7. They onely who are of the faith, or who seek to be justified by faith, and not by works, are the children of Abraham, therefore the only reason of justification is by faith. Diodati Annot. on Gal. 3. 7. yet you know (that is to say) this doctrine is clear and resolved upon amongst Christians, that the true children of Abraham comprehended in the covenant which God made with him and his posterity are not the carnal Jewes, which are borne of him, or joined to him by circumcision, and by professing of their ceremonies; but all such as according to Abrahams example do renounce all confidence in their own proper works, and put it wholly in Gods promises and grace in Christ; as Abraham was made a father, example and paragon of faith, to all those to whom the covenant made with him was to appertain. The like is the determination of Mr. Perkins (that I may omit others) who in his com. on Gal. 3. 7. Saith the promise and election of God makes properly children of Abraham, and that the true mark of the child of Abraham is to be of the faith of Abraham, and that profession of Abrahams faith, and descent from Isaac are not sufficient to prove men children of Abraham without following of his faith.

The texts, Gal 3. 16, 29. have been considered before, and our inferences vindicated from Mr. Sidenhams evasions. The other to wit, Gal. 4. 28. Speaks to the same purpose to which the fore alleaged texts do. Now we Brethren as Isaac was, are children of the promise, that is we of whom the Jerusalem which is above is mother, that is as Beza Annot. adde v. 26. we who embraced Christ, adde v. 27. he shewes the true sons of Abraham are born spiritually by the Gospel, adde v. 28. are children of the promise, that is that seed to which pertaineth that promise, I will be a God to thee and thy seed, out of all which it appears that as the promise, Gen. 17. 7. I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee was Evangelical, it was made only to the elect of God and true believers, and they only are Abrahams seed there meant.

6. I shall next adde the consideration of that text, Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. Where the

the Apostle speaks thus; not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Israel which are of Israel; neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children; but in Isaac shall thy seed be called, that is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed. I suppose it will not be denyed, that this passage is an answer to an objection occasioned by the intimating of the rejection of the Jewes from being Gods people, v. 1. 2, 3, 4, 5. If any should deny it yet the matter and form of expression, v. 6. shewes it to be opposed to something which might be objected against what was before implyed. For the speech, the word of God hath not fallen, or not taken effect; intimates that there was some word of God which seemed to be without effect, or to fall if the Jewes were cast off from being Gods people. And it appears by the answer that the word of God was some promise concerning Israel as, v. 6. shewes, and Abrahams seed as v. 7. 8, 9. shewes. The word of God concerning Abrahams seed which might be conceived to fall, appears upon inquisition to have been that, Gen. 17. 7. either only or chiefly Piscat. Sch. in Rom. 9. 6. that word of God, to wit that promise made to Abraham, I will be thy God and of thy seed after thee. Dickson expos. annalyt. Rom. 9. 6. the word of God hath fallen, when he said to Abraham, I will be thy God and of thy seed, I conceive it needless to adde any more, it being so manifest and so conceived by interpreters of note. Hence it appears also that the objection answered by the Apostle is this, God promised to be a God to Abraham and his seed after him in their generations in an everlasting covenant, therefore if the Jewes who are Abrahams seed are rejected, the word of God falls.

To this the Apostle answers. 1. By denying that every Jew who was descended from Abraham by natural generation, and so a child of the flesh is meant by the seed there named, who should be the child of God, and so the promise of being God to them is not meant of all Abrahams natural posterity.

2. By asserting that they who are counted for the seed and were children of the promise, that is those to whom that Evangelical promise, Gen. 17. 7. belonged, were a peculiar number whether of Jews, or Gentiles, according to Gods own choice and calling distinguished by no other discriminating reason but Gods will, as he proves in Isaac and Ishmael, v. 9. Esau and Jacob, v. 10, 11, 12, 13. and otherwise in that which followes.

Whence it appears 1. That the promise, Gen. 17. 7. was not made to Abrahams natural posterity as such, and if so, then it is not made to every child of a believer.

2. That only the elect whether of Jews or Gentiles are the seed of Abraham to whom the promise, Gen. 17. 7. is made, and consequently to no other of a beleivers children, but the elect: nor any other in covenant with God by vertue of that promise but they.

This to be the Apostles determination I confirmed, Exam. part. 3. sect. 4. by the speeches of Beza, Twisse, Ames, Bayn, Walæus, Dounam, new Annot, Ainsworth, Parcus, Estius (who though a Papist, yet is reputed more solid and right about the the point of grace, then the Jesuits are) and added in my Praeursor pag. 36. the words of Mr. Rutherford of Scotland, and

Mr. Norton of New England. To which I have added more testimonies of Beza, Chamier, and the Belgick Professors at the Synod of Dort in my Refutation of Dr. Savage his Position in Latin, Sect 5. And because Mr. Blake seeks so much to possesse people as if I drew this from the Jesuits, I will add Mr Dicsons words on Rom. 9. 7, 8. Neither doth it follow because the Jewes are the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, that therefore they are all sons in the Scripture sense or the seed promised. For so even the Ismaelites should be accounted for Abrahams seed contrary to Scripture, which hath restrained the right of sons to Isaac and his family, by saying, In Isaac shall thy seed be called. The sons of the flesh are to be distinguished from the elect sons of God, for this God would, when Ismael being secluded, he called Isaac the seed of Abraham, that not all are the elect sons of God, but onely the children of promise (or whom God determined of grace to make with Isaac sons of the faith of Abraham) are the children of God, and that seed to whom the promise is made. Dr. Owen of Perseverance, Chap. 5. Sect. 10. The Apostle, Rom 9 8. calleth the elect the children of the promises, or those to whom the promises to Abraham and his seed were made. Chap. 7. Sect. 23. The persons to whom this promise (Isai. 59 21.) is made, are called thee and thy seed, that is all those and onely those, with whom God is a God in Covenant. God here minds them of his first making of this Covenant with Abraham & his seed, Gen. 17. 7. Now who are this seed of Abraham? Not all his carnall posterity, not the whole nation of the Jewes. Our Saviour not onely denies but also proves by many Arguments, that the Pharisees and their followers, who doubtless were of the nation of the Jewes, and the carnall seed of Abraham, were not the children of Abraham in this sense, nor his seed, but rather the Devils, John 8. 39, 40, 41. And the Apostle disputes and argues the same case, Rom. 4 9, 10, 11, and proves undeniably that it is believers only (whether circumcised or uncircumcised, whether Jewes or Gentiles) that are this seed of Abraham and heirs of the promise. So plainly, Gal. 3. 7. Know yee therefore that they which are of the faith, are the children of Abraham. and then concludes again as the issue of his debate, verse 9 So then they which be of faith, are blessed with faithfull Abraham. Mr. Marshal himselfe in his Defence, pag. 102. saith, secondly by the word [Seed] was meant the children of the promise, the Elect, Rom. 9 8. as Mr. Bayne, nay Arminius himselfe confesses: onely Arminius saith, that they were elected upon foresight of their faith. And indeed so far as I discern in the reading of Arminius his Analysis of the ninth of the Romanes the cited Remonstrants Defence of their opinion at the Synod of Dort on the first Article, Mr. John Goodwin his late Exposition of the ninth to the Romans it is agreed, that in the mystical sense the promise Gen, 17. 7. is determined by the Apostle, Rom 9 6, 7, 8. to belong onely to the elect, though the Remonstrants would have them elected upon consideration of believing, and the Contra-remonstrants, according to the Apostles determination, verse 11 &c. assign no other reason of the election of some & refection of others, but Gods will. All do agree that the Apostle determines, that every child of Abraham, much lesse of every believer, is not a child of the promise, or the seed of Abraham to whom the Promise is made, Gen. 17. 7. but the elect or true believers, whether Jewes or Gentiles.

7. It is proved that the promise Gen. 17. 7. as it was Evangelicall, or as the Apostle speaks, Gal. 3. 17. the Covenant προκεκυρωμένην ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς χεισὸν, fore-confirmed of God unto Christ, was not to every believers naturall seed, but to the true believers or elect persons, who are meant by Abrahams seed, because it can be true onely of them. For in the Evangelical sense to whom God promiseth to be God he promiseth to justifie them, to regenerate them, to raise them up to eternall life, as appears by our Saviours own reasoning, Luke 20. 37, 38. where he infers from Gods avouching himselfe to be the God of Abraham, his living to God, & rising from the dead to eternal life, bythe Apostles inference Rom. 4. 16. from thence that righteousnes is by faith, Rom. 9. 7, 8. determining them to be elect people of God, to whom he hath promised to be God, Heb. 8, 10. &c. But God doth not promise to every believers child, to justifie, regenerate, and raise him to eternal life for if he did promise it he would perform it, to say he makes a promise to any, and to say they have not the efficacie of it, is to make God a lyar, whereas many children of believers are never justified, regenerated, nor shall be raised to eternall life. He performs it to all true believers and elect persons, and to none other, therefore none others are meant there by Abrahams seed in the Evangelical sense.

8 Lastly, the words of John Baptist Matth 3. 9. When he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadduces come to his baptism saying to them, And think not to say within your selves, We have Abraham to our Father: for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham, do evince 1 that repenting and believing persons though raised by God of stones without naturall generation, are the children of Abraham to whom the promise is made, Gen. 17. 7. 2. That it was not their naturall descent from Abraham without repentance and Gospel faith, which did entitle them to Gods favour, or to his baptism, and therefore it follows thence, that the children of Abraham to whom the promise is, Gen 17. 7. are onely the elect or true believers. 3. That to be the child of a believer is not a sufficient title to Gods favour, or baptism. To this purpose Paræus Com. in Matth. 3. 9. " He " teacheth also that the promises of God are not tied to fleshly birth, but pertain only to believing & spiritual posterity. For they are not sons of Abra- " ham who according to the flesh are of Abraham, but who are according to " the spirit. Piscat. Sch. in Mat. h. 3. 9. His sentence is, although ye come " from Abraham according to the flesh, yet ye are not therfore those sons of " Abraham to whom pertains the promise of eternall life made to " Abraham and his seed: For this belongs to them who imitate Abrahams " faith and piety. Diodati Annot. on Matth. 3 9. And think not, do not dally with your selves to think that because you are issued from Abraham according to the flesh, you are in Gods favour and free from his judgement: for with him the imitation of Abrahams faith and piety is the only thing " which demonstrates and causeth to be the children of Abraham, and not " the corporall generation, Rom 4. 12. Now such children may be brought " forth of all Nations, yea and out of these stones. Neither do you perswade your selves, that by your perdition Gods people shall perish: for " Gods people shall always subsist in these spiritual children of Abraham towards whom Gods covenant and promises shall be verified.

This then is the constant Doctrine of the New Testament, that the promise Gen. 17. 7. as Evangelicall, is made onely to the elect and true believers, that they onely are Abrahams seed spirituall, and so onely in the covenant of grace by Gods promise, and therefore if it be true that they onely who are in covenant, which Pædobaptists say when they say the Seal follows the Covenant, are to be baptized, not any one because he is the child of a believer, but the elect and true believers are to be baptized, and so their own argument for Infant-baptism overthroweth it.

SECT. XXIX.

The Allegation of Rom. 9 6, 7, 8, Matth. 3. 7, 8, 9. to prove that the seed to which the promise Gen. 17. 7. as Evangelicall belongs, are true believers, or the elect onely, is vindicated from Mr. Blakes Answer Vindic. Fœd. ch. 36. and Mr. Sidenhams Exercit. ch. 6.

TO my Allegation of Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. in my Examen, part 3. sect. 4. Mr. Blake undertakes to give an answer, Vindic. Fœd. ch. 36. And first having belied me as borrowing from Stapleton the Jesuit, and learning to a hair to follow him, though to my remembrance I never read that passage in him, which he alleged, nor made any use of his exposition of the Epistle to the Romans, or any other of his works in that Book of mine, he proceeds thus in his scoffing calumniating fashion, like a Satyrist rather than a Disputant. We have drunk up the Protestants poyson, and Mr. T. his great care is, to preserve his party by the Jesuits Antidote; he is wholly beholding to them for the Receipt. Which is Mr. Blakes manifest calumny, as the quotations in my Examen part 3 sect. 4. in which he might see that I received it from the most eminent Protestants, and alleged but one Papist, and he no Jesuit, but one of the better note, and since, the quotations in the foregoing Section do fully prove, and it were easie to produce treble the number if need were. But I find it in vain to endeavour the satisfying of such eager and through prejudice selfe-blinding Antagonists, as Mr. Blake is, I could (if I liked such Arts as Mr. Blake useth) tell Mr Blake he borrows from the Jesuit Bellarmin, who against Peter Martyr saying the promise Gen. 17. 7, is not universall concerning the children of believers, but hath place onely in the predestinate, replies, This is said without proof, for the words of the Scripture are absolute, nor is there any mention of predestination in that whole chapter. But Mr Blake promiseth me square dealing in the examining my Argument, and sets down my words at length, and then in stead of answering it, puts divers Quære's to me, yeelding first to me, that the Text Gen. 17. 7. was in that place Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8, brought into question by the Apostle. I saith he, How Bain and Ames come to the name of Remonstrants? I had thought they had been on the party that are called Contra-remonstrants? Answer. And so also did I, and therefore called them the answerers of Arminius, and the cited Remonstrants, not Remonstrants, as Mr. Blake not heeding my words suggests, as one not willing to omit any thing whether right or wrong which may render me odious or contemptible.

" 2. saith he, Where it appears that Arminius conceived that the Covenant " there spoken to was the word of the Law and not of Promise. I am sure in-

" In his Analysis on this chapter to the Romans (of which Mr. T. should not " be ignorant, little lesse than vapouring of his examination of it in Oxford " Apolog. page 131.) he spake in another manner, even in Mr T. his own Dia- " lect, as though the ones Comment had been spit out of the mouth of the " other. The sons of the flesh with the Apostle (saith he) are those who by " the works of the Law follow after righteousnes and salvation. The sons of " the Promise are those that seek after righteousnes and salvation by faith in " Christ, and he thus frames the principall Syllogism of the Apostle for con- " futation of the Jewes arguing from the rejection of the Jewes, Gods fai- " ling in his promise. If the word of God comprehend onely the sons of " the promise, shutting out the sons of the flesh, then it follows that the word " of God doth not fail, though the sons of the flesh be rejected: But the word of " God comprehends onely the sons of the promise, shutting out the sons of " the flesh: Therefore the word of God doth not fail though the sons of the " flesh be rejected. Armin. Anal. cap 9. ad Rom. pag. 781, Let any now " judge whether he can interpret this of the Law and not of the Pro- " mise.

Answer 1. The mention of my examining of Arminius his Analysis of Rom. 9. is little less than vapouring, as Mr Blake in his spitefull fashion terms it, but a necessary allegation with modesty to clear my self from his false charge, That I had lately preached this as a Gospel truth, that this is one of the promises of the Covenant of grace, that God will be the God of beleivers and their seed, and that now I was suddenly otherwise perswaded. If the Reader view my words, he wil discern a spirit of malice or waywardnes in Mr Blakes misrepresenting of my actions. 2. To his Quære I answer, That I have not now Arminius his book, to discern whether it was Arminius his conceit or not, nor need I prove it was, not alleging it as of my own search, but upon the credit of Bain and Ames. And I find in that Edition I have of Bain on Ephes 1. Anno 1618. pag. 134. on vers. 5. that he saith, that Arminius was deceived in this among other things, that the objecters whose objection Paul preventeth vers. 6. do by the word of God conceive the word of the Covenant legall, which he refutes 136 as one of those mistakes which did mislead Arminius: Nor doth Mr. Blake at all acquit Arminius from this mistake which Mr. Bain charged him with. For Mr. Bain did not charge him with that mistake in the framing of the Apostles principal Syllogism for confutation of the Jewes arguing from the rejection of the Jewes Gods failing in his promise, but in the framing the objection v. 6. as if the Jewes objection, That if they were rejected who by the works of the Law sought righteousnes, then Gods word in the Legall Covenant to take them to be his people who kept the Law, did fail: which Mr. Bain refutes, and shewes, That the objection did arise concerning Gods word about their naturall descent, as being Israel and Abrahams seed, which is the same which I alleged. And the same is the observation of Ames concerning the cited Remonstrants, Animadv. in Remonstr. script Synod. de prædest. cb. 8. sect. 4. where he hath these words, Remonstr. autem pro confesso & concesso habent, agi hic de sermone legis, sicut apparet ex illis verbis: Si legem Moses non violarint; qui legem sequuntur. Sed in textu agitur de sermone promissionis, qui efficax est in populo præcognito, de quo præcipue gloriabantur Judæi, semetipsos Abrahæ filios, & hæredes promissionis ipsi falsæ jactitantes, sicut ex Pauli responso patet. So that if the Reader do conceive that Arminius in the words cited by Mr. Blake, meant by the word of God the word of Promise not of the Law, yet Arminius might conceive the word of God in the objection of the Jewes to be the legall Covenant or word of the Law, in which Mr. Bain, and I after him, took him to be deceived.

3. Whereas he saith, That Arminius speaks in mine own Dialect, as though the ones Comment had been spit out of the mouth of the other, alleging Arminius his words, and after his third Quære is, when he affirms, that to be born after the flesh is all one with the Apostle with legal Justiciaries, Apolog. pag. 114. (which is Arminius his interpretation) how then can he by that distinction of children of the flesh, and children of the promise, shut out the naturall seed of Abraham? Are the naturall seed of Abraham and legall justiciaries one and the same? He continues his spitefull language and calumniating course. For 1. though it is true that Apol. pag. 114. I say one born after the flesh is all one with the Apostle as legal justiciaries, yet I limit this speech to the Apostles speech, Gal. 4. 22, &c. And therefore it is a meer calumny that in the explication of Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8, I spoke in Arminius his Dialect, as if my Comment had been spit out of his mouth. Yea it might easily have been deprehended by Mr. Blake, that I rejected Arminius his explication of children of the flesh, and children of the promise, Rom. 9 8. in that I excepted Exam. part 3. sect. 2. against this very thing in Arminius his exposition, & did recite Mr. Bains words, who grants, that elsewhere sons of the flesh are put for legal justiciaries, yet denies it of the phrase Rom. 9. 8. where he proves it notes barely natural descent from Abraham, page 138, 139.

2. To this question I answer, 1. I shut not out the naturall seed of Abraham universally from the promise, but only do not include them universally & this I do from the Apostles distinction not understood in Arminius his sense. 2 To his second question, Are the naturall seed of Abraham and legall justiciaries one and the same? I answer, No. for saith Mr. Blake, if the Apostle exclude all the naturall seed of Abram from this covenant of God with Abraham, (as Mr. T. from Stapleton argues) and take in onely his spiritual seed, how can he be reconciled to himself?

Answ. There are divers untruths in this passage: First, It is untrue that I do argue that the Apostle excludes all the natural seed of Abraham from this covenant of God with Abraham. 2. That I argue this from Stapleton, which I am sure is most false, nor would have been said by Mr. Blake if he had any care to refrain from calumniating me. 3. Nor do I think by Mr. Blakes own allegation of Stapletons words in this chapter, from whence he imagines I borrowed my arguing that Stapleton himself did so argue, but Mr. Blake misreports him also. My assertion is, and if Stapleton do agree with me, I like it not the worse, that in the promise Gen. 17. 7. as it is Evangelical assuring regeneration, justification, and life eternall, all the naturall seed of Abraham are not included, but grant that many have been and shall be included, yet say, that as they are his natnrall seed so they are his spirituall seed by believing or election, and that to the elect onely that promise as Evangelicall is made by God, and that this the Apostle determines and proves, and no where gainsays.

But saith Mr. Blake, In the words immediatly before this objection, he speaks of the Jewes (as his kinsmen according to the flesh, which were the naturall seed of Abraham) and saith, to them pertain the adoption, the glory, and the Covenants, &c. How then can his distinction be interpreted to throw them out of Covenant, when in expres's terms he had affirmed that they were in covenant? How can he deny that these are children, v. 7, when he had affirmed that to them pertaineth the adoption v. 4.

Answer. If the Apostle had affirmed those Jewes his kinsmen after the flesh, that they were in covenant, Gen. 17. 7. and adopted, for whom he sorrowed so much, v. 2. he had plaid the hypocrite, expressing his sorrow for them as not include d in the covenant, who he knew were in it, he had trifled in raising an objection from thence and answering it, yea he had contradicted himself, who v. 6. saith, All are not Israel that are of Israel, and v. 7. that because they were the seed of Abraham, they were not all children, v. 8. that the children of the flesh are not the children of God, opposing the children of the promise to the children of the flesh. And it will concern Mr. Blake to reconcile the Apostle to himselfe, if he should mean as Mr Blake expounds him, Nor do I know how he could with any shew of truth affirm these men to be in covenant with God, to be his children who did obstinately oppose Christ, being ignorant of the righteousnes of God, and seeking to establish their own righteousnes, were not subject to the righteousnes of God, Rom. 10. 3. but were broken off for unbelief, Rom. 11. 20. It is true it is said, Whose or of whom are the adoption and the covenants. But doth he say this of the Israelites then living whose case he bewailed? I conceive not, but of their ancestors. For the speeches were not true of them, that of them was Christ according to the flesh,, or theirs the giving of the Law, yet I deny not it was their honour and privilege in some sort, that God vouchsafed these things to their ancestors and nation, and it did affect Paul much, that the people which were so much dignified by God, should now be rejected. But were it that of those persons it were said, that to them pertained the covenants, and the adoption, yet were it not true which Mr. Bl saith, that Paul in expres's terms affirmed that they were in covenant, or were children of God. For if it be true that by the Covenants were meant the Table s of the Covenant, as Beza conceives, or the Covenants of Adoption, in respect of outward legall privildges, which are onely there mentioned as proper to the Jewes, the adoption and covenants might be said to pertain to them, and they neither in covenant, nor children of God Evangelically. But of this Text I have before spoken, Sect. 27, &c. Mr Bl adds, which may be confirmed by abundant other texts of Scripture; Ye are the children of the Lord your God, Deut. 14. 1. Out of Egypt have I called my Son, Hos. 11. 1. It is not meet to take the childrens bread and cast it unto Doggs, Mat. 15. 26. where all that were no Gentiles, all to whom Christ was sent are called Children: Ye are the children of the Prophets, and of the covenant which God made with your Fathers, Acts 3. 20. Doth the covenant appertain to them, and they stiled the children of the covenant, and yet are they out of covenant? Are they children to whom the adoption pertains, and yet no children? When Mr. T. hath given any fair answer to these Quære's, especially the two last, we shall conceive some probability of truth in his glose on the Apostles words; in the mean time we cannot but look upon it in full opposition and contradiction to that which the Apostle expressly delivers.

Answ. 1. Now of all the passages call those brethren of Paul whose case

he bewaileth verse 3. Children of God, his Son, Children, Children of the Prophets and of the Covenant. 2. The speeches being of a people mixt of good and bad, and the speeches being indefinite, may be true if meant of some onely of those people: yea in the Apostles sense they cannot be true of all that were not Gentiles, all to whom Christ was sent, that they were the children of God. For many are termed by the Prophet Isai. 57 3. the sons of the Sorceresse, the seed of the adulteresse and the whore, by John Baptist, Matth. 3. 7. Generation of vipers, by our Lord Christ Matth. 23 15. Children of hell. 3. Sometimes the term of Children is meant as the term righteous is, Luke 15. 7. of one that is so in reputation though not in truth, as the children of the Kingdom, Mat. 8. 12. must be meant of them that were so in reputation, though not in truth: For had they been so in truth they should not be cast out into utter darkness. 4. By the children of the covenant Acts 3. 25. is not meant that they were then in the Evangelicall Covenant as made to them: For at that time they had not repented, but were exhorted thereto, v. 19 But they are called the children of the Covenant, because they were the posteriy of those Fathers with whom first the covenant was made, as they are called children of the Prophets, because they were the posterity of that people to whom the Prophets were first raised and sent, as is shewed before Sect. 27. out of which there is a fair answer to Mr. Blakes Riddles without an Oedipus, that first the Covenants and Adoption, Rom. 9. 4. are not said to pertain to those Israelites for whom Paul mourned. v. 3. but to their ancestors. 2. If they did, yet not in Mr. Blakes sense,, but in the sense fore-given. 3. That those Israelites for whom Paul mourned, Rom. 9. 3. are not stiled children of the covenant. Acts 3. 25. 4 Nor though it be true of those for whom Paul mourned, is it any thing to Mr. Blakes purpose, but hath another meaning foregiven. And thus there is a sweet harmony between my gloss and the Apostles expressions.

Mr. Bl. next gives his Analysis of the Apostles words, in which he grants v. 7. a numerous company by Ishmael to be excluded (who were Abrahams seed after the flesh) which evinceth what I contend for, that Gods promise Gen. 17, 7. was not made in any sort to Ishmael though he were the child of a believer and circumcised, therefore that covenant is not made to every believers naturall child, nor was the reason of circumcising this or that person, taken from the persons interest in the covenant, for Ishmael was circumcised though not in covenant. Then Mr. Bl. adds, " As then there was a " distinction of seed, so also now, one member he had laid down before, viz. " Israelites according to the flesh rested in all those privilledges there reckoned " up, v. 4, 5, these they pleaded, the Apostle yelds them: and Mr. T, (according " to the discovery of these times) denies them, The second member he " after falls upon; the eternally beloved and chosen of God, and largely am- " plifies. In these Abrahams seed may continue; though the other be cast " off,, to whom yet God hath continued (in successive generations) a God in " covenant, and continued to them the privilledges of being his people, though " now he was upon the rejection of them.

Answer. I should hardly have thought a sober minded man, much less a man reputed an ancient grave Divine, would so slightly have handled such a Scripture in which he saith is my triumphing argument, but that I meet with this passage defective in what was to be done, and made up of slirts, falshoods, impertlpertinencies, and assertions opposite to the Apostle. It is defective in two main things, first, in applying the distinction of the Apostle to the solution of the objection, by shewing how the word fails not, if the one sort of seed of Abraham be rejected. 2. In not shewing any invalidity in my deduction of my Conclusion thence, that the seed of Abraham to whom the promise Gen. 17. 7. as Evangelical is made, are only the elect. His flirts are at me, as denying the Israelites according to the discovery of these times, what the Apostle yeelds. Falshoods, that the Israelites according to the flesh pleaded all those priviledges reckoned up, v. 4, 5. For they were so far from pleading it as a privilege, that Christ came of them according to the flesh, that they abhorred and accursed him. 2. That I deny the priviledges which the Apostle yeldeth them. Which also are meer impertinencies to the solution of the objection, and to the distinction of the Apostle, who doth not at all in the expression of Children of the flesh mention those priviledges, nor mentions Children of the flesh, as importing an investiture into those priviledges, as Mr. Bl. seems to have conceived, but barely by that term notes their naturall descent from Abraham, insomuch that Ishmael is meant as a Child of the flesh, who was no way vested in those priviledges v. 4, 5. In stead of telling whether the eternally chosen and beloved of God were the seed meant Gen. 17. 7. and so the word of God failed not, he onely tels us, In these the seed of Abraham may continue though the other be cast off, which is impertinently and doubtfully expresst, as if there were not a certainty but onely a possibility of the seed of Abraham continuing in the eternally beloved and chosen of God. It is in like manner impertinent to the business, to tell what God hath done in successive generations, when the objection is of the inconsistency with his doings and his promises concerning the present generation. Lastly, it is directly against the Apostle, who opposeth the children of the promise to the cast off, to say, that he hath continued a God in covenant to them whom he hath cast off, and continueth to them the priviledges of his people though he was upon the rejecting of them. And it is a strange expression, when there is speech of rejection opposite to eternall love and choice of God, to say, God is now upon the rejection of them, which intimates a beginning of a rejection. But Mr. Bl. thinks to satisfie all by the words of Gomarus, which having set down at large, he then saith, In which we have these three things, 1. Mr. T. his objection wholly solved. 2. The Apostle reconciled to himself. And 3. the doctrine of Covenant holinesse from the Apostle fully established, which when Mr. T. hath well considered with that which was spoke before (having the whole current of the Scripture against him) he will have little list to make this one Scripture his asylum.

To which I answer, first there are many things in the words of Gomarus liable to exception, as 1. that he saith, The Jewes great priviledges mentioned v. 4. 5. were objected. But the thing that was objected was not those priviledges, but the word of God concerning Israel and Abrahams seed. 2. That he saith, That those priviledges are attributed by the Apostle to the unbelieving Jewes. Which is not true in the sense he means, that those present unbelieving Jewes for whom he mourned, v. 3. had the adoption, that is, were the people of God, or his children: but the Apostle saith onely they were Israelites, that is, of that Nation to which in the Ancestors those priviledges did belong, as I have shewed above, Sect. 27. 3. That he saith, Those great priviledges are attributed by the Apostle to the unbelieving Jewes by vertue of their outward call, because salvation is revealed and offered to them under condition of obedience, and that offer sealed with circumcision. wherein 1. he saith, the offer of salvation under condition of obedience, was sealed with circumcision But I had thought the thing Pedobaptists would have sealed with circumcision; had not been the offer of salvation upon condition of obedience, but the covenant of God, Gen. 17. which is another thing than the offer of salvation which is by men indeed according to the covenant: but it is not the covenant, for that is Gods act, and is presupposed to the other. Besides, there are some promises at least in the covenant absolute, not upon condition, as the promise of regeneration, in respect of which the covenant cannot be conditional, and therefore the offer and the covenant are not to be confounded, nor do I think Pedobaptists will like this, that that offer was sealed with circumcision. Besides, there was no offer made to the Jewes of salvation under condition of obedience. An offer is made by preaching, circumcision was on the eighth day: was there any that preached at circumcision salvation under the condition of obedience to the circumcised, and then circumcised the child to seal that offer? Nor did the Jewes use circumcision to seal the offer of salvation under condition of obedience to Christ, but to bind them to keep the Law of Moses in expectation of righteousness, as appears from Acts 15.1.5.9,10. Gal. 5.3. Rom. 2, 25, &c. 2. Nor do I see any truth in that which he saith, That those priviledges are attributed by the Apostle to the unbelieving Jewes by vertue of their outward call, because salvation is revealed and offered to them under condition of obedience, and that offer sealed with circumcision. For neither do Church-priviledges belong to persons barely by reason of an outward call, which is but an offer of salvation, no man is accounted a Church-member, having right to the seal, as they term it, because salvation is offered without some consent, nor did those priviledges in any sort accrue to the Jewes upon an outward call by which salvation was offered to them upon condition of obedience, the proceeding of Christ from them, their having Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, for their fathers, their having the Law given them, &c. were not upon such an outward call, but Gods respect to them, Deut 7.6.4. It is not true that from thence all Israelites are promiscuously called children of the Covenant, as Acts 3. 25. For it is true onely of them that were after the Prophets as well as the covenant, sith they are called children of the Prophets as well as of the covenant, and neither Title is given to them because of the outward call alleaged, but because they were the posterity of those to whom the Prophets were sent, and the covenant exhibited. 5. It is not true that the Apostle affirmes that the unbelieving Jewes are Abrahamites and Israelites; not onely by reason of their birth after the flesh, but also by reason of acceptance of the covenants and promises: For neither is it true they did accept of the covenants and promises, sith they rejected Christ [to whom the promises were made, Gal. 3.16. Nor doth the Apostle say, They accepted of them, nor at all give that as a reason of their being Abrahamites or Israelites. Yea, they were Israelites or Adamites antecedentally to some of those recited priviledges. 6. Nor doth the Apostle say, The Fathers and Adoption, and Covenants, and Promises, belong to all the Israelites: yea he denies the promises to Israel and Abrahams seed to belong to every one that is of Israel and Abrahams seed, v. 6, 7, 8. 7. Nor doth he make any such distinction of promiſe in reſpect of the efficacie of it, and collation belonging to ſome, and tender or offering of the covenant of grace: For neither doth the Apoſtle at all mention the offer of the covenant of grace with condition of duty to be performed, nor doth he make the promiſe to belong to any who have not the efficacie of it: yea, to ſay the promiſe belongs to any, and yet he not have the efficacie, is to make the word of God fall, which the Apoſtle diſclaims as a thing by no means to be imputed to God, for thereby he ſhould be charged of unfaithfulneſs in not keeping his promiſe. 8. Neither doth the Apoſtle make that anſwer which Gomarus ſets down, that though the priviledges v. 4, 5, belong to all the Iſraelites, yet all are not therefore true children becauſe the priviledges are attributed to them by reaſon of their outward call, not by reaſon of their inward. For the objection was not thus, To the Jewes belong thoſe priviledges, therefore they muſt be true children and heirs of ſalvation: But thus, Gods promiſe or covenant was with Abraham and his ſeed to be a God, therefore either God muſt be a God of the Jewes who are Abrahams ſeed, and they his people contrary to what your ſorrow intimates, v. 2 or elſe the word of God hath fallen, Now Gomarus ſets down another objection than that which the Apoſtle anſwers, and another than that which the Apoſtle makes, as may appear by what I have ſaid before. And for the three things Mr Blake gathers from Gomarus, the firſt is not true, that my objection is wholy ſolved: For there is not a word in Gomarus that anſwers this objection, Every child of Abraham was not a child of the promiſe Gen 17, 7, 8, as the Apoſtle determines, Rom. 9, 7, 8. None were his ſeed to whom the promiſe as Evangelical belongs, but the elect, therefore neither was the covenant Gen. 17, 7. as Evangelical, made to all the naturall children of Abraham, nor they circumciſed becauſe the covenant was made to them, nor is the covenant made with every beleiver by profeſſion, nor hath he right to Baptiſme by vertue of that title, nor is the covenant made to every true beleivers Infant or naturall child, there are none of them Abrahams ſeed but the elect, and therefore all the plea of the Pædobaptiſts from Gen. 17. 7. to prove the right of every beleivers naturall child to baptiſm, is manifeſtly falſe, going on that ſuppoſition which the Apoſtle plainly contradicts. The ſecond thing is frivolous: For there was no contradiction in appearance in the Apoſtles words, which need reconciliation, and therefore Gomarus and Mr Blake have taken upon them an unneceſſary task: But the ſeeming oppoſition to be reconciled, is between Gods performing his word to Abrahams ſeed to be a God to them, and his rejection of them from being his people, which the Apoſtle doth indeed reconcile rightly: but Mr Blake and Gomarus are both miſtaken in the thing as hath been demonſtrated. Yet this I find, that Gomarus with the other four Profeſſors of the united Belgick Provinces (of whom Gomarus is firſt) ſet down the ſame that I conclude in their Judgement at the Synod of Dort about the ſecond Article of the Remonſtrants, in which they ſay, That to the elect onely the promiſes are made, is profeſſedly proved by Paul Rom. 9, 7, 8. For onely the ſons of promiſe are counted for the ſeed to whom that word of the everlaſting poſſeſſion of the inheritance appertains. So that I have five more Suffrages together for me. And for the Doctrine of Covenant Holineſs, I confeſs the Apoſtle eſtabliſheth this Doctrine, That all the ſpirituall ſeed of Abraham, to wit, true beleivers, or elect perſons, are holy federally as being thoſe to whom God hath covenanted to be God: But Mr Blakes doctrine ctrine of Covenant holineſs, that Gods covenant is to be a God to every beleiver and his ſeed, which is no other than his naturall ſeed (for infants are no otherwayes his ſeed) is ſo far from being eſtabliſhed by the Apoſtle, that he determines the contrary, denying that all Abrahams children were children of the promiſe, and proving the elect onely to be his ſeed to whom the promiſe *Gen.*17. 7, as it was Evangelicall was made by the ſtate of Iſhmael and Iſaac, Eſau and Jacob. And for this I am aſſured that I have the whole currant of the Scripture for me, and feare not to make this Text my Aſylum, ſtill having conſidered what Mr Blake produceth both here and before: the frivolouſneſs of which I hope by Divine aſſiſtance to ſhew in that which follows.

There is ſomewhat which Mr. Blake adds in that Chapter in anſwer to the Allegation of Matth. 3. 9. in which as I ſhewed before, John Baptiſt rejects their claim to baptiſm, though Abrahams naturall children without repentance and faith, and aſſerts the onely ſeed of Abraham in covenant to be his ſpirituall. Hereto ſaith Mr. Blake, I anſwer, Firſt, When thoſe that were no better then theſe make the ſame plea, John 8. 33. We be Abrahams ſeed, and were never in bondage to any, Chriſt yeilds it, v. 37. I know that ye are Abrahams ſeed; he allowes all that upon this account they can claim. And for Phariſees he doth not barely yeld them to be Church members, but alſo Church teachers, Matth. 23. 2.

I reply, Chriſts yeilds they were Abrahams narurall ſeed, but denies them to be Abrahams Children, verſe 39. that is, to whom the promiſe Evangelicall belongs. The Phariſees were not yeilded to be Church-members in the Chriſtian Church, nor were admitted by Iohn Baptiſt or Chriſts Diſciples to baptiſme without repentance and faith, nor were they teachers in the Chriſtian Church, though among the Jewes they are ſaid to ſit in Moſes Chair.

" 2. Saith Mr. Blake, Iohn Baptiſt doth not deny what Chriſt yeilds, " but lets them know that this place wil not ſerve to avoyd wrath whilſt they " live in impenitencie; notwithſtanding that this plea holds, they may pe-
" riſh, and yet Gods Covenant with Abraham hold; being able of ſtones
" to raiſe up children unto Abraham, to make good what in covenant he " had ſaid. He no where ſayes that they are not intituled to priviledges of " ordinances and thereby intereſſed in the prerogatives of Gods viſible peo" ple. What Paul Rom. 9. 4, 5. ſo largely yelds them, Iohn Baptiſt doth " not deny them, which alſo now they had in viſible poſſeſſion.

Anſwer. Neither Iohn Baptiſt, nor Chriſt, nor Paul, yeilded them either to be in the covenant with Abraham (Mr. Blake's own words: notwithſtanding this plea holds &c. do plainly imply, that Gods covenant did not hold with them, and that by them God ſhould not make good what in covenant he had ſaid) or to be Gods viſible people, or to have right to the priviledge of baptiſm: but the contrary is declared by them. What Mr. Blake concludes the Chapter with, is either but a dictate, that priviledg of ordinance (meaning of Baptiſm) is a Birth-inheritance, without either proof or ſhew of proof from *Prov.*19. 14. Rom. 3. 1. ſo that I ſhall trouble the reader with no more of the fopperies of this chapter: onely I deſire the reader to obſerve, that whereas uſually Pædobaptiſts grant that by birth a grown man is not intituled to the initial Seal without his own profeſſion, Mr. Blake denies that Iohn saith, the viperous Pharisees and Sadducees, and unbelieving Jewes are not intuled to priviledges of ordinances and thereby interessed in the prerogatives of Gods visible people.

But Mr. Sidenham in his Exercit. ch 6. takes upon him to refell the plea from Matth. 3. 8, 9. gathering that the pretence of being Abrahams children, could not give them a right to baptisme; and if John denied Abrahams naturall seed on that account, much more would he the adopted children. But herein I conceive he doth not rightly set down his adversaries collection: For the adopted children of Abraham I conceive are no other than beleivers, and surely Mr Sidenhams adversaries do not imagine that John denied them baptism. I for my part remember not my allegation of this Text afore the writing of this Book. But I find Mr. William Kay in his Baptism without Bason thus averring, 1. That Matth. 3. 8, 9. is directly against Infant-baptism, in that none but such as have faith and repentance, must think to be baptized. 2. That the pretence or consequence from circumcision, and being Abrahams naturall children, to prove their title to Baptism. I add to the Covenant Evangelicall Gen. 17. 7. is also condemned, in that he allows them not to think within themselves, We have Abraham to our Father, which is not meant simply as if they might not in any sort think Abraham to be their Father; for Christ acknowledgeth it, John 8 37. and they might lawfully think that to be so which was so but in some respect, and the respects are intimated in the Text, 1, In respect of baptism to which they come, but as Paraus Comment. in Matth. 3. 7. John did not admit them as being unworthy. 2. In reference to the covenant, Gen. 17 7. which appears in that he adds, For I say unto you that God is able even of these stones to raise up children to Abraham, which can be understood no otherwise than of spirituall children, who are children of the promise, Rom. 9. 8. which the Pharisees are not, 3. In respect of that which they imagined, that they should be secured from wrath to come, v 7, in that they had Abraham to their father. Now what saith Mr. Sidenham to this?

1. That they were of age, and men degenerated from Abrahams faith, that he did not refuse them because Abraham was their father, or upon that account that Abrahams seed had not right to the promise, but as onely pretending Abraham to be their father, when they walkt contrary to the principles of Abrahams faith.

Answer. 'Tis true, he did not refuse them because Abraham was their Father, nor as onely pretending Abraham to be their Father: Nor doth he deny that it was true that they had Abraham to their father in respect of naturall generation, but because though they had Abraham to their father in respect of naturall generation, yet they did not believe as Abraham, nor had right to the promise, which is enough to shew that the children of beievers are to be refused and not admitted to Baptism till they become beievers themselves.

2. Saith Mr. Sidenham, This is the same as to grown men professing faith, baptized, and then not admitted to the Lords Supper because carnall and Apostate, it be said, You have cut off your own right by your contrary actings, which impeach not the truth of this position, That believers and their infants are in covenant, and ought to be judged so untill they manifest the contrary; or that if they belieued themselves afterwards the promise should not be to them and their children: And that the Text holds out no more than this, that when persons are grown up to years, and come to understanding, they must then stand on their right, and looke to make out personall qualifications for new ordinances.

Answer 1, It is not the same: For such a speech should imply a former right now cut off, but John Baptists speech disclaims any right they ever had to baptism. 2. John Baptists speech proves, believers children as such are not in the covenant, for Abrahams children were not, and that they ought not to be judged so until they manifest faith and repentance, for Iohn Baptist denied them to be Abrahams children in covenant without them, and that the promise is not to their children because they believe; for the promise was not to Abrahams children by naturall generation though he were father of believers, and it proves that none of Abrahams children have right to baptisme without faith and repentance, and consequently infants no more than grown men. But Mr. Sidenham yet thinkes to avoid the inference from this text, thus.

" 3. This was at the first institution of the ordinance, when baptism was " was newly administred: now new institutions require grown persons, and " actuall visible bilievers to be the first subjects of them: they could not bap- " tize their children first, for then the parents would be neglected: And the " bringing in of a new ordinance requires renewing of speciall acts in those " which partake of it. Now in the new Testament God renewes the cove- " nant of Abraham, adds a new initiating seal to it: It was before entail'd " in such a line which is cut off, it's now of the same nature, one'ly every " one must come in his own person first, as Abraham, and enter his own " name, and then the promise to him and his seed. Thus it was in the former " place, where when the Jewes came to be baptized, they were exhorted first " to repent and be baptized themselves, then the promise is to you and your " children.

Answer. All this scribling is at random, and without any proof, or answer to the objection: It is quite beside the objection, which was not barely from John Baptists not baptizing their children, but from the reason of Iohn Baptists refusing to admit themselves to baptism. So that Mr. Sidenhams answer is onely to the Consectary, infer'd from the Conclusion deduced, not to the premises, no nor the first conclusion it self. For the argument is this, If Abrahams natural children had not right to baptism without their own faith and repentance. But the Antecedent is true, Ergo the Consequent, and consequently not infants to be baptized. Again, if Abrahams children were not in the covenant without faith and repentance, neither are ours, for we have no more priviledge for our children then Abrahams had: But the Antecedent is true, Ergo the Consequent, and consequently a believers child is not in covenant because a believers child. Yet once more, If persons circumcised and descendended from Abraham, were not therefore admitted to baptism, then the same thing doth not intitle to baptism which did intitle to circumcision, nor the command of circumcision a command concerning baptism. But the Antecedent is true, Ergo the Consequent, and consequently infants are not to be baptized because they were to be circumcised. Now Mr Sidenhams answer is to the allegation of John Baptists not baptizing infants, not at all to any of these arguments drawn from his refusing the Pharisees, though coming to his baptism, and conceiving they might, having Abraham to their Father. Yet what Mr. Sidenham saith takes away the force of the argument if it had been thus made: Those we are not to baptize whom John did not baptize: but John did not baptize infants, Ergo. Yea his answer strengthens the argument: For if Johns baptism were at the first Institution of baptism, and infants were not baptized, then neither are they to be now. For the first institution is the rule of observing it, as the Lord Christ himself urgeth concerning marriage, Matth. 19. 4. and Paul concerning the Lords Supper, 1 Cor. 11, 23. If baptism were a new institution, and did require actuall visible believers as the first subject of it, then it is not all one with circumcision, which admitted infants at the first institution, then such onely are to be baptized except some further Institution can be shewed, the institution for infant-circumcision is not sufficient for infant-baptism, for that was in force as much at the first institution of baptism as after. It is false that they could not baptize their children first, that is, at the first institution, John Baptist and the Disciples of Christ might have baptized infants at first as well as Abraham circumcised them, yea ought to have done it, If Pædobaptists say true, that the command of circumcision was the Rule in force concerning baptism: nor need the parents be neglected, no not though they had baptized the children first in order of time; yea the right of the child being contemporary with the parents faith, if they say true, they should have been baptized as soon as ever the parent was a believer, or the child in covenant. Gods Covenant with Abraham was to him and his seed; but his covenant was never made to every believer and his seed. In the new Testament God renews the Covenant with Abraham in respect of spirituall blessings, but for the promises domestick or civill, he doth not renew it. He adds to the new Covenant the seal of Christs death, whose blood confirmed it, and the initiating seal of his Spirit, I know no other initiating seal added to it. It is not true that the new covenant, or covenent of grace was entail'd before to a certain line, though the covenant with Abraham in respect of the civill domistick promises were entail'd to Abrahams naturall posterity, and is now cut off: Nor is the covenant every way of the same nature with Abrahams covenant, nor upon a believers entering his name is the promise to him and his seed, nor is it Acts 2. 38, 39. said, that upon their repenting and being baptized themselves, that the promise is to them and their children, but the being of the promise to them and their children, is urged as a consideration fit to move them to repent and be baptized.

He next sets down 4 affirmations, 2. That no man must be baptized, or receive an ordinance by any fleshly prerogative. Answer. Then no infant is to be baptized by vertue of birth from a believer, for that is a fleshly prerogative, as the birth of Christ was but a fleshly prerogative to David, the virgin Mary, though there were an entail of a promise to them of this thing, so is the imagined birth-privilledge of believers infants, and yet there is no promise to retain it to a believers child.

2. That no person grown up to years of understanding, hath right to a sealing ordinance, but upon his own personall qualification.

Answer. Then Mr. Blake did erre in intituling unbelieving Jewes to privileges of ordinances, and thereby interessing them in the prerogatives of Gods

visible people. 2. There is no other right to an Infant to baptism, than what a grown person hath.

The third affirmation I grant, and the fourth too, if there were any such old priviledges of the promise to be conveyed to those which do really embrace the Gospel and their seed. And this grant that those Pharisees and Sadduces had demonstrated themselves to be onely the children of the flesh, and not of the promise, and that they were excluded, shews the covenant as Evangelical not to be made to a believers naturall seed, nor they thereby have right to baptism.

SECT. XXX.

Of the meaning of Mr. M. his second Conclusion, the ambiguitie of which is shewed.

I now return to Mr. M. whose second Conclusion was thus expressed, Ever since God gathered a distinct select number out of the world to be his Kingdome, Citie, household in opposition to the rest of the world, which is the kingdome, citie, household of Satan he would have the infants of all who are taken into covenant with him, to be accounted his, to belong to him, to his Church and Family, and not to the Devils. This conclusion being the main pillar upon which he settles Infant-baptism, the Antecedent of his Enthymem I examined with great diligence after the exact manner of Scholastick Writers in their Disputes. Which dealing of mine being indeed the onely way to clear truth, and approved by a learned member of the Assembly [Mr R.C. of P.C.O.] and known to be one of the most accurate disputants in his time in Oxford, yet Mr M. pag. 105. of his Defence, in a most injurious though frivolous way, traduceth as an indirect Artifice. To which some answer is given in my Apologie sect. 5. pag. 23 I shall now view the reply he makes: First, he compares my dealing with an unnam'd person in Cambridge, whose faculty was to make a clear text dark by his Interpretation: whereas my way was the true and onely way to clear his meanin by distinction, which is by Logicians called the light of speech, and in all consideration of things to be first, as Keckerm Log Syst. part. 2. lib. 1 c. 1 speaks: Nor hath Mr M. shewed in his Defence, that any of those senses of his words which I set down, might not be conceived to be his meaning; and therefore his complaint of me is ridiculous, and I shall have cause to censure him as a confused Dictator rather than an accurate Disputer, who doth so indistinctly set down his main conclusion, That an adversary cannot determinely resolve what is the meaning, and so neither easily examine his proofs, nor know what to oppose.

But he tells me he meant it of a visible priviledge, in facie Ecclesiæ visibilis, yet he doth not tell what that visible priviledge is. He tells me, That they have their share in Fœdus externum; but sets not down what share they have, nor what he means by Fœdus externum, in which they have share. And after he saith, God would have the children of them who by externall vocation and profession joyn to the Church of God even while they are children, to enjoy the same priviledge with them, which hath also ambiguity in it. For whereas there are many priviledges which the parents enjoy, as R. G. to be baptized, to be admitted to the Lords Supper, perhaps the Father to be an Elder, teaching or ruling, or a Deacon in the Church, and by (Children) may be meant persons of ten or twenty years old, and while they are children may be understood either during their infancy, or during their relation as children to their parents (which is as long as they are men) the words may be understood either that they have the same priviledge of admission to the Lords Supper or Church-government, while they are infants, or that they have even in infancy the same priviledge to be baptized that the parent had upon his profession. Which last if it were his meanng (as most likely it was) then his second conclusion being the same with his Antecedent in his Euthymem, his argument is an inapt tautology, Infants of professors have the same priviledge with the parents to be baptized: Ergo they are to be baptized, which is to prove the same by the same: yet this I must needs take to be his meaning, till he shew what other priviledge with their parents children of visible professors have in infancy.

Then he distinguisheth of the Covenant of grace taken largely and strictly, which distinction is shewed before Sect. 25, to have no footing in Scripture, and to be inaptly used by Mr M. He distinguisheth of Jewes some Abrahams seed according to the promise, some onely in the face of the visible Church, and of being in Christ by the mysticall union, and by visible and externall profession Which distinction I misslike not though they be not of use here, sith they were not the terms used in his Conclusion. He distinguisheth of Seals belonging to the Covenant, the Seal of the Spirit, and externall Seals But he neither shews where the externall seals (as he calls them) are tearmed Seals of the Covenant: nor was the term (Seal of the Covenant) at all used in his conclusion. Yea to shew how unskilfully he handles the matter in all these distinctions, he doth not distinguish any of those terms that were in question, and were the predicate in his proposition, to wit, to be accounted Gods, to belong to him, to his Church and family, and not to the Devils. And this piece of unskilfulness is in that which followeth.

When therefore I say they are visibly to be reckoned to belong to the Covenant with their parents, I mean, look what right a visible professor hath to be received and reputed to belong to the visible Church, quà visible professor, that right hath his child so to be esteemed.

But first, this speech here explained was not in his Conclusion in his Sermon, these words were not there, They are visibly to be reckoned to belong to the Covenant with their parents, but this, They are to be accounted Gods, to belong to him, to his Church and Family, and not to the Devils. 2. Were the sense here given the meaning of his Conclusion, it would not be true. For if the right belong to the visible professors, quà visible professors, the same right cannot belong to the child except he be a visible professor. For what agrees to any quà talis, as such, agrees universaliter & reciproce, and therefore by this expression, every visible professor is to be received and esteemed, and every one to be so received and esteemed, is a visible professor, which cannot be said with any truth or shew of truth of the infant child of a believer. Besides, if this Conclusion were good, an infant should have right to be admitted to the Lords Supper sith the parent hath right thereto as a visible professor.

But Mr. M. makes a large discourse to prove, That to those to whom the spiritual part of the Covenant belongs not, yet there are outward Church-privileges which belong to them as they are visible professors. And to prove this he cites, Gen. 6.1. Deut. 14.1. Gal. 3.26. Matth. 8,12. Acts 3.25. Rom. 9.4. Rom. 9.3.1. Iohn 8 17. Psal. 147.19,20. Deut 33.4. Iohn 4 22.

In answer to which I say, 1, That I grant this speech to be true. 2. I deny that the Texts are pertinent to the purpose of Mr. M. who intends this speech of Gentile visible professors, whereas the texts are most of them of the priviledges peculiar to the Jewish people, namely, Deut. 14. 1. Matth. 8. 12. Acts 3.25. Rom. 9. 4. Rom. 3. 1. Iohn 8. 17. Psal. 147 19, 20. Deut. 33. 4. Iohn 4. 22. Of the other two the former is of those before the Flood, who whether they were called Sons of God by descent, or profession, or some other way, it is uncertain. The other Gal. 3. 26. is to be understood of being the Sons of God really, and the term [All] is to be limited, as v. 27. by [ye that are believers] as he very words shew. For when he saith Ye are all the sons of God by faith in Christ Iesus, it is plain this is meant onely of those who had faith in Christ Iesus 3. In all this discourse he doth not shew a Text proving the privileges he mentions to belong to the infants of Gentile visible professors. Certainly some of them cannot be appleid; no, not to the Infants of the Jewish nation, as v. 9. that to them were committed the Oracles of God, that to them God shewed his word, &c. 4 Nor doth Mr M. distinctly tell us, which of these, or what other outward priviledge it is that belongs to the Infants of visible professors, which is the onely thing pertinent to the present business.

After this he asserts, That there are some rightly admitted by the Church to visible Membership who onely partake of the visible priviledges, and undertakes to prove it from Rom. 11. But I have in the first p rt of this Review shewed Mr Ms, and others mistakes about the ingrafting, Rom. 11.17. and proved that it is meant of giving faith according to election. Yet I grant it true which Mr M. asserts in those word, and do take notice that pag. 110. he acknowledgeth that I grant in my Examen pag. 149. a lawfulness of admitting men into a visible communion upon a visible profession, and that rightly even by a judgement of faith, though their inward holiness be unknown to us. And yet in the next pag. 111. he tells me, This mistake runs through your whole Book, that none are to be reputed to have a visible right to the Covenant of Grace, but only such as partake of the saving graces of it. But of this calumny more may be seen in my Apologie, Sect. 10. pag. 47.

After all these expressions of his meaning in his Conclusion he adds, pag. 111. This then was and is my meaning when I say, that infants of Believers are confederates with their parents, that they have the same visible right to be reputed Church-members, as their parents have by being visible professors, and are therefore to be admitted to all such externall priviledges as their infant-age is capable of; and that the visible Church is made up of such visible professors and their children; that the invisible takes in neither all of the one, nor the other, but some of both.

In answer whereto I say, 1. Neither Mr M. in his pretended explication keeps the terms of his second Conclusion in which the words were not as Mr. M. sets them down, That infants of believers are confederates with their parents. Nor (2) do any of the words explain that proposition. For would any that knowes the meaning of words, take this for a right paraphrase? Infants of believers are confederate with their parents, that is, they have the same visible right, ere. Is [confederate] all one with [to have visible right, to be reputed Church-members, to be admitted to externall Church-priviledges, to be of the visible Church?] Yea would not a Grammarian count such a paraphrase to be quite besides the words paraphrased, and the words paraphrased plainer than the paraphrase it self? Sure [Confederate] is [being in Covenant together] And yet in all this Paraphrase there is not so much as the term Covenant mentioned, much lesse any explication in what covenant, and in what manner, by what act believing parents are in covenant together with their infants. 3. By this Paraphrase we have 4 propositions of one, like so many Hydra's heads rising up in the place of one. The first is, That Infants of believers have the same visible right to be reputed Church-members as their parents have by being visible professors. But this is manifestly false: For if the visible right be by being visible professors, infants cannot have the same visible right but by being visible professors, which to assert of them is all one as to say, the snow is black. The second, [And are therefore to be admitted to all such externall Church-priviledges as their infant age is capable of] is ambiguous: for the capacity of their infant-age may be understood of Capacity from the institution of God; and so infants of Gentile-believers are to be admitted to no externall priviledges Sacramentall, for none are appointed for them: or naturall capacity in respect of receiving the Sacrament, and then if by the Sacrament be meant not onely the outward element, but also the use or signification by it, they have not a naturall capacity of receiving the Sacrament of Baptism: If onely of the elements they are capable also of the Lords Supper, as well as baptism. For they may eat and drink bread and wine as well as be washed by baptism. The third proposition is, That the visible Church is made up of such visible professers and their children. This is indeed the conclusion of the Assembly in their Confession of Faith, ch. 25. art. 2. and they cite to prove it, 1 Cor. 7. 14. Acts 2. 39. Ezek. 16. 20, 21. Rom. 11. 16. The impertinency of which is shewed before in the first part of this Review, and in that which goes before in this part of this Review: Of the impertinency of two other texts, to wit, Gen. 3. 15. Gen. 17. 7. Somewhat is said also before, and more is intended to be declared in the remainder of this Review. The fourth proposition, That the invisible neither takes in all of the one nor the other, but some of both, I grant to be true.

" After all these Mr M adds, I beseech you stand no longer doubtfull of " my meaning: I mean of them as I mean of other visible professors, they are " taken into covenant both wayes respectively, according as they are elect or " not elect; all of them are in covenant in respect of out-ward priviledges, " the elect over & above the outward priviledges, are in covenant with respect " to saving graces; and the same is to be said of visible members both parents " and infants under the N. T. In this point of being in covenant as was " to be said of visible members in the former administration, whether Jewes " and their children, or Proselytes and their children.

Answer. Here again Mr M. explains the term Of Infants being taken into Covenant, which was not in his second conclusion: However I note first, That in respect of saving grace, all the infants of believers are not taken into covenant, but onely the elect. 2. That when he asserts, That all the infants of visible professors are taken into covenant in respect of outward priviledges: 1, He never

shewes what those outward privileges are. 2. Nor any where else that I know, instanceth in any but the initiall seal, which is now no other than baptism, and this then being the antecedent in his Enthymeme, his argument is this, All infants of believers are taken into Covenant in respect of the outward priviledge of Baptism, Ergo, they are to be baptized; which is all one as to say, They are to be baptized, Ergo they are to be baptized, unlesse he mean they are taken into covenant de facto, and so his assertion should be, They are already baptized (wich is false) and if his inference be, Ergo they are to be baptized, his argument is, They are already baptized, Ergo they are to be baptised, which were to assert Anabaptism. 3. Nor doth Mr. M. tell where that covenant is that promiseth the outward Church-priviledge of an initiaall seal, nor by whose act they are taken into covenant, or who takes them into covenant. 4. If he understand it of the outward covenant, meaning thereby the outward administration, he useth, the word improperly by a Trope, and so speaks obscurely in his main conclusion on which his whole dispute rests, which is contrary to Logick Rules, and all right Disputation. Besides, he doth but trifle thus in his arguings, Infants of believers are taken into covenant, that is the outward covenant, that is the outward administration, that is (now) Baptism, Ergo they are to be baptized, which is to prove the same by the same. Lastly, if that speech of his be true, That in respect of outward priviledges the same is to be said of visible members both parents and infants under the New Testament, in this point of being in covenant, as was to be said of visible members in the former administration, whether Jewes and their children, or Proselytes and their children, it is apparent to me that he makes the covenant now and then not onely the same for substance, but also in respect of administrations contrary to his first conclusion. For what are those outward priviledges in respect of which they are the same but outward administrations? And if so, his speech is in my apprehension professed Judaism opposite to the Apostles determination in the Synod Acts 15. And yet Mr. M. tells me he endevours in all this to speak as clearly as he can possibly, which makes me hopeless of any thing but confusedness in his writing, when after I had distinctly opened the various senses of his terms, yet he wilfully declines making answer in which of those senses I should take his words, and when he takes on him to explain his meaning, he takes on him to explain other terms then were in his conclusion, and yet his explications are as dark as his terms which he would explain, and in the upshot his second conclusion can have no other sense consistent with his own Hypothesis but such as asserts Judaism, or being cõceived to be the antecedent of his Enthymeme, is the same with the conclusion of it, which is meerly to trifle, proving the same by the same: which course how unfit it is for him who is to dispute, I leave it to them to judge who know what belongs to Scolastick exercise.

Mr. M. next chargeth me with holding no more promises for believers children in reference to the covenant, then to the children of Turks. And yet page 119. he doth in these words maintain the same which I do. I joyn with you that it is an error to say, that all Infants of believers indefinitely are under the saving graces of the covenant, for although I find abundance of promises in the Scripture of Gods giving saving graces unto the posterity of his people, and that experience teacheth us, that God uses to continue the Church in their posterity, and that Gods election lies more among their seed then others, yet neither to Iew nor Gentile was the covenant so made at any time, that the spirituall part and grace of the covenant should be conferred upon them all, which is directly to contradict the usuall plea of Pedobaptists, that the covenant of grace is made to every believer and his seed, and particularly the words of the Directory, The promise is made to believers and their seed. seeing the covenant of grace is made to none but those on whom the spirituall part is conferred, nor can (without wresting the words from the plain meaning according to the Grammar sense) the speech of the Directory be understood of any other promise than saving grace.

Mr. M. and with him Mr. G. Vindic. Pædob, pag. 12. charge me, that in my judgement believers children are not actually belonging to the Covenant or Kingdom of God, but onely in possibility; that they belong to the Kingdome of the Devil actually, which calumnies are refuted in my Apologie, Sect. 14.

Next, he speaks thus to me: But say you, to make them actually members of the visible Church, is to overthrow the definitions of the visible Church, which Protestant Writers use to give, because they must be all Christians by profession. I reply, It overthrowes it not at all, for they all include the infants of such professors, as the visible Church among the Iewes did include their infants male (and female too, lest you say that circumcision made them members.)

Answer. Though Protestant Divines do hold many of them, that infants belong to the visile Church, yet they put them not in their definitions. There are many definitions cited by me in the first part of this Review Sect. 14. in which infants are not included, not in that definition of the Church (visible) which Baxter plain Scripture proofe, page 82. saith, "Certainly all Divines "are agreed, That it is a Society of persons separated from the world "to God, or called out of the world, &c, Not in that of Dr. Featly Dipper "dipped, pag. 4. A true particular visible Church is a particular Congrega- "tion of men professing the true faith, known by the two markes above men- "tioned, the sincere preaching of the Word, and the due administration of "the Sacraments. Norton Resp. ad Appollon. pag. 10. Immota Thesis. I- "dem illud in professione constituit Eccl. siam visibilem, quod interna sua natura "constituit Ecclesiam mysticam: i. e. Fides usq; adeo luculenta est hæc veritas ut "vel invito Bellarmino lib. de Eccles. milit. etiam à præcipuorum inter Pon- "tificos calamis excidisse videatur. The Assembly Answer to the reasons of the "seven dissenting brethren, pag. 48. Precog 1. The whole Church of Christ "is but one made up of the collection and aggregation of all who are called "by the preaching of the word to professe the faith of Christ. Mr. M. him- "self in his Sermon at the Spittle April 1652. pag. 15. Secondly, that part "of the Church which is upon earth in regard that the very life and being of "it, and of all the members of it, lye in internall graces, which cannot "be seen, in that respect the Church of Christ is called an invisible Church: "But now as the said Church and members doe make a profession of their "faith and obedience sensibly to the eyes and ears of others, in that respect it "is called a visible Church: But the visible is not one Church and the invi- "sible another, but meerly the same Church under severall denominations, "the one from their constituting graces, the other from the external profession "of them. The Church visible of the Jewes consisted of the whole nation, and was visible otherwise than the Christian, and therefore the definition of the Christian Church visible is different from that of the Jewish Church visible, and infants included in the definition of the one are not included in the definition of the other.

Mr. M. saith, I add also Baptisme now (as well as circumcision of old) is a reall though implicite profession of the Christian faith.

Answer. Baptisme of it self (I mean dipping in water) is no reall explicite or implicite profession of faith, but onely when it is done with consent of the baptized to that end: Otherwise the Indians driven into the water by the Spaniards against their wills, should be professors of the Christian faith. The like may be said of circumcision.

Mr M omitting my next reason, [That to make infants [visible Church-members, is to make a member of the visible Church, to whom the note of a member of the visible Church doth not agree] saith thus to me: But say you, Infants are onely passive, and do nothing whereby they may be denominated visible Christians. I answer, Even as much as the infants of the Iewes could do of old, who yet in their dayes were visible members.

I reply, It is so; yet that which made a visible Church member in the Jewish Church, is not enough to make a visible Church member in the Christian Church, which consists not of a whole nation known by circumcision, genealogies, outward policy, national meetings, family dwelling, &c. But of so many persons as are called out of the world by the preaching of the word to professe the faith of Christ. Mr. M. adds, Yea (say you) further it will follow, that there may be a visible Church which consists onely of infants of believers. I answer, no more now than in the time of the Iewish Church; it's possible, but very improble, that all the men and women should die and leave onely infants behind them, and it's far more probable that a Church in the Anabaptists way may consist onely of hypocrites.

Answer. It is somewhat more possible, or more probable, there should be onely infants left in a Church of a house, town, or village, than in the Church which consists of a numerous nation, as the Iewish Church did: nor is it unlikely; such things have happened in sweeping plagues. And if it be farre more probable that a Church in the Anabaptists way may consist onely of hypocrites, the same with more probability may be said of a Church gathered in the Pedobaptists way, in which there is of necessity so much ignorance in matters of Religion, all being admitted Church-members before they know or can know any thing of Christ. Fam sumus ergo pares. But if it be possible, as it is granted, that a Church visible of Christians may consist only of infants, it will follow that there may be a visible Church of Christians in which there is no one professor of the faith, contrary to the definition of a visible Church, That it is a company of professors of faith, and they shal be visible Church-members, who neither by themselves or any for them, do any thing which is apparent to the understanding by the meditation of sense, whereby Christianity is expressed. The case is not the same of the Iewish Church and the Christian; for the Christian Church is any company though but of two or three gathered together in Christs name, Matth. 18. 20. But the Iewish Church was the whole Congregation of Israel known otherwise, as hath been said, than the Christian.

Next, Mr M. against these words of mine [It is also true that we are not to account infants [of believers] (which he omits in repetition) to belong to God [before God] (which he likewise omits in repetition) in respect of election [from eternity] (omitted by him) or promise of grace [in Christ] (omitted also) of present estate of in-being in Christ, or future estate by any act of Science, or faith without a particular relation: for there is no generall declaration of God, that the infants of present believers indefinitely all or some either are elected to life, or are in the covenant of grace in Christ, either in respect of present in-being or future estate', excepts two things- 1. This makes nothing against that visible Church-membership he pleads for.

Answer. If that visible Church-membership he pleads for, arise from the covenant of grace in Christ (as hitherto hath been the plea) nor can they shew any other) then they are not visible Church-members who have not an estate in that covenant which is the cause of it: For take away the cause and the effect ceaseth, and then the visible Church-membership of existing infants of present believers is overthrown, sith the cause of it appears not. And if they are not to be accounted by act of faith to belong to God in respect of promise of grace in Christ, and the Minister is to dispense the seals by a judgment of faith, as Mr M. holds in his Sermon, pag. 47, in his Defence, pag. 111. then there being no act of faith concerning existing infants of present believers, they are not to be baptized.

" 2. Saith Mr. M. I retort the Argument upon your self, and dare boldly " affirm, that by this argument no visible Church, or all the visible profes- " sors of any Church, are to be accounted to belong to God either in respect " of election from eternity, or promise of grace, or present state of in-being " in Christ, &c. without a particular revelation, because there is no decla- " ration of God, that present visible professors are indefinitely all or some " either elected to life, or are in the covenant of grace in Christ either in re- " spect of present in-being or future estate: look by what distinction you will " answer this: For visible professors who are grown men, the same will serve " for infants of believers.

Answ. If Mr. M. had put in these words of mine, By any act or science of faith, I should have granted the same might be said of visible professors grown men, which I had said of infants. But this no whit hurts our Tenent or practice who do not baptize grown persons because by no act of faith, or science we know them to be in the covenant of grace in Christ, but because by an act of faith we know Christ hath appointed Disciples appearing such by their profession of faith, to be baptized by us, and by an act of science or experience by sense, we know them to be such whom we baptize. Concerning whom though we cannot account them elect and in the covenant by an act of science, or faith without a particular revelation, yet we may by an act of certain knowledge mixt of science and prudence from sense of their visible profession know them to be serious, sober, understanding and free professors of Christianity, and by an act of faith from Christs institution of baptizing professing disciples, know we ought to baptize them, and upon their profession out of charity, which believeth all things, hopeth all things, 1 Cor. 13. 7. judge them by an act of opinion elect, and in the covenant of grace in Christ. None of all which can be said of existing infants of present believrs, and therfore we ought to pass no judgement on them in this thing, but suspend our judgmenut, and act of baptizing concerning our selves with that comfortable hope which we have from indefinite promises.

Next

Next Mr M. takes upon him to excuse some speeches of Mr. Cottons, against which I excepted in my Examen, pag. 42. 43. one was, That the covenant of grace is given to every godly man in his seed. Concerning which Mr M. tels me, That he takes M. Cottons meaning to be, that look as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the other godly Jewes were to their seed in respect of the covenant, that is every godly man to his seed now, except onely in such things wherein these Patriarks were of Christ, in all other things wherein God promised to be the God of them and types their seed, godly parents may plead it as much for their seed now as, they could then, and what ever inconveniences or absurdity you can seem to fasten upon Mr. Cotton, will equally reach to them also. As for example, suppose an Israelite should plead this promise for his seed, you'l demand if he plead it to his seed universally, that's false, add so of the rest of your inferences, look what satisfying answer an Israelite would give you, the same would Mr. Cotton give, and as satisfyingly.

Answ. Mr Ms paraphrase of Mr. Cottons words, is such as no Rule of Grammar will warrant, the words being so expresse, It (the covenant of grace) was given to Christ, and in Christ to every godly man, Gen. 17. 7. And in every godly man to his seed: where the same covenant of grace, not an uncertain promise of any thing whatsoever, is said to be given to every godly mans seed, which is said to be given to Christ, and to every godly man, and in every godly man, using the same pronoune which was used concerning Christ: nor is it said, that it might be pleaded by every godly man, but it was given, which in plain construction is meant of the same grant which was made to Christ, and to a godly man. 2. Nor perhaps would Mr Cotton have owned this explication of his words. 3. If he had, they had not been true, for every godly Gentile now cannot plead the same for his seed now, which Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and some other Israelites could then, (because God made such peculiar promises to them, particularly to Abraham, Gen 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. in respect of their seed) as he hath made to any believing Gentile now. For much of that he promised then was out of respect to the future comming of Christ from them, which being accomplished, the reason of those promises, and of circumcision and other rites ceaseth. And yet the promises were not then so universally to them and their seed, but that God took himself not ingaged to be the God of many of them, nor are Gentile-believers seed now Abrahams seed till they believe as he did, and therfore in explication of Mr. M. there can be no good satisfaction so as to verifie Mr Cottons words.

" The other speech of Mr Cotton, that " God will have some of every " godly mans seed stand before him for ever, he confesseth is not to be justi- " fied, if it be meant in reference to election and everlasting life, that every " godly man shall have some of his seed infallibly saved, nor doth he think " Mr Cotton meant so: but for his part he thinks he only added to that pro- " mise made to Jonadabs children, Jerem. 35. that God would alwsys beare " a mercifull respect unto the posterity of his servants, according to that pro- " mise, Exo. 20. 5. I wil shew mercy to thousands of them that loveme and keep " my commandements. And that being his scope (as he thinks it was) I need " not to have kept such a stir about it.

Anf. The words in the plainest sense they bare, had that sense which Mr. M. counts unjustifiable, nor can they be construed in such an indefinite manner as Mr. M. conceives, the good promised being no lesse than standing before God for ever: which how ever it allude to Ionadabs promise, yet is not to be understood in the sense made to him, nor in any other sense now than that of eternall salvation, that I know, and by his declaration should belong to some of every godly mans seed determinately. So that what ever his scope were, his words were likely to be a stumbling-block to many who are too much taken with his dictates, and the place in which I examined them leading me to it, and both Mr. Cottons letter to me, acquainting me with his Dialogue of the grounds of Infant-baptism, of which the supposed Interest in the covenant is the chief, and the desire I have to make learned men more cautelous in venting such passages as may occasion error, knowing how Luthers unwary speeches were the seed of Antinomianism, and other learned mens writings have misled, most Divines adhering pertinaciously to leading men, provoking me thereto, I did and still do think it was necessary I should say what I said about those speeches.

Mr. M. tells me, pag. 116, You doe but lose time and waste paper in endeavouring to confute what was never asserted by me, viz. That the covenant of saving grace is made to believers and their naturall seede that the infants of believers are so within the covenant of grace as to be elected, and to have all the spirituall priviledges of the covenant belong to them. But this he suspects to fasten on him against my own light: from which I cleared my self, Apolog Sect. 9. He then interprets his own words of infants being within the covenant of grace as visible professors are quâ visible (which speech is shewed false before) they are to be accounted to belong to God as well as their parents, viz. by a visible profession they are made free according to Abrahams Copy, viz. in a visible priviledge for their posterity But he leaves out those passages which I alledged, saying, The covenant of Salvation is come to his house, that in the first cõclusion it's said, The covenant is the same, which he means of saving graces, and then saith, and children belong to IT, which can demonstrate no other than the same covenant, that is made a part of the Gospel preached to Abraham. To which I might add, that in his Sermon, page 40. he saith The text not onely shewing that they are within the covenant, but also that a right to baptism is the consequence of being within the covenant, which covenant is made by him the covenant of salvation, pag. 16 and in his Defence pag. 88. We are enquiring after the salvation of them to whom a promise of salvation is made, and hence infers the salvation of infants of believers dying in infancy, which were frivolous if he did not conceive, Gen. 17. 7. to promise salvation to believers infants: and page 98. counts it absurd that in a covenant of grace temporall blessings should be ratified by the seal of it. So that either M. M. heeded not his own speeches, or confounded things much different, or said and unsaid the same thing, if that were not his meaning which I conceived. And I must still professe that his setting down first distinctly the identity of the covenant consisting in saving graces, and then affirming Infants of believers to belong to it, and not understanding it of the same Covenant, hath the shew of juggling tending to deceive not to instruct the Reader. There are more speeches produced by me to shew, that if he did speak consonantly to other Writers and sayings, he meant as I interpreted his words, two of which he chuseth to vindicate, one the proposition of the Directory, (The promise is made to believers and their seed,) which how frivolously it is interpreted by Mr. G. and Mr. M. is shewd in my Apol. Sect. 9. in my Addition to my Apol. to Mr. Bailee, Sect. 3. To which I add, that in the Assembles Confession of Faith it is said, ch. 7. art 3 that in the covenant of grace God promiseth to give unto all those that are ordained unto life, his holy Spirit, ch. 14. art. 2. The principall acts of saving faith are, accepting, receiving, and resting upon Christ alone for justification; sanctification, and eternall life, by vertue of the covenant of Grace, ch. 17. art. 2. The perseverance of the Saints depends upon the nature of the covenant of grace. The other speech he would clear, is thus by me expressed, Baptism seals onely the promise of saving grace, remission of sins, &c. So in the Directory of Baptism, That it is the seal of the covenant of grace, of our ingrafting into Christ, and of our union with him, of remission of sins, regeneration, adoption, and life eternall: and after, And that the seed and posterity of the faithfull born within the Church have by their birth interest in the covenant, and right to the seal of it In the Rules of direction in the Ordinance Octob. 20. 1645. That the Sacraments are seals of the covenant of grace in the blood of Christ. And therefore if there be not a promise of saving grace to Infants, in vain are they baptized, the seal is put to a blank, as some use to speak. To this saith Mr. M. "I utterly deny your consequence, that unlesse there be absolute promises of saving grace to infants, the seal is set to a blank: For give me leave but to put the same case; First for the Infants of the Jewes, was the seal put to a blank with them, or had they all promises of saving graces? Secondly, let me put the same case in grown men, who make an external visible profession, and thereupon are admitted to baptism, can any man say, that all the saving graces of the covenant, or the spirituall part of it is promised to all visible professors? Is it not abundantly known, that in all ages even in the best times, even in the Apostles times multitudes were baptized, to whom God yet never gave saving graces, and therefore never promised them? for had he made a promise, he would have performed it.

Answer. To the words in my Examen (the seal is put to a blank) was added, as some speak, which I did to intimate that it was Pædobaptists phraseology, not mine, and that they counted this an absurdity, not that I did so. So that my consequence was, it being counted frequently in their writings an absurdity that the seal should be put to a blank, that is, that baptism should be administred to them that had not the promise, and it seals onely the promise of saving grace, if the promise of saving grace belong not to the infants baptized, then in vain are they baptized according to Pædobaptists Hypothesis, for the seal of the promise is put to them to whom it is confessed the promise is not made. Mr. M. himselfe in his Sermon, pag. 43. Infants are capable of receiving the holy Ghost, of union with Christ, of adoption, of forgivenesse of sins, of regeneration, of everlasting life, all which things are signified and sealed in the Sacrament of Baptisme. The covenant then sealed is the covenant of these saving graces, which if it belong not to infants baptized, but another outward covenant, in vain are they baptized, for they have not the covenant which baptisme seals. And that this is the sense of other Writers, appeares by the words of Aurifaber. Dialog. contra Anabapt. p. 195. Dico ergo: Omnibus fidelibus baptismum competere cum ipsorum semine tam mulieribus quam viris tam infantibus quam adultis: horum omnium enim se Deum fore declarat Deus, his remissionem peccatorum in Christi sanguine; his mentis renovationem per spiritum sanctum; his vitam aeternam promittit ac regnum coelorum: quare quod ipse obsignabitur hac Dei gratia.

Amef. Bellarm. enervat. tom. 3. l. 1. c. 4. ch. 9. Proteſt. Circumciſio à primâ ſuâ inſtitutione habuit promiſſionem illam annexam quâ nulla eſt major: Ero Deus tuus & ſemini tui poſt te. Gen. 17. quam Chriſtus ita interpretatur, Matth. 22. ut vitam æternam illa doceat contineri, & Paulus Epheſ. 2. 12. Oſtendit ſpem vitæ ex illâ pendere. I wil add the words of Calvin, Epiſt. 229. which are in ſtead of many others, both becauſe of the great eminency of the man, being accounted almoſt an Oracle by many of my Antagoniſts, and becauſe they are full to the preſent purpoſe: they are thus in Engliſh. " This principle is " ſtill to be held, That baptiſm is not conferred on infants that they may be " made ſons and heirs of God: but becauſe they are already with God reckoned in that place and degree; he grace of adoption is ſealed in their fleſh Otherwiſe the Anabaptiſts ſhould rightly keep them from baptiſm: For unleſſe " there ſhould agree to them the truth of the outward ſign, it would be a meer " profanation to call them to the participation of the ſign it ſelfe. Moreover, " if any deny baptiſm to them, our anſwer is ready, that they are already of " the flock of Chriſt, and of the family of God, becauſe the covenant of " ſalvation which God maketh with believers, is common alſo to the ſons, as " alſo the words ſound, I will be thy God and of thy ſeed after thee, Gen. 17. " 7. unleſſe this promſe went before, by which God adopteth the children of " believers not yet born, it is certain baptiſm is ill beſtowed on them.

Which words do plainly expreſs the covenant of ſalvation which is made by God with believers, is common to the ſons, that (ſo it is meant, Gen. 17. 7.) that with God they are afore baptiſm reckoned in the place and degree of ſons and heirs of God, who adopteth them not yet born, that unleſſe the truth of the outward ſign (that is according to Mr. M. adoption, regeneration, remiſſion of ſins, &c.) did agree to them, it were profanation to call infants of believers to the participation of the ſign, and Anabaptiſts ſhould rightly keep them from Baptiſm. Therefore Calvin thought the covenant of ſaving grace Gen. 17. 7. made by God to believers infants (which Mr. M. diſclaims) and otherwiſe infant-baptiſm is profanation, and it is rightly oppoſed. Yea, the ſhifts that are uſed to free their doctrine of infants intereſt in the covenant, and the ſealing of it from the difficulty of verifying it againſt the exceptions before alledged, do all ſeem to ſuppoſe the covenant in which infants have intereſt, is the covenant of ſaving grace. As when Mr. Baxters plain Scripture, &c. pag. 223. will have Baptiſme ſeal onely the conditionall promiſe Mr. Philips vind. pag. 37. expreſſeth the ſealing by offering. Mr. Davenport's Confeſſ. of Faith p. 39. maketh the benefits of the covenant not to be offered in the Sacraments, but to be exhibited onely to true believers. Mr. Cotton's grounds of Bapt. pag. 70, The covenant of grace doth not give them ſaving grace at all, but onely offereth it, and ſeals what it offereth. Dr. Homes, that the adminiſtration of the covenant of grace, belongs to believers children though not the efficacie. Dr. Twiſſe, that Infants are in the covenant of grace in the judgement of charity, and that baptiſm ſeals regeneration, &c. not conferred, but to be conferred. Dr. Th. Goodwin, that they are to be judged in the covenant of grace by parcels though not all in the lump, yet all make the promiſe, I will be the God of thy ſeed, applied to infants of believers' contain the promiſe of ſaving grace, and therefore I had great reaſon to conceive Mr. M. ſo meant his ſecond concluſion. As for the two caſes he puts, I neither grant all the Infants of the Jewes, nor viſible Chriſtian profeſſors professors adult had all saving graces who were circumcised or rightly baptized by the Apostles, nor do I say they were sealed with the seal of the covenant, it's the Pedobaptists expression not mine, except where I use the term to express their mind; nor do I count it an absurdity to say the seal was and is to be put to a blank, that is, that those should be baptized to whom the promise of saving grace is not made, when I speak after mine own mind. But in the place of my Examen pag. 46. in which I alleged that as an absurdity, that the seal should be put to a blank, it was not because I took it so to be, but because the Pædobaptists so count it, as Mr. Calvins words before recited shew.

SECT. XXXI.

Of the novelty and vanity of Mr. Marshals and others doctrine about Sacraments, being seals of the covenant, and the severall sealings of them.

BUt Mr. M. desires me a little to consider the nature of a Sacrament in what sense it is a seal, and he tells me, that in every Sacrament the truth of the Covenant in it self, and all the promises of it are sealed to be Yea and Amen: Jesus Christ became a Minister of the Circumcision to confirm the promises made unto the Fathers, and so to every one who is admitted to partake of baptism according to the rule which God hath given to his Church to administer the Sacrament, there is sealed the truth of all the promises of the Gospel, that they are all true in Christ, and that whoever partakes of Christ, shall partake of all these saving promises, this is sealed absolutely in Baptism.

Answer. Mr M. would have me to consider the nature of a Sacrament, in what sense it is a seal, and I am very willing so to do, as knowing that as Mr. M. imagines that I am mislead for want of considering thereof, so I am sure Mr. M. and other Pædobaptists are both mistaken, and do abuse others in this point, by reason of their inconsideratenes, or superficial consideration of this thing. The word Sacrament is a Latin word in prophane Authors signifying an oath made by a Souldier to his Generall; in Ecclesiastick Writers it is applied to all the mysteries of religion, and it is used most by the African Writers, Tertullian, Augustine &c. as the word Mystery is by the Greeks, Chrysostome Cyril, &c. Chamier Paustrat. Cath tom. 4. l. 4. c. 4. Sect. 14. Sæpe jam dictum latissimam fuisse olim Sacramenti significationem: serò tandem contractam in angustos istos terminos quos hodie vix migrat: quod diligenter animadvertendum. Certè Sacramenti definitionem nullam est invenire ante Augustinum, qui suo exemplo posteris præiit, deinde Augustini definitione, &c. Whence I inferre, that as the term Sacrament, so the definition of a Sacrament is but a novelty, and possibly the great contentions about the number of the Sacraments, some making seven, some three, most Protestants two onely, would be lessened, if moderate learned men had the handling of it. I confesse that sundry Texts of Scripture do plainly shew the two rites of Baptism and the Lords Supper to be the chief rites of the Church, as 1 Cor. 10, 1, 2, 3, 4. & 12, 13. Eph. 4, 5. Mark 16. 16. 1 Cor. 10. 16, 17. & 11. 23, &c. Yet that the Scripture either calls these Sacraments, or sets down one generall nature of them to a certain definition of them, cannot be demonstrated. They are certain rites appointed for certain uſes according to certain rules, but ſuch a nature or eſſence genericall as diſtinguiſheth them from all other rites, as laying on of hands, &c. denied to be Sacraments I find not in Scripture. Divines elder and later, have framed their definitions according to their own conceits. After Auguſtines time that definition was commonly received in Schools, That a Sacrament is a viſible ſign of an inviſible grace: yet the Ancients did rent ſuch ſpeeches as occaſioned the opinion commonly received in Schools afore the reformation by Luther and Zuinglius, that they did conferre gratiam ex opere operato, give grace by the bare outward uſe of them. Zuinglius denying them to be any more than ſigns, the Lutherans denying that they give grace by the bare uſe of them without the concurrence of faith, to which the Lutherans aſcribe all the efficacie; the Papiſts object the baptizing of infants who did not believe, uſed by them all: whereupon the oppoſers of infant-baptiſme, falſly termed Anabaptiſts, proved infant-baptiſm inconſiſtent with their own doctrine. I will ſet down Mr. Bedfords words in his Epiſtle to Mr. Baxter, printed in the Friendly Accommodation between them, pag. 352. The Anabaptiſts took occaſion from that poſition of Luther, No Faith no Baptiſm. Contemeous with him was Zuinglius and others, who to over-throw the reall preſence, inſiſted upon it that Sacraments were but ſigns for repreſentation; and when that doctrin was once broached, the Anabaptiſts could eaſily make their advantage of it. To anſwer whom the Lutherans maintain, that by baptiſm, or before they are made believers, as the words of the Lutherans in the Conference at Montbelgard, cited by me in my Examen part 3. ſect. 15. p. 143. ſhew, Oſiander epiſt. Hiſtor. Eccl. Cent. 16. l. 2. c. 68. pag. 449. Cum autem baptiſmus ſit lavacrum regenerationis (teſte Paulo) ſentimus nos Deum dare fidem infantibus vel ante baptiſmum ad preces parentum & Eccleſiæ, vel in ipſo actu baptiſmi & regenerationis, quæ ſine fide eſſe non poteſt. And to this opinion did many in England warp, when the face of the Church of England became ceremonious, and tended to ſymbolizing with the Lutheran Proteſtants, or with the more moderate not Jeſuited Papiſts in the time of the late Prelates potency, as may be ſeen by the paſſages cited by me in Examen part. 3. Sect. 15. pag. 143. and by the printed writings of Dr. Davenant, Dr. Ward, Mr. Thomas Bedford, which have been refuted by Mr. Gataker and Mr. Baxter, nor is it likely but ſtill the ſame mind is in Mr. Bedford, notwithſtanding the late Syneciſm, or rather clawing of one another which hath been between him and Mr. Baxter in their printed Friendly Accommodation. In which Mr. Cranfords Epiſtle hath theſe words to Mr. Bedford, Brother you know my mind, that I conceive the ground of Anabaptiſme to have been the erroneus Doctrine, de nudis ſignis, as is cleare in the Eccleſiaſticall Stories of old, and moſt arguings of Anabaptiſts. Which ſhewes they fear Infants Baptiſm will not be maintained without this doctrine of giving by Baptiſm to the elect at leaſt initiall ſeminall regenerating grace reall or relative. But Mr. Baxter thinks otherwiſe, that that doctrine will increaſe Anabaptiſm. Leaving them to their ſeverall fancies, I proceed.

Mr. Calvin, and with him many others, take another courſe to avoyd extreams, neither making Baptiſm a naked ſign, which is imputed to Zuinglius, nor aſcribing to it the giving of grace by the work wrought, with the Papiſts, nor holding ſuch initiall ſeminall regeneration or ſeed of Faith at Baptiſm, given at leaſt to the elect, as Lutherans and others (which perhaps will be found found as much as the Papists ascribe to it) but ascribing to Baptism and the Lords Supper, not onely signification, but also obsignation, and so making this the generall nature of Sacraments to be seals of the Covenant of grace, which they say is made to infants of believers, though they want not faith at or before Baptism; and from this promise they desire a title to the baptism of Infants of believers, as is shewed out of Calvin above. But 1. there is much ambiguity in their determinations about the covenant of grace what it is, and what it contains, and in what sense it belongs to infants of believers as such, and what believers infants it belongs to, and how baptism seals it. So that in their speeches there is much equivocation, and frequent saying and unsaying, as chiefly about the promise, Gen. 17. 7. I will be thy God and the God of thy seed after thee: which is one way expounded in their Commentaries on Rom. 9. 7, 8, and elsewhere, as meant of saving graces, and applied onely to the elect and true believers in their disputes against Arminius: But elsewhere expounded of every Gentile visible professor of faith in Christ, and his naturall seed, as if thereby the outward privileges of visible Church membership, and initiall seal were promised and applied to all infants of believers, whether elect or not in their disputes against Anabaptists, as may be perceived by this and other writings published by me. 2. The objection still holds, How can baptism seal to an infant? Every seal is a sign, though every sign be not a seal; but baptism is no sign to an infant, sith it signifies nothing to it at the time of baptism, because the infant hath not understanding to perceive the use of it; and when the infant comes to understanding there's no print of baptism to represent any thing to the person baptized some years before. If the person know any thing of it, it is by report, which is no visible sign, but audible to the baptized. 3. A seal is an assuring sign to the eye of what is promised to the eare: but baptism assures nothing to an infant without faith, therefore it seals nothing without faith. And thus in Mr Perkins his Exposition of the fifth principle of his Catechism. Heretofore we were taught, A Sacrament is a sign to represent, a seal to confirm, an instrument to convey Christ and all his benefits to them that do believe in him. Faith therefore was a necessary prerequisite in the person to whom the Sacrament was a seal of the Covenant of grace, which infants wanting it is no seal to them, and consequently no Sacrament, as Mr. Gataker argues in another case, Discep. de bapt. inf. vi & effic. pag. 192. if it be a seal of the essence of a Sacrament.

The main if not the onely Texts whence they fetch this Doctrine of making the nature of Sacraments to be Seals of the covenant of grace, are Rom. 4. 11. Gen. 17. 7, 10, 11. In the former it is said, Abraham received the sign of Circumcision a Seal of the righteousness of faith which he had yet being uncircumcised; and in the other Circumcision is termed the Covenant, and token of the Covenant. Whence [the seal of the Covenant of grace] is either made the definition of a Sacrament in generall, or at least the genus of it, and in the writings of Pædobaptists seals of the Covenant and Sacraments are used as terms of the same signification. In the Confession of faith of the Assembly, chap. 27. art. 1. Sacraments are holy signs and seals of the Covenant of grace, and they cite but two texts for it, Rom. 4. 11. Gen. 17. 7. 10. Vide Gataker. Discept. de vi & effic. inf. baptism. pag. 243. And in the Ordinance of Parliament Octob. 20. 1645. about Rules concerning [illegible]

ning persons to be admited to the Lords Supper, this is one principle which every one who is admitted to the Lords Supper, is required to give account of, that Sacraments are seals of the covenant of grace in the blood of Christ: so that in effect it is made as one of the first Credenda, or articles of faith necessary for all to know. On the contrary, I have seen a little book in English of one Mr. Jackson, in which are nineteen arguments to prove circumcision no seal of the covenant of grace. For my part, as I expres my self in my Examen, pag. 117. I should not stick to yeild that the rites of the New Testament called Sacraments, may be called seals of the covenant of grace, being rightly expounded in this sense, that they shew forth Christs death, and thereby to the true believer, the benefits of the covenant of grace are assured: yet considering how Writers make this the very Genus in the definition of them, and of their nature and essence, and thence inferre duties and draw arguments to determine cases of conscience about the use of Sacraments as they are called, and make it a necessary point to be acknowledged by all, I reject it, and except against this use of that term for these reasons.

First, Because this use of that term is not in or from the holy Scripture, That term Seal of the covenant of grace, is not expresly in the holy Scripture, I suppose will not be denied: if it be, let it be shewed where. Though the term Seal, and the true Token of the Covenant, be ascribed to circumcision, Rom. 4. 11 Gen. 17. 11. yet is not the term Seal of the Covenant of grace, applied to any Sacrament, no not to circumcision. Nor is the term Seal of the righteousness of Faith, Rom. 4. 11. of the same sense with the term Seal of the covenant of grace. For the Seale of the covenant of grace in the ordinary acception, is as much as an assuring sign or mean of the grace of the covenant to be bestowed, Rom. 4. 11. it is said, that Abraham received the sign of Circumcision, a Seal of the righteousness of Faith, which he had being yet uncircumcised; and therefore it was rather a seal of certification of what he had, than a prediction or promise what he should have. Mr. Baxter against Mr. Blake, pag. 104. saith truly, That circumcision was the Seal of the righteousness of Faith, even a justifying faith already in being, Rom. 4. 11, 12. The New England Elders in their Answer to the third and fourth of the nine positions, pag. 65. say truly thus, The scope of the Apostle in that place, Rom. 4 11, is not to define a Sacrament, nor to shew what is the adequate subject of the Sacrament, but to prove by the example of Abraham that a sinner is justified before God, not by works but by faith (thus) As Abraham the Father of the faithfull was justified before God, so must his seed be, that in all believers whether Iewes or Gentiles, circumcised or uncircumcised, for therefore Abraham received circumcision which belonged to the Iewes, to confirm the righteousness which he had before, even whilst he was uncircumcised, that he might be the Father of both. And to speak truth; to conceive that circumcision there is made the seal of the covenant of grace, that is, that God would be the God of Abraham and his seed for the future, sanctifying, justifying, saving him and them, is indeed to evacuate the force of the Apostles argument, which is, that righteousness is not appropriated to the Lawes by the Law, but common to the Gentiles with them by faith, because Abrahams circumcision sealed to him the righteousness of faith, which he had before he was circumcised. Nor do I see that which Genier. Paust. Cath. tom. 4 c. 2. c. 10. qu. 47. saith, doth prove that circumcision Rom. 4. 11, is meant of a Seal of a promiſe, becauſe Gen. 17. in the inſtitution it was termed a token of the covenant, for the Apoſtle, Rom. 4 11. mentions not what God appointed circumciſion to be to every circumciſed perſon, but what peculiar uſe Abrahams circumciſion had to him and all believers though uncircumciſed. And though it is true, that righteouſneſs of faith ſuppoſeth a word of God, or a promiſe or covenant of grace, yet Ro. 4. 11. the circumciſion there mentioned is ſaid to ſeal not a promiſe of ſomething future, but ſomething paſt and already had many years before, Gen. 15. 6.

But were it granted, that circumciſion there ſealed the promiſe to come, to wit, that part of the covenant, Gen. 17. 4. Thou ſhalt be a father of many Nations, and that v. 7. And I will eſtabliſh my covenant between me and thee, and thy ſeed after thee in their generations for an everlaſting covenant to bee a God unto thee and thy ſeed after thee, or that Gen. 15. 5. So ſhall thy ſeed be, mentioned Rom. 4. 17, 18. and ſo did aſſure a future eſtate to others as well as an eſtate already obtained to Abraham, yet this is aſcribed in that place to no ones circumciſion but Abrahams. For 1. The occaſion and ſcope of the paſſage ſhew it is meant of Abrahams circumciſion, it being alleged to prove, that Gentiles were to be juſtified by faith though uncircumciſed, becauſe Abraham was juſtified by faith afore circumciſion, and his circumciſion after did but ſeal (not convey) the righteouſneſs of faith we had before. 2. The expreſſion [He received] ſtanding in oppoſition to [yet being uncircumciſed] ſhewes that the receiving of the ſeal of circumciſion was in his own perſon. 3. The end of receiving it ſhewes it more plainly: for it was, That he might be the father of them that believe. But this was the end onely of Abrahams perſonall circumciſion: Neither Iſhmaels, nor Iſaacks, nor any others perſonall circumciſion were, that Abraham might be the father of them that believe, but onely Abrahams. 4. The time exactly noted of his believing, and imputation of righteouſneſs to him, diſtinguiſhed from the time of his receiving circumciſion ſhew plainly that it was the ſame perſon who had the one and the other, and the receiving it not as a command to execute it upon others, but as a ſign and ſeal to himſelf, and all believers whether circumciſed or uncircumciſed, evidently ſhew it is ſpoken Rom. 4. 11. of Abrahams perſonall circumciſion and of no others.

As for Gen. 17. 10, 11. it is true Circumciſion is termed the Covenant, and a token of the Covenant: But it is not ſaid of that promiſe onely, v. 7. nor of that promiſe in the Goſpel ſenſe, and therefore it cannot there be proved to be a token or ſeal of the Covenant of grace; but it followeth that Rom. 4. 11. Gen. 17, 7. 10. are impertinently alledged by the Aſſembly to prove this propoſition, Sacraments are holy ſigns and ſeals of the Covenant of grace. Yea the end of circumciſion was conceived generally by the Jewes, and ſo uſed to bind men to obſerve the Law of Moſes for righteouſneſs. And thus they taught who are mentioned Acts 15. 1. "Except ye be circumciſed after the manner of "Moſes yee cannot be ſaved. And v. 5. That it was needfull to circumciſe "them, and to command them to keep the Law of Moſes, Acts 21. 20, 21. "Thou ſeeſt brother how many thouſands of Jewes there are which believe, "and they are all zealous of the Law, and they are informed of thee, that "thou teacheſt all the Jewes which are among the Gentiles, to forſake Mo-"ſes, ſaying, That they ought not to circumciſe their children, neither walk after the customes, and the Apostle Gal. 5. 2, 3, saith, Behold I Paul say to you, That if any of you be circumcised Christ shall profit you nothing. For I testifie again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to keep the whole Law. So that circumcision in the ordinary use may seem to have been a seal of the Law rather than of the Gospel or covenant of grace; and if your baptism be of the same nature with circumcision, it is so far from being a rite of the Gospel, that it rather binds us to observe the Law. But fourthly, were it granted that it was in the use of it according to the institution a seal of the covenant of grace, how doth it follow from thence, that this is the nature of every Sacrament? Whence will it be evinced that that is the Genus of every Sacrament which is not so much as once attributed to them. The Passover is counted a Sacrament, and we find that it signified the Passover over the Israelites houses, and sparing their first born, and that it typified Christ, 1 Cor 5. 7. But this doth not prove that it was a seal of the covenant of grace any more than Jonahs being in the Whales belly, which was a type of Christs buriall, was a seal of the covenant of grace. I grant we are said to be baptized into Christs death, to be buried by baptism into death, Rom 6 3, 4. to be buried with him in Baptism, and therein to be raised up through the faith of the operation of God who raised him from the dead, Col. 2. 12, and that they who are baptized into Christ, have put on Christ, Gal. 3. 27. And the Cup is called the new Testament in his blood, 1 Cor. 12. 25. And therefore I should yeild to call both these ordinances signes memorative of Christs death in the first place, and by consequence seals of the New Testament and its benefits, specially the Cup in the Lords Supper. But this doth not prove this is the Genus of Sacraments, much less of all Sacraments. Nor doth it any whit justifie the determining of doubts of conscience, and so binding duties on mens consciences concerning meer positive rites without any institution of Christ, or Apostolicall example, meerly from this devised term, The Seal of the Covenant, and making it so necessary to be acknowledged, that it is pressed on persons to be admitted to the Lords Supper, as it were a necessary Article of Faith.

2. This term Seal of the Covenant, applied to these Sacraments, as being of their nature is, so farre as my reading and memory reach, but a novell term, not used till the 16. Century, & in that not used among the learned Romanists and Lutherans, at least not frequently. I grant the Ancients say, Men are sealed by baptism, and sometimes by laying on of hands or anointing after baptism. And this sealing is attributed to infant baptism by Nazianzen in his fortieth Oration. But this sealing was not a confirmation of the covenant of grace, but a confirmation of their faith received in Baptism. The ancient Greeks call it the seal of Faith, as the Latins call it the seal of Repentance, and the Sacrament of Faith, in respect of the profession of Faith, as Grotius Annot. on Mat. 28. 19. observes when he saith, And such were the Interrogations of faith either in the first times, or those next the first in respect of which by Basil and others, it is called the seal of faith, sealing of faith, or repentance, by Tertul. in his book of Repentance, and this sealing was not to assure a promise, but to strengthen and keep their faith or vertues. Whence as Mr. Gataker observes in his Strictures on Dr. Downams Epistle, pag. 44, 45. they accounted Baptism to some not as ἀφεσεως, a pardoning of sins, but a seal of vertues; and where Nazianzen calls it σφραγίδα, he expresseth it thus, σφραγὶς ἀνθ' ὑποσχέσεως καὶ τῆς προθυμίας

σφραγὶς, a seal as keeping and noting dominion. No where do I find any of them use the term Seal of the covenant of grace, applied either to Sacraments in generall, or to baptism in special.

3. But were the use of the term Seal of the covenant of grace in the Scripture, or the writings of the Ancients, yet it is against Logick to define a Sacrament by a Seal of the covenant as the genus, and so to make it of its essence. For it is a rule in Logick, Definitio non fit ex verbis metaphoricis, Scheibler Top. cap. 3. num. 126. Ita Aristot. Topic. lib. 2. c. 2. sect. 4. Keckerm. Syst. Logic. lib. 1. sect. cap. 8. Aristotle saith, πᾶν καὶ ἀμεταφορὰν λεγόμενον ἄδηλον, Every translated speech is doubtfull till reduced to proper, for it may have divers senses. Besides, metaphors, or borrowed speeches, may be many, as in this point we may call a Sacrament a Pledge, as in the Common Prayer Book Catechism, or a pawn, earnest, as well as a seal Chamier. Panst. Cath. tom. 4. l. 2. c. 9. sect. 10. You have also the similitude of a pledge somewhat divers from Seals, but nevertheless tending to the same, which we also doe most willingly use. And if we should define a Sacrament by a pledge, and from that metaphor infer, that an infant must contract afore it receive the Sacrament as a pledge, we might do it with as good reason as they who infer they are to be sealed because the seal followes the covenant. Well doth Chamier call a Seal a Similitude, which cannot shew what a Sacrament is, but what it is like; and therefore all metaphors are unfit to shew the quidditative conceit of a thing, nor are to be used in definitions except there be want of proper terms, of which there is not in this case. Now to define a Sacrament by a Seale of the covenant, is to define it by a metaphor, neither Baptism nor the Lords Supper are Seals in proper acceptation, they make no visible figure or impression on the body, therefore to use the term thus is an abuse, much more when positions and duties are urged on mens consciences from it. I will subjoyn Mr. Baxters words in his Apologie against Mr Blake, Sect. 64. pag. 11. Some sober men no way inclined to Anabaptism, do think that we ought not to call the Sacraments Seals; as being a thing not to be proved from the word; (for all Rom. 4.) But I am not of their mind; yet I think it is a Metaphor, and to make it the subject of tedious disputations, and to lay too great a stress upon a metaphoricall notion, is the way not to edifie, but to lose our selves.

Lastly, were all this yielded to Mr M. that the term Seal of the covenant were the language of the Scripture and Ancients, and fit enough to express the generall nature of Sacraments, yet I conceive it of little moment to the ends to which it is applied. For what is it to seal and not to confer grace, but onely to assure? And so the use of it is to represent to the mind as a morall instrument. But that is not done to infants, who are not naturally capable to understand the meaning, therefore this term [Seal of the covenant] beyond [sign of grace] doth not take away the objection of Papists, Lutherans, or Antipædobaptists That without giving grace or faith by baptism, it is in vain or without effect to baptize infants. And in like manner the deriving from it Pædobaptism is very frivolous. These things will appear by considering what Mr M. and others say of the covenant which they say is sealed, and of the sealing, there being little agreement among Pædobaptists, whether the inward or outward covenant, the absolute or conditionall be sealed, whether the sealing be absolute or conditionall, to the Major, Minor, or Conclusion. I will examine what I find said by Mr M. First, whose words are commended by Mr. Prynne in his Suspension suspended, pag. 19, [illegible] he saith, In every Sacrament the truth of the covenant it self, and all the promises of it are sealed to be Yea and Amen, and that is sealed absolutely in baptism to all that partake of it.

But 1. there's no Scripture that saith so: That Rom. 5 8. is impertinent: For Christ is not called the Minister of Circumcision because he did administer circumcision to others, that were not true, he circumcised none, but he was a circumcised Minister for the truth, he was of the circumcision, that is, a Jew not a Gentile. Nor is it said his circumcision was to confirm the promises of the Fathers that they were true; but that therefore he was a circumcised Minister for the truth of God, that the promises of the Fathers might be confirmed by his ministring the truth of God in his preaching, or in his accomplishment of what the promises foretold. 2. Nor do I know any act in baptism that hath any aptnesse of it self, or by institution to seal this position, that the covenant of grace and all the promises of it are Yea and Amen. 3. Yet were it so, this sealing is not to Infants, who have no intelligence thereof, and so no confirmation thereof by baptism. 4. Nor doth this sealing any more pertain to the children of believers, than unbelievers, it is but of the truth of the covenant in it self, not of any persons interest in it. 5. This is as well sealed by the baptism of others, yea by the baptism of any one deceased, most of all by Christs baptism, as by each persons own baptism. 6. This sealing may be not onely to them that are baptized, but to them that deny baptism, yea to Infidels, yea to Devils, who may and do believe the truth of the covenant it self, and all the promises of it to be Yea and Amen, and have it sealed as well to them by the baptism of a person as to the baptized, and better than to an infant. But perhaps Mr M. helps the matter in the second or third.

"But as to the second (saith he) which is interesse meum, or the receivers "interest in that spirituall part of the covenant, that is sealed to no receiver "absolutely, but conditionally; in this particular all Sacraments are but "Signa conditionalia, conditionall seals sealing the spirituall part of the co"venant to the receivers upon condition that they perform the spirituall part "of the covenant. Thus our Divines use to answer the Papists, thus Dr. A"mes answers to Bellarmine, when Bellarmine disputing against our do"ctrines, that Sacraments are Seals, alledges then they are falsly applied of"tentimes; he answers to Bellarmin, Sacraments are conditionall Seals, and "therefore not Seals to us but upon condition.

Answer. The spirituall condition is faith, so Ames Bell. enerv. tom. 3. l. 1. c. 1. q. 4. th. 11. Sacramenta non sunt testimonia completa & absoluta, nisi credentibus. Sacraments are not compleat and absolute testimonies but to the believing. Now if the Sacraments seal onely condi ionally, they seal onely this proposition, that he that believeth shall be justified, saved, &c. But this is all one with sealing the truth of the covenant in it self: nor doth this seal the baptized persons interest in the covenant any more than the unbaptized; no more to the infants of believers than of unbelievers, not at all to any till they believe, and so to no infants ordinarily, and if then the baptizing of them must be derived from this interest and sealing of the covenant, either none are to be baptized till they do believe, or all alike are to be baptized. Besides, if Sacraments be but conditionall signes, or testimonies incompleat, and condi-

tionall till persons believe, then they are but conditionall incompleat Sacraments till a person believes, fith to be a sign & seal is of the nature of a Sacrament; and if so, then infants have not a compleat Sacrament or absolute, but an incompleat and conditionall baptism, and consequently though the baptizer begin to baptize the infants, yet he cannot say he doth baptize them, but must wait till they be believers, and then he may say he baptizeth them, and gives them a compleat Sacrament, and is bound to baptize them when they come to years whom he did wash in infancy, or else he mocks them, which is the mind of Christ indeed, that he that believeth should be baptized, and no other, Mark 16.16. Besides, whether there be any conditionall sealing may be a question. Mr. Baxter Apologie against Mr Blake, Sect. 77. pag. 140. speaks of it as a strange thing useless and vain. But this I shall leave till I examine Mr. Baxters exceptions against me about the conditional covenant and sealing, onely I take notice of his words Sect. 79. pag. 141, A conditional seal is not a seal till the condition be performed, and infers, that if baptism be a conditionall seal, it is no seal, and consequently no sacrament to an infant untill he doth perform the condition.

" Mr M. adds, Now for the third thing the obligation which is put upon " the receiver, a bond or tie for him to perform, who is admitted to receive " the Sacrament, this third I say is also absolute, All circumcised and baptized persons did or do stand absolutely ingaged to perform the conditions " required on their part, and therefore all circumcised persons were by the " circumcision obliged to keep the Law, that is, the legall and typicall administration of the covenant which was then in force, and infants among the " rest, are bound to this though they had no understanding of the covenant, " or that administration of the Covenant when this seal was administred to " them.

Answer. It is true, God required that his covenant should be kept, which is expressed to be, That every man child among the Hebrewes should be circumcised, Gen, 17.9, 10. but this was the duty of the parents, not of the infants, who were to be circumcised not to circumcise. And it is true, That all circumcised persons were by the circumcision obliged to keep the Law. And if circumcision sealed this, its sealing of this was the sealing of a command not a promise of God, for they are not obliged to keep Gods promise (that is the work of God alone) but his precept, so that this sealing is not of the covenant of grace at all: yea by this sealing obliging to keep the whole Law, the covenant of works is sealed rather than the covenant of grace, as the Apostles speech shews, Gal. 5.2,3,4. And this sealing belongs to all infants and elder persons, for all are tied to perform the condition of the covenant, that is to repent and believe. And if hence be derived a title to baptism, either all are to be baptized because all are obliged to the condition of repentance and faith, or none are to be baptized but penitent & believing persons. To speak the plain truth, the right use of baptism is first to seal to God, testifying our repentance and faith by it, afore God seals to us by it any benefit of the covenant of grace. To conclude, Mr. M. hath not yet acquitted himself from putting a seal to a blank, which Mr Calvin counts a profanation of the Sacrament when he baptizeth an infant, who hath neither a promise of spiritual grace from God, nor doth perform the condition of the covenant, nor understand by baptism any thing of the covenant, nor professe any accptance of the covenent, nor is or can be known to have any part in the covenant of grace, nor is there indeed any thing but vanity in this discourse of Mr. M. or the Pædobaptists doctrine about Sacraments being seals of the covenant of grace, and the interest of believers infants therein.

SECT. XXXII.

The exceptions in my Examen, part 4. Sect. 5. against Mr Ms speeches about the covenant and conditionall sealing, are made good against Mr. M. and Mr. Blake.

But that we may the better discern the vanity of Pædobaptists conceits about the seal and covenant, I shall enquire a little more into this point, in which I find much jangling and uncertainty among them. To which I conceive my self the more ingaged, because some words of mine in my Examen, part 4. Sect. 5. gave some overture to Mr M. and after to Mr Bl. and Mr B. to except much against me about this point. Two things which I said in that passage, it seems, are not relished; one, that I said that God seals not to every one that is baptized, but onely to true believers; the other, that making Gods promise in the covenant of grace conditional in this sense, that persons after agnize the covenant, and that to speak of it so as if it were common to the elect and reprobates, and conditionall in this sense, as if God left it to mens liberty to whom he had sealed, to agnize or recognize that sealing, or to free themselves if they please, and so nullifie all; yet so, as to afford them a while the favour and priviledge of being in covenant with him, is symbolizing with Arminians. To this Mr M. replied but little, yet what he saith in his Defence, pag. 236, I shall briefly answer. First, saith he, Was not Circumcision Gods sign and seal, which by his own appointment was applied to all the Jewes and proselytes, and their children?

Ans. Circumcision was appointed by God to be applied to all the Jews, & proselytes and their children being males of eight dayes old, and was by his institution a sign of the covenant made with Abraham, Gen. 17. Abrahams own circumcision in his own person, was, a seal of the righteousnes of faith, which he had yet being uncircumcised, but that God did by Circumcision seal to every one the righteousnes of faith who was rightly circumcised, I find not, nor if I did, should I think it were any thing to prove that God seals the righteousnes of faith to every one that is baptized rightly, sith I doe not take circumcision and baptism to be all one, or to have the same use, or that baptism seals in the same manner as circumcision. Mr. M. adds, Did it ingage God absolutely to every one of them to write his law in their hearts, &c. Answer. No. And are not the Sacraments Signa conditionalia, conditionall signes and Seals?

Answer. I conceive baptism, according to Christs institution, to be a sign of the faith of the baptized, and so it is a sign absolute, and not conditionall, and because the object of that faith is Christ dead and risen again, whereby we are justified, and baptisme as fitted to mind the baptized of Christs death, burriall and resurrection, Rom. 6. 2, 3, 4. Col. 2. 12. it is in its nature, that is in its right use, apt to seal, that is to assure justification and salvation, vation, 1 Pet. 3. 21. and so may be termed in its nature a seal aptitudinall; but yet it seals actually to none but those who truly believe, which it doth absolutely in respect of justification, and coditionally in respect of glorification, which is not yet attained, nor to be attained but upon condition of perseverance: yet it doth not seal that as an uncertain thing because conditionall, for even the condition also is assured by vertue of the death of Christ confirming the covenant of grace, or the New Testament in his blood. But when I say these things are actually assured by baptism, I do not conceive they are actually sealed by God, not to the true believer without the inward testimony or seal of the spirit, without which God never sealed actually by his word or Sacraments these promises of the covenant of grace or the persons interest in them, although both the word of God, the oath of God, the death of Christ, the ordinances of Baptism and the Lords Supper, are in themselves, or in their nature aptitudinall seals, that is, apt signs to assure them. The like I say of the Lords Supper, both which are alike signes and seals, neither to an infant without extraordinary operation. Mr M. adds,

And did any orthodox Divines before your self, charge this to be Arminianism, to say, that the Gospel runs upon conditions? I confesse it is Arminianism to say any thing is conditionall to God, this I never asserted, but that the Gospel is both preached, and by the Sacraments sealed to us upon condition of faith, will passe for orthodox doctrine when you and I are dead and gone.

Answer. I never charged this to be Arminianism, That the Gospel runs upon conditions, that it is both preached and by the Sacraments sealed to us upon condition of faith, according to the explication given. What I count symbolizing with the Arminians, I have before declared, to wit, Gods conditionall sealing and covenant common to elect and reprobates, as Mr M. in his Sermon seemed to conceive. To what I said that I did not well understand that God required of the Jewes infants to seal in their infancy, I reply saith Mr M. But I hope you understand, that the infants were sealed in their infancy, and by this they received not only a priviledge to be accounted as belonging to Gods family, but it also obliged them to the severall duties of the covenant, as they grew up to be capable of performing them.

Answer. I understand the Iewes were circumcised in their infancy, but that God did seal to every circumcised infant, either the truth of the promises, or his interest in them, or that they did in infancy seal to God, I do not yet understand. For though they had the priviledge mentioned, yet not by vertue of Gods sealing to them, and though they were obliged to the duties mentioned, yet not by vertue of their sealing to God.

But Mr. Bl. and Mr, B. are more earnest in this point, and in opposition to what I said in my Examen, part 4. Sect. 5. in his Answer to my Letter Mr Bl. ch. 15. asserts, Sect. 1. "The seals of the Sacrament are conditionall, not "absolute, Sect. 2. The entrance into covenant and acceptation of the terms "of it, is common to the elect and reprobate, a heart stedfast in the cove"nant, and the mercies of the conenant, are proper onely to the elect and "regenerate, Sect. 3. To say that the seals of the Sacraments are conditionall, "and that the reprobate are within the verge of the covenant, as tendered in "the Gospel, and accepted, is not to symbolize with Arminians. To "which I replied in my Postscript, Sect. 21. concerning which Mr. Bl. in his plain

" plain Scripture proof, &c. pag. 224. of the first Edition, saith, But to these " Mr. Bl hath fully answered Mr. T. though in his Apology he passeth over " much, and is not able to discern his meaning. For my part I speak impartially according to my judgement, I think there is more true worth in those " two or three leaves of Mr. Blakes book, in opening the nature of the co " venant, than in all Mr Ts book that ever he wrote about baptism.

And pag. 222. he chargeth me with two errors in Apologie, and saith of them, I conceive these dangerous errors of Mr T. about the nature of the Covenant and Seals in generall, are the root of his error about baptism, or at least much strengthen it, and there he takes upon him to refute them. Since that time Mr. Bl hath renewed his exceptions, Vindic grat. ch. 7. to which as touching upon Mr B. about the thing sealed, and manner of sealing, Mr B. hath replied in his Apologie against Mr. Blakes Exceptions, Sect. 60 &c. pag 115. Because of Mr Bs censure I have received the passages in Mr Blakes answer to my Letter, ch. 15. & in my Postscript Sect. 21. and leaving Mr. B. (who is no competent judge of my Writings, by reason of his prejudice against me and the cause I maintain) and others to conceive of my books as they please, I am not ashamed to profess, 1. That I discern no such true worth in Mr Blakes mentioned passages which open the nature of the covenant, but rather sundry that darken it, the shewing of which now would be but a digression. 2. That there is not one of the three positions set down by Mr Blake, which doth contradict any thing I said in my Examen, part 4. Sect 5. For I said not the Sacraments are Seals absolute, not conditionall; but that God seals not upon condition persons agnize the covenant, as Mr M. said in his Sermon, pag. 49, nor did I deny, that the entrance into covenant and acceptation of it, is common to elect and reprobate, but that Gods covenant of grace, or as I said before, his promise in the covenant of grace, is common to the elect and reprobates, and this was it which I termed symbolizing with Arminians, not that which Mr. Blake sets down. 3. That I do not find that I have need to make any further reply to Mr. Blake therein, nor to the six arguments he brings, Vindic. Fœd. ch. 7. to prove Sacraments sealing conditionally. And for the flings Mr Blake hath at some speeches of mine, I shall briefly return answer. Those words of mine, I like not to call the Sacrament a conditionall Seal, for that which seals doth assure, and supposeth the condition. In my apprehension, that which is called conditionall sealing, is not sealing, but offering or propounding, or representing: but about this I will not contend, Mr. Bl. leaving out the later words, thus opposeth, Then our Lawyers have a long time deceived us, who have given us presidents (as they call them) for obligations under seal, so run in these words; The condition of this obligation is such, and after an indication of the condition, to conclude and close up all: then this present obligation to be void and of none effect, or else to stand in full force and vertue: Seals we see leave the condition to me doubtfull. Whereto I reply.

Neither I nor the Lawyers do deceive Mr Blake, but he deceives himself, the words of the president do intimate that the validity of the obligation is conditionall, and is left doubtfull, not that the seal is conditionall, which doth absolutely assure or testifie the obligation: or, as the Lawyers speak, the act and deed of him that seals, which is not future, but present, and so not conditionall. Mr Bauer apol. against Mr Blake Sect. 77. I never heard of nor knew knew a conditionall sealing in the world, though I have oft heard of the effects of obligation and collation of right to be conditionall, which are not onely separate from the terminus proximus of sealing, but also are directly the effects of the covenant, promise, testament, &c. onely, and but remotely of the seals, inasmuch as that seal is a full owning of the testament of conveyance: yet such a thing as a conditionall sealing may be imagined. In a word, a conditionall engagement, or obligation, is one thing, and frequent; a conditionall seal, or sealing, is another thing but unknown. There are other things at me as calumniating Mr. M. concerning his words, as symbolizing with the Arminians, which I shall acquit my self from in answering Mr B. and that Mr Bs questionist and my self are both of one pitch both for knowledge and ignorance, and stand equally affected to Mr. Bl. both in respect of his person and opinions; which intimate as if he were perswaded I were that questionist, whom I profess to be unknown to me, and were disaffected to Mr. Blakes person, though I knew not wherein I have shewed any disaffection to him, and for my knowledge or ignorance be it more or lesse, I hope it will appear in the conclusion, that God hath given me so much knowledge as to shew the vanity of Mr Blakes and Mr Bs pleas for Infant-baptism. And for his flirt or scoff at the wide standing open of the door in my night Sacraments, I think my actions justifiable in celebrating the Lords Supper at night as Christ did, with such notes as the Apostle made thereon in calling it the Lords Supper, 1 Cor. 11. 20. and relating it so distinctly, v. 23, 25. My admitting none but baptized persons after profession of faith, is justified by Mr Blakes own words, though somewhat misrepresenting my tenent, Vindic. Fœd. ch. 23. nor do I admit any one other profession to baptism than was done in the first times by men who had the Spirit of God to guide them; and if any be baptized in the night, it's justifiable by Pauls action, Acts 16. 33. His flings also which he hath, Vindic. Fœd. ch. 17. p. 126. shew the same Satyricall vein, when he saith, I establish a new conditionall covenant against the New Testament light, which I shall shew I establish in that sense, I do it according to plain New Testament light, and censures these words, the not teaching one another spoken of, Heb. 8. 11. is meant of that obscure teaching which was under the Law, Apol. pag. 154. said somewhat Magisterially after my manner, whereas neither could I well dilate then being straitned in time, and the exposition of that place there was but on the by, and enough was said by me in those words answerably to the occasion, and I conceived understanding men would gather the reason of my interpretation from those few words, which is, that the new covenant being there declared cõtradistinct to that in Horeb, as the writing the laws in the heart is mentioned to distinguish it from the writing in stone, so the teaching is mentioned to distinguish it from that obscure teaching which was under the Law, which I said not magisterially, nor any thing else, as Mr. Bl. miscensures me. This is enough, if not too much to answer these flirts of Mr. Bl.

Fourthly, I add, That I find sundry passages in Mr. Bl. which seem to me to speak to the same purpose with my words, as Answer to my Letter, pag. 99. that Baptism assures actually when men doe believe, pag. 102. out of Mr. Ball, They that be truly in covenant obtained the highest blessings, p. 106. The covenant of Jeremies is no more than that promise, Deut. 30. 6. The Lord thy God will circumcise thy heart, and the heart of thy seed, that thou mayst love the Lord, &c. And his words Vindic. Fœd. ch. 7. pag. 46. That the Sacraments [illegible] seal seal to believers and penitent ones, are answered by Mr B: Apol. against Mr Bl. sect. 10, thus, I perceive Mr. T. and you are more of a mind than I was aware off.

SECT. XXXIII.

That it is no error as Mr Baxter calls it, but a Truth, That the Covenant of grace is made onely to the elect.

BUt that I may acquit my self of Mr. Bs charge of errors in these points, I shall answer first what he saith about my fifth imagined error, because as Mr. B. saith, Appendix to his Aphorisms, pag. 66. It is in vain to enquire whether the Sacraments do seal absolutely or conditionally, till you first know well what it is that they seal. And here I think it needfull to set down Mr Bs words against Mr, Bl. in his Apol. p. 103. Sect. 52. Arg. 17. "That doctrine which signifieth an unsealed covenant for giving right to the covenant of grace, is unsound. But such is Mr. Blakes, therefore no Scripture can be brought to prove such an outward covenant of Gods: And it is against the common reason and custome of men, that a second covenant should not be drawn to convey right to the seal of the first covenant, seeing right to covenants seals go together, and if there must be another covenant to give right to that, then by the same reason there must be another to give right to that, and another to that, and so in infinitum. To the Antecedent it is apparent that Mr. Bl. distinguisheth ex parte Dei between the outward and inward covenant. It is probable that he thus distributes them from the blessings promised, whereof some are inward, and some outward: for though he explain not himself fully, yet I know no other sense that it will bear. It is evident that his outward covenant hath no seal. For it is a covenant de conferendis sigillis. If therefore it have a seal, it is either the same which is promised, or some other: other I never heard of. They no where tell us what is the seal of their outward covenant: The same it cannot be, for the same thing cannot be the materia fœderis, or the legacie it self, or the benefit given, and the seal too of that covenant whereby it is given. And pag. 65. Mr Bls common phrase is, that they are [in the outward covenant] and what that is, I cannot tell, and then proves, that God makes no such outward covenant. From whence I inferr, 1, That Mr. B. had not cause to blame me for not disdaining Mr Blakes meaning when he understands him no better, 2, Nor to magnifie his writing so much, in which he finds so many flawes. 3. Nor to rest so much upon an imagined ground of mens right to baptism by Gods promise or covenant grant which the chiefest assertors of Pædobaptism cannot well tell what it is. 4. That by Mr Bs judgment there is no such outward covenant of God, as Mr Bl. and other Pædobaptists infer infant-baptism from, and for the inward covenant, or covenant of saving grace, Mr M. Mr G. and others, disclaim it as made to all the infants of believers. Let us view what Mr B. saith about the covenant sealed by baptism and its sealing. In his Confut. of my six imagined errors plain Scripture proof, &c. pag. 223, he thus speaks, Error 5. Mr T. holdeth that the Covenant whereof Baptism is the seal, is the absolute covenant of grace made onely to the elect, Confutation. Many more mistakes he utters in the way to this about the Covenant. This he publickly pleaded for in his Dispute, and alledged Dr. Twisse as affirming the covenant of grace to be absolute. To which I then answered, 1. That to thrust in mens names and words, when in disputation we are enquiring what the Scripture saith, was unseasonable and diverting. 2. That Dr. Twisse doth constantly in all his writings affirm, That the promises of remission of sin and salvation are conditionall, though the promise of the grace [I will take the hard heart out of their bodies &c] is absolute. This I dare affirm as having read six of Dr Twisse his books again and again. And then he adds somewhat of Dr. Twisse, which I leave to others to answer as they shall see cause.

Answer. That Baptism is the seal of the covenant is not my expression, except when I speak in answer to Pædobaptists according to their mind, and in what seal and manner I allow it, I have said before. What I said of Dr Twisse in the disputation, was neither unseasonable nor diverting, nor untrue. The dispute was (so far as I can gather from my memory and the notes I have of the dispute) whether the words Deut. 29. 13. did prove that God did make the covenant there with all that are said to enter into covenant, which I denied, and Mr. B. endeavoured to prove from the words [and that he may be to thee a God] and from Deut. 30. 6. where he promiseth to circumcise the heart of them and of their seed; which I proved could not be, sith the covenant of grace is made only to the elect, and it is absolute in that promise, I will write my lawes in their hearts, which is the same with circumcising the heart, and so could not be meant of all that entred into covenant, Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12 (which Mr B. since acknowledgeth in his letter to Mr. Bedford when he saith thus, The Text seemes plainly to speak of their seed not in their infant estate but in their adult, Deut. 30.) but of the elect onely, and in respect of that promise the covenant of grace is absolute, which I thought seasonable, no way diverting from the business to confirm by Dr. Twisse his authority, whose tenent Mr B. confesseth was, That the promise of the first grace [I will take the hard heart out of their bodies, &c.] is absolute. And to shew that I did Dr. Twisse no wrong, I shall alledge some words of his which I find in his Animadversions on Corvinus his Defence of Arminius against Tilenus, p. 235 Negamus Deum pasisci fœdus gratiæ cum omnibus & singulis: dicimus hoc fieri solum cum electis: that is, We deny that God makes the covenant of peace with all and each, we say it to be made onely with the elect. pag. 346. At fœdus gratiæ absolutum est; quod & nube testimoniorum divinorum comprobatum damus: that is, But the covenant of grace is absolute, which also we prove by a cloud of testimonies. But Mr. B. having given Dr Twisse a lash, on the by falls thus on me.

But Mr. T. his answer to me was, That the promise of saving grace is not conditional, and that though some parts of the covenant be conditionall, yet it is all together that is called the covenant, the leading promise being not conditionall, therefore the covenant is not conditionall, and that it was a grosse palpable error of me to say, That the promise of saving benefits was made to infants that were not elect.

Answer. My answer is the same now that it was then, and having upon occasion of this charge, reviewed the notes of the dispute, which though very imperfect, I have yet by me, I find not but that in the greatest part of the dispute, I answered Mr. B. rightly, though he prave most shamefully and unbrotherlike misrepresented me to the world, and made a noyse in the world as if he had driven me to gross absurdities, which having acquitted my self from in my Praecursor, Sect. 17. he replies nothing to that Section, which I take to be a tacite confession of his unworthy abusing of me, And I do think it necessary to tell the world, that I find so little of brotherly love to me, or common ingenuity in his insolent carriages towards me at the Dispute, and his relations of me and of the Dispute in print, that I think I should have found better dealing from a Jesuite than from him. And though I take him to be a godly man, and an excellent Preacher and Writer in practicall points, yet I find him to be but a superficiall Disputer, and a slight interpreter of Scripture. But to the point.

Four things Mr. B. it seems mislikes in my answer, 1. That I said, That the promise of saving grace is not conditionall. To declare my self more fully, it is requisite I should shew what promise of saving grace I make not conditionall. There is the saving grace of redemption, regeneration, justification, remission of sins, adoption, glorification. The condition imagined as presupposed to the promise of saving grace, that is, to the fulfilling of it, is either the well using naturall abilities, as foregoing the promise of conversion and regeneration; or faith and repentance as foregoing justification, remission of sins, adoption, glorification. The promise of saving grace may be said to be conditionall in respect of these later saving graces, and the conditions mentioned, yet in respect of the promisers intention and act in the event, certain, necessary, and infallibly to be performed by the person to whom the promise is made, and in this sense I grant the promise of saving graces conditionall, that is, that God hath promised to none the saving graces of justification, remission of sins, adoption, but on condition of true repentance and faith; nor glorification but on condition of perseverance therein: yet that these conditions are not uncertain in the event, or left to the persons to whom the promise is made, to do by themselves, but by Gods intention and actings certainly to be accomplished; or it may be said to be conditionall, that is, so as that the condition of any of these graces is made the well using naturall abilities, or that the conditions of these later saving graces are uncertain in the event notwithstanding the promisers intention and acting, and thus I deny the promise of saving grace to be conditionall. More briefly, I deny the promise of regeneration and conversion, to presuppose some well using our naturall abilities, or that justification, remission of sins, adoption, glorification, are promised upon condition of our repentance, faith, obedience, perseverance, left by God to be performed by us, and not promised as certain in the event, which is the Arminian sense, yet deny that the promise of justification, remission of sins, is absolute, so as that God promiseth that an elect person shall be justified, or have remission of sins without a fore faith, which is charged on the Antinomians.

The second thing which Mr. B. mislikes in my Answer is, That though some parts of the Covenant be conditional, yet it is all together that is called the Covenant. But this speech if it be liable to exception, Mr. B. must except against the holy Ghost, who doth expresly call all together the covenant, Heb. 8. 10. saying, This is the Covenant which I will make, and having recited all together, he adds, v. 13. in that he saith a new covenant. And the like is Heb. 10. 16.

The third thing misliked in my answer is, And the leading promise being not conditionall, therefore the covenant is not conditional. But there is no just cause of excepting against this, sith it is usuall, and that according to a Logick Rule to determinate from the more famous part, or chief part, as a visible Church is called Holy, or of Saints, even in Scripture, 1 Cor. 1. 2. from the better part, a field of corn where is much tare. Do not Pædobaptists usually call the covenant Gen. 17. the covenant of grace, though there be other promises than of saving grace, and what promise is made of saving grace there, is made under the covert of words expressing other things. And to shew that there is reason for what I said, I urge, 1. That the promise of writing the Lawes of God in the heart, Heb. 8. 10. is not onely the leading promise, but also it is the comprehensive promise, including or inferring all the rest, for therefore God will be a God to them, be mercifull to their unrighteousnes, because he will write his Lawes in their heart; to those and those onely he promiseth the later to whom he promised the former. Yea, it seemeth to be the principall thing God aimed at in the new Covenant, to assure that he would not write his lawes in stone as he did before, but write them in their heart. 2. That where Zacharias mentions Gods holy Covenant, and the oath he sware unto Abraham, Luke 1. 72, 73. he puts it to be in this (which I take to be absolute) that he would give to us, that being delivered from the hand of our enemies, without fear we should serve him in holiness and righteousnes before him all the dayes of our life, v. 73, 74, 75.

The fourth thing misliked in my answer is, that I said, That it was a gross palpable error of Mr. B. to say that the promise of saving benefits was made to Infants that were not elect. If I understand Mr. M. he counted it a gross error, when he disclaimed this assertion, That the covenant of saving grace is made to believers and their naturall seed. Defence of his Sermon, pag. 116. and Mr. G. when in his Vindic. Pædob p. 12. he said of this conclusion, that infants are taken into covenant with their parents in respect of saving graces, You know the conclusion in that sense is so manifestly against Protestants principles and experience, that no Protestant can hold it. But Mr. B. it's like will not be convinced by mens sayings, let us try what we can do by Arguments

1. The promise of saving benefits is made onely to those to whom saving benefits are bestowed: But to elect infants onely they are bestowed. Ergo. The Major is manifest to them that acknowledge God to be true and faithfull, it being manifest falshood and unfaithfulnes to promise and not to perform. But it is certain by experience and Scripture that God saves none but the Elect. Therefore it is a gross and palpable error as charging God with lying to say, that his promise of saving benefits is made to infants not elect.

2. This is proved directly from the Apostles words, Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. which also strengthens the former argument, where he concludes that the promises of God must be understood as made to them only to whom they were performed, otherwise the word of God should fall, which he abhorres as blasphemy. But I argue further thus.

To them onely is the promise of saving benefits made, who are children of that promise, that God would be a God to them in respect of saving benefits, for to be the children of the promise there is manifestly meant of those to whom the promise of being God is meant, Gen. 17. 7: as is proved before, fore, Sect. 28, 29. which the Apostle in that chapter understands of saving benefits, which I think will not be denied; if it were, it might be proved from v. 8 &c. But the elect onely are children of the promise, this is proved before, Sect. 28, 29, and might be proved from v. 11. Ergo.

3. I further argue from the same place; If any other than the elect Infants had the promise of saving benefits made to them; then all the naturall seed of Abraham, for no infants besides the elect, had more promises of saving benefits than they: But they all had not the promise of saving benefits made to them, the Apostle determines, that the promise was to Ishmael not Esau, but onely to Isaac and Jacob, That the purpose of God according to election might stand, or be of him that calleth, whom he will for the seed, v. 11. Therefore the promise of saving benefits is made onely to elect infants.

To the Allegation of this text, I find something said by Mr. B. in his plain Scripture proof, &c. Part. 2. chap. 1. 1. There is no strong appearance of contradiction in this to what we have taught. For I willingly acknowledge, that they are not therefore the children of God, because they are the seed of Abraham, or others that were godly, but because they are the children of the promise.

But Mr. B. clean mistakes the Apostles speech, for he conceives that all the naturall seed of Abraham were yeelded to be the children of God, but not because children of the flesh, but because children of the promise, as if he granted the thing, but denied the reason, whereas the Apostle denies the thing it self, affirming, that all the seed of Abraham, were not the children of God, Rom. 9 7, 8, and contradisting the children of the promise to the children of the flesh, which were non-sense if they were the same, and no distinction or opposition between them. As if a man say, not all natives but free-men are Citizens, he supposeth all natives are not freemen, and denies all natives who are not free-men, to be Citizens

Mr B. adds, I pray you observe, 1. That which the Apostle here pleadeth, is, That salvation was not by the Covenant tied to all Abrahams seed. To which I reply, This grants what I would evince, that the promise of saving benefites was not to all Abrahams seed, but only to the elect of them. But yet saith Mr. B. he denieth not but Church-membership did for the time past belong to the generality of them. Now it is not the certain salvation, but the Church-membership of Infants that we are disputing for (in regard of the individuals

Answer. Though it be the Church-membership of infants which Pædobaptists dispute for, and not the certain salvation, yet they would inferre their Church-membership from that Covenant which was a Covenant of salvation as it was Evangelicall. And this Mr. B. must yeild, who in the words forecited against Mr. Bl. denies an outward covenant giving right to the Seals, and asserts, A right to Baptism as it is a benefit given directly by God from his promise, or covenant Apol. against Mr Bl p. 80. which is no other than of saving grace, by which if salvation be not tied to all Abrahams seed, then that covenant is not the ground of their Church-membership, and right to the initiall seal, and consequently not to our Infants, for take away the Cause, the effect is removed, & so this text is directly against infant-baptism and Church-membership. Mr. B. adds,

2. The Apostle disputeth not against the salvation or Church-membership of every one of Abrahams seed, (for many of his seed were after this saved) but a- gainst the salvation of the whole seed or posterity conjunctim. But now Anabaptists dispute against the Church-membership visible of any infants.

Answer. If the Church-membership visible of the whole seed or posterity conjunctim of Abraham be asserted (as it is by Mr. B.) from that covenant which the Apostle denies to belong to the whole seed or posterity conjunctim (which Mr. B. grants) he disputeth for the Anabaptists against the imagined visible Church-membership of all infants of true believers.

"3. Saith Mr. B. That which the Apostle mainly drives at, is, that men "are not therefore saved because they are Abrahams carnall seed (and conse- "quently not because they are the carnall seed of any other. And I say so too "with all my heart. But the Apostle doth not say, or mean, that Abrahams "seed should not be saved: for they shall again be called, and so all Israel "shall be saved, Rom. 11.) But onely that they are saved, not because they are "his seed, but because they are children of the promise: And so say we, That "the seed of the faithfull are Church-members, and Disciples and subjects of "Christ, not properly or directly because they are their seed (for so they are "no better than others: but because they are children of the promise; God "having been pleased to make the promise to the faithfull and their seed; and "having promised that the seed of the righteous shall be blessed; and that he "will be mercifull to them, and will take thm to be a people to him, and "he will be to them a God, and he hath pronounced them holy. Isaac was "Abrahams seed, and Jacob his, and yet not saved because his seed directly "and properly (yet remotely they were:) but because children of the pro- "mise.

Answer. Mr. B. in his passage shewes, he neither understood the Apostles scope nor answer, but according to his overly manner of handling Texts, perverts both. I grant that from the Apostles words it followeth, That men are not therefore saved because they are Abrahams seed, and consequently not because they are the carnall seed of any other. But it is manifest, and acknowledged by all Interpreters almost I meet with, that the Apostles scope is to answer an objection as the words v. 6. shew, That if the Jewes were rejected the word of God to Israel and Abrahams seed falls; which shews, that the objectors did not conceive God by covenant tied to save all Abrahams seed, and Israel, because he had by covenant tied himself to be a God to Abraham and his seed, Gen. 17.7. and therefore Paul did not rightly suggest, Rom. 9 1, 2, 3. as if they should be rejected. The clearing of the consistency of these two things, the truth of Gods promise, Gen. 17.7., and the Apostles intimation that the Jewes should be cast away, was his scope, not that which Mr. B. imagines the Apostle mainly drives at, to shew why the Jewes are saved, for the Apostle supposeth that they should not be saved, and to maintain it, answers the objection. Whence also it may be perceived, that Mr. B. quite perverts the Apostles answer: For he makes it to be this, 1. That the Apostle doth not say, or mean, Abrahams seed should not be saved, whereas it's the very occasion of the objection, that he determined that a great part, or the body or people of the Jewes, who were Abrahams seed, were then rejected, as his words shew, Rom. 9. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 31. & 10, 1, 2, 3, 21. & 11.7. 15. 17. 20, &c. and the Gentiles taken for Gods people in their stead: the searching of which was the great quarrell the Jewes had against Paul so that Mr B. makes Paul not to say that which he did teach, and plainly intimated in that very place. 2. That he onely sayes, that Abrahams carnall seed were saved, not because they are his seed, but because they are children of the promise, which is both contrary to the Apostles supposition, which is, that they are not saved, and that because they are not children of God, nor children of the promise, though children of the flesh, and impertinent to the removing of the objection concerning the rejection of the Jewes, how it could stand with Gods promise. For the answer as Mr. B. makes it, had no way justified Gods truth, but strengthened the objection, if it were supposed they were children of the promise, whom yet Paul counted for castawayes. Nor do the Apostles words say the children of the flesh are saved though not because they are Abrahams seed, but that they are not the children of God, who were onely children of the flesh, not children of the promise, nor counted for the seed to whom the promise Gen. 17. 7. was made at all, as it was Evangelicall. As for what Mr. B. alledgeth, That the Jewes shall be again called, and so all Israel be saved, Rom. 11. and therefore the Apostle doth not say, or mean, that Abrahams seed should not be saved, it is inconsequent, for the Apostle might and did suppose the present should not be saved though hereafter the Jewes shall; it followes on the contrary, he supposed the present Jewes should be rejected, because he speaks of the calling and salvation of the Jewes, was a thing future, yet not till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, in the mean time he saith, blindness happened to them in part. And for what he saith, that God hath been pleased to make the promise to the faithfull and their seed, he neither sheweth where that promise is, nor do I know where to find it, nor where he promiseth to take them to be a people to him, and that he will be to them a God, and for what he alledgeth, that the seed of the righteous shall be blessed, and that God will be mercifull to them, how little they make for the visible Church-membership of Gentile believers infants, will be shewed in answering Chap. 21, 22,, of the first part of his Book. And for Gods pronouncing them holy, he is fully answered, Antipædob. part 1. Sect. 235 &c. It followes in Mr. B.

"4 And observe further, That Paul here speaks not a word against the "priviledge of the infants whose parents deny not God, nor violate his Co- "venant, and fall not away. If any man should affirm, that all the infants of "the faithfull so dying, are certainly saved, there is not a syllable in this text "against him. For Paul onely pleads, that if men fall away and prove un- "believers, God will not save them beause Abraham (or any other remote "progenitor) was faithful. The covenant never intended this: But yet children "of those that fall not away, or be not broken off for unbelief, do lose none "of their privilledges, but may belong to the visible or invisible Church If a- "ny man should deny Christ, and yet think to be saved because they are En- "glishmen, or because their progenitors long since were faithfull; I should "use to them Pauls words here. But what is this to those who do not de- "ny Christ, and therefore are both Children of the flesh, and of the- "promise? Besides, those the Apostle here excludeth, were aged unbelievers, "so that this text hath not any colour either against baptism, or their Church "membership.

Answer. There is little truth in this passage, Paul speaks, Rom. 9, 6. 7, 8, &c. against the being in the Covenant, Gen. 17. 7. of Abrahams and Isaacs naturall seed, and therefore by consequence against the Church membership and Baptiſm of believers children by vertue of that covenant being made to them; and he excludes Eſau before he was born, and therefore other than aged believers, and if Eſau the ſon of Iſaac, no Apoſtate, were out of the covenant, and declared ſo afore he was born, then had he died in infancy, he had not bin ſaved, and ſo there is more than a Syllable in this Text againſt him, who ſhould affirm, That all the infants of the faithfull ſo dying, are certainly ſaved; for this Text affirms ſome infants of the moſt holy believers, are not in covenant, and if not in covenant, not certainly ſaved, but certainly reprobate. The children of thoſe who fall not away, have no ſuch priviledge, that they do certainly belong either to the inviſible or viſible Church. If there may be infant-children of believers who may be children of the fleſh and not children of the promiſe, then the promiſe of ſaving benefits is not made to any other than the elect, for ſure it is made to none other of other believers, if it be made onely to the elect ones of Abraham and Iſaac. I go on.

4. The promiſe which is in Chriſt Yea and Amen, Is made onely to the Elect, for it is not Yea and Amen to any other, ſith it is not ratified & accompliſhed to any other. But the promiſe of ſaving benefits is in Chriſt Yea and Amen, for ſo are as many promiſes as are in Chriſt, 2 Cor. 1. 20. and ſuch is the promiſe of ſaving benefits. Ergo.

5. Thoſe promiſes which were made to Chriſt, were made onely to the Elect, for whether Chriſt perſonall be meant the promiſes were made to him onely for thoſe whom he repreſents, and they are onely the elect, or Chriſts myſticall body that is his Church, they are the elect onely: But the promiſe of ſaving benefits made to Chriſt, Gal. 3. 16. Ergo.

6. The promiſe which is of the Covenant confirmed unto Chriſt, is onely to the elect: But ſuch is the promiſe of ſaving benefits, Gal 3. 17. Ergo.

7. The promiſe which is of eternall life, is made onely to the elect: But ſuch is the promiſe of ſaving benefits, Tit. 1. 2. Ergo.

8. To whom the promiſe of ſaving benefits is made, are Heirs of the Promiſe: But they are only to the elect, for to the Heirs of promiſe Gods counſell is ſhewed to be immutable for their ſalvation, Heb. 6. 17. But ſo it is onely to the elect. Ergo.

9. Thoſe promiſes by which we are made partakers of the Divine Nature, are made onely to the elect: But ſuch are the promiſes of ſaving benefits, 2 Pet. 1. 4. Ergo.

10. The promiſe of that Covenant is made onely to the elect, of which Chriſt is ſurety, for Chriſts ſuretiſhip engageth him to perform it, and he performs it onely to the elect, therefore he is ſurety of the covenant onely for the elect: But the promiſe of ſaving benefits is of that covenant of which Chriſt is ſurety, Heb. 7. 22. Ergo.

11. That covenant which is confirmed by Chriſts blood, is made onely with the elect, for it was ſhed for them onely. But ſuch is the new covenant, or covenant of grace, Matth 26 28. Ergo.

12. That covenant which is different from the firſt covenant in that it is not an occaſion of complaint in that it was broken, and they continued not in it, is made onely to the elect: But ſuch is the new covenant, or covenant of grace, Heb. 8. 7, 8, 9. Ergo.

13. The covenant which ingageth God to write his lawes in the hearts of those to whom it is made, is made onely to the elect, for God doth this onely to them: But such is the new covenant, or covenant of grace, Heb. 8. 10. & 10. 16. Ergo.

14. The covenant of which Christ is Mediator, is made onely to the elect, for he is mediator for them onely, sith he prayes for them onely, John 17. 9, And he is Mediator of the new covenant, that by means of death they which are called might receive the promise of eternall inheritance, Heb 9. 15. But such is the new covenant or covenant of grace, Heb. 12. 24 Ergo.

15. That covenant which is an everlasting Covenant, is made onely to the elect, for the covenant with reprobates is not everlasting. But such is the new covenant, or covenant of grace, Heb 13. 20. Ergo

16 That in which are given the sure mercies of David, is made onely to the elect, for no other have them given to them: But such is the new covenant, or covenant of grace, Isa. 55. 3. Ergo.

17. That covenant which engageth God to give to them to whom it is made, deliverance from all enemies, and to serve God in holiness and righteousness before him all the dayes of their life without fear, is made onely to the elect, for to them onely God performs it: But such is the covenant of grace, Luke 1. 73, 74, 75. Ergo

That covenant which assures perseverance to them to whom it was made, is made onely to the elect, for they onely persevere: But such is the new covenant of grace, Isa. 54 9, 10. Jer. 32. 40. Ergo.

19. If the covenant of grace be made with other than the elect, then it is the absolute or conditionall covenant, as Mr B, distinguisheth; but neither: Not the first, as Mr B. confesseth; nor the conditionall, for it is made onely with believers, and they are onely the elect. I grant it is propounded, as Dr Twisse speaks, Animad. in Corinth. Defens. pag. 235. or as others say, offered or tendered to others, but made with the elect. Ergo.

If the covenant of grace be made to any other than to the elect, then with all, which seeme to be Mr. *B*s opinion, when he saith, Plain Scripture Proof, &c. pag: 316, The new Covenant is conditionall and universall. But it is not made withall. That covenant which was made with all, had Adam for the common head, but the new covenant was not made with Adam as the common head, but with Christ who is given for a covenant of the people, Isai. 49. 8. and therefore the promise was, that the seed of the woman should break the Serpents head, Gen. 3. 15. which Mr B most corruptly interprets, Of the whole seed of the woman, infants as well as others. Plain Scripture proof, &c. part. 1. Chap. 24. pag. 69, but it is true primarily or onely of Christ, Heb. 2. 14. But Christ is not a common head to all, but onely to the elect, who are chosen in him, Eph. 1. 3, 4. Ergo

I omit the Arguments which Doctor Twisse urgeth in his Animadversions on Corinus, pag. 346. Answer to M. Hoard, pag. 283. 286. Doctor Kendall, Vindic. part 3. ch. 18. pag. 14, 15, and hasten to consider what Mr B. saith further against me.

And he saith in his Examen and Apology, that Mr M. speakes like Corinus and the Arminians, in his asserting the conditional sealing, and when he talks of the Covenant, Christs suretiship, &c. To which I answer, A [illegible] many hotspurs of this age do make any thing Arminianism, which is but

" but contradictory to Antinomianiſm. I will not ſay Mr T. is an Anti-" nomian, for I think he is not; but this opinion, that the covenant of grace,
" which baptiſm ſealeth, is onely to the elect, and is not conditionall, is one " of the two Maſter-pillars in the Antinomian Fabrick.

Anſwer. 1. If any Antinomian or Antipædobaptiſt hath been in this age a verier hot-ſpur than Mr B. let him be diſciplin'd at Bedlem: For my part I know none that hath in his Writings ſhewed ſo much heat (call it fury or zeal as you pleaſe) with ſo much confidence and peremptorineſs, and ſo many miſtakes againſt Antinomians, Antipædobaptiſts, and others, as he hath don. And ſurely they want not conſiderate men that fear leſt the eſteem he hath gotten by his practical Writings, and for infant-baptiſm, and the Miniſtery, may occaſion the ſwallowing down of ſome things he vents about univerſall redemption, univerſall covenant of grace, uncertainty of perſeverance, and ſalvation, the condition of juſtification, which without more than a grain of ſalt will turn to Arminianiſm and Popery, if received by ſuch underſtandings as are not of good concoction. Nor do I know any man who under ſo great a ſhew of ſeeking truth and peace in the Church, hath more hindred both. For that which he ſaith, That this opinion that the covenant of grace is onely to elect, and is not conditionall, is one of the pillars of Antinomianiſm. I have made ſome ſearch into my books, and made uſe of my memory, and though I find that in the Synod at New Town in New England, Auguſt 30, 1637, this is made the 81 Error of the Antinomians, That where faith is held forth by the Miniſtery as the condition of the covenant of grace on mans part, as alſo evidencing juſtification by ſanctification and the activity of faith, in that Church there is not ſufficien. bread. And in other books they are charged with error in holding the covenant of grace abſolute, ſo as if by it men were exempted from duty, they were juſtified without faith, &c. Yet I never to my remembrance heard this charged with Antinomianiſm, that the covenant of grace is made onely to the elect, but find it avouched by many of their beſt Antagoniſts; and the covenant of grace is held by able Anti-Arminians unconditionall in theſe two ſenſes, 1. That God requires no condition from us to be performed by our power, but what he requires of us to do, he promiſeth to works in thoſe to whom he makes promiſe in that covenant. 2 That in the covenant of grace God requires no condition which is of an uncertain event, but to thoſe to whom he makes his promiſes of righteouſneſs, forgiveneſs, eternall life, he alſo by covenant aſſures repentance, faith, and perſeverance: and therefore though ſome propoſals of the covenant of grace be conditionall, yet no promiſe as it ſtands in the entire covenant, is conditionall: and therefore the covenant and all the promiſes to be termed abſolute and conditionall.

" Mr. B. adds, 2. But to theſe Mr B. hath fully anſwered Mr. T. and fully " cleared Mr M. and himſelf from the charge of ſymbolizing with the Ar-
" minians, and hath fully proved, that the entrance into covenant, and ac-" ceptation of the term of it (though not ſincerely and unreſervedly) is com" mon to the elect and reprobate; and that the reprobate are within the verge " of the covenant, as tendered in the Goſpel, and accepted (as beforeſaid
" with a half heart.) And if any that are run into the other extream, ſhall
" think that this affirming that [Chriſt hath brought the reprobate alſo into
" the covenant of grace conditionall] be any part of the Arminian errors,

"as the whole Scripture is against them, so Mr. Blake hath said enough to "satisfie.

Answer. What Mr Blake asserted and took upon him to prove, did neither contradict what I said, nor vindicate Mr M. who said in his Sermon pag. 49. 1. That God did seal to Infants presently, and put their name into the Deed. 2. *That in the mean time untill they come to years of discretion, Jesus Christ who is the surety of the covenant, Heb.*7.22. and the surety of all the covenanters, is pleased to be their surety. 3. That God accepts of such a seal on their parts as they are able to give in their infant age, expecting a future ratification on their part, when they are come to riper years. 4. That in the mean time he affords them the favour and priviledge of being in covenant with him. 5. When they are grown men, they may refuse to stand to this covenant, and nullifie all.

These things I count symbolizing with Arminians, to say that infants who may and do when they come to age, refuse to stand to this covenant, are for a while afforded by God the favour and priviledge of being in covenant with him, even in that covenant of which Jesus Christ is their surety, and that for a while Jesus Christ is their surety which contains three points of Arminianism, 1. That God affords them the favour of being in covenant with him in that covenant of which Christ is surety, who are reprobates. 2. That Christ is their surety. 3. That they may be thus in covenant for a time onely. To say that any is afforded the favour of being in covenant with God who may be so for a time, and that Christ is surety for such covenanters, is to hold that God makes this new covenant with other than the elect, and that Christ is surety for them, is to hold that the new covenant is made with all, and that it doth not assure effectuall calling and perseverance, but is upon an uncertain condition left to mans will, which are condemned as the Arminians errors on the second and fifth Articles, by the Deputies of Gelderland Act Synod. Dordr. Judic. Theol. Prov. pag. 131. Of South-Holland pag. 141, 142. Of North-Holland, pag 154. Of Zealand, pag. 259. Of Utrecht, pag. 162, 163, 171. Of Friesland, pag. 181, &c. Profess. Delg pag. 309. Disput. Geld. pag. 324. Transisul. pag. 371, and others.

And whereas Mr. Bl. Vindic. Fœd. pag. 39. chargeth me with misciting Corvinus, I confesse I have not now his book by me, having lost it, yet such remaining notes as I have by me, do give me cause to think there is somewhat to that purpose in or neer the place, and however it is carried on, Corvinus by the Deputies at the Synod of Dort, in his Defence of Arminius against Tilenus, and by Dr. Twisse in his Animad. pag. 346. and generally charged on the Arminians by other Authors forecited: And though I count Mr M. far from Arminianism, yet I again say, the speeches he used do symbolize with their language. Mr. B. adds,

He that will deny Reprobates to be so far within the covenant of grace, must not onely deny Infant-baptism, but all Sacraments, till he be able infallibly to discern a man to be elect. And doubtless this interest in the covenant is a fruit of Christs death.

Answer. I deny not but Reprobates may be in the covenant of grace in this sense, they may have it tendred to them by the preachers of the Gospel, they may accept of that tender with half an heart, they may think themselves to be in it, they may by baptism engage themselves to believe unto the death, they may be received into the Church, deemed to be really in the covenant of grace? But it is not true that God ever made the new covenant to or with them, or that Christ as a mediator brought them into the covenant of grace, or was surety of them, or that God afforded them for a time the favour of being in covenant with him. And though I deny not that it is a fruit of Christs death, that whosoever believeth on him should live, yet that this is not obtained for the reprobate, but the elect; nor a part by it self, but together with this, that he should gather into one the Children of God that were scattered abroad, John 11, 52. And that they which are called might receive the promise of eternall inheritance, Heb. 9.15. Nor need I by these assertions of mine deny Baptism or the Lords Supper to any man till I be able to discern him infallibly to be a man elect. For I have warrant to baptize him if he shew by his profession that he is a Disciple of Christ, and though I knew infallibly he were one of those whom God would save, and had promised saving grace to him, and in that sense were in the covenant of grace, yet for the present not a Disciple, I shou'd justifiably refuse to baptize him. And this is a sufficient plea why we baptize not infants of believers, because they are not then Disciples, no not though it could be proved God had promised to be their God.

Mr. B. adds, Mr T. one day in the pulpit in pleading that the covenant belonged onely to the elect, was pleased to bring me in as witnessing thereto, in the Append. of my Aphor. pag. 43. because I there say, that the absolute promise, or prophesie there mentioned is made onely to the elect; when yet onely the very scope of the place is to prove that it is not the absolute promise that is most fitly called the Covenant of grace.

Answer. My alledging Mr Bs words was right and pertinent: For they acknowledged the promise Heb. 8. 10, to be absolute, and to the elect onely, which was enough for my purpose, and this the Author of that Epistle calls the new Covenant or Testament, and however, Mr Bs conceit is I have proved before the holy Ghost doth make it to be the Covenant of God, and therefore I deem it fitly be called the covenant of grace, chusing to speak as the Scripture speaks, rather than as Mr B. conceives fittest.

SECT. XXXIX.

Mr Baxter hath not proved that the absolute promise or covenant is not it that is sealed in Baptism and the Lords Supper.

HE adds, But that this absolute Promise, or Covenant (if you will call it so) is not it that is sealed in Baptism and the Lords Supper, I prove against Mr T. thus, clearly.

Answer. He should prove nothing against me though he should prove neither the absolute nor conditional promise to be sealed in baptism and the Lords Supper. For though it be true, that in some sense I grant Baptism and the Lords Supper to seal the covenant of grace, yet in the sense and to the purposes Pædobaptists use to say the covenant is sealed by them, I reject it, and can freely yeild that the use of Baptism and the Lords Supper is not to seal Gods Covenant either absolute or conditionall to us, except by remote consequence, quence, but to signifie our duty of engaging our selves to be Christs Disciples in Baptism, and to remember his death in the Lords Supper. But Mr B. disputes in this is against himself, in that his arguments will overthrow his own assertion of infant-baptism, and against his fellow Pædobaptists, who make baptisme to seal the promise of Regeneration from Titus 3. 5, and the promise of being a God to Abraham and his seed from Gen. 17. 7. which the Apostle Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. makes absolute, and appropriates to the elect. I need not cite again Pædobaptists speeches, making baptism the seal of Regeneration, and of the Covenant, Gen. 17. 7. having cited before, Sect. 30, sundry, to wit, the Assembly in the Directory, Mr M. &c. In the Assembly at Wistminster their confession of faith, chap. 28. Baptism is ordained by Jesus Christ to be to the baptized a sign and seal of the covenant of grace, of his ingrafting into Christ, of Regeneration, of remission of sins, and of his giving up unto God through Jesus Christ to walk in newness of life. Artic. 27 of the Church of England. Baptism is a sign of Regeneration or Newness, whereby as by an instrument they that receive baptism rightly are graffed into the Church, the promises of forgiveness of sin, and of our adoption to be the sons of God, by the holy Ghost, are visibly signed and sealed. In the French Confess. Artic. 35. By Baptism, as by a certain and stable seal, this promise is sealed, that Christ will be to us sanctification and justification. In Mr Gataker's two books against Dr Davenant, there are so many passages out of the chiefest Protestant Writers which do make baptism the sign and seal of Regeneration, and of the promise of it, that it would be tedious to transcribe them, I shall poynt at some pages wherein they may be found. Discept. de vi bapt. infant. pag. 23, 52, 110, 117, 118. Strict. in Daven. Ep. pag. 76, 77, 78. There is one passage which he cites often out of Vorstius. That the Gospel Preachers are wont to acknowledge one onely generall effect of Baptism, to wit, the sealing of a double saving grace promised in the Gospel concerning the remission together and the purging out of sins by the Blood and Spirit of Christ, which is by inward renovation, which is absolutely promised. Yea Mr Gataker, a man deservedly much valued by Mr B. Discept. de bapt. infant. saith, That Baptism doth equally if not primarily design internall renewing, regeneration, mortification, quickning, which in that sign are not onely most clearly shadowed, but also painted, both the thing it self doth lowdly speak, and the holy Scripture doth most expressly, Rom. 6. 3, 6. Col. 2. 11, 12. Tit 3. 5. Eph. 5. 25. And though all express not the sealing of regeneration alike by baptism, some placing it in the assuring to the conscience, some in the giving of title, some of regeneration already given, some of regeneration to be attained in time, yet all make it the seal of that covenant wherein God promiseth it, and do commonly distinguish it from the Lords Supper, which they make the seal of growth as they do baptism, of new-birth and entrance into the Church. So Mr M. in his Sermon, p. 43, 51. But let us hear what Mr B. opposeth,

" 1, That which is sealed to by the Sacrament, is a proper covenant, ha" ving a restipulation on our parts as well as a promise on Gods part. But " an absolute promise is not a proper covenant with such a mutuall engage" ment, but properly a meer promise or prophesie, therefore it is not this ab" solute promise which is sealed by the Sacraments. The Major M. T. can" not deny; for he pleaded it himself in the pulpit as a reason to prove that " Infants might not be baptized, because they could not engage themselves.

" And he brought that passage in my foresaid Appendix, pag. 68. as attesting it, where I say it is a mutuall engaging sign or seal: As it is given it is " Gods seal, as it is accepted it is ours. And indeed the very definition of a " proper Covenant (of which Grotius de jure belli, and other Lawyers, will " inform you) sheweth as much that it must be a mutuall engage- " ment. Now in that absolute promise [I will take the hard heart out of their " bodies &c.] There is no such matter, but onely God telleth what he " will do.

Answer. According to my own judgement I use not to term Sacraments Seals of the Covenant, nor did I urge Mr Bs words otherwise than as an Argument ad hominem, to prove from his own words, that infants have not baptism rightly according to his own grants. 1. because there is no restipulation on infants part, therefore there is no covenant properly so called between God and them, and so baptism of Infants is not a seal of a covenant, and consequently according to the supposition of Pædobaptists, no Sacrament. 2. Baptism is saith Mr B. a mutuall engaging sign or seal, as it is given it is Gods seal, as it is accepted it is our: But in infant-baptism there is no mutuall engagement or signing. Infants promise nothing, nor sign or accept of any thing, Ergo infant-baptism is not, according to Mr Bs own grants, right; nor are these objections avoided by saying the parents covenant for them: for neither is there any the least ground or hint in Scripture that for baptismall covenanting the parents covenant should go for the childs covenant, nor do in the practice of baptizing the parents restipulate though they declare their faith, and if they should promise or engage for the child, they should sin, and so should and have those that have promised as sureties the infant should believe and obey Christ, which they have not been able to perform, but have taken on them Christs prerogative, Heb. 7. 22. Nor is the baptism of the infant his sign or seal, he being meerly passive, as they say, and so doing no act, nor engaging thereby, and if the parent do engage for the child, the parent should be baptized for the child, if baptism be the baptized party his seal. But as I said, I do not call baptism a seal of the covenant, and therefore am not tied at all to answer this Argument, except to shew the fucility of it. For which end, 1. the mann r of speech is liable to exception in the use of the term Proper Covenant] which I imagine Mr. B. useth unskilfully for Properly so called. 2. There is no proof of the Major, from this, that Baptism or the Sacrament is a mutuall engaging sign or seal. For that proves rather that baptism or the Sacrament it self is a proper covenant, than that that which is sealed by the Sacraments is a proper Covenant. 3. Nor doth it follow, That if the very definition of a proper Covenant be, that it must be a mutuall engagement, that which is sealed by the Sacraments must be a proper covenant, but onely proves that upon supposition, that the covenant sealed to by the Sacraments, must be a proper covenant, that then it must be with restipulation or mutuall engaging. 4. though Lawyers do determine that a covenant properly so called, is a mutuall engagement, yet this proves not that which in Scripture is termed the covenant which they say baptism seals, is such. Yea, in all the places (that I know) where the covenant of grace is mentioned, there is no restipulation at all mentioned, neither Gen. 17. nor Jer. 31. nor Luke 1. nor Heb. 8 & 10. But where there is a restipulation, it is rather the covenant of the Law than of the Gospel. 5. That which

which is a meer propheſie or promiſe, is as properly בריח & διαθήκη, which we tranſlate Covenant, as a mutuall engagement, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter againſt Mr. Bl. 6. Nor do I know why that may not be a mutuall engagement if the abſolute promiſe were ſealed to by the Sacrament as well as if the conditionall. For if the engagement in the conditionall covenant on Gods part is, that if he believe he ſhall be juſtified; and on mans part, that he will believe: or rather in baptiſm he teſtifies, he doth believe. The abſolute promiſe is to give faith: Is not God and Man in like manner engaged by baptiſm in ſealing this as well as the other? 7. I know not how it can be truly ſaid, That Baptiſm as given is Gods ſeal, and as accepted Mans ſeal. For neither doth God give baptiſm to be accepted but his promiſe, nor is the baptized ſaid to accept baptiſm, but the promiſe. Nor is there any act of God which may be called his Seal, but he covenants, and I preſume they will not confound Covenant and Seal. 8. Nor doth the infant accept, or ſeal, or engage, and therefore in infant-baptiſm there is no covenant or ſeal. 9 By this deſcription of Mr. B. there ſhould be a mutuall ſeal, and ſo a ſeverall ſeal, and not baptiſm Gods and Mans ſeal too. For according to the manner of ſealing Covenants which are mutuall as the one party ſeals with his own ſeal, ſo the other party ſeals with his own diſtinct ſeal; and ſo if baptiſm be Gods ſeal, the party baptized ſhould have another ſeal to ſignifie his engagement.. 10. Mr. B. tells me, that Grotius de jure belli, and other Lawyers will inform me, that the very definition of a proper Covenant is, that it muſt be a mutuall engagement. But he doth not tell me where it is in Grotius, nor in what other Lawyer. I have lightly looked over the 11. Chapter of the ſecond book of Grot. de jure belli ac pacis, which is, de promiſſis, and ſome other following, and find not that which Mr. B. ſaith, but find ch. 11. ſect. 5. that he determines that of an infant is no promiſe, becauſe the uſe of reaſon is required to a promiſe, and therefore in infant-baptiſm there is no reſtipulation or mutuall engagement, and ſo no proper covenant by Mr B. his doctrine. But what ever other Lawyers ſay, I am miſtaken if it be not uſuall with the Lawyers in conveyances to uſe this expreſſion, That the ſeller is ſaid to covenant to and with ſuch a perſon, who makes no reſtipulation or reciprocall engagement. And both in the Scottiſh covenant, and in our ſolemn League and Covenant, I find covenanters engaged to do many things without any reſtipulatiun or reciprocall engagement, and therefore do not conceive it neceſſary to a covenant that it be a mutual engagement, or with reſtipulation. Mr. B. adds,

2. If it were the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace that is ſealed by the Sacraments, then the Sacraments muſt be given to no man, or to all men: but that is abſurd, therefore ſo is the former. The conſequent is manifeſt, becauſe that abſolute promiſe or propheſie is onely of the elect, and that before regeneration. Now no man hath any ſign given him, ſo much as probable by which to judge of the unregenerate elect, ſo that it muſt either be given to all or none.

Anſwer. The whole frame of this Argument depends on theſe miſtakes, 1. That a perſon hath title to baptiſm by vertue of its intereſt in Gods covenant of grace, and that accordingly a Miniſter is to baptize. 2. That a probable ſign of ſuch intereſt warrants the baptiſm of the party ſo intereſſed, which I have often proved to be falſe, and that nothing but manifeſt diſciplelhip certainly known to the baptizer, warrants him to do it. And indeed if we muſt baptize according to that rule of persons interest in the covenant, probably signified. Salvages in New England are to be baptized upon the probable signes they give of being wrought upon by a Sermon afore they know and profess the faith of Christ, and few or no infants are baptized, there being either no sign given to any man of their being in covenant, or at most but of very few of the baptized.

Mr. B. Ap. to his Aphor. p. 70. If a Minister adventure to administer it upon probability, then should he be guilty of prophaning the ordinance.

3. Saith Mr B. Or we may argue thus: It may be known to whom that covenant belongs which is sealed by the Sacraments. But it cannot be known (before the fulfilling, no not at all) to whom (particularly) that absolute promise doth belong; therefore that absolut promise is not it which is sealed by the Sacraments.

Answer. 1. By denying the Major. 2. By retorting the argument thus, It may be known to whom that covenant belongs which is sealed by the Sacraments: But it cannot be known ordinarily in this to whom (particularly) the conditionall promise of the covenant of grace belongs, for to none (particularly) besides the elect belongs the promise of justification, adoption and glorification. Therefore the conditionall promise is not it which is sealed by the Sacraments.

"4. Saith Mr. B. If (according to Mr T. his judgement) that absolute "promise must be fulfilled to a man before he be capable of receiving the Sa- "craments which are seals of the covenant of grace, then is it not that abso- "lute promise which is the covenant of grace sealed to by the Sacraments: "But according to Mr. T. his judgment) that absolute promise must be fulfil- "led to a man before he be capable of (a right) receiving the Sacraments, "which are seals of the covenant of grace: Therefore it is not that abso- "lute promise which is the covenant so sealed to. The Antecedent is evident, "if you consider, 1. That it is the promise of the first renewing grace which "we speak of (for all after grace is promised conditionally.) 2. That Mr. "T. pleadeth that believers onely are disciples, and such disciples onely must "be baptized. 3. That faith is a part of this first grace absolutely promised "(as is commonly judged) The giving of a new soft heart, is the giving the "seed of all graces, and so of faith. The consequence is evident, be- "cause the mercy promised in the covenant which is sealed, is not given be- "fore the first sealing: But the mercy promised in that absolute promise is "(according to Mr. T. and in part the truth) given before the first sealing "of the Covenant of grace; therefore, &c. God doth not promise a Seal "to a man that hath a new heart to give him a new heart, or to a man "that is a believer, that he will give him to be a believer; except we speak of "the continuance or increase of faith and newnesse which is not the thing "in question.

Answer. The consequence of this argument may be denied, and the reason of it also: For according to the Apostle, Abraham received the sign of Circumcision, a seal of the righteousnesse of faith, which he had yet being uncircumcised, Rom. 4. 11. If then the sealing of the covenant of grace by baptisme be the same with the sealing of the righteousnesse of faith by circumcision, Rom. 4. 11 (which is the common regent of many Pædobaptists, who from this Text draw a definition definition of Sacraments, though falsly, as is shewed before) then the mercy promised in the covenant which is sealed, is given before the first sealing. Yea, if the conditionall covenant be sealed to believers now, justification which is the mercy promised in the covenant which is sealed, is given before the first sealing. For a man is justified actually as soon as ever he believes, as I am confident Mr. B wil grant: But he is not regularly baptized till after his believing, therefore a believer is justified, and consequently the mercy promised in the first covenant which is sealed, is given before the first sealing, That all after grace is promised conditionally, is said by Mr. B. without proof, and how inconsistent it is with the promises of perseverance, how much it undermines the doctrine of the Saints perseverance, how it disables the godly to plead the promises, and takes away their comforts when they are sensible of their failings, if the after graces of recovery after falls, and perseverance to the end, be promised conditionally, I need not shew it here, sith Dr. Owen hath done it amply in his Treatise of Perseverace, ch. 4, 5, &c. Dr. Kendall in his sancti sanciti, ch. 3, and wou'd be here a digression.

5. Saith Mr. B. The benefits of the Covenant of grace which are sealed by the Sacraments, are (by those of age) to be received by faith. But the benefits of the absolute promise of the first grace are not to be received by faith: Therefore this is not the covenant of grace so sealed. The Major is evident: Mr. T. saith, one-ly believers must be baptized as disciples: The Minor is proved before. Faith is part of the thing promised, and we do not by faith receive our first faith, or our power to believe.

Answer. It is not I onely, but Mr. B. himself, who speaks in effect what I say, Plain Script. proof, &c. pag. 299, 300. of the first edition when he saith, "That in the institution, and every example of baptism through all the "Bible, the first grace is prerequisite as a condition, is undeniable, as might "be manifest by a recitall of the particular Texts could we stay so long upon "it. John required a profession of repentance in those he baptized. Jesus "first made them Disciples, and then by his Apostles baptized them, John 4. "1. The solemn institution of it as a standing ordinance to the Church, "which tells us fully the end is in Matth 21. 19, 20. Go and disciple me all "Nations, baptizing them; &c. Now for the aged, a disciple and a belie-"ver are all one, Mark 16 16. He that believeth and is baptized shall be sa-"ved, Acts 2. 38. Repent and be bap ized every one, &c. 41 They that "gladly received his word were baptized, Acts 8. 12, 13. The Samaritans "believed and were baptized both men and women. Simon himself believed "and was baptized, Acts 8. 36, 37. If thou believest with all thy heart thou "maist (be baptized) and he answered, I believe, &c. Paul believed upon "Ananias instruction, and then was baptized, Acts 10. 47, 48. & 16. 15, 33. "& 18. 8. & 19. 4, 5, &c. You see it is still required, that at all age do first "believe and then be baptized.

I acknowledge he puts in these words [for the aged at all age] by which he would prevent the inference from his own words against infants baptism, intimating that there are an institution and examples of infant baptism elsewhere: But this is but a vain caution, when his own proposition is, That in the institution & every example of baptism through all the Bible, the first grace (to wit Faith) is prerequisite as a condition, is undeniable. So that which he intimates

In his caution, is contradictory to himself, and a palpable falshood, there being no other institution or example of baptism to any but disciples or believers In all the Bible; and therefore baptism of Infants who are not believers or disciples, is a manifest abuse, deviation from Christ and his Apostles appointment and practice, by Mr. B. his own words, and consequently will-worship and profanation of that ordinance. As for the present objection, I deny the Major if it be universall, though Mr. B. saith, it is evident, but proves it not, nor doth any concession prove it. For though I grant persons are to be believers afore baptism, yet it doth not follow that the benefits of the covenant of grace, which is sealed by the Sacraments, are to be receiv d by faith, and not before. It is Mr. B. his mistake, that the promise to which there is sealing, must be fulfilled af er and not before. The contrary is manifest in Abrahams circumcision, in baptism as I shewed before, and in the Lords Supper. For even in that very instant of Mr. B. Plain Script proof, &c. pag. 296. to prove the Sacrament to be a mutuall engaging sign, when he saith, Receiving the Elements is our engaging sign, that we receive Jesus Christ to be our onely Saviour and Lord; as giving is Gods sign that he giveth us Christ: the sealing on the part of the receiver is to a thing fulfilled, that he receives Christ, and of the giver that he gives him.

" 6. Saith Mr. T. The covenant sealed by the Sacrament, is a plainly " propounded unquestionable Covenant: But this absolute promise of the " first grace is not such, but very dark and doubtfull (and the most learned " cannot agree whether there be any such thing:) Therefore, &c.

" I have spoken my judgment of this in the Appendix of my Aphorisms. " The places alledged to prove an absolute promise of the first grace, some " learned divines I say do nor prove it; because the new and soft heart there " mentioned, may be a further degree of newness and softness, or though " there be no condition there expressed, yet it is in other places, and therefore " to be so understood there: To which end they cite Deut. 30. where God " promiseth the very same blessing (to circumcise their hearts that they may " love the Lord, &c.) on a condition which is here thought to be promised " absolutely. Mr. T. could not understand Mr. Blake about this.

Answer. If Mr. B. mean by unquestionable Covenant, that which no learned man hath questioned, the Major is false, and must be revoked by Mr. B. if he will maintain the conditionall covenant to be sealed to by the Sacrament, for that hath been questioned by learned men; who have denied the covenant of grace to be conditionall, and they think this to be a very good proof, that the holy Scripture where it speakes of the new Covenant, mentions the promises without condition. If he mean unquestionable de jure, which ought not to have been questioned, and which though it seem dark and doubtfull to some, yet is plainly propounded by God, and is in it self perspicuous; the Minor is false. As for what Divines say, it little moves, when the Scripture opposeth the new spirit and soft heart to a strong heart, as being in them before, and to which the new spirit, new heart of flesh, succeed. Ezek. 11. 19. & 36. 26. not to a lesse new or fleshly heart. And if elsewhere conditions be put and not there, the promises in those places are not proved conditionall, though to me the conditions Deut. 30. 1, 2, seem not to be of the promise, v. 6. but of the promise v. 3. I do not value Mr. B. his judgement so much as to be drawn by it any farther than his reasons carry me, which, I take it, are the same in his Appendix, with these in his mock-titled book which I have answered. I give Mr Baxter our new Doctor Subtilis, leave to quip me with my dulness in being grown such an old superannuated dotard, as that I could not understand Mr Blake, time was when I thought I could have understood as profound a Doctor, but now I am content not to understand such deep notions, I should say non-sense as these, Disciple all, covenant all, &c: I hope I shall have by Divine assistance, so much understanding as to demonstrate the frivolousness of those dictates in Mr Blakes and Mr Baxters writings, whereby they have befooled the men of this age, and my Strange and wild doctrine, as Mr B. calls it, will supplant Mr B. his familiar and tame doctrine, without speaking like Mr Saltmarsh and the Antinomians, and my speech about Mr M, will be justified after the clearing my self from the fourth imagined error, to which I now hast.

SECT. XXXV.

Mr B. Plain Scripture, &c. pag 222. calls it my fourth error that I affirm in my Apolog. pag. 152, 153. That every right administration of Baptism is not Gods sealing. Actually it sealeth not but when it is administred to a believer. It may be called a right act of the Administrator according to Gods appointment, but not Gods sealing, &c. And for confutation saith thus: It must be understood that our question is not about the internall seal of the spirit, but onely the externall seal of the Sacrament, which are two distinct things. The nature of this seal, and whether it seal conditionally or absolutely, I have fully opened in the Appendix of my Aphorisms of Justification, whither I must desire the Reader to turn and read it, to save me the labor of doing it here.

Answer. That these imagined errors of mine about the nature of the Coyenant and seals are not the root of my pretended error about baptism, is abundantly shewed before; and it hath been often affirmed by me, that the reason of my opposing infant-baptism is, because it agrees not with the institution and examples of baptism (which Mr B: his words cited in the next Section before verse) in the holy Scripture, and the arguments from the Covenant and seal, and the pretended law of visible Church-membership, no way extant unrepealed, of which the Apostles practice shewes they were ignorant, though many godly and learned men have embraced them, are meerly an humane invention. That there is no error of mine in what I hold about the covenant, much lesse dangerous error, is already shew; I shall now shew the subtilty of Mr B: his arguings against my speech about Gods sealing.

According to his direction I have read over his sayings in his Appendix in answer to the ninth Question, and what Mr Blake excepted against him, and his reply to Mr Blake in his Apologie, Sect 60, &c. And the issue of my thoughts in this, 1. That there is nothing but jangling and uncertainty in their debates about the imaginary sealing by the Sacrament, it being not agreed what is sealed, the outward or inward covenant; what is the Syllogism, whose whose parts are to be sealed, or what part thereof is to be sealed, the Major, Minor, or Conclusion, nor how it is sealed conditionally or absolutely, actually or aptitudinally, nor to whom the sealing is, whether to every communicant or onely to penitent believers. And in my reading of other Authors I find much uncertainty in their determinations about this pretended sealing, and the thing sealed, which I have briefly touched before. Mr. Humphrey in his Rejoynder to Dr. Drake, part. 1. Sect. 4, 6. part. 2. Sect. 4, 5. tells us, That in the nature of it the Sacrament is Gods seal onely, not metaphorically or tropically, but formally, not a seal of our faith but of Gods assuring the tenor of it, not onely mans particular interest absolutly, but conditionally to all, and that as well the threatning of condemnation in case of unbelief, as the promise of righteousness in ease of Faith, the receiver of the Sacrament seals not by way of assuring, or conveying, but engagement to the condition on his part yet not in esse, but in fieri agreeing to the terms of Christ proposed, expecting salvation if ever he have grace to perform his engagements, and yeildeth to be damned if not. 2. That the digladiations of Pædobaptists one against another, are by Gods just judgement usefull to shew their iniquity in pressing others to subscribe to their Dictates, which they oppose one another in. 3. That they do evidently prove that the argument is not good which they bring for infant-baptism to prove their infant-right to the seal. For if infants be onely in the outward covenant, and baptism seal another covenant, then title to this seal comes not by bare interest in that. If it be a mutuall engaging seal, then it is no seal of an infant who doth not ingage; if it seal the conditional covenant, and it belongs to all, then all may be sealed, if covenant interest intitle to the seal, if baptism seal absolutely to none till he believe, then baptism is no compleat seal, and so no Sacrament to a man till he believe; if it seal the threatning as well as the promise, then those should have the Sacrament to whom the threatning belongs, as well as those to whom the promise; if it seal absolutely onely Gods generall truth, then it seals nones particular interest, and then none can claim title to it. 4. That most of their speeches are meer dictates without shew of proof, and that from the metaphor of the seal of the covenant, which the Scripture no where useth, and Mr B. thinks it the way to lose our selves and not to edifie, to make it the subject of tedious disputations, and to lay too great a stress on it. As for what he wisheth me in his Apol. against Mr. Bl. Sect. 80. to take notice of it, I reply to what he saith against my distinction of actuall & aptitudinal seal, I think it not worth while to reply to it, si hI used that distinction onely to shew how Bellarmin might be answered without Mr Blakes way of conditionall seal: It is little material whether the Sacrament be called a seal actuall or aptitudinall, or no seal at all, the explication of my meaning before given is enough to justifie my words against any thing Mr B. hath or can object. As for that which he saith, That the question is not about the internall seal of the Spirit, but onely the externall seal of the Sacrament, which are two distinct things, I answer, the question is about my words whether they be true, which deny that God sealeth in every right administration of baptism, and affirm that he sealeth not but when it is admistred to a believer: And though it be true the seal of Baptism and the Spirit be two distinct things, yet I say God never sealeth by Baptism without the Spirit, nor can baptizing without the sealing of the Spirit be rightly according to Scripture language and truth, called Gods sealing. Let's see what Mr. B. opposeth.

His opinion I prove unsound, thus, 1. If the Sacrament rightly administred to an hypocrite, have all in it that is essentiall to Gods actuall sealing, then it is his actuall sealing, &c. But, &c. Therefore, &c. A seal is an engaging or obliging sign, or at least a testifying. He that actually useth a sign to such an end, doth actually seal. Now 1. God useth this sign. 2. And to this end. He useth the sign while his Ministers use it in his Name at his command; for immediatly he never useth or applyeth it to any. 2. He commandeth it to be used to this end, to engage himself to make good his promises. For 1. To what other end should God command them? 2 Else he should command them to be used to one end to one, and to another end to another, which cannot be shewed that he hath done, (I speake of the end of the Ordinance, not of the event which God hath decreed shall follow.)

Answer. The Minor of this Argument is denied. And to the proof I say, 1. That it is not alwayes true, That he that actually useth a sign to such an end, doth actually seal. For if actuall sealing be actuall assuring (as it is conceived to be meant, Rom. 4. 11. whence this phrase is taken) the actuall sealing must be denom[illegible] not onely from the end but also from the event, as if God use a sign to [illegible]rt, he doth not actuallly comfort except the person be comforted. 2. That it is not universally true, that God useth the sign while his Ministers use it in his name at his command, but then when they represent his person. As for instance, when Aaron offered sacrifice, burned Incense, &c. which were to signifie Christ, they did these things in Gods name, that is, to his honor, at his command, yet I do not conceive it can be said that God did offer Sacrifice or burn Incense. And for baptism, though I confesse it is commanded by God to be done by his Ministers, and that it is to be done into his name, yet it is no where intimated as if they did it in stead of God, or Christ, as their act. 3. But let it be granted that baptism done rightly according to Gods command by his Ministers, is his act; how is it proved that it is used by God to this end, to engage himself to make good his promises? For my part I read not any where in Scripture, that God used baptism for this end, to engage himself to make good his promises, nor doth Mr. B. prove that end by any passage of Scripture. And to his reasons I answer, 1. To the first, though neither I nor Mr. B. know any other end, yet doth not this prove, that that is the end. Besids, if I should assign no other end, yet it were enough to answer Mr. B. his question to say, It is to try obedience, as in Abrahams offering his son. But Mr. B. might easily know if he would heed the Scripture, that there are other ends of God in commanding baptism; to wit, the owning of Christ as our Lord, 1 Cor. 1. 13. Gal. 3. 27 joyning all Christians into one body, 1 Cor. 12. 13. Ephes. 4. 5. The 19, and 27 Article of the Curch of England acknowledge this to be one end of baptism, to be a sign of profession, and to be a mark of difference of Christians from others. To the second, though it were granted to be absurd, that God should command the Sacraments to be used to one end to one, and to another end to another, yet this doth no whit prove that this is the end which Mr. B assigns for the fore-going reasons. Yet sure if Infant-baptism were granted, baptism must needs be to one end, to wit, a sign of profession fession to the aged, which it is not, nor can be to an infant. Lastly if it yeelded that the end of baptism were to engage God to make good his promisses, it is a good argument against Mr. B. that God seals not actually to an hyppocrite, sith he doth not promise, and consequently not to engage himselfe, by the Sacrament to make good his promise unto them. But Mr. B. adds thus.

" 3. If the promise be to others besides believers, then so is the seal (for " to whom God promiseth, to them he engageth himselfe to performe, but " the promise is to others therefore &c. This will be evident if it be once un- " derstood that it is only the conditional promise which sealeth by the Sacra- " ments [if thou believe in the Lord Iesus thou shalt be saved] For this " promise is made to unbelievers, though the good promised is not to be " enjoyed by any but performe not the Condition. Thus I have fully prov- " ed in the forsaid Appendix to my Aphorisms: and will fall under the next " question.

Answer: I read, that to Abraham & his seed were the promises made or said, Gal. 3. 16 That the promise through the faith of Christ might be given to them that believe v. 22. If ye be Christs then are ye Abrahams seed & heires according to the promise v. 29. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great & pretious promises 2 Pet. 1 4. The children of the promise are counted for the seed Rom. 9. 8. Strangers from the Covenants of promise Ephes. 2. 12 But this is to use Mr. B. His own words of my doctrine, strang and wild doctrine to say that God promises to unbelievers, the promise of salvation is made to unbelievers, that to them he engageth himselfe to performe: nor do I see how he can avoid Antinomianism, which he so much abhors, to wit the justification of Infidels, if i be true, that this promise is made to unbelievers. Nor is he relieved by saying, the promise is made to them though the good promised is not to be enjoyed, For what is this but to say the promise is made to them by God, but not performed, which is to make God false? Nor is he relieved by saying it is made conditionally only to unbelievers (if thou believe thou shalt be justified.) For this is equivalent to this, he that believeth shall be justified, and so the promise is made only to the believer: though it may be said to be offered, tendered, propounded as a Law, or ordinance of God to unbelievers. yet neither Scripture language, nor any other approved Authors speech, will I concieve warrant this speech, God promiseth, engageth himself to performe, this promise (of salvation, justification,) is made to unbelievers. As for his dictates in his appendix, and the next question, the futility of them is already shewed. He goes on thus.

" 2. If God do no more in his actual calling to believers, than he doth " when the Sacrament is rightly applied to hypocrites, then he actually sea- " leth to hypocrites. The major is proved by the enumeration on the seve- " rall acts. 1. God maketh the promise. 2. He commandeth ministers " to publish it. 3. He hath instituted the Sacraments as mutual engaging " signes or seals. He commandeth ministers to deliver or apply them to those " that profess their consent, and desire to enter or renew the Covenant, " (This I need not stand to prove, beeing Mr. T. Here yeilds that the " giving of the Sacrament is the right act of the administrator, which it could " not be except it were commanded) as also the initiating seal to the children

" of those believing parents that will enter him into the Covenant, as is prov" ed before. Now what act more than these doth God performe to the elect
" or believers.

" Answ. It was assayed to be proved before, but not proved that God commandeth ministers to deliver or apply the Lords Supper to them that desire to renew their Covenant, or baptism to believers infant children; what I said of the right act of the administrator I spake perticularly of baptism. Nor is it true that God maketh promise to hypocrits, or commandeth ministers to publish it, and how is it from Scripture speech, or truths to say, God hath instituted the Sacraments as mutual engaging signs or seals, and how destructive this is to infant baptism is shewed before. To this question, I answer, The witness of the spirit is a further act of God necessary to his sealing as I meant my words, and express my self in my Postscript. Sect. 21. Pag 153. what saith Mr. B. to this?

If it be said that he add the seal of his spirit; that is nothing to the question, seeing we are speaking only of the outward seal. Answ. though Mr. B. spake only of the outward seal, yet he should have spoken of the inward also. If he would have opposed my saying, he should have proved that God actually seals by the outward Sacrament without the inward testimony of the spirit, till then, he spake nothing to the question.

But saith he. If it be said that he assureth the conscience of the truth of the promise, and maketh the outward seal effectual. I Answ. 1. That is still the inward seal, and so nothing to this. Answ. He should rather have said it is all in all to this, sith my words denie Gods actual sealing without.

" 2. That is the making of the seal successful, which is nothing to the " sealing: If you seal a deed of gift to three men and one believeth it, and
" another doth not believe it, and another doth half believe it, yet this doth
" not make it no sealing to him that believeth not; you seal equally to them
" all.

Answ. 1. However it be in mens sealing, yet Gods actual sealing is still effectual, they seal only to the eye, he to the heart, 2 Cor. 1. 21, 22. 2. He makes no deed of gift but to believers, nor seals to any but them Ephes. 1. 13. and 4. 30. Rom. 4. 11. and 8. 15, 16.

" 3. And God doth not alwayes assure the elect or believers, but they oft con" clude hardlyer against themselves than others do that have. So that I desire
" Mr. T. to produce any one act which God performes to believers, and not to others, which may appropriate the name of sealing to them.

Answ. though God do not alwayes actually seal to believers, yet this doth neither prove that his actually sealing is uneffectual, nor to any others.

Mr. B. hath answere to his demand, and were it not that I much pitty the souls of many ministers and people who are by this notion of [seal of the Covenant of grace] partly perverted to uphold and continue as manifest a Corruption as ever was in the Christian church, I mean infant-baptism, being by all, most by Mr. B. Confessed to be without institution and example in Bible, parly perplexed about delivering and receiving the Lords-supper, it would much trouble me that I have spent so much time de lana Caprina, a new devised notion. But over shoes over boots, I must needs add

" And by this the former question about sealing conditionally may be " decided: which Mr. T. darkneth with a maze of words; and addeth " [That God seals not conditionally in this sense, as if he left it to a mans " liberty to whome he had sealed to agnize or recognize that sealing or to free " themselves if they please, and so nullifie all: yet so as to afford them awhile " the favour and privileige of being in Covenant with him, which Mr. M. " He concieves meant by his conditional sealing] Heare are more things " heapt up, then will be satisfied in one answer: therefore I say 1. it is " improperly called liberty of the will which consists in an indifferency to " good or evils as Gibeouf and Bradwardin &c. will teach you. 2. more " improperly is the nullifiing of the Covenant called a freeing themselves " which is an enslaving themselves. 3. And the violating of the Covenant " is not fitly called a nullifying of it. 4. Yet if you will needs use those " terms; I say that God sealeth the conditional promise to thousands that " shall perish, and leaveth it to their own choise, whether they will recognize " and continue, and be faithfull to the Covenant (giving them onely the " common grace:) which men do prove unfaithful to, & break the Covenant, " and so perish for treading the blood of the Covenant under foot. And " doth Mr. T. thinke that no wicked men perish as Covenant-breakers " with Christ?

Answer. I am so used to Mr. B. his snarling at me, that I think it not worth while to take notice of all the noise he makes, and methinks a wise Reader should be no whit moved with these frivolous accusations of me, as darkning the thing with a maze of words (which is a pretty phrase) which are very few and very plain, intimating as if I would needs use those terms though improperly, which were used of necessity when I was to set down M M. his meaning, not as mine, but his, even his very expressions, except it be to observe the quarrelsom vein he was in when he wrot that book against me. If the expression be not proper, let him blame Mr. M. yet let it be observed, that the speech of the nullifying the covenant, was neither mine nor Mr. Ms, but nullifying all, which is to be understood of the sealing and priviledge mentioned. As for his reference of me to Gibeouf and Bradwardin to shew the impropriety of the use of the term [Liberty] I am not likely to be taught by them, except I had the books (one of which I have lost by the plunder of above three hundred bookes never recovered) and Mr. B. had given me better directions where to find my Lesson. I conceive it liberty of will properly so called, whereby men are moved to chuse evill, though the persons be in a state of servitude, John 8. 33. Else it were not penall to chuse evill. And for what Mr. B asserts, I have shewed before that Gods covenant of grace is neither made nor sealed by God to any but the elect; and I say, that though wicked men may perish as covenant-breakers with Christ, that is, as breaking their own covenant or promise with Christ, yet no man ever breaks the covenant of grace, that is Gods new covenant or promise of saving grace in Christ, it being the very end of the making of the new covenant, that whereas the old occasioned God to complain of Israel as not continuing in it, there might be another covenant established or made a Law on better promises, that it might be ἄμεμπτος, which we read faultless; but more rightly Plaintless, that is, not occasioning God to complain by reason of the breach of it, as the Author to the Hebrews plainly shews, Heb. 8. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, &c. And this is expressly called Gods covenant to turn away ungodliness from Jacob, Rom. 11. 26, 27. So that to deny the promise of the first grace of regeneration, conversion, or effectuall calling to be properly Gods covenant of grace, and to make a conditionall after to be Gods Covenant of grace, and to say Gods covenant of grace may be broken, and persons with whom it is made not continue therein, is to alter or deny the new covenant, and to make voyd the grace of God and the comfort of his people, and to my understanding to symbolize with Arminians.

Mr. B. adds, 5. It is unworthily said, That God affordeth these but a while the favour and priviledge of being in covenant with him, seeing it is their own wilfull act to cast themselves out of this priviledge; they might have continued it, and proceeded further in it if they would.

Answer. I agree that it is unworthily said; but by this censure though he aim at me, yet heedlesly he hits Mr. M, whose speech this was. But whoever be in the fault, it seems while the rod is in Mr. B. his hand, I must be lashed. Yet Mr. B. his reason is so far from proving it unworthily said, that it seems rather to be worthily said, that God affords them but a while the favour of being in covenant with him, sith it is their own wilfull act to cast themselves out. I rather think it unworthily said, because God should fail them to perform his covenant of putting his fear into their heart, so as that they shall not depart from him; nor his covenant be everlasting contrary to Jer. 32. 40.

6. Saith Mr. B. Yet withall we affirm, That to his elect God freely giveth, as leave, so a will to enter sincerely into Covenant with him, and faithfully to keep covenant, and so the continuance of the priviledges of the covenant.

Answer. If Mr. B. had as the Scripture doth, ascribed this to Gods covenant, and understood the difference between the covenant of grace under the Gospel, and the nationall covenant made with the people of Israel, much of the opposition between us had been saved. But sith things are as they are, I am resolved with Gods assistance to try his strength in what is yet unanswered of his second main argument, after I have examined the remainder of what Pædobaptists say after the old way of arguing from Covenant and Seal.

SECT. XXXVI.

Christianity is not by Birth, or the Church, nor the Church at Civill Corporations, as Mr. M. his equivocation in the use of the term Covenant of grace.

I Return now to Mr. M. whom I meet in his Defence, pag 119. passing over my six Arguments, and thus answering me, I joyn with you that it is an error to say, that all infants of believers indefinitely are under the saving graces of the Covenant, for although I find abundance of promises in the Scripture, of Gods giving saving grace unto the posterity of his people, and that experience teacheth us, that God uses to continue his Church in their posterity, and that Gods election is more among their seed than others, yet neither to Jew nor Gentile was the Covenant so made at any time, that the spirituall part and grace of the covenant should be conferred upon them all.

Wich

Which if true, then all have not interest in the saving grace of the Covenant, but so many as are elect, and then the baptisme of them all cannot be deduced thence: And for the conditionall covenant, it is either to all, or believers onely, and baptism by it must be of all men or onely believers. And for a third covenant, which they call outward, Mr. Baxter against Mr. Blake, pag. 66, 67, and elsewhere before cited, hath proved it to be a signment, and consequently there is no such to be sealed by baptism which may justifie baptizing of believers infants, as their priviledge. Nor, if the covenant of saving grace be not made to all believers seed, can the certainty of their salvation, dying in infancy, be thence gathered, nor is the promise of salvation made to a believer and his seed universally, then is the Anabaptists sentence no more bloody than Mr. Ms, then do Mr Baillie and others, in print and pulpit clamorously abuse them, accusing them of cruelty to infants of believers, & robbing parents of comfort concerning them, when in truth we are as favourable in our sentence of infants as they, and do give as much comfort as we truly can. As for the visible membership which he ascribes to infants of believers in the Christian Church, it will appear to be but a fancy in the examining what Mr. B. brings for it.

I objected, that if the child of a Christian be a Christian, then Christians are born Christians, not made Christians; whereas it was wont to be a current saying, Christiani non nascuntur sed fiunt. And if the Covenant of grace be a birth-priviledge, how are they children of wrath by nature? To this Mr. M. answers, It is his birth-right to be so esteemed, to be reputed within the covenant of grace, or a member of the visible Church, and alledgeth, Gal. 2. 15. Rom. 11. 21. Naturall branches, that is visible Church-members.

To which I say, were I to write as a Geographer, I should reckon the people of England old and young for Christians, but as a Divine I should not so speak: forasmuch as the Scripture no where calls any other Christians than disciples and professors of Christianity, Acts 11, 26. & 26, 28. 1 Pet. 4. 16. The term [Jew by nature, Gal. 2. 15.] is not as much as visible Church-member by nature, but by natural birth of that nation; nor is the term [Naturall branch, Rom. 11. 21.] as much as visible Church-members by nature, but onely descendents as branches from Abraham the root, that is the father by naturall generation. To be a visible Church-member I never took to be all one with; to be in the covenant of grace, but to be in the covenant of grace to be the same with a Child of the promise, which is expressly contra-distinguished to a child of the flesh, Rom. 9. 8. The distinction of the outward and inward covenant is shewed before to be vain, and to serve onely for a shift. I said in my Examen Christianity is no mans birth-right, and this I proved in that no where in Scripture is a person called Christian, but he that is so made by preaching.

I said, It is a carnall imagination, that the Church of God is like to Civill Corporations, as if persons were admitted to it by birth, which my words shew to be meant of the Church of Christians invisible, as well as visible. Nor is it to the purpose to prove the contrary that Mr. M. tells me, The Jewish Church was in that like Civil Corporations. For I grant it was, the whole nation being the same Politick and Ecclesiastick body, but this Church-state was carnall as their ordinances; whereas the Christian Church hath another constitution by preaching the Gospel. Mr. M. his cavill at my words, [In this all is done by free election of grace] had been prevented, if the following words had been recited [and according to Gods appointment: nor is God tied, or doth tie himself in the erecting and propagating his Church to any such carnall respects, as discent from men, Christianity is no mans birth right.] Mr. M. shews not that God hath made it so in his Christian Church by any ordinance, that the child should be baptized with the parent, and therefore the objection still stands good.

The speech of Mr. Rutherfurd. are Mr. Cotton. and not to be reconciled without making contradictories true. My answer beats not against the reason of the holy Ghost Gen. 17. 7. Nor is it true but that the holy Ghost makes this his argument why he would have the male children circumcised, and thereby reckon'd to be in Covenant with him, because their parents are in Covenant with him, but it is refused by Mr. M's. own Concession pag. 182. That the command was the formal reason of their being Circumcised. Yet this was not it which I called a carnal imagination, but the speech that it is in the church of God as in civil Corporations.

Mr. M. pag. 123 takes upon him to defend his speech, that in the time of the Jewes, if God did reject the parents out of the Covenant, the children were cast out with them. Against which I excepted that parents might be Idolatries, Apostates from Iudaism, draw up the foreskin again, and yet the children were to be circumcised, which he denies not but saith, Is it not evident in the Iewes at this day, that they and their children are cast out together.

I grant it is, but this doth not make good his own assertion or overthrow mine. Then he tels me, If I would shew the falsity of it I should have given some instance; not of parents, who remain Gods people in external profession, though their lives might possibly be very wicked, but of some who were cast off from being visible professors, and yet their Infants remain in the visible society of the church, or of some who were visibly thus taken in, and their infants left out.

Answ. If he meanes this of the christian church it is easie to give instances of Infants of those who have turned Papists, Mahometans, excommunicate persons, who are accounted baptizable by vertue of their Ancestors faith, or for defect thereof because they are of a chosen nation as Mr. Rutherfurd affirms in his Temperate plea ch. 12. concl. 1. arg. 7. But Mr. M. his speech was of the time of the Iewes, and of their times before Christ he must needs say the same unless he will acknowledg Idolaters such as Ahab, Ahaz, &c. to have remained still Gods people in external profession. He concluds the reply to the fift Section of my Examen thus, But instead of this you still go on in your wonted equivocation of the word Covenant of grace taking it only of the Covenant of saving grace, not including the external way of administration with it.

Answ. I do confess I do so take the word Covenant of grace, not knowing any other Covenant of grace under the Gospel, but that which is of saving grace and concieving I should speak false, and nonsense if I should include in the Covenant of grace the external way of administration. But to charge me with wanted equivocation whom he accuseth elswhere for destinguishing so much, and equivocating in the use of a terme only one way is a ridiculous charge, it being all one as to accuse a man of nonsense because he speaks good sense, to say I do equivocate because I do not equivocate. For he that useth a word onely in one sense doth not aquivocate, equivocation being when a word is used in more senses than one. Fallacia aequivocationis est quando ex unius vocis multiplici significatione sophistice concluditur. Dr. Prideaux Hypomn. Log: tract: 4. c. 7. Sect. 2. Arist: Sophist: Elench. l 1. c. 3. reckons ὁμωνυμίαν or equivocation ὅτι τοσαυταχῶς ἂν τῖς αὐτοῖς ὀνόμασι καὶ λόγοις μὴ ταὐτὸ σημαίνωμεν, when with the same names and vowels we signifie not the same thing. which evidently proves Mr M. guilty of equivocating from his own words. For in the first conclusion of his Sermon he distinguisheth the covenant of grace for substance (which he makes the Covenant of saving grace) from the externall way of administration, and yet blames me for not including it. And if he by covenant of grace include the way of externall administration, how could he say in his Sermon, pag. 26. in the recapitulation of his two first conclusions, If the covenant be the same, and the children belong to it. Sure he will not say the way of externall administration is the same: Wherefore from his own words he is deprehended to equivocate in the term Covenant of grace, in the first conclusion meaning by it the covenant of saving graces, and distinguishing it from the externall administration, but in the second conclusion when he saith, children belong to it, he understands not the inward but the outward covenant, not the covenant of saving grace, but the way of externall administration. And yet he dare not say, the infant children of Gentile Christian believers belong to it, that is the same way of externall administration, for that is in the Jewish Legall Rites. Assembly's Confess. of Faith, chap. 7. Art. 5. Therefore he sophistically equivocates in the use of that term, which is his frequent manner, and yet he is not ashamed to accuse me of that, of which his own words acquit me, as if he had learned the Artifice in scolding to call another that first of which himself might be detected. Nor is Mr. M. clear from equivocating in what follows, in which I find much confusednesse and ambiguity.

CHAP. XXXVII.

That the promise Gen. 17. 7. proves not an externall priviledge of visible Church-membership, and initiall seal to infants of Gentile believers, as Mr. M. asserts

After twenty pages spent about the explication of his second Conclusion, having varied it five or six times, and as I have shewed in every of them still speaking ambiguously even then when he tells us, he speaks as plain as he can possibly, I pitch upon this which is pag. 116. as his second Conclusion, Having said,

Infants of believers are made free according to Abrahams Copy, he thus expounds himself, True, according to the promise made to Abraham, I will be a God to thee and thy seed, that look as Abraham, the Proselytes and their seed upon their visible owning of God and his Covenant, had this visible priviledge for their posterity that they should be accounted to belong to Gods kingdom and houshold with their parents, so is it here. By which words it appears, that Mr. M. took this to be Abrahams Copy (as he calls it, that according to the promise made to Abraham, I will be a God to thee and thy seed, Abraham and his seed, the proselytes and their seed upon their (the parents) visible owning of God and his Covenant, had this visible priviledge for their posterity, that they should be accounted to belong to Gods Kingdom and Houshold with their parents. 2. That so it is in the Christian Church by vertue of that promise I will be thy God and the God of thy seed, Gen. 17. 7 Gentile believers upon their visibly owning of God and his Covenant, have this visible priviledge for their posterity, that they should be accounted to belong to Gods Kingdom and Houshold with their parents.

Concerning which Conclusion I say still Mr. M. useth ambiguities of speech, there being divers Covenants of God, to wit, the Old and the New, and divers wayes of visibly owning God, as by sacrificing, circumcision, &c. by Baptism, the Lords Supper, frequenting the Church meetings of Christians, &c, divers kingdoms and households of God, as the whole world, and his Church, the visible or invisible, which might occasion various senses of Mr. M. his words. But I ghesse his meaning to be thus; As the Jewes and proselytes being circumcised, their children were to be so also: so Gentile believers being baptized, their children are to be baptized as visible Church-members; which being the same with the Antecedent of Mr. M. his Enthymeme, and the consequent, it is evident Mr. M. his argument is a meer trifling tautology, as I have often said. But I shall not insist on it, having in my Apologie, Sect. 10. and elsewhere shewed it, That which I shall consider chiefly in his glosse on Gen. 17. 7. which to me seems as (or more) absurd than the glosse of Papists, Thou art Peter, and on this Rock will I build my Church: i. e. The Bishop of Rome shall be my Vicar generall of the Oecumenicall Church. For 1. according to Mr. M. his Glosse, [Thee, that is, Abraham, to whom the words were spoken] is put for without all rule of Grammar or Divinity, or as they speak in Logick supponit by [every Jew, or Proselyte, and every believer or Christian Jew or Gentile, who doth not visibly own God and his Covenant.] 2. According to this glosse the naturall seed of proselytes though but visibly owning God and his Covenant, are called Abrahams seed, without any use of Scripture, which speak of no other seed of Abraham but 1. Christ, Gal. 3. 16. By excellency so called, 2. by grace the elect, Rom 9. 7. 3. Believers, Rom. 4. 11, 12, 16, 17. Gal. 3. 29. 4. By nature, Gen. 21 12. Psal. 105. 6. Gen. 15. 13. 18. Neither o. which are proselytes who do or only own God and his covenant.

3. The promise of God to be a God to Abrahams seed is thus expounded, The naturall seed of Abraham and the naturall seed of Proselytes, and of Gentile Christians visibly owning God and his covenant, shall have this visible priviledge, that they should be accounted to belong to Gods Kingdom and Houshold with their parents. In which paraphrase I note what he calls to be accounted to belong to Gods Kingdom a visible priviledge. Now [to be accounted] I must refer to some person who doth so account, and the accounting must be either an act of opinion, or science, or faith, and then to be accounted to belong to Gods Kingdom, is not a visible priviledg, but invisible, it being in the thoughts of another, and the sense should be, I will be a God to thy seed, that is men as v. 9. administrators shall in their thoughts take proselytes and their children to belong to my Kingdom, or it is some outward transeunt act, and then it is an initial seal, or I cannot conceive what it should be: if an initial seal either of Circumcision or Baptism, if either of these, then this promise [I will be thy God and the God of thy seed] hath this sense, I will bring it to passe that thou, thy seed, proselytes, believers of the Gentiles and their seed, even infants, shall be circumcised or baptized. If any can make any other sense of the words, I shall be his debtor. And if this be the sense, then the promise is made a prediction of infant-Circumcision and Baptism, which whether it be not a ridiculous exposition, I leave it to any considerate man to judge. The Apostle, Rom 9 6,7,8. where he expounds this very Scripture, understands being a God, of saving grace according to election, and by Abrahams seed the elect onely. *Rom.*4 11,12 13,16 justifying of believers by faith, Gal. 3. 16. 29. inheritance and blessing to believers thro gh Christ Jesus. Our Lord Christ, Luke 20, 36, 37, 38. Of being the children of God and of the resurrection. Mr. M. his self in his Sermon, pag. 7. makes these words a promise of salvation to the infants of believers dying in their infancy. pag. 10. he saith, The substance of the Covenant on Gods part was to be Abrahams God, and the God of his seed, to be an all-sufficient portion, to be an all-sufficient reward for him, to give Jesus Christ to him, and righteousness with him, both of justification and sanctification, and ever-lasting life: And this he distinguisheth from the administration of the Covenant. Yea in his Defence of his Sermon, pag. 98. he conceives the right allegation of an expression of Cameron, That Circumcision did seale primarily the temporall promise, sanctification secondarily, to have an untoward look, as being ingrafted to a covenant of grace in Christ to ratifie temporall blessings, which they may have that shall have no portion in Christ. Hath it not then a more untoward look to make this pretended visible privilege to proselytes children though but visibly owning God and his covenant, of having an initiall seal Circumcision and Baptism communicated to them, meant by the promise, I will be thy God and the God of thy seed, Gen. 17. 7. Much more to call this the Copy of Abraham the Father of believers? Not that I deny temporall promises in that Covenant, which I have proved to be mixt, but I allege these passages onely to shew the inconsistency of Mr. M. his speeches. Besides, the promise were not true so expounded; for if this were the sense; I will be the God of the posterity of proselytes owning God and his Covenant, that they shall be accounted to belong to Gods Kingdom and his Houshold with their parents, then God doth promise that visible privilege to them (for the words are a promise of an event, not a declaration of a right, and shew what God would do, not what they might claim) which in many he performs not, there being may of the seed of proselytes, that never had the privilege, and many of the children of Christian gentile believers, who never had the visible privilege of being accounted to belong to Gods Kingdom, whereas the word of God must be so expounded that it do not fail, as about this very text the Apostle resolves, Rom 9.6.

Mr. M. Defence part, 3. pag. 127. saith, It was not a personall privilege to Abraham, no nor to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to have their posterity taken into covenant by vertue of that promise, I will be the God of thee and thy seed, and p. 129. This I add to make it more clear, that that promise Gen. 17. I will be the God of thee and of thy seed, is a Gospel promise, which from age to age holds forth some benefits even to the naturall seed of believers.

Answer.

Answer. 1. What Mr. M. means by Taking into covenant, is somewhat doubtfull to me by reason of his using the term Covenant sometimes for the outward covenant or administration, sometimes for the promise of God, and confounding these terms [taking into covenant, being in covenant, belonging to the covenant, being covenanters, entring into covenant] sometimes meaning these terms of the promise of grace, sometimes of the initiall seal termed by him the Covenant, and taking into covenant, being in covenant, belonging to the covenant, sometimes being understood, (as they should always be) in order to Gods act, who alone takes into covenant, and puts a man into covenant with himself; but frequently, though abusively, by another mans act, as the administrators act of Circumcision and Baptism, very seldom of being in covenant, or belonging to the covenant by the circumcised or baptized persons own act of promise, though in respect of it onely, in right speech, a person is said to be a Covenanter, or to enter into covenant. Of which thing I have often, though in vain complained, it causing obscurity which a man who is a teacher of others should avoid. But concerning the promise, Gen. 17 7. I will be a God to thee and thy seed after thee in their generations. 1. I deny that Abrahams naturall posterity were taken into covenant, that is, circumcised, (as I conceive he means) by vertue of that promise, as I have often proved, and is in effect confessed by Mr. M. Defence pag 182. when he saith, The formall reason of their being circumcised, was the command of God. 2. I deny that under the term [Thee] is meant any other than Abrahams individual person. 3. I deny that under the term Thy Seed, is ever meant in Scripture the naturall seed of proselytes, or Christian believing Gentiles. 4. I deny that by the promise, I will be the God of thy seed, can be concluded that which Mr M. affirms, That this promise Gen. 17.7. I will be the God of thee and of thy seed, is a Gospel promise, which from age to age holds forth some benefits even to the naturall seed of believers, or that this was Abrahams Copy, That upon his and the proselytes visibly owning God and his Covenant, their posterity should have this visible privilege, that they should be accounted to belong visibly to Gods Kingdom and his Houshold with their parents. Nor doth Mr. M. prove this sense of that promise, Gen 17.7. either from the words, or their coherence, or by comparing it with any other Scripture as yeelding that exposition of it elswhere: but saith something pag. 127, 128. of his Defence, to which (though I have answered it sufficiently in my Postscript to Mr. Blake, Sect. 6. pag. 119) yet I repeat it with addition, because much of pleading of Pædobaptists is hence.

First, saith he, though Abraham was the Father of the faithful, and so "in some sense [the root as you elsewhere call him] yet the Covenant was "made with him for his faiths sake, and believers are his children, and "heires, and partake of those privilledges and promises which were made to "him: and therefore look as Abrahams faith justified him before God, "and gave him interest in the spiritual graces of the Covenant, and none but "himself; yet it was so beneficial and advantagious to his children, that for "his sake they should be accounted to belong to Gods Kingdome and houshold, and partake of the external privilledges of it, and thereby be trained "up under the discipline of it, and so be fitted for spiritual privledges and "graces which God doth ordinarily confer upon them, who are thus trained up, so shall it be with them who become followers of Abrahams faith,

Answ.

Anſ. 1. Priviledges of Abraham in that promiſe [I will be thy God and the God of thy ſeed] are either Evangelical belonging to Abrahams ſpiritual ſeed, that is elect perſons or true believers; or domeſtick and political, as that of multiplying his ſeed, the birth of Iſaac, continuation of his church in and from him in his inhereting poſterity till Chriſts comming. the birth of Chriſt, deliverance out of Egypt, poſſeſſion of Canaan, theſe belong to Abrahams natural ſeed, yet not to all but to the inheriting, not to Iſhmael, nor the ſons of Keturah. The former all are partakers of it who follow the faith of Abraham whether Iews or Gentiles, but none are in refference to theſe promiſes reckoned Abrahams ſeed, but thoſe who are real believers in Chriſt. A Proſelyte owning barely God and his covenant viſſibly is not either Abrahams ſeed or partaker of the ſpiritual priviledges of ſanctification, juſtification, ſalvation. The latter ſort of promiſes belonged to Abrahams natural poſterity, yet not to all but to the ſeed inheriting, nor to all of them, but to the Iewes, and in them for one of them to the line from whence after the fleſh Chriſt came. None of theſe were made to the bare viſſible Proſelites and their children, though I grant their children where taken into the pollity of Iſrael, and were to be circumciſed and to eat the Paſſover, yet neither did this priviledge belong to them by vertue of the covenant, but the command, nor for their faiths ſake as the immediate adequate reaſon (for then theſe ſhould have belonged to proſelites of the gate who believed in God as Cornelius the Centurion, who was a believer, but they did not, for he was not Circumciſed, nor to be circumciſed with his children if he had any, nor blamed for defect of it) but meerly (ſo far as is expreſt in Scripture) becauſe it was Gods will to have it ſo. Now Mr. M. brings not a word to prove either that the children of proſylites viſſibly owning God and his covenant, or the natural poſterity of chriſtian profeſſors of the Gentiles are either Abrahams ſeed, or have ſuch an Intereſt in external church privileges as Mr. M. aſſerts by vertue of that promiſe, or that what agrees to Abraham in reſpect of external church privileges for his faiths ſake muſt agree either to only viſſible proſylites, or chriſtians, or real believers, but ſpeaks like a dictator not a diſputer. Nor is there any good conſequence in this, what, agreed to Abraham for his faith's ſake agrees to every believer, For then every believer ſhould be Father of the faithful as Abraham was for his faith's ſake. It is true that if the truth of Abraham's faith were the immediate adequate reaſon of external privileges as it was of juſtification, it would follow them, what external privileges agree to Abraham for his faith's ſake ſhould agree to every believer, but ſuch believers then muſt be true real believers as Abraham was, not bare viſſible proſylites or chriſtian profeſſors. But ſurly Mr. M. means no more by [for Abraham's faiths ſake] but this, that Abrahams faith was the motive or occaſion God took to enter into covenant with him, nor was it ſimply his real true faith, but his remarkeable exemplary faith deſcribed Rom. 4. 18, 19. which was the motive or occaſion of Gods entring into covenant with him, which is not veretied of every true believer, and the motive or occaſion was not barely the truth, but the eminent degree of his faith. In my Poſtſcript Pag. 119. I gave a like inſtance Matth. 16. 18, 19. the keyes of the kingdome of heaven, binding and looſing were given to Peter for his confeſſion ſake, yet it follows not the keyes are given to every one that makes the ſame confeſſion as he did.

And the reason because the confession was eminent and exemplary at a special time, and it was but the occasion, not the immediate adequate reason of that gift to him; for that was onely the special grace and purpose of Gods will.

Answ. I do not know that the proselytes natural seed had the visible church-member-ship Mr. M. Mentions by vertue of the promise Gen. 17. 7. and their parents faith, but of Gods command Exod 12 48.

"3ly saith he, And we know also that this promise of being the God of believers and their seed was frequently renewed many hundreds of years after "Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were dead and rotten, as Deut. 30. 6. "so Esa: 44. 2, 3. so likewise Esay 59. 21. and this last promise your self "acknowledg Pag. 54. to be intended chiefly of the nation of the Iewes, "at their last calling in: And whereas you use to elude these texts by saying "these things belong onely to the elect, when they come to believe, and reach "not to any privilege which is external; I reply, by the same answer you "might cut off the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, for to believers "then as well as believers now were these promises made.

"Answ: That which I say is no elusion of the texts, but so plain and evident, that Pædo-baptists of note do concur with me. Mr. Rich. Baxter. "in his letter to Mr. Bedford in the friendly accommodation between them. "To this and that which followeth I answer; 1. These following arguments "perswade me that you erre; 1. no such promise (that giveth certainly Cor novum or the first effectual grace to all the rightly baptized or to all the "children of believers) can be shewed in Scripture; I will circumcise thy "heart and of thy seed, seems to me to be none such 1. because elst it should not "be the same circumcision that is promised to the parent of the child: but there "is no intimation of two circumcisions in the text: one to the father, being only an increase or actuating of grace; and the other to the child being "the giving the first renuing grace: 2. the text seems plainly to speak of [their "seed] not in their infant state but in their adult Deut. 30. For. 1. v. 2. The "conditon of the promise is expressly required, not onely of the parents, but of the children themselves by name. 2. And that condition "is the personal performance of the sam acts which are required of "the parents viz: to returne to the Lord and obey his voice with all their "heart and soul. 3. The circumcision of heart promised is so annexed to "the act that it appeareth to be meant onely of those that were capable of the "act v. 6. The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart and the heart of thy "seed to love the Lord thy God So that it is not ment of those that are uncapable of so loving, And after, A new heart is given to the elect onely. By "this doctrin you feign a new heart not to be proper to the elect, which is "contrary to all the Anti-arminians that I know of. Out of which it plainly appears that Deut. 30. 6. Speaks not of an external privilege, but a spiritual grace proper to the elect, nor can be meant of the seed of believers in their infant state, but in their adult.

In the text Isai. 44. 2, 3. speaking of Gods pouring his spirit on the seed of Jacob his servant. And Jeshrim whom he had chosen (whom he bids not to fear) and his blessing on his off-spring and that they shall spring up as amongst the grass &c. the terms Jacob and Jeshurim are taken not personally (for it were in vain to bid Jacob dead long before not to fear) but Collectively either for the nation of Israel, or the church of God called the Israel of God. Gal. 6. 16. In the former acception the seed and off-spring must be ment of the children of Israel, that is the Israelites by natural generation, and then the sense is (as Mr. Gataker in his Annot. on that text) my spirit, that is my blessing "(the one expoundeth the other) whereby they and their state should thrive "and flourish, and multiply, and increase, that had been almost clean "exhaust and exceedingly impaired in a manner beyond al hopes of recovery "before ch. 26. 19. Ezek. 37. 3. 11, 14. So of their land ch. 32. "15. and of their seed ch. 61. 9. He followeth still the comparison taken "from grounds well watered as ch. 58. 11. and the seed sown in soil ch. 32. "10. In the latter saith he, it is a type of that spiritual growth and increase "of Gods church, and the members of it under the Messiah, by the graces "and comforts of his spirit Acts 9. 31. Ephes. 4. 12. 15. Col. 2. 19. 2 Pet. 3. 18. See ch. 27. 6. and 37, 31. and 61. 9. 21. Take it "either way it makes nothing for an external visible privilege from age to age "belonging to the natural seed even of Gentile believers: but in the first ac- "ception it notes a future multiplying of the Jewes then much waisted, in the "later spiritual graces and comforts to the elect.

"And for the last text Ames. Coron: Acts. 5 c. 2 versum vicesimum, quem in hanc partem Remonstrantes trahunt, in alteram partem accipit Apostolus Paulus Rom. 11. 27. promissionem absolutam & electorum propriam in eo Contineri manifestis verbis confirmans: Externum nihil sonat spiritus meus qui est in te. Semini etiam inculcatio solos electos & efficaciter vocatos notari docet Apostolo sic hunc titulum interpretante Rom. 9. 8. Gal 3. 16. & 4. 28. Mr. Gataker annot: on Esai. 59 21. thy seed] the faithful the seed according to the promise Deut. 30. 6. Rom. 9. 6, 8. Gal. 3. 16. 29. See Dr. Owen of Perseverance ch. 3. Sect. 41. ch. 4. Sect. 3. ch. 5. Sect. 9. ch. 7. Sect. 23.

And for what Mr M counts absurd I yeild is that my answer cuts off Abraham's Isaac's and Iacob's natural posterity from these promises except they be elect. And as for Mr. M. deprehending me in absurdity and trifling such as I conceive in Mr. Cottons words, I tell him that his discourse runs upon a mistake of my words and meaning (which he doth almost in every thing he repeats of mine and censures out of hast to frame his book as I am willing to conceive.) For where do I say that which he ascribes to me, and from which he would infer like trifling and absurdity as was in Mr. Cottons speech, that God made this promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to be the God of them and their seed in all generations? And yet if I had said it, such trifling as Mr. Cotton used, would not have followed on those words ascribed to me, unless I had said also, that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were put for every believer and [their seed] had been meant in that proposition ascribed to me, of their spirituall seed by faith. And for the close of that discourse in which he tells me, Thus by your own argument you cut off all the Jewes but such as were elect and inwardly holy, as much as you do the Gentiles from having any visible communion in externall privi- leges, I lay Mr. M. fathers on me his own brats, first a proposition I deliver not, then an argument which was none of mine as he makes it, and then a conclusion I never owned, nor would follow on that proposition or that argument he would father on me. For if it were granted that I asserted that God promised to Abrahaham, Isaac, and Jacob, to be the God of them and their seed in all generations, and that my reasoning on Mr. Cottons words would prove this proposition must be meant onely of the elect, and inwardly holy (as Mr. M. falsly imagines) I do not cut off the Gentiles from having any visible communion in externall privileges, unless I had said the elect Jewes or Gentiles onely had visible communion in externall privileges by vertue of that promise, Gen. 17.7. whereas I never said that externall privileges, as v. 9. of the initiall seal of Circumcision was proper to the elect, and inwardly holy, or derived it from the promise, Gen. 17. 7, but onely from the command, v. 9, 10.

Animadversions on the third Chapter of the first part of Mr. T. Cobbets Just. Vindic. Sect. 1, 2, 3. about Gen. 17. whereby his positions about Church-Covenant and externall privileges of the covenant of grace are refelled.

TO how little purpose Mr. M. hath alleged the promise, Gen. 17, 7. hath been considered; I shall now view what Mr. Cobbet Just. Vindic. part 1. chap. 3. brings for his doctrine of federal holiness of Church-members children from thence. First he begins, Sect. 1. with certain distinctions, The Covenant of grace, saith he, is considered either nakedly or as invested with a visible politicall Church covenant, if not explicite, yet implicite. We are to consider this place, Gen. 17. not so much in the former as the later sense; God making of it with reference to the Church which was to remain in the posterity of Isaac, v. 18, 19, 20, 21. albeit at present it be to be contained in Abrahams own family, whence also he ordaineth an initiatory seal, and way of restipulation, to which they submitting together as one selected body collectively, and as members thereof distributively, they did implicitly make confession and promise to God and bind themselves in a nearer religious tie one unto another. Hence then renewed Deut. 29. 2 Chron. 15. & 30. & 34. Nehem. 10. Ezek. 16, 8.

Answer. It had been well if Mr. C. had defined the covenant of grace in this sense, and how it is fetch't from Gen. 17.7. that I might have known whether he takes it in the same notion which I do, whose Examen Mr. Cotton in his letter to me certified me that he was to examine. A covenant in the proper acception is a promise single or mutuall, the covenant of grace is Gods covenant or promise of grace, a term not used in Scripture, though agreeably enough to it. Every covenant of God may be well enough termed A covenant of grace. It was of his grace, that is, free favour, that God made any covenant with man in innocency, that he entred into covenant with the Israelites at the giving the Law at Mount Sinai: yet commonly Divines oppose the covenant of grace to either of these covenants. It is true there are who make the covenant at Mount Sinai the covenant of grace with a different administration, which to

to be a mistake, is shewed in that which follows. Usually difference is made between the covenant of grace and the covenant of works, or of the Law, which is agreeable to the Apostles expressions, Gal. 3.17. & 4.24. The one promiseth justification by keeping the Law, the other by believing in Christ. I for my part take the covenant of grace for Gods promise of Evangelicall saving grace, to wit, regeneration, justification by Christ, &c. according to the doctrine of the Author to the Hebrews, chap. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. & 10, 16, 17. which our Lord Christ calls The New Testament, Matth. 26. 28. I acknowledge also, that Gen. 17. 7. and elsewhere, this covenant was made to Abraham under covert expressions, which in their first and most obvious sense held forth other things. But I am put to ghesse what Mr Cobbet means by the covenant of grace, and in which words, Gen. 17. and in what sense he placeth the covenant of grace there. He speaks of a visible politicall Church-covenant, and conceives the covenant of grace, Gen. 17. to be invested with it either explicit or implicit. The visible politicall Church-covenant (as I conceive from sundry writings of the New England Elders) is, that promise of members in a particular Church gathered in a Congregationall way wherein over and besides the promise they make of faith in God, and in the Lord Christ, they explicitly or implicitly promise to each other to walk in holy communion of Gods Ordinances, and subjection to those that are over them with the members of the congregation to which they adjoin themselves as members.

Mr. C. supposeth this covenant as elsewhere so here, Gen. 17. to be included, I with many others see no clear ground for such a covenant there or elsewhere. Besides, what he means by the covenant of grace considered as invested with a visible politicall Church-covenant, if not explicit, yet implicit, is obscure [Invested] is as much as clothed, and it is used as a term of Law, as in the great question about investures into Bishopricks in former ages, and so it notes a legall admission. But in what sense the covenant of grace is said to be invested, is somewhat dark. This I conceive is the meaning, That the covenant of grace, Gen. 17. 7. is made to Abraham and his seed considered as joyned by a visible politicall Church-covenant. But I conceive such a position neither true nor safe: Not true, for no mention either explicit or implicit of such a Churchcovenant is there or in any of the places he cites. None there: For though God made the promise in reference to the Church which was to remain in the posterity of Isaac, v. 18, 19, 20, 21, yet that Church might be joyned by common profession of the same God, without a promise explicit or implicit of walking together in communion under an eternall politie. God ordained Circumcision as a sign of the Covenant made with Abraham: But in what words or fact there's any implied way of restipulation, confession, or promise to God, I am yet to seek, much more wherein they did bind themselves in a nearer religious tie one to another. For though God intended by Circumcision to bind them to leave sin and keep his precepts, and to direct them to look for the Messiah, yet that they by any word or act of theirs, did promise to do so, I find not there, nor is it likely that Ishmael did make any such profession or promise to God or to others of the family, considering his after carriage to Isaac, and his expulsion from Abrahams house. As for the other texts, Deut. 29. 12, 13, there's mention of entring into covenant with the Lord, not a word of entring into covenant one with another, much less of submitting to any outward Ecclesiastical governors or government. The same may be said of the Covenant, 2 Chron. 15.12,13. 2 Chron. 34, 31,32. there's a covenant to God mentioned, but not a Covenant to each other called a Church-covenant. 2 Chron. 30 There's no mention of any covenant, but of keeping the Passover. Nehem. 10. 29, 30. it is said, They clave to their brethren, their Nobles, and entred into an Oath to walk in Gods Law: but that they entred into a covenant one with another, I find not. If the words, They clave to their brethren their Nobles, be meant of a promise to them, yet a promise of subjection to them as Ecclesiasticall superiors, of holding communion with them in ordinances for admission to Church-membership, I find not there, but an engagement with them to reform certain abuses: And then Ordinances (not a Covenant) were made to charge themselves with for the service of the Lord, Ezek. 16. 8. There's no mention of mans promise to God, or to one another, but the promise of God to them, that he sware to Israel, and entred into covenant with them, and they became his. Nor is the position safe, that the Covenant of grace, Gen. 17. 7. is made to Abraham and his seed considered as joyned by a visible politicall Church-covenant: for then should not the proselytes of the gate, as for instance, Cornelius the Centurion be included in the promise of being a God to him, because it is certain he was not joyned by a visible politicall Church-covenant to the Jewish Church, sith he was uncircumcised, and counted unclean, insomuch as that Peters going in to him, Acts 11. 3. was conceived as unwarrantable for that reason. And what can be the issue of this doctrine, if received, but perplexing superstitious fears of their salvation in some, if they be not in Church-covenant, for without the promise of being God to a person, no man is saved, and injurious censures of those not in Church-covenant, as out of the way of salvation, which will make it like the grand Imposture (as Dr. Morton calls it) of the Romish Church That out of communion with it is no salvation. I do not make such a Church-covenant unlawfull, for what we are bound to do, we may lawfully promise to do, nor do I deny its expediency and usefulness, especially if it be not in too strict and intangling a form. But I think there's no sufficient proof that it is of Divine Institution, or the form of a particular Church either in respect of its truth or purity, much less that it is a condition of interest in the covenant of grace, as if the promises thereof were made under that condition. But I conceive this speech of Mr. C. here together with that other excepted against me by me in the first part of this Review, pag. 92 are very dangerous. I go on.

Again, saith Mr. C. That Covenant of grace is considered either in it self, or its administration; to which purpose Circumcision is called the Covenant, partly because it was the sign and seal of the covenant of grace, Gen. 17 11, 12, 13 partly too, because it was the covenant of grace in the administration of it, Ier. 13. 11. & Isai. 24. & Zach. 11. 10. hath reference to the covenant of grace, both as invested with the Church-covenant, and in respect of Church administration thereof.

Answer. The administration of the covenant of grace is to me no way intelligible but thus, that by it is meant the administring the promise it self, which I know not how it should not be done but by making or writing, or some other way representing or recording it, or the things promised in the covenant of grace, to wit, justification, &c. which may be done either by Divine authority & power conferring or bestowing, and this none can do but the eternal Father,

Son

Son and Spirit, or by way of signification, revelation or assurance of them, so I confess the preaching of the Gospel, and in some sense the Sacraments (as they are called) may be termed Church-administrations of the covenant of grace.

But this seems not to be Mr. C. his meaning, for he saith, Circumcision is called the Covenant, partly because it was the sign and seal of the covenant of grace, Gen. 17.11,12,13. partly too because it was the covenant of grace in the administration of it. Which words are an inept tautology, if to be the covenant of grace in the administration of it, be not somewhat beyond being a sign and a seal of it; and sith circumcision is said to be both, circumcision must not onely sign and seal the covenant of grace, but must be the administration of it, which how it should do but by conferring the grace of it, I know not. If it be that way, it must do it either ex opere operato, or ex opere operantis: if this later way, then how do infants receive grace by it, who believe not, nor do any other act pre-required? if the former, it is the same with the tenent of Popish Doctors. And for the text, Gen. 17.11, 12,13. his own words, pag. 43. refute him when he saith, Every one that hath read Catechetically doctrine will say, that when in one verse it's said of Circumcision in their flesh, that it was his covenant in their flesh: It is an usuall Metonymy in speaking of Sacraments to call the outward sacramentall sign and seal by the name of the thing signified and sealed: pag 44. Circumcision is but a branch of the covenant, or condition of the covenant on their part. As for the text Jer. 13.11. there's not a word of circumcision in it, onely it is said that God had caused to cleave to him the whole house of Israel, as the girdle cleaveth to the loyns of a man, but to refer this to circumcision is frivolous. God had by his Covenant, Providence and actings for them in wonderfull manner made them to cleave to him, That they might be unto him for a people, as it follows in the verse. In the other text, Isai. 24 5, it is said the Iews had broken the everlasting covenant, which if it be understood of the covenant of grace, then may it be broken, and persons may fall from grace; if of circumcision, as Mr. C. seems to understand it, then it is no more but they had uncircumcised themselves, which were both false: for at that time and after, even unto this day, the Iewes keep the ordinance of circumcision very strictly, and frivolos, as if this had been the great matter for which the earth mourned, did fade away, languished, was utterly emptied and spoiled. But the covenant here is meant of the covenant of the Law at mount Sinai, which was everlasting, that is, to continue as long as their polity stood, Exod. 24.7, 8. as Exon. 27, 21, & 12. 24. & 28. 43, 2 Chron. 6. 2. 2. & 7. 16. the word [for ever] is used for a long time, or the continuance of the Iewish State. So Jer: 11, 3, 4, Jer: 31, 32, they are accused to break the covenant at mount Sinai by disobedience, chiefly by idolatry, and therefore neither of the Text s yeild any thing to prove circumcision to be the covenant of grace in the administration of it. That Gods breaking of his Covenant, Zach 11.10: hath no reference to the Covenant of grace, either as invested with Church-covenant or Church-administration thereof, is shewed above, Sect 25, in the right administration of it.

The distinction he makes of being in the Covenant intentionally and actually I allow, nor do I deny the distinction of being in Covenant internally and savingly, and onely externally in respect, of men, though I find not Ishmael any where said ſaid to be in the Covenant, and the promiſes Rom. 9. 4. are meant of the peculiar promiſes to the nation of Iſrael, by the Covenants are meant the tables of the Covenant as Beza in his Annot. on that place, however all there ſaid is meant of the Iſraelites only as is ſhewed before Sect. 29. and therefore this place makes nothing for Chriſtian Gentile profeſſors being externally in the Covenant of grace as Mr. C. imagines. Nor do I know any Text in the Scripture wherein that phraſe is uſed of being in Covenant or having the Covenant belong to them externally only.

The diſtinction of being in Covenant externally in their own or their pareuts right hath no proof in the new Teſtament, however it have in the old. The ſeed of Abraham by proportion is a new invented ſort of Abrahams ſeed, no where Proſelytes of old (not true believers) in their Generations. and (were) viſible inchurched beleivers in their Generations ſcil. parents & children together are terms Abrahams ſeed in Scripture. That Deut. 29. 14. notes the ſorts of perſons, not the individuats cannot be true; for [him that is here and him that is not here] note individual perſons diſtinguiſhed according to their preſent and future exiſtence. That Gen. 17. 7. is meant of a Church ſeed indefinite or by proportion, is ſaid, not proved by Mr. C. and denied by me. I paſs on to his Concluſions.

Sect. 2. I grant the firſt concluſion according to the explication I give in my Exercit. Pag. 2. in my Examen part. 3. Sect. 2. that the Covenant Gen. 17 7. was a Covenant of grace, and the ſame in nature with that Covenant of grace now held forth to us. But Mr. C. hath a further meaning to wit that the Covenant as it is a Covenant of Evangelical grace contains a promiſe to a Gentile believere of the external privilege of an initial ſeal or external right to outward ordinances to them and their natural ſeed, and accordingly ſaith Pag. 41 The Covenant then of the Goſpel hath outward privileges of Gods Tabernacle annexed as wel as Abrahams Covenant, yea in that it's the ſame with it. Which concluſion in this ſenſe were manifeſtly falſe, for the Lord hath of purpoſe taken away ſuch a Tabernacle according to Chriſts prediction Iohn 4. 21. that there might be no diſtinction of Iewes and Gentiles all having one acceſs by one Spirit to the Father Eph. 2. 18. As for his proofs I intend not to contrive every ſpeech of Mr C. there being many of them if they be good ſenſe yet very darke, but onely ſhew the impertinency of his Texts to this purpoſe.

Le i. 26. 11, 12. Containes a promiſe proper to the Iſralites obeying God, as v. 13 &c. and ſhewes, and it is a promiſe of that which is not now to be performed to us of ſetling his Tabernacle among us, the Tabernacle and Temple being now taken away ſince Chriſts incarnation. God hath ſetled no Tabernacle now among us but Chriſts body or heavens Iohn. 2. 21. Heb. 8. 2. and 9. 24 or the Church of God. 1 Cor. 3. 6, 17. and 6. 19. and his ſetling this Tabernacle or Temple is by ſaving grace, hath no reference to outward Church privileges, ſuch as Mr. C. means.

Revel. 21. 3. Is a promiſe of ſomething to be performed in the laſt time whether at the calling of the Jewes, or after the judgment. whatever it be it notes another thing than external right to outward ordinances common to Elect and Reptobate, though it be expreſſed by a terme alluſive to the material Tabernacle of the Jews.

Ephe

Ephes. 2. 11, 12. It is said the Gentiles were without God in the world after their Conversion; not because their children wanted an external right to an initial seal, for Cornelius the Centurions children and such Proselytes of the gate wanted such a right, and yet were not without God in the world; but because they knew not the true God, and his will concerning them that believe in Christ, Piscat: Analys: loci, or or worshiped not the true God after his will as the new Annot. even as Galat. 4. 8 the Galatians before their Conversion are said not to have known God, but to do service to them that by nature were not Gods.

Exod. 29. 45 is a promise to the Israelites whom he brought out of Egypt v. 46. and from whom he had sanctified Aaron and his sons.

Revel. 21. 4. as v. 3. is neither meant of outward ordinances, nor of an estate which is yet pertaining to the godly who are still under persecutions.

Zech. 9. 11. whether meant of temporal deliverance or spiritual it is another thing than outward ordinances, in the former sense it is proper to the Jewes carried to Babylon, in the latter to the elect onely. The like may be said of Gen. 17. 5. 5. 8 Psal. 111. 5. Jerem. 33. 21, 51. (likely v. 35. 36.) 2 Cor. 6. 16, 18. Exod. 3. 6. compared with Levit. 20. 37, 38. Heb: 11. 6. In none of which their's a word of a right of Infants or meer professing parents to the visible administration by vertue of Gods Covenant Gen: 17. 7. to be Abraham and his seed; nor doth it follow because God saith my Covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting Covenant Gen: 17. 13. therefore outward ordinances and right to them as then are to be perpetual, for then Circumcision of which those words are spoken must continue still, but rather as Mr: Ley in his Annot: on Gen: 17. 13. The Covenant may be said to be everlasting in respect of the spiritual part for which Circumcision was ordained, and in respect of the long continuance of the outward ceremony.

If Ezek: 37. 25, 27. be meant of the Jewes calling in the time yet to come, and the same phrases be used, yet that either the promise should be meant v: 25. of their childrens having an initial seal, v: 27. their having a material Tabernacle or Temple and outward ordinances as in the former time is but a vain conceit: For then they must by the same reason have David the son of Jesse to be their king. wherefore as by David is meant Christ typified by David, so Circumcision is continued in the mortifying of sins Col. 2 11. and Gods placing his Tabernacle is as Piscat: sch. in Ezek: 37. 27. The gratious inhabiting of God in the hearts of the elect 2 Cor: 6. 16. And if because in the new Testament such allusive phrases are found as are in the same language with those used in the old, therefore such outward things are imported by them as were in the Law, then outward privileges, offices, rites should be meant by presenting our bodies as Sacrifices, being Preists to God &c. It is in my apprehension a manifest Anti-evangelical and Judaizing assertion which Mr: C. hath, that the Covenant of the Gospel hath outward privileges of Gods Tabernacle annexed as well as Abrahams Covenant, yea in that it is the same with it.

Sect: 3. when he saith Con : 2. that the Covenant of grace Gen: 17. is to be considered as invested with Church Covenant, it is such an ambiguous expression as I know not well how to understand what I imagine to be the meaning I have refuted before in this Section. Nor doth that which is here said, that there is mention of this Covenant to be kept by them v: 9. and further expressed in one particular thereof v: 10. and that this was required as an initiatory sign incorporating them into one instituted Church body, whereby they were made capable of further Church-ordinances and other duties which lay upon them virtually by it, prove the Church-covenant he speaks of, unless it be proved (which I think he cannot do) they did tie themselves thereby to walk with one another in holy Communion with subjection to their Superiors as a distinct visible political Church.

SECT. XXXIX.

Animadversions on Sect: 4. of the same Chapter: whereby the Conceits of Mr. C about external being in the Covenant of grace are shewed to be vain.

Sect: 4 Mr. C. sets down this conclusion, that there is a bare external being in the Covenant of grace of persons who possibly never shall be saved. But he no where shewed in Scripture either the term Covenat of grace, or the phrase of being in the Covenant of grace externally or internally. Did Mr: C. and other Pædobaptists distinctly set down 1. What they mean by [the Covenant of grace] 2. What they mean by [being externally in the Covenant of grace] whether it be any other thing than to be Baptized or Circumcised, and what it is distinct from one of these or Title to one of them. 3. By what act it is that a person is externally in the Covenant of grace, whether Gods or his owne, or others as v. 9. The administrators, parents, or the Churches, we might more easily judg of his position. If he mean no more than this, that there is a being in the Covenant of grace in respect of men, that is, men as administrators and others do think or judg some to be in the Covenant of grace, that is, that God hath promised saving grace to some to whom he hath not, I grant it, and I might say in the like manner, some are exeernally elected, regenerated, justified, adopted who are not so savingly. And I should grant that such as are taken to be in the Covenant of grace by reason of their own profession of faith in Christ are rightly judged by us to be in the Covenant of grace and may be baptized, though perhaps they shall not be saved. But such as are taken by us to be in the Covenant of grace without Gods promise or act of their own Profession of faith, by an administrators of baptism and others mistake. Concerning the promise Gen: 17. As if it were made to every believing Gentile by profession inchurched, and his natural seed as Abrahams Church seed (as Mr: C. calls them) are not therefore rightly judged to be in the Covenant of grace, nor rightly judged to be fit subjects of baptism which appears to be Mr: C's. meaning by his words Pag. 51. when he saith, the Covenant is theirs externally and quoad homines considered as invested with Church Covenant, and in reference to Covenant-ordinances whereof they are capable as of old they were of Circumcision and are now of baptism. Let us consider what Mr. C. brings to this purpose.

what he saith the promise is said to belong to those Jewes Rom: 9. 4. on whom yet the word took no saving effect v: 6. is not right. For v: 4. is not meant by [the promises] the promise by excellency called the promise of the spirit Gal: 3. 14. given to Abraham v: 17. distinct from the Law v: 18. But the peculiar promises which are made to the Israelites upon the obeying of the Law that they should possess Canaan, liue long in it, and prosperously as Deut, 5. 16. and 28. 3, &c. For all that which is said Rom: 9. 4. is meant of what was proper to the Israelites after the flesh. But the Covenant of grace is established or made a Law on better promises Heb: 8. 6. And the phrase Rom: 9. 6. [not as if the word of God had taken none effect, which is word by word, not as if or κχ' οἷον it may not be, that is: it is not possible, or it may not be yeelded that the word of God fell or was not verified] is meant not of the promises, v: 4. but of the promises mentioned v: 8. to wit that Gen: 17. 7. Which he doth not say did belong to any externally on whom it had no saving effect: but suppose it to have been verified and made good to all to whom it was made, who in Gods intention were only the elect, called therefore children of the promise v: 8. that is those that were begotten by the promise, not to every child of Abraham by natural generation, in particular not to Ishmael, nor Esau. Nor is it right which he adds, Hence Rom: 9. 4. By opposition to the Gentiles, they (the Jewes meant v: 4.) where those which were not strangers to the Church, but of it, if he mean it of the Christian Church.

I grant the Jewes were not strangers to the covenants of promise, but in the same, Eph. 2: 11, 12. But that all the Gentile believers and their children were then that which they were not before, is not a right collection. For as they were ἀκροβυστία, uncircumcised in the flesh, so they were still; nor were they ever of the polity of Israel. And if the Covenants of promise be meant of the Tables of the covenants, and if the word [promise] be placed thus (as some place it) not having hope of the promise, they might be still said to be strangers from the Covenants. However, if then they were acquainted with, and partakers of the Covenants of promise, this can be understood of none but true believers and the covenant as it was spiritual, which is nothing to the being externally in the covenant of graces.

Mr. C. adds, Hence God makes his covenant with them all, Deut. 29: 10, 12, 13, 14, 15. speaking there of that solemn renewall of the covenant of grace, as Deut. 30: 6, 10, 12, 13, 14. compared with Rom. 10, 6, 7, 8. evinceth.

Answer. The more ample discussing this place, and vindicating my Exceptions from what Mr. B. replies, I reserve till I answer his Plain Scripture proof, &c. part 1. c. 17 and his Corrective, Sect. 5. For present I say, If God did make his covenant with them all, and it appears to have been the covenant of grace, as Deut: 30. 6, 10, 12, 13, 14. compared with Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8. evinceth, then all must be not onely externally in the covenant of grace, but also internally: For the promise Deut. 30. 6. is to circumcise the heart to love the Lord, cannot be expounded of the external being in the covenant of grace, but internal. Mr B. in his Friendly Accommodation, A new heart is given to the elect onely, which is all one with the circumcised heart.

"He goes on, So Ezek. 16. 8. He made a covenant with that Church and "people, many whereof proved very base, as that chapter sheweth. Now this "was a covenant of grace, albeit invested with Church-covenant, as appears " in that v. 60. That God for that his Covenants ſake conſidered as his, will " deal ſo graciouſly with them after all their provocations, as v. 62, 63. Al" beit he did not thus properly for the ſake of that inveſture of his covenant

" annexed, ſcil. thy covenant, the Churches covenant abractively conſidered,

Anſwer. The thing that Mr C. ſhould prove is an externall being in the covenant of grace quoad homines. But Ezek. 16. 8. neither ſpeaks of the covenant of grace, but the covenant of the Law, which was made in mount Sinai Junius the new Annot: refer to Exod. 19. & 24. Piſcat. Schol. in locum, viſitavi te per Moſen, educendo te ex Ægypto, & pangendo tecum fœdus, atque ita ducendo te in uxorem: Nor is this meant of externall being in covenant in reſpect of men, but of Gods promiſe to them, as the words plainly import, , I ſware unto thee and entred into covenant with thee, ſaith the Lord. As for the reaſon why the covenant v. 8 muſt be the covenant of grace, becauſe he will deal graciouſly with them for that his covenant, v. 60. it goes on this ſuppoſition, that the covenant v. 8, is the ſame with the covenant v. 60. But Piſcat. Schol. on the place reckons that v. 60, to be the covenant made in the times of Araham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and Levit. 26. 42, leads to it. But were it granted to be the covenant by Moſes, it follows not that the covenant muſt be the covenant of Evangelicall grace. For in Moſes his renewing the covenant in the land of Moab, there's a promiſe of reduction of them, Deut. 30. 3. which being upon condition of their returning to God, and obeying his voyce according to all that Moſes commanded that day, muſt be underſtood of the Covenant of the Law, which had its promiſes of ſuch temporall favours, and not of the covenant of Evangelical grace. That which Mr. C. ſaith, That he did not thus properly, for the ſake of that inveſture of his covenant annexed, ſcil. this covenant, the Churches covenant abſtractively conſidered, v. 61. I know not what ſenſe to make of it. There's not a word of Church-covenant, or inveſture with it. The plain meaning is either this, Not by that covenant of the Law which thou haſt broken, but by the new covenant of the Goſpel, as Junius in his Annot. in locum, Diodati, the new Annot. or this as Piſcat. Schol. in locum, not becauſe thou art worthy of this aggregation of the nations, as if thou hadſt kept covenant with me, as if he had ſaid, but of my grace or free favour, or as Grotius, It is a Metonymy as if it were ſaid, not becauſe on thy part thou haſt ſtood to the covenant.

I have ſeen Ezek 36. from v. 17. to the chapters end, and I ſee nothing there to Mr C. his purpoſe to prove a bare externall being in the covenant of grace. There's not the word Covenant in all the paſſage: But on the contrary, there are promiſes, v. 25, 26, 27. of a new heart giving his Spirit, which as Mr. B. ſaith truly, is proper to the elect, and notes an internall being in the covenant of grace. There's little but muddineſs and impertinency in the reſt.

He ſpeaks of an externall being in Chriſt, John 15. 2. (which is not denied in reſpect of profeſſion of thoſe that are ſo) and of an externall partaking of Chriſt, for which it's likely he cites (not as it is printed, Heb. 13. 14.) but Heb. 3. 14. But ſure that partaking is a ſaving partaking to which is required the holding faſt to the end the beginning of our confidence. For an external partaking may be without condition.

The Jewiſh refuſers, Iſa. 1. 11. are called Chriſts own, either by kindred or right to them from the old engagements of them to be his by their Anceſtors, or by vertue of his redeeming them from Ægypt, the land of the North, or some other way. Surely not because they did externally belong to Christ, or were externally in the covenant of grace & were to be baptized. For they expresly denied Christ, and rejected the counsell of God against themselves being not baptized by Iohn, Luke 7:30.

I grant there is an externall being called, Matth: 22.14, but this not competent to infants: I doubt whether Heb: 10, 29, be to be interpreted of an externall being sanctified quoad homines in respect of others by the blood of the Covenant. The New Annot: say thus, In regard of the meritorious sufficient satisfaction purchased by it. Piscat: Schol. in locum per quem videbatur esse sanctificatus quamdiu, scil. Christum confitebatur. Dictum κατὰ δόξαν, I think it is meant of the same sanctification of which he speaks in the same chapter, v. 10. 14. ch. 13, 12, to wit, an effectuall sanctification by remission of sins, and purging their consciences from dead works, chap: 9, 14, (which alone, and not an externall sanctificacion I find ascribed to the blood of the Covenant) and the person there said to be sanctified with this sanctification not in reality but according to his profession and opinion of himself, as Luke 15. 7. some are said to be just persons that need no repentance, that is, according to their own profession and opinion.

The purging from sin, 2 Pet. 1. 9. was externall I grant, not inward in the heart, yet it was not a mere purging by the outward ordinance of baptism, but their own profession, and partiall reformation of themselves not competent to infants.

2 Pet: 2. 1 It's doubtful whether it note an external being purchased by Christ, or a purchase by Christ onely sufficient, or an effectuall purchase, yet said of them onely according to what they professed and conceived of themselves, as Luke 15,7, Heb: 10,29, or others conceived of them.

That Deut: 33. 3, should be meant of an externall Saintship, is supposed, not proved, though it it were applied to the body of Israel, yet it might be understood in respect of the better part, that the people were called Gods Saints.

Psa: 50,5, The Saints of God, and those that had made a covenant with him by Sacrifice were Israel. vers 7, & it is true there were many hypocrites; but as the new Annot: God in respect of his elect calleth the whole body Holy, Saints, and his people, not meerly from an externall Saintship. To which I add, if it be referred to the covenant, Exod: 24. 8. to which Mr Ainsworth in his Note on the place directs, it was the covenant of the law, not the covenant of grace which is meant, Psal: 50, 5,

It is true, There are invisible Churches, which are as Isaac was, Children of the Promise, Gal: 4, 28, Children of the Gospel-church, v. 31, & 26. But that this should be verefied in all the members of the Galatian Churches, unto whom Paul wrot that Epistle, Gal: 1, 2, is not true, nor is it proved by Mr C, that the Apostle spake what he saith, vs 28. 31, of every member of the Churches of Galatia. It is true that Ierusalem above is the mother of us all: but that [us all] should signifie every profession of the faith in the Churches of Galatia, is false: for then every one of them should be born after the spirit, v: 29. and inherit, v. 30. The new Annot: on Gal: 4. 24. 6. therefore say, The Christian Church is the mother of all the faithfull who are heirs of the kingdom of Heaven whether they be Iewes or Gentiles. So that to be mother of us all, Gal. 4. 26. is not to be mother of every professed Christian in Galatia, but of so many as held the right faith with Paul, and were born after the Spirit. Thus in like maner Rom: 8, 3, 21 when it is said, who spared not his own Son, but gave him up for us all, it is not meant of every professor of Faith in Rome, but all the elect and true believers, as that which follows in the same verse and verse 33 shewes: So that we need not assert either that every professor of faith in the Galatian Churches was a child of the Jerusalem above effectually and savingly, or that there were some particular visible Churches in which were no hypocrites (which yet may be true notwithstanding the Parables Matth: 13 and 25. or 1 Tim: 3, 15. compared with 2 Tim: 2, 20) or that such as are savingly interessed in the Covenant of grace, should fall from grace, or that all were externally and according to men children of the promise, as Mr C. speaks.

Heb: 4, 1, 4, proves not that the promise of grace and glory may be to one as his legacy or portion externally and according to men, of the saving good whereof it is possible one may fall short. For though there be mention of a promise left, yet not of a promise left to any that come short of it, unless by being left be meant propounded or tendered onely.

Antipædobaptists do grant they admit false brethren to baptism and the Lords Supper, called by Mr Cobbet seals of Church and Covenant fellowship, but it is not in them to admit them into the fellowship of covenant, meaning the covenant of grace; for that is Gods peculiar. We admit them to baptism on this ground, not because to us they are in covenant (we suspend any judgement about their Interest in the covenant, as being out of our cognizance, and no Rule for us to admit or keep back from baptism) but because we know them to be professors of faith in Christ.

If by Blanks be meant such as to whom the promise of the covenant of grace is not made, and by Seals, Baptism and the Lords Supper, we think we do ordinarily put seals to a blank, nor do we make scruple thereof, or think it true that the seal must follow the covenant, or that Gen: 17. 9, 10, 11, 13. Acts 2, 38 39. 1 Cor: 11, 25 prove it. That it is not taught Gen: 17. 7, 10, 11, 13, Act: 2 8, 39, is shewed in the fore part of this Review, Sect 5. and in this part, Sect 5. 8, 13, 20, 21, 22, 23, 37, and elsewhere, 1 Cor. 11, 25 the cup in the Lords Supper is called the new Testament in Christs blood; but that all, or onely those who are in the covenant of grace must have the the cup, is not proved thence, and the falshood of it is shewed above often.

We do not say when we admitted persons to baptism, we judged them to be in the covenant of grace, else we had not admitted them; but we knew they professed faith in Christ, and so were Disciples of Christ, and thereupon admitted them according to our Rule, Matth. 28, 19, leaving it to the Lord whether they be in the covenant of Grace or no, we being not directed to enquire whether they were in the covenant of grace, but whether believers and disciples by profession.

I for my part agree not to it, that either according to Scripture, or the best Protestants any are said to be children of the promise, or that the covenant of Evangelicall grace in the N. T. confirmed by Christs blood, is made to them, or belongs to them besides the elect. Such Doctrine gives great advantage to the Arminians, undermines perseverance in grace, and the Polemicall Doctrine of our choice Divines, as I shewed Examen part 3. Sect, 4. and elswhere in this part of

the Review. Mr. Norton, Mr C. his Colleague, commended by Mr Cotton with Mr Cobbet, as a prime writer in the New English Churches, Resp. ad syl. quæst. Apollon. p. 30. saith, Objectum fœderis gratiæ sunt soli electi, objectum fœderis Ecclesiastici sunt tum electi tum reprobi

My own Tertullian in his book de Anima, chap. 21, 22, when he urgeth that Text, 1 Cor: 7, 14, for a peculiar cleanness of believers children by privilege of seed, means not the federall holiness Mr C. teacheth, but holiness by reason of the freedom from that unholiness in their procreation, which the Infidels children had from the many grosse idolatrous superstitions, by which they were defiled, and as it were ded cated to the Divell, as I shew in my Apologie, Sect 16, page 85. Paræus, Peter Martyr, Bucer, Melanchon, Mr. Philpot, are all Neotericks. Cyprian, Gregory, Nazianzen, Jerom, Austin, though they did plead for Pædobaptism from the Argument of Circumcision, yet did not maintain Infants covenant-estate, as Mr. C. but a necessity of baptism to Infants ready to die, because of the Text, The soul that is not circumcised shall be cut off from his people, Gen: 17, 14, Instances whereof in Augustine and others are many cited by Chamier Paustr. Tom: 4, l: 3, c. 3, Sect 39, 40 41. And they thought the Infant dying baptized was infallibly saved, whether believers child or not: As for others, they denied their entring into the kingdom of heaven, as I shew you in my Examen, part. 1. Sect 7, 8, 9, 10.

I have often considered Zech: 11, 10, and I conceive the sense as Mr C. makes it of the covenant of grace in respect, at least, of the externall administration thereof amongst them, as verse 9, and their externall right in that his covenant, to be very vain: For if it be meant of the covenant of grace, then it is as much as to say, That I might not write my Lawes in their heart, forgive their sins, &c. as I promised them, Jer. 31. 33. and then God should break his promise, there should be falling from the covenant of grace, &c. If the sense be of the covenant of grace in respect of externall administration thereof amongst them, and their externall right in that his covenant, then it is as if he had said, That I might take away Circumcision, the Passover, and the rest of the Temple-service, and the peoples right to them. (For what is the externall administration of the covenant of grace; but the seals, as they call them, and the rest of the service of the Sanctuary?) Now this neither agrees to the phrase; for Circumcision is never called Gods covenant with all the people, and to break circumcision, what is it but either to draw up the fore-skin, and to forbid circumcision? If this be referred to the time of Christs coming, this had not been a prediction of an evill to them, but of a benefit to be eased of that yoak, verse 9, mentions not externall administration of the covenant of grace, or externall right thereto. But whenever it was accomplished, whether at the siege of Jerusalem, or at some other time, it was the taking away of some who might be their protectors, whereby they were exposed to destruction; which whether they were the Maccabees or some others, may be doubted. However, it is so frigid an interpretation to interpret it as Mr C. doth, that methinks he should be ashamed to blot paper with it.

The Covenant ch 10. whether it were that Gen. 17. or that Exod. 19. or 24. or Deut. 29. it is certain it is meant not of the Covenant of grace common to all believers Gentiles or Jews, but of the covenant which he made with the Israelitish nation, which he brake by takingaway their Leaders whether Governors or Teachers Maccabees or some other, and so exposing them to ruin by the Grecian or Roman Lords or some other.

Psal. 44.17. Dan. 11.30, 31, 32, 33. to deal falsly in Gods Covenant, and to forsake the holy Covenant, and to do wickedly against the Covenant, do not intimate that Mr. C. would infer that there are some said to be in the Covenant of grace only externally. For to deal falsly in Gods Covenant is no more than not to keep Gods Commands, as the term Covenant is oft put Synecdochically Psal. 25.10. and 131.12. To forsake the holy Covenant, is to forsake the Law, to do against it, is to do against the Law, as Anticohus had imagination against the holy Covenant, that is the Law of the Jews. And that this is the meaning is apparent Psal. 44.18. where v. 17. is thus explained, our heart is not turned back, nor our steps declined from thy way. This Covenant then was no other than the Law of Moses, the Covenant made in Horeb, specially the Decalogue, whence the Ark called the Ark of the Covenant 1 Kings 8.1. the Decalogue the words of the Covenant Exod. 34.28. And it is apparent in that Antiochus endeavored to compel them to break that Law, as to sacrifice to Idols, to eat Swines flesh and now this Covenant was not the Covenant of grace. For the Apostle plainly distinguisheth the Law from the promise 400 years before Gal. 3 17. and the Covenant at Sinai is opposed to that of grace called the Jerusalem above Gal 4 24. Nor is there any difficulty in that which Mr. C. objects, that believers then might be in a free Covenant of grace, and at the same time under the contrary Covenant of bondage. For the believing Jews to wit David and the rest of those that believed Heb. 11. were under the command of the Covenant in Sinai. yet under the Ceremonial part, yea were not under the sentence or judgment of the Covenant of the Law so as to be justified or condemned by it.

The everlasting Covenant Isai. 24.5. is no other than the Law as is proved above. It is said Rom 3.3 (not 7. as it is printed) If some believed not, shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? But the inference of Mr. C. is trivolous, the faith of God was plighted to them, and they were externally in the Covenant, though the faith of God took saving effect only in the elect and in the believing. For I would know what the faith of God was whether it were the Covenant of saving grace, or the outward Covenant? If it were only the outward, how did it take saving effect in the elect? Did the faith of God take effect in that which was never promised? The outward Covenant me thinks Mr. C. should not say did promise saving grace, but externall right and administrations, therefore saving grace is not the effect of that Covenant.

And indeed the outward Covenant is but a meer notion (except understood Meronymically as Circumcision is called the Covenant as being the sign of it) there being no faith of God plighted to any Gentile believer and his seed, wherein God promiseth that they shall be accounted visible Church members, and as having external right or enjoyment of Church administrations. If he should it would be false, many of them never attaining them or having right to them. If it were the Inward Covenant in which God plighted his faith, then it took effect only in the elect and they only were in covenant.

Nor

Nor doth Rom.9.6. intimate what Mr. C. dreames; that the word, or Covenant of grace, took effect in all the Jews, in some externally, in the elect savingly. But as the stream of Protestant writers (whereof some are alleged in my Examen part.3, Sect.4. and others before in this part of the Review) and the very words shew it took effect only in the elect, who are therefore called v.8, the Children of the promise distinguishingly from others, and the Apostle plainly resolves that the seed Gen.17.7. as not Ishmael but Isaac, not Esau but Jacob, and consequently no believers natural seed, except elected.

As for Rom.9.4. it is often shewed that the Covenants there are meant of the Tables of the Covenant and the promises, the special promises made to the Israelites after the flesh, as is manifest v.4.5. expressing peculiar privileges to them distinct from what the Gentiles, though believers, have.

which Mr. C. saith, the Covenant of grace and an outward Covenant are not two distinct Covenants: but the Covenant of grace made with the elect in respect of their saving interest in that, I will be a God to them, the same is made with others in respect both of visible interest and the visible administration of it, I see no truth in it. For there is no Scripture that ever expounds, I will be a God to them, that is, they shall have visible interest, and the visible administration of it, that is, they shall be circumcised &c. many have the promise of saving intrest who neither have, nor ever had visible or visible administration as their language is of the Covenant of grace, and on the contrary many have no saving Interest, yet have the visible intrest and administration Mr. C. speaks of which in truth follows the command, not the Covenant. Nor is it consistent with Mr. C's. own suppositions, that a man may be in the external Covenant who is not in the Covenant of grace savingly that the one is only the visible interest and administration, the other the promise of saving grace, if they be not two distinct Covenants, For they must needs be distinct Covenants which are made to different persons of different things, as these are supposed to be by Mr. C himself. Nor doth Mr. C. prove by any text that there is any other way of entring into the Covenant of grace ordinarily, but by a true and lively faith. It is true Ezek.16.20, 21, 23. the children of the Israelites were Gods children by special right as his servants Levit.25.55. because he redeemed them out of Egypt, and he had entred a special Covenant with them, and they the whole nation had also engaged themselves in a special Covenant to be his, and it is true the Covenants and promises were theirs Rom.9.4 and they were the children of the Prophets, and the children of the Covenant which God made to Abraham Act.3.25. that is, the people among whom and out of whom Christ came, to whom he was at first made known, to whom the Prophets were sent; but this doth not prove that they were all internally or externally in the Covenant of grace. They had no right to be babtized, yea the greatest part of them (for this is spooken of the people of the Jews whether believers or not, even of them that offered their sons and daughters to Divils) denied Christ, and were broken off by unbelief Rom.11.20.

Gal.4.28. is impertinently brought to prove a bare external being in the Covenant of grace. For it is meant only of believers born after the spirit v.29. who by the spirit do wait for the hope of the righteousness which is by faith Gal.5.5.

It is not true that any of the true members from the Church of Ephesus Acts.

Acts 20. 30. are said to be purchased by the blood of Christ. It was judged an abuse in Stapleton by Dr. Rainold, Apol. Thess. Sect: 20. to interpret the flock of God redeemed by his blood, of any reprobates. Of 2 Pet. 2. 1. I have spoken before.

An externall being in the covenant of grace, quoad homines, by the parties profession, I never denied, but an externall being in the covenant of grace of believers infants by vertue of the parents faith in the New Testament, I still deny.

"Mr C. takes upon him to answer my Dilemma, Examen pag. 52. and tells "me, The covenant is theirs externally and quoad homines, consi- "dered as invested with Church-covenant, and in reference to covenant-or- "dinances, whereof they are capable, as of old they were of Circumcision, "and are now of baptism. Thus it is theirs at present in respect of the vi- "sible faith and interest of the parent or parents in the covenant, and for the "future it's theirs in the further grace of the covenant upon condition of "their believing if they do live to years of discretion.

Answer. The position I intended to prove by the Dilemma, was set down page 48. That the Covenant of saving grace in Christ expressed Gen 17 7. in these words, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, is not made to a believer and his naturall seed, to which Mr C. his answer is, by telling me, The covenant is theirs externally &c. which is to answer nothing to the Argument which proceeded against the asserting Gods Covenant, Gen. 17.7. as a promise of saving grace to belong to a believers naturall seed. Nor doth he prove, but dictate that Gen. 17. 7. "There's a promise concerning the exter- "nall covenant, or to any Gentile believers naturall seed, or that there is a- "ny mention of Church-covenant, or that title to Church-ordinances, as "Baptism and Circumcision is derived from interest in the promise Gen 17. "7. Or that the parents visible faith or interest in the covenant, makes it the "childrens: or that the covenant is such an ambulatory or revocable con- "tract, as to be the infants for the present in respect of the parents faith; but "for the future it's theirs in the further grace of the the covenant upon con- "dition of believing if they live to years of discretion.

These Dictates are hatched in Mr. C. his nest, but have nothing in the Text for them, nor doth he attempt to prove them in that chapter which is termed, The Explication of Gen. 17. 7, &c. In like manner he dictates in that which follows.

I had said, if the covenant of grace to believers seed be absolute, then either God keeps it or not: if he do not keep it, then he breaks his word, which is blasphemy; if he do keep it, then it follows, that all the posterity of believers are saved, contrary to Rom. 9. 13. Or if some are not saved though they be in the covenant of grace, there may be Apostasie of persons in the covenant of grace.

"In answer to which he tels me, God may be said absolutely to covenant "with believers seed collectively and specifically considered, and yet all the "individuall children not saved. It is absolutelely made, and made good "that, that sort of persons shall be and are saved by virtue of Gods covenant, "for some of them are infallibly saved: the covenant is to the indefinite "collective seed or children in respect of internall saving interest: else none "of them dying Infants should be saved.

Where-

Whereto I reply, The promise is to Abrahams seed, Gen. 17. 7. But that the promise is to be a God to any Gentile believers naturall indefinite collective seed in respect of the internall saving interest, as such, is not true. The promise is not made indefinitely but definitely to Abrahams seed, under whom none but believers of the Gentiles, or elect persons are meant, nor is it made specifically to a sort of men, but to such and such numericall persons as were Abrahams seed by nature or grace: Nor is it made collectively to any of them as part of the whole number of Gentile-believers naturall seed, but as Abrahams seed by grace, and if any of them be elect, it is made also to Gentile unbelievers naturall seed under the same consideration. It is true, some of the believing Gentiles seed dying infants are saved, nor can we say that none of the unbelievers infants, dying in infancy, are saved, notwithstanding the Arguments brought to prove their perishing. But none of them are saved by virtue of a promise made to that sort of persons, that is, believers naturall children (for there is no such promise) but by vertue of Gods election, conformable to which is the promise of saving grace, Gen. 17. 7. as the Apostle expressly determines, Rom. 9. 6, 7. 8, and consequently as election is of individuall persons (not of a collective indefinite specificall seed as Mr. C. speaks) so is the covenant. M. C. goes on thus.

Supposing they are the Israel of God, a part of the elect seed, yet the means of saving effect in and upon them, is the word of the Covenant, Rom. 9. 6. It's through the effectuall word and engaged truth of God that that part of the Church are savingly purged, Eph. 5. 25, 26.

Answ. I grant this to be true, yet conceive that Eph. 5. 25, 26. speaks of the word of promise, not barely as made, but also as accomplished in Christs performance, and published by preaching, whereupon baptism follows, by both which Christ sanctifies and purgeth his Church savingly by the one as the means, by the other as the sign.

He adds, The covenant is to the individual seed of all and each of them in respect of externall interest, and yet many of them not saved.

Answer. This is an exposition which is without proof, or example of the like, 1. That where God saith, I will be a God to Abrahams seed, he means other believers, even Gentiles naturall seed. 2 That he means this in respect of externall interest onely to some. 3. That some of those to whom he promiseth to be a God according to the covenant of grace in Christ, may not be saved. 4 That by Abrahams seed he meaneth in respect of saving effects, the indefinite collective seed of Gentile-believers, so as that it is onely made good to that sort of persons (which were true if none but Isaac and Iacob were saved; For if the promise of salvation be onely to the sort of persons, it is made good in one or two of believers seed) but in respect of externall interest to the individual seed all and each of them, yea though the parents be but hypocrites, and not savingly in the covenant of grace themselves. He goes on.

Nor yet is Gods faithfulness impeached or impaired, nor need the faith of believers be shaken, if this or that child should prove, live and die wicked, the force of the covenant is not to be measured by the fatall miscarriage of many of Abrahams Church-seed.

Answer. Neither is Gods faithfulness impeached, nor need the faith of believers be shaken, though all their children die wicked. It is not true, That the Apostles reasoning, Rom. 9. 4, 6. compared mentions any such Church-seed of Abraham, or takes them in as such, but onely the elect. Mr C. doth falsly charge his adversaries doctrine, as denying any interest at all to any believers infants in the covenant. I have often granted it to the elect, but to none as believers infants. Mr Baillie charged me with this thing, to which I answered in my Letter to him, Sect. 1. our doctrine is as comfortable as theirs when they speak truth. It is no Gospel but a dream to affirm what Mr. C. doth of Abrahams sancied Church-seed, though it be Gospel to say, God will be a God to Abrahams spirituall seed elect and true believers.

SECT. XL.

Animadversions on Sect. 5. of the same Chapter, shewing that Mr. C. his supposed visible interest in Gods covenant is not the rule in baptizing.

SECT. 5. Mr. C. sets down this conclusion, That the Church in dispensing an enjoyned initiatory seal of the covenant of grace, looketh unto visibility of interest in the covenant, to guide her in the application thereof. Nor is the saving interest of persons in view, which is her rule by which she is therin to proceed.

Concerning which I say, that I grant it if the terms be altered into plainer expressions as thus: The baptizer in the admitting a person to baptism, is not bound to stay baptism till he know a person hath saving interest in Gods covenant of grace; but it is sufficient, if he be a visible disciple or believer to admit him to baptism. And that M. C. may cease his wonder, he who confessed that it's not to be denied that God would have infants of believers in some sense to be counted his, to belong to his Church and Family, & not to the Divels as true in facie Ecclesiæ visibilis, &c. doth not oppose his fourth Conclusion reduced to the plain terms I have set it down in. Yet there are sundry things in which I oppose him. 1. That he makes it the Churches business to dispense the initiatory seale (as he calls it) of the covenant of grace, which I take to belong to him that is sent or used to make disciples by preaching the Gospel, not to the Church

2. That he maketh the rule of baptizing to be visible interest in the covenant, which according to the institution is visible discipleship, or faith.

3. That he takes that person to have visible interest in the covenant of grace, so as to have right thereby to baptism, who neither by extraordinary revelation from God, nor by any act of his own, but barely by his parents profession hath a pretended visible interest in the covenant. But let's examine what he saith, because he seems to be the selected man in New England to plead for Infant-baptism.

Whether John the Baptist did admit to baptism those which he knew would prove false and fruitlesse, is doubtfull. Mr Norton Mr Cs. Colleague. Resp. ad Apollon. Prop. 2. seems to hold the negative, and cites to that purpose, Paræus and Aretius. Together with Mr. C. in his position, That persons may be baptized upon visible profession without knowledge of the saving state of the party, yet I do not think Ananias and Sapphira, or Simon Magus were known hypocrites when they were baptized, nor do I think the Texts Mr C. allegeth, Acts

21. 20, &c, or 22, 20, &c. or 23, 12, 13, prove, that any of those baptized, Acts 2. 41, or 4. 1, 2, 3, 4. were of the number of them that opposed Paul, or proved false. If Christ did say to Iudas that his body was broken or given for him, and his blood shed, it will be hard to avoid thence the proof of universall redemption. I think it the safest and most likely tenent that Iudas went out afore the Lords Supper. For the Passover it was not administred to Iudas by Christ, nor do I know what warrant we have to make it a seal of the covenant, or to belong to a Minister of the seals, as they speak. It was a rite instituted to remember the delivery out of Egypt, and appointed to be used by each family without any other administration than the providing, slaying, dressing and bringing to the Table: If the Priest did any thing in it, it was at the Temple not at the Table, each person was to take himself according to his eating, Abraham and Isaac did circumcise Ishmael & Esau rightly according to Gods command, which is the rule in administring ordinances, not covenant-interest. But that they did circumcise as Prophets or Priests at that time, to the Church in their families, it is said without proof. The business of circumcising was not the work of a person as a Prophet or Priest to his family, but did belong to the parent or some other in his stead, though no Prophet nor Priest. Chamier Paustr. cath. tom. 4 l 5 c. 14 sect 9, 10, saith, We read of no certain Minister of Circumcision either in the institution or elsewhere, so that there's no obstacle but that Zipporah, and the woman in the second of Maccabees, c. 6. might circumcise. So there is nothing read by which the immolation of the Paschal Lamb was wont to be done in each family, is prohibited, though no Priests were used. Ishmael and Esau, and Iudas, were not visibly interessed in the covenant; being discovered by God and Christ to be such as had no interest in it. That a Minister cannot of himself admit to baptism, or reject from it regularly, but by and with the Churches consent, is dictated without proof. I grant that if particular persons having interest in Gods covenant and promise of grace, were the Rule to baptize by, administrators could not observe the rule in faith, but doubtingly. But that such visible interest in the Covenant as Mr C. means, is therefore the rule to baptize by, follows not. What or where A. R. suggests to the contrary I find not, nor doth Mr C. tell us. What he adds, I say visibility of the parties interest in the covenant, I say not meer visibility of faith and repentance, is quite besides the Scripture, which never appoints persons to be baptized because of their visible interest in the covenant, but their visible faith and repentance.

"He tells us, "The initiatory seal is not primarily and properly the seal of "mens faith and repentance, or obedience, but of Gods covenant rather; "the seal is to the covenant, even Abrahams circumcision, was not primarily a "seal to his faith, of righteousnes, but to the righteousnes of faith exhibi- "ted and offered in the covenant; yea to the covenant it self, or promise "which he had believed unto righteousnes. Hence the covenant of grace is "called the righteousnes of faith, Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8. The righteousnes of "faith speaketh on this wise, v. 8. and the word of faith. Hence albeit A- "braham must walk before God, who is now about to enlarge the covenant "to his as well as to make it to him in a Church-reference, Gen. 17. 1, &c. "yet the initiatory seal in his as well as their flesh, is Gods covenant, v. 13. "or a sacramentall sign firstly and expressly of Gods covenant, v. 11. & 7. "compared; albeit it implicitly oblige him and them to other duties for-formerly mentioned. Hence Acts 2. 38, 39, the seal of baptism is put to the promise as the choice matter and foundation in view, and as that was a ground of repentance it self; repent and be baptized for the promise is to you, not, for you have repented as if that were the thing to be firstly sealed by baptism, but the promise rather.

Answ. The inititory seal is a late devised term not found in Scripture and it is used upon an erroneous conceit as if the nature of Sacraments were to be seals of the Covenant, and baptism were the initiatory seal. But the term [initiatory seal] is chosen rather than the word [baptism] (though it be the Scripture term) by Mr. C. and others, that they may shuffle what they say in and out under the term of ininitiatory seal, sometimes understanding by it Circumcision sometimes baptism as if they were the same and what is said of the one were meant of the other, which is meer fallacious arguing. But setting aside Mr. C's lately devised term, the end of Christian baptism is in the first place, that thereby the party baptized may testifie his repentance, faith and hope in Christ, love to the people of God, and resolution to follow Christ to the death. And this is proved in my Exercit: in the twelfth reason of my doubting about Pedobaptism pag. 33. in the 2 part of this Review Sect. 5. from these Scriptures Rom. 6. 3, 4. 5. 1 Cor. 12. 13. Gal. 3. 26, 27. Ephe. 4. 5. Col. 2 12. 1 Pet. 3. 20. where the phrase of the answer of a good conscience, as Beza rightly observes in his Annot. on that place, alludes to the manner of the primitive baptizing after the answer to the questions propounded concerning the parties repentance, faith and obedience: which were held so necessary to baptism in the first ages of the Christian Church that none was baptized without it, yea and when infant baptism came up even till our dayes, and in some places according to the Common prayer Book even to the infants the same questions are propounded, yea the Lutherans confesse that without faith in infants it is in vain to baptize them. The continuance of which questions, as Lud: Vives Comment: in Augustin: de civit: Dei l. 1. c. 27. rightly saith, proves the original use of baptism to be of those only that could answer those questions. In respect of which Basil and others call baptism the seal of faith, Tertullian of repentance, the sealing of faith, Chamier: Paustr: Cath. tom. 4. l. 2. c. 8 cites the treatise of the spirit under the name of Basil ch. 12. saying, Confession goes before bringing to salvation, baptism follows sealing our consent. whence he infers thus manifestly salvation is ascribed to confession, but baptism is the seal of confession. No where that ever I could find among the Ancients is baptism termed the seal of the Covenant. Bucer on Acts 2. 38. To be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, is by the sign of baptism to testifie that we are the believers in Christ for remission of sins. Grot: Annot: on Mark. 16. 16. [and is baptized] he that believeth, and by baptism maketh profession of his faith. So that the profession of faith by it is the primary end and use of baptism nor is there any place of Scripture that I know which doth make the end of baptism to be the sealing of Gods Covenant to us. And here by the way it is to be noted what shifting is used in this matter by Pedobaptist. They say the seal follows the Covenant and the parties interest in it, and this Covenant they make the righteousness of faith as Mr. C. here, but when they are pressed that then in vain are infants non-elect and non-believers baptized, who are not in that Covenant, they fly to an imaginary external Covenant, and visible sible interest in that as sealed by it, and there by a right to be baptized; which yet by their own confession is not the Covenant of grace, nor by sealing that interest is the Covenant of grace sealed, for that is Gods Covenant of righteousness by faith, not the baptized persons Covenant, or his right. As for Mr. C's. observations here they are false and slighty. For neither is it true that it is hence (because baptism is not primarily the seal of mans faith and repentance, but of Gods Covenant rather) Abrahams circumcision was called a seal of the righteousness of faith: but the contrary rather is true. For if it were a seal of the righteousness of faith which he had yet being uncircumcised, it sealed rather his own faith, and the righteousness by it already obtained, than Gods covenant to him of something to come. And if circumcision be called Gods Covenant, yet it follows not that baptism is rather a seal of Gods covenant, than of mans faith and repentance. That which he saith of Acts. 2. 38. 39. is as vain: For the promise is not alledged there as sealed in baptism, or giving any right to baptism, but meerly as a motive to them to repent and to be baptized in the sense I give Antipædobapt. part. 1. Sect. 5. In this part of the Review Sect. 5. 8. 21, 22, 23. wherein Mr. C's frivolous interpretation is examined. And though the Apostle do not bid them be baptized because they had repented, yet he bids them first to repent and then be baptized.

Infants have no visible title to baptism because they make no visible personal profession. Parental faith in the Covenant made to them and their children is but a delusion. What ever may be said of the texts Deuteronomy. 26. 17. Deuteronomy. 29. 10, 11, 12. &c. Concerning taking it of children (of which in the examining of Mr. B's remainder) there is no visibility of infants Church-membership in the Christian churches mentioned in Scripture. I know not how the believing Gods testimony is the assent of charity. I still say there is no judgment of charity concerning infants who do nothing which may be interpreted to the better or the worse Mr. C. if he had recited my words fully in my Examen Pag. 41. might have found my words to yeeld him no help for his fourth Conclusion. I pass on to the fifth.

Sect. 41. Animadversions on the sixth sect. of the same ch: shewing that Christ is not head of any unsound members, nor parents profession of faith unites children to Christ so as to entitle them to baptism.

SECT. sixthly he sets down this conclusion, That Christ is in Scripture considered as head of the visible Church in which are many members of Christ the head in that respect, which prove unsound, as well as in other respects he is considered as head of the visible Church, wherein are none but elect ones.

Concerning which I say, that part of the invisible Church which is on earth professing faith, being both visible and invisible, visible in respect of their profession, invisible in respect of their sincere believing, it must needs follow that Christ is head of the visible, being head of the invisible Church in respect of those persons which are of both. And I grant that Christs headship being a Metaphor and nothing, sundry things as Superiority, Goverment, dire-direction, union, participation of the same life, sense, motion &c. In respect of some of these Christ may be said to be head of that part which is only visible, as in giving them officers, outward order, direction, help against persecutors &c. But that in Scripture Christ is made head to any unsound members I find not. Mr. C. urgeth Gal. 3.16. that to Abraham and his seed were the promises made; that is to Christ, yet not to Christ personally, for the promise of pardon of sin did not belong to him, and to Christ personall were not the promises made, but in him confirmed, Gal. 3.17. with 16. But rather of Christ collectively head and members, Gentiles and Iewes, v. 14.28. as Gen. 3.15. The seed of Eve is Christ, with his members in and with him.

Answer. I stick not to grant Gal. 3.16, by [Christ] to be meant not onely Christ personally considered, but also collectively, as Beza, Piscator, & others conceive; yet I do not think the Arguments brought by them so cogent for that sense, but that it may be understood of Christ personall as a common person receiving promises for all his members. For the scope of the Apostle to prove Gentiles and Jewes to have one manner of justification, is obtained by understanding the promises made to his person as a common person in behalf of all as well as to them as in him, and eternal life is promised to all the members of Christ if it be promised to Christ as a common person standing in their stead as the second Adam. As for Mr C. his reasons, the former is against his own opinion. For if by Christ be meant Christ collectively, that is, Christ and his Church, then the promises be made to Christs person with his Church; for what is Christ collectively but Christs person with his Church. And if the pardon of sin be a promise, then it must be made known to Christs person included in Christ collective: Therfore either it must be said, that the promises were made to Christ collective respectively, to wit, some to his person, as that he would uphold him, raise him from the dead, give him glory, others to his Church, to pardon their sins, renew their nature, &c. or that Christs person had the premise of pardon of sin made to himself as a common person, but not for himself as needing it, but for his Church or in their stead, as 2 Cor. 5. 21. The promises might be said to be given to Christs person as a common person, Gal. 3. 16 and yet confirmed in Christ as a surety of them, v 17. yet in this place the term [Head] is not used, and therefore not apposite to Mr. C. his purpose.

"But Mr C. propounds a question, "Whether this in Gal. 3. & 1 Cor. 12. "12, 13. be spoken of the visible or invisible Church, and answers it, that it "seems the places admit of the consideration of the Church as visible. First, "in that the Apostle speaketh of all the Galatian Church-members as well as "others as one in Christ, Gal. 3. 28. Now were all these members elected "will any say? I suppose not yet all are one in Christ their head.

Answer. Mr. C. a little before said, The promise Gal 3.16, could not be made to Christs person, because the promise of the pardon of sin is not made to Christ personall, which goes upon this supposition, that the pardon of sin is promised to the seed, Gal. 3.16. But sure this promise is made onely to the elect, not to all Galatian visible Church-members. Yea the very scope and coherence of what goes before and after, shew that the promises v. 16. were of the spirit, v. 14. of the inheritance, v. 18. of life, v. 21. which are proper to the elect. And therefore to apply the speech, Gal. 3, 16. to the unsound members of the visible visible Church, sheweth meer oscitancy. Nor is it necessary that because it is said, Gal. 3. 28. Ye are all one in Christ Iesus, that this must be understood of every Galatian Church-member, but of all those of whom he had said, v. 26. That they were all the sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus. And after, v. 29. that they were heirs according to the promise, which is true onely of the elect of them. And for what he adds, Secondly in that he speaks of them all as sacramentally one with Christ in baptism, Gal. 3. 27, 28. compared, so 1 Cor. 12, 13, as if because he saith, they were all baptized, he meant it of all that are baptized, it is refuted from the very words [by one spirit made to drink into one spirit, put on Christ] which, if there were no more, do shew that these speeches though indefinite, yet pro subjecta materia, must be limited to those visible baptized persons, who were sincere believers, and united to Christ by his Spirit, and so those words, Ephes. 1. 23 & 4. 6. Col. 3. 11. and many more are to be understood. And to the other reasons, That Christ hath headlike influences into the Officers and Members, many whereof are not savingly joyned to him, and that it is the Church wherein he hath set diversity of Officers, which is the visible Church, not the invisible.

I answer, Christ as a Superior, and in some other respects, may have headlike influences of command, governing, &c. on some not savingly joyned to him, but not the influence of union by his Spirit, which is that which makes any members of Christ, of his flesh and of his bones, Ephes. 4. 4. & 5. 30. Nor is it true, that Christ doth not set Officers in the invisible Church, though it be true that he sets no Officers in the Church that is onely invisible, but indeed he sets Officers in the Church invisible, and chiefly to and for them, while they are visible. And therfore the Apostle, 2 Tim. 2. 10. said, He endured all things for the elects sake. Hence, saith Mr. C. Profession of Faith unites a man to Christ as head of the visible Church without sincerity. But the Scripture saith not so, that any is united to Christ as head without the inhabitation of the Spirit. Mr. C. adds.

" invested with Church-covenant in reference to his children, it doth unite " them also to Christ as head of the visible Church so far as to give right to " solemn initiation of them into the fellowship of the church in circumcision
" as of old, or baptism, as now. Parents acts in this case being in the face of " the visible church, their childrens acts; the places quoted, Deut. 26. 17, " 18, & 29. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, & 16, 16, 17, declared.

Answer. Mr. C. tells us, Hence, &c. and this is the consectary he would inser from his fifth Conclusion, and minding discourse about it: But how from any thing said before [That Christ is the head of the visible Church, that visible Professors, though not sincere, are united to Christ as visible head] this follows, That Parents profession unites the child to Christ, so as to give him right to baptism, is a riddle to me. If it were formed into an Argument thus, If the visible professors confession of faith unites him to Christ as visible head, Then it unites the child so far as to give him right to baptism: But the visible professors, &c. Ergo. I should deny the consequence of the Major, and expect it to be proved ad Graecas Calendas, nor is there any proof in that which follows: For were it granted that the parents act were the childs act, yet it follows not that it is the childs act to give a right or title to baptism without an

Institution. None of the texts produced, no nor any other do shew, that the parents act of professing faith, did entitle the child to circumcision, much less to baptism. Cornelius his child was not entitled to circumcision, though he and his house feared God, was a devout man, gave much alms to the poor, and prayed to God alway, Acts. 10. 2. Even in circumcision the use of it had its rule onely from the command, as I have often proved. Not one of Mr. C. his Texts mentions the parents acts as entitling the child to fellowship of the church, but obliging to duty, Deut. 16. 16, 17, theres an injunction, That all the Males should thrice a year appear before God; but this was enjoyned not to parents onely, but also to children married or unmarried.

And if it prove any thing like what Mr. C. would, it proves rather the males act to stand for the females, than the parents for the children. More likely in this the younger males did appear instead of the aged weak, & so the childs act went for the parents. However here's nothing of the parents act giving right to initiation into fellowship of the Church, there was nothing required to that in the national Church of Israel but their descent. Deut. 26. 17, 18. there's no mention of a parents act for his child intitling him to solemn initiation into fellowship of the Church. What is said [Thou hast avouched this day the Lord to be thy God] is not said to be done by the parents for the children, nor to be done to entitle them to solemn initiation into the fellowship of the Church. Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. whose act soever is mentioned whether of the parents, or Captains, Elders, Officers, or men of Israel. It was an act done in behalf of the nation both those born already and those to be born after, not to entitle them to initiation into fellowship of the Church, but to bind them the more firmly to their duty, and therefore none of these instances are to the point of parents acts in the face of the visible Church taken as the Childrens acts for solemn initiation in Church fellowship. Yet if they had, that this had been enough for baptism and Church-membership in the Christian Gentile Churches will not be proved, till the rule about Circumcision, and the constitution of the Jewish Church be a rule to us about baptism, and the Church-membership of the Christian Church, which neither agrees with Christs or his Apostles appointment or the practise in the N. T. nor with the new english principles of Church constitution & Goverment, but Judaizing notions opposite to the Gospel. What he saith the parents omission to circumcise his child is counted the childs act of breaking Gods Covenant Gen. 17. 14. depends on this that the parents omission of circumcision is the childs act of breaking Covenant. but many Protestant Divines and others understand it of persons of years as Piscat. Schol. in locum. Diodati, new Annot. Grotius &c. And though Chamier counted it to be understood of the Infant Tom 4. Paustrat: Cath. l 3. c. 2. Sect. 20. &c. Yet he expounds the verse passively thus, the male, the flesh of whose foreskin is not circumcised that soul shall be cut off from his people: my Covenant is broken. Either way expounded it is impertinent to Mr. Cs. purpose. they that expound it [as Aben Ezra, apud Christoph. Cartwright on the place) of the parent understand both the fault and the punishment to be his. It is true John. 4. 50, 51. Matth. 15. 22, to 29. Mark. 9. 12, to 18. parents believing is accepted for the cure of children, and so Mark. 2. 5. the faith of the bringers of the palsy man was accepted, but this doth not prove a title to baptism by the parents confession any more than by the Midwives or Gossips bringing to the Font. nor was it the confession of faith, but reality; though not known to men, which Christ looked on, so that if this be a good reason, the Fathers praying in Secret though not in the face of the visible Church should give Title to Baptism.

" After many dictates without proof he telsus, " As the Covenant laid " hold on by the lively faith of gracious parents as made with respect to their " elect children hath mighty force to effect very gracious things in the elect " seed, yea albeit dying young, as sundry of those elect ones of Abrahams " race did Rom. 9. 6. yea so as to make their outward washings to become " effectual in Christ to an inward cleansing Ephes. 5. 25. 26. yea so as to " bring in and bring home many of such covenant-children. Whence those " revolters beloved for their covenant-fathers sake as such, Rom. 11. 28. and " hence made as a ground of their return, v. 15, 16. so is there such validi- " ty in the covenant invested with church covenant, albeit but unworthily " oft-times held forth by the parents, which doth beget upon the children an " externall filiall relation unto God and to his Spouse the visible church; " whence that respect of children of God and his church, by vertue of that " espousall covenant, Ezek. 16. 8. Even in the children of idolatrous mem- " bers, v. 20. 21 23. Great is the force of this way of the covenant so clo- " thed. Albeit many unworthy members are girt up in it, to hold them and " theirs in externall communion, Jer. 13. 11. untill either the church be di- " vorced from God, or the particular members be disfranchised by some " church-censure of such a covenant-privilege.

Answer. Though this reasoning contain nothing but dictates unproved, and incoherent, yet sith it carries some shew of an Argument à comparatis, I shal say somwhat to it. 1. There's not a word in the texts alleged, that shews what Mr C. here asserts, that the covenant laid hold upon by the lively faith of gracious parents as made with respect to their children, hath mighty force to effect very gracious things in the elect seed: Nor is there a word in those Texts to prove such a covnnant made to any gracious parent concerning his naturall children. It is true, Rom. 9. 6 it is said, the word took effect; and this I deny not to be the word of promise to Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed. But then it is expresly said, v. 7, 8. that this seed of Abraham is not his children by natural generation, but the speciall choice seed whether they were his seed according to nature, or ingrafted: there's not a word of the efficacy of this covenant by the lively faith of the parents, but by vertue of Gods election, v. 11. The Text, Ephes. 5. 26. seems to me to contain not onely the word of promise, as sanctifying or purifying the Church, but also the word of narration contained in the Gospel, as Luke 1. 2 Acts 8. 4. & 10. 36. 44. Joh. 17. 8. 17. Rom. 10. 8. preached and believed, not by the parents but the parties purified, Acts 15. 9. who as they hear the word and believe, so are baptized upon their believing. It is true that the Jewes hereafter to be ingrafted again, are said, according to the election to be beloved for the Fathers, Rom. 11. 28. But this is meant of the Jewes onely, and it is not at all meant of the immediate parents of those Jewes reingrafted (for they doubtless will be Infidels) but of the ancient Fathers, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, out of the remembrance of their following God, and Gods covenant to them, which were both singular, and therefore cannot be verified of every believers natural children as it is there meant and shall be verified of them. 2. There's not a proof for the other part of the comparison, that there is any such validity in the Covenant invested with Church-Covenant albeit unworthyly oftentimes held forth by the parents to beget upon the children an external filial relation unto God and to his spouse the Church visible. For Ezek. 16.8. mentions Gods covenant which he swear, not their's, by which they became his, and those whose sons and daughters were born to him v. 20. are said to sacrafice them to be devoured, had caused them to be slain, and delivered them to pass through the fire for them. Mr. C. confesseth they were Idolatrous members, and the text mentions their Idolatry to be of the highest kind, even the sacraficing their children, and if these were in the Covenant of grace and in Church-covenanant, and did thereby beget an external filial relation to God, and to his spouse the visible Church, then may the worst of men even open Idolatrers that offer their children to Moloch and sacrafice them to the Devil be in the Covenant of grace, and in Church-covenant, and therby in those whom God hates and who go a whoring after Idols, yea the Devils in a most horrid manner, there may be validity in this horrid estate to beget an external filial relation unto God & to his spouse, the visible Church for their children. Horrendum dictu! The meaning of the text, and the impertinency of its allegation by the Assembly, by Mr. C. and others hath been often shewed. Jerem. 13.11. makes nothing to the purpose. God in the wilderness had made the whole house of Israel to cleave to him in the Covenant at mount Sinai, and by his special deliverances and providences for them. What is this to prove that the Idolatrous posterity of that people are by the Covenant clothed with Church-covenant held to God they and theirs in external Church-communion until either that church be devorced from God, or the particular members disfranchised by some Church censure of a Church covenant privilege? 3. were the first part of the comparison proved, that the Covenant laid hold on by the lively faith of the parents as made with respect to their elect children hath mighty force to effect very gratious things in the elect seed, yet there is no validity that the other part should be true, that a bare dissembled profession should make such an external relation to God and his Church, as if because Peters faith and confession obtains from God a special privilege, Judas his profession must obtain something of God for his children though he were a Devil. If there be strength in these dictates of Mr. C. their's weakness is nothing. The answers to the objections of I. S. proceed upon a conceit of a relative grace, and implicit calling, and of in-being in Christ without either Christs spirit, or faith, or profession of faith, which are things that have no Scripture grounds. The absurdity objected against his opinion that it entails grace to generation that it upholds a national Church, he puts off only thus, He knows not in N. E. which hold the one, yet do not maintain the other in the usual sense of a national Church. But this shewes not how he will acquit his doctrine from maintaining that by consequence, which is disavowed by those of N. E. For if there be such a covenant and Church covenant now as there was Deut. 29.10, 11, 12. and Ezek 16.20, 21, 22. of validity to beget an external filial relation to God and to his visible spouse the Church, it cannot be denied, but that the worst Idolaters even Papists are visible Church-members, and by consequent the whole nation elder and younger are in the Church. Which

what it makes less than such a national Church as was of the Jews I understand not.

SECT. XLII.

Animadversions on Sect. 7: of the same chap. shewing that the body of the Jewish Church even the worst of them was not under the Covenant of grace in respect of external Interest therein.

IN the seaventh Sect. Mr. C. sets down this conclusion, that the body of the Jewish Church was under the Covenant of grace as invested with Church Covenant, in respect of external interest therein. In which as almost in all his writings about this point, there's much ambiguity. He neither sheweth whom he means by the body of the Jewish Church whether every Jew or some only, and if some who those are whether the most part or the chiefest; nor what he means by the Covenant of grace, what promise they are under nor how they are under it: Nor doth explain what he means by Church-Covenant or investing with it, nor what is the external interest therein which they have, nor how they are under the Covenant of grace as invested with Church covant in respect of external interest therein, and not with respect to internal interest. For my part so far as I am able to discern his meaning this is it, that all the Jews from the promise made to *Abraham I wil be thy God & the God of thy seed Gen.*17.7. have this privilege; that all should be accounted members of that Church and the males circumcised. But I know not how it comes to pass, this author either affects, or it is his vein to use ambiguous expressions when he might use plain, and to talk in a new phrases hard to be understood of the Covenant, seal, Church-seed &c. And not to explain his conclusions afore he proves, nor to shew how he proves out of the text he allegeth, but leaves his reader to fish out his meaning as he can from scattered passages. However I shall view his dictates.

He denies that the Jewes had only a Covenant of grace among them which was made to some choice ones among them. And yet the Apostle directly teacheth that the promise I will be a God to thee and thy seed as a promise of saving grace was not made to all Israel, but the elect only *Rom.*9.6, 7, 8. And clear it is that the Covenant made with the body of the Israelites at mount Sinai was the Covenant of workes, as is plain from *Rom.*10.5. 2 *Cor.*3.6, 7, 9. *Gal.*3. 12, and 4.24, 25. *Heb.*8.9, 10, 11. &c. and 12.18, 19, 21.

It is false that he hath any where proved that the external & Ecclesiasticalright to circumcision came from the circumcised persons interest in the Covenant of grace invested with Church-covenant. Neither did God appoint all them to receive the visible seal thereof meaning Circumcision: for he did not appoine the females or males under eight dayes old to be circumcised though in the Covenant as well as the infant male of eight dayes old.

He bids us see *Gen.*17. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. and 26.3, 4, 5. and 28.12, 13, 14. But I can see none of his dictates in those texts. I find there that God made a covenant with Abraham. after renewed it to Isaac and Jacob assuring to their inheriting posterity the inheritance of Canaan, the multiplying of them &c. that God injoyned circumcision to them for a memorial and assurance of that covenant. This covenant as containing the promise of Canaan &c. to the natural posterity of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, is expressed to be by reason of Abrahams obedience Gen. 26. 5. circumcision is required Gen. 17. and Exod. 19. Levit. 26. obedience is required to the laws given by Moses. They that term the Covenant Exo. 19. a covenant of works speak suitable to the Apostle Rom. 10. 5. Gal. 3. 12. yet I deny not but in Covert expressions Gen. 17. and elswere God promised Christ to the elect whether Jews or Gentiles and blessing that is righteousnes and eternal life by faith in him Gal. 3. 16. &c. which Abraham and all the ancient Saints expressed by faith Iohn. 8, 56. and elswhere. Now it is not true, that those covenant Fathers Abraham, Isaac and Iacob recieved the covenant Evangelical in referrence to their natural children: nor in respect of justification before God and external life had a contrary covenant of life and death, grace and workes made with them. For though the Jews succeeding were under the whole law of Moses because of transgressions, yet not so as to have life by it Gal. 3. 17, 18, 19, 21. nor is it any absurdity to say that the legal justitiaries who rested in the law were at one and the same time externally under the blessing of God in respect of their outward prosperity in Canaan, and yet internally under the curse of God Gal. 3. 10. as seeking righteousnes before God by their observing the Law.

It is, no where said that any other than Abraham is the root or first fruits to his seed Rom 11. 16. nor they termed his seed, lump, branches any other way than either naturally or spiritually, that is by natural generation or by following his faith by vertue of election Rom. 11 16. doth not say, Abraham was the root as recieving the covenant for the branches, but as propagating the branches. Nor need we say that he either received a covenant of works alone, in referrence to them all elected, or that he recieved the Covenant of grace with Ecclesiastical respect to them all. The plain doctrine of the Scripture is set down above, Mr. C's. dictates are meer phantasms without Scripture.

The substance of the Covenant is a novel expression, and ambiguous. I deny not the covenant Gen. 17. to be evangelical. yet I concieve it not purely such, but as I say in my Exercit. pag. 2. mixt, that is containing political and Evangelical promises. I deny not but it was the jews covenant-right to have the Tabernacle of God or their ordinances as their privilege, yea and his presence therein until the Messiah came, yet so as that when thay set up Idols the glory of God departed from them Ezek. 11. 22, 23. They had also Gods oracles with them, deliverance from Egypt, Christ to be with them in the wilderness: nor do I deny these to have bin by vertue of Christs mediation, yet so far as these were national mercies they were proper to the Jews. What ever be meant by the Covenant & the promise Rom 9. 4. they do not agree to Gentile believers. And though I say they were by vertue of Christs mediation, yet I concieve the mediation of Christ was directly for the elect only, for others only obliquely, by consequent, and by accident by reason of the Cohabitation of them on earth. I deny not that filling the Temple with smoake Rev. 15. 8. allusively to that which was 1 Kings. 8. 10, 11. Isai. 6. 1, 2, 3, 4. might resemble the presence of God in the Churches after Christs ascension in a way of mercy to his people, and for their sakes in a way of justice against his and their enemies.

I neither do, nor need say that Canaan was all which God promised the Jews I grant it was promised to them as an everlasting possession Gen. 17.8. But the word עולם which the Gr: translate αἰωνιον, everlasting, notes frequently but a duration of some age or ages as 2 Chron. 2.4. &c. I deny not but the Patriarchs looked futher than Canaan Heb. 11.9, 10. I deny not that the promise of Canaan was in some sense ratified in Christ, and all other temporal blessings to the elect now 1 Cor. 3.21, 22, 23. that Christ is said to drive out their enemies Exod. 23.20, 21. and that the land they possessed was called Immanuels land Esai 8.8 that sundry were excluded from thence for unbelief Heb. 3. last compared with ch. 4 2. though if it be not warily explained Moses and Aaron should be guilty of the Gospel sin of unbelief. If God promised to be a God to them, and as one branch thereof instanceth in giving them Canaan Gen. 17.7, 8. then the promise of Canaan is a branch of the promise, I will be a God to them. If the Proselyted strangers were to have Abrahams Covenant sealed to them and their by circumcision, yet had no lots in Canaan, then persons were to be circumcised to whom the promise belonged not.

I grant that Christ was mediator of the Covenant with Abraham so far as it contains evangelical promises, but deny that it was held out to all the Jews by the sacrafices. For though the typical sacrafices in respect of purifiing the flesh did purge the whole Congregation, yet none were purged by Christs blood, but the elect. The high Preist bare the names of the 12. tribes and these represented the elect for whom Christ made intercession, and atonement not every Israelite Rom. 9.6.

What Mr. C. saith, the Covenant of works holds out pardon or mercy to transgress I do much question. It seems to me that Abab, though under a Covenant of works yet had some mercy 1 Kings 21 29. And whether the offence against some of the laws were not in some respect forgiven Levit. 4. to them, who had not faith in Christ, for the sacrafice they offered (which were all offered according to the Law Heb. 10.8.) I do make question. Nor do I think but that by the Covenant of the law in respect of temporal evils there was some pardon by vertue of obedience to legal prescriptions, though some sins as of presumption Num 15. were not, no not to them that were in the covenant of grace, as its likely in Eli. his Case 1 Sam. 3.24. see Gerhard. Ioh. Voss. resp. ad Judic. Ravensp. c. 22. 23. Concerning the Covenant of the Law though it require no faith in Christ, or repentance for justification, yet whether according to the covenant of the law some repentance were not accepted for revoking some temporal evils contrary to the promises of the Covenant with the Iews at mount Sinai may be doubted from Deut. 29 21. 25. and 30. 2, 3, 8, 9, 10. But of these Chapters more hereafter in answer to M. B. I grant no salvation but by Christ, but denies that therefore al the Iews best & worst had salvation & external covenent-right: nor though al the Iews best & worst, had the same dispensers of the covenant mentioned Exod. 19.5.6. & 24.7.8. will it follow they had all right at least externally in the covenant of grace. For that speaks of the covenant of the law. I grant that the first Covenant of works was made withal in Adam, and that the Covenant Gen. 17. was a particular covenant made with the seed of Abraham, yet the Covenant at mount Sinai was not made with all men, without distinction, but only with Israel, whom he brought out of Egypt. the Jews Ro. 11.20. were broken off from the invisible church of true believers, which was in that nation in their progenitors, as I shew in the first part of this Review Sect. 2. &c. I agree with Mr. C. that the Covenant in Horeb Deut. 29. 1. 2. with Deut. 30. 6. had the stipulation of, do this and live, and that the Covenant of the law was different from the promise, Gen. 17. that it held out temporals, this externals. How the Gentiles were ingrafted in the room of the Iewes, and not into the externall right & privilege, as by Mr C. imagines, is shewed in the Review, ubi supra, That the covenant of Sinai was without mercy, I question as above. And methinks, Ezek. 16. 60. proves, That God would remember his covenant with Israel in the dayes of their youth, and shew them mercy for it.

Now the covenant made with Israel in the dayes of its youth, is meant of the covenant made with them when they came out of Egypt: for so the whole description of their pitiful estate (which can be referred to no other than the time of their bondage in Egypt, v. 4, 5, 6, 7. after which was his covenant in the dayes of their youth, v. 8) shews the covenant in the dayes of their youth to have been the covenant at mount Sinai. And so the new Annot. on Ezek. 16, 8, "[I sware unto thee] I made a solemn covenant with thee that I would take "thee to be my people, Exod. 19 & 24 chapters, Ier. 2. 2. Piscat. Schol: in v. "7. nudissima] i. e. destituta omni ope pressa, sc: servitute in Ægypto, in v: 8, "visitari te per Mosen educendo te ex Ægypto & pangendo tecum fedus atque "ita ducendo te in uxorem. Grot. in Ezek. 16. 5, Populus enim in Ægypto na-"tus est in v. 7. & sic exprimitur miseria Gentis in Ægypto in v. 8, & in-"gressu sum pactum tecum] in Sinai. As for Mr C. his paraphrase on Ezek: "16. 60. I will remember my covenant with [Thee] not with this or that "particular Jew, but with them all in an Ecclesiastical way, and in respect of "externall right: albeit some onely had the saving benefits thereof, as being "the select covenanters mainly intended, He therein supposeth that some had "the saving benefit of that covenant, which is contrary to Rom. 3 20. That "by the deeds of the Law shall no flesh be justified in Gods sight. And he "supposeth the covenant was made with them all in an Ecclesiasticall way, and "in respect of externall right.

Which what it is else but this, that they should all have a right to circumcision, and other Ecclesiastical privileges, I know not: Whereas the covenant was of prosperity in Canaan, continuance of long life, &c. to them upon obedience to the law he gave them by Moses, which notwithstanding they had broken, & were carried captive; yet he would remember his covenant made with that people when he brought them out of Ægypt, and upon the prayers of Daniel, &c. restore them to their own land, Esay 48 1, 2, 3, &c. teacheth the Jewes, that notwithstanding they were evill, yet he would for his names sake, that the heathens might not say that God could not deliver them and bring them from the north, v, 10, 11, 14. The like is, Ezek. 20, 14.

The objection from Rom. 9 7, 8, is ill framed, and as ill answered: 1. it is proved from the Text, that the promise of fulfilling, of which the Apostle speaks, was the promise to Abraham, I will be the God of thy seed, Gen. 17. 7. from the terms used Rom. 9. 7, 8. which shews that the question was, how Gods word could be true concerning Abrahams seed, if the Jewes were rejected, as the Apostle supposeth, v. 3. 2. That the answer is directly this, that this promise was not made to all Israel, or to all the children of the flesh, that is, begotten of Abraham by carnall generation, for it was not promised to Ish- mael and Esau, but to the elect as Isaac and Jacob, whence this proposition ariseth, They onely are children of the promise (that is by an usuall Hebraism) subjects of the promise to whom it belong, as children of wrath to whom wrath belongs, a son of perdition to whom perdition belongs) who are elect, therefore not all the naturall seed of Abraham. And consequently the promise. Gen. 17.7. belonged not in the Evangelicall sense to the body of the Jewes, even the worst.

" Now what doth Mr. C. answer? " He distinguisheth between children " of the promise, in respect of externall filiation, and externall salvation, " and applies it thus, In the later they were not, but if you take it of the " Church-seed of the promise, and such as were externally adopted of God, " and instated in the covenant of grace as invested with church-covenant, so " they were children even of the free covenant of blessing in Christ, Acts 3, " 25,26, and had the promise indefinitly, as Deut: 30. 6, Jerem: 31.37, " *Gen.*17.7.

In which answer. 1. he makes a distinction to include them in the promise whom the Apostle excludes from it. 2. Whereas the Apostle determines the elect onely to be included in the promise taken in an Evangelicall sense, Mr. C. includes the elect and non-elect, even the worst of the Iewes whom the Apostle excludes. 3. He abuseth Acts 3.25,26, Deut: 30. 6, by interpreting them as belonging to the worst of the Jewes in respect of externall right, which are expres about turning from iniquities and circumcising the heart,

The second objection is better framed, yet not so fully as had been requisite: Mr C. his conclusion is, " That the covenant of grace as invested " with church-covenant, belonged to all the Iewes even the worst of them, " in respect of externall right to outward ordinances.

But that is false: For it did not belong to the children after the flesh, to the Jerusalem that then was, which was in bondage with her children, they were to be cast out being of the bond-woman, Gal. 3.23,25,28,30,31. Ergo, the covenant of grace, &c.

Again, They to whom belongs the covenant of grace as invested with church-covenant in respect of externall right, are children of the promise, Gen. 17.7. But many of the Iewes were not children of the promise, Gen. 17.7. as is proved from *Gal.*4.28,29, Rom. 9 8. Ergo,

Now what doth Mr. C. answer? He tells us, " That they are called " children of the flesh, not begotten by naturall generation, for then Isaac " also should be a child of the flesh. But he is called a child of the flesh, who " though born by naturall generation of Abraham, yet sought righteousnes " by the Law, which was not Ierusalem of old, but Ierusalem which was " when Paul wrote this, long after Christs time.

Ref. But was not it true also of the Ierusalem that was when Christ was? Did not our Lord Christ deny them to be Abrahams childrē, & told them they were the Divels children, Iohn 8.39,44, though he granted them to be Abrahams seed by natural generation, v. 37. and yet Mr C calls them Abrahams Church-seed, or Church-seed of the promise instated in the covenant of grace, as invested also with Church-covenant, children even of that free covenant of blessing in Christ, Acts 3. 25,26, and had the promises indefinitly, as Deut. 30,6. Jer. 32,37. *Gen.*17.7. &c.

&c. belonging to them, Rom. 9. 4. and were children of God, Christs, Matth. 15, 26. I deny not but Iohn 1. 12. those that rejected Christ are called Christs own, but not because of their right in him, or promise to them to own them as in the covenant of grace, but as they were ingaged to him in respect of his deliverance out of Ægypt, and other mercies to them, and their nearness of consanguinity to him, as Paul calls Israel his flesh, Rom. 11. 14, Christ being from them according to the flesh, Rom. 9, 5. But to say that even then they were in the covenant of grace when they received not Christ, is to conceive they were in the Olive when they were broken off. And yet I deny not that they had in Christs time a right to circumcision, but no externall right to the covenant of grace, as Mr C. dreams.

SECT. LXIII.

That the Covenant at Mount Sinai was a Covenant of Works, and not of Evangelical grace, and that the Iewish Church and State were but one body.

A Third objection against Mr C. his sixth Conclusion is, they were under the old and first covenant which was formerly, &c. and not under the new, or in the covenant of grace.

" To this he answers, " That even Sinai covenant could not disannull that " covenant formerly made with them in Abraham, and being much later " than it, Gal: 3. 16, 17. And after, when the covenant is said to be new " and old, it is not divisio generis in species, but subjecti in adjuncta. So the " phrases [first and second] Heb. 9, note not two Testaments specifically " different, but numerically. Besides, it's called a first and second Testa- " ment, scil: in order of succession: so the former is said to be faulty com- " paratively, not absolutely. In a word, in way and manner of dispensation, " that was different from the covenant now dispensed in respect of ceremony " of administration, not in the essentials.

Reply, The answer of Mr C. I conceive is reduced to these two points, 1. That the Jewes were under both covenants, that of Sinai, and that of Abraham: 2. That these two covenants the first and the second, the New and Old, mentioned Heb: 8, & 9. differ in the way and manner of dispensation, in respect of ceremony of administration, not in the essentials.

To which I reply, 1. That this is contrary to the Apostles supposition, that the same men which were under the covenant of mount Sinai, should be under the promise: For he supposeth them to be cast out, Gal: 4. 21, 30, and saith, v. 31, we are not children of the bondwoman, that is, under the Law, v: 23, but of the free, that is, the promise. Yea, cha: 5. 18, If yee be led by the Spirit ye are not under the Law. The like whereto is said, Rom: 6: 14, Gal: 3, 10, 11, 12. I deny not but that the Iews who were under the covenant of grace, that is, believers in Christ were both under the obedience of the Law, and the hope of the Gospel, and under the covenant of the Law so far as concerned their prosperity in Canaan, but not in respect of righteousnes and life, or any other Ecclesiasticall privilege.

As for the other part of the answer, I find Mr Perkins on Gal: 5, 24, 25, saying, saying it is a main pillar in Popish Religion, that the Law of Moses and the Gospel are all one in substance, &c. Which I know not well how to distinguish from Mr C. his position, that the new and old covenant differ not in essentials. But let's examine it, The essentials of a thing are the genus and difference: It is granted that the new and old, first and second covenant differ not in the genus, no more doth the covenant with Adam in innocency with Noah after the Flood, they are all covenants of God: But that there is no essentiall difference distinguishing between the covenant at mount Sinai, and the new covenant; and that they differ in way and manner of dispensation, in respect of ceremony of administration, not in the essentials, is I am assured, a manifest error both against Scripture, and I think the Authors themselves, though not only Mr C. here, but also the Assembly Confession of Faith, c. 7. Art. 5. saith, The covenant of grace was administred, &c. and is called the old Testament, which to be meant of the covenant of mount Sinai, I conceive from these words of Mr M: Defence page 188. "Alas Sir, why do you run into "this needless and erroneous digression? I said in my Sermon that the Mo-"rall Law was added 430 years after the covenant with Abraham, not as a "part of that covenant, but as a School-master to whip them to Christ, that "they finding the impossibility of keeping the Law, might more earnestly "long after Christ, exhibited in those shadowes of rites and sacrifices, &c. "But to say that this covenant mentioned in the eighth of the Hebrews, was "the covenant of works, is a most erroneous doctrine: Look into the text "and you shall find that the covenant which is there mentioned (which God "finds fault with, and calls the first covenant, in opposition to this better co-"venant) had ordinances of divine worship, had a Sanctuary, a Ta-"bernacle,, Priests and High-priests, Sacrifices and other rites belonging to "the administration of it. Sir, was this the covenant of works? I hope "you will not own it in your next.

Concerning which it is to be observed, that to dispense is to lay out as a Steward doth lay out money. To dispense a Covenant may be understood either by making it known, or performing the things promised on either side; the same may be conceived to be meant by administration. The ceremony of administration I understand not what it is, unless by it be meant the rites of the Old and New Testament. This then seems to be either all or the main difference Mr C. makes between the covenant made with Israel at mount Sinai, and the new covenant confirmed in the blood of Christ with Jewes and Gentiles; that the former had Circumcision, the Passover, Sacrifices, &c. by which the covenant of grace was made, or the things promised conferred, the new covenent had Baptism and the Lords Supper. A Covenant is a pro-

miſe, and ſo an action; and when mutuall there's a reciprocall action. I know not what other predicament to place it in. The eſſentials of a thing are in corporeall ſubſtances, matter and forme, in other beings thoſe things which in proportion to them ſhew what it is, and wherein it is differenced from others under the ſame genus, which eſſentials the Logicians call the genus and difference. The eſſentiall difference of one action from another, is the terminus or effect, as heating from cooling, in the object, ſubject, end. A Covenant being eſſentially a promiſe, differs eſſentially from another promiſe, when the things promiſed are different, as the promiſe of land differs eſſentially from the promiſe of life; and when the conditions are different, though the things promiſed be the ſame, as the promiſe of land to one for ſo much money is eſſentially different from the promiſe of land upon the condition of thanks. The covenant of works and of grace, are terms not uſed in Scripture. But Rom. 11. 5, 6, Election by grace and of works, Rom 4, 4, it is ſaid, to him that worketh the reward is reckoned not according to grace, but according to debt, Epheſ. 2. 8, 9, Yee are ſaved by grace, not of works, 2 Tim: 1. 9, who hath ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace, Titus 3. 5. He ſaved us not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but according to his own mercy. Yet I think the diſtinction right and good of the covenant of grace and the covenant of works. And the difference between them is, 1. in the thing promiſed, the one promiſeth life upon obedience to the Law given, but not ſtrength to do it; the other promiſeth the Spirit to inable for doing. 2. in the condition the one promiſeth life upon perfect obedience, the other upon faith in Chriſt. Theſe differences are confirmed from ſundry Texts, Rom: 10. 5. 2 Cor. 3. 6, 10, Gal. 3. 10, 12, 22, &c. I think in a promiſe the different end of the promiſer makes not an eſſential difference. I think it is the ſame promiſe eſſentially when one promiſeth land upon condition of giving thanks, to ſhew his bounty; and another to engage him to his party, though the ends be different. My determination in this Writing is as it was in the former Exam. page 102. That the new Covenant is not the old renewed, but that they differ ſpecifically in the eſſentials, and not onely in Rites, and that the Covenant at mount Sinai was a covenant of works: And this I prove,

1. From that Text which here Mr C. Mr M. the Aſſembly and others ſtand ſo much upon, to wit, Heb 8, 8, 9. & 10. The old covenant there meant, is the covenant made with Iſrael at mount Sinai, which appears in that it was the covenant which God made with the Fathers of the Iewes in the day that he took them by their hand to bring them out of the land of Ægypt. Now that covenant differs eſſentially more than in Rites from the new covenant; yea, as a covenant of works is diffrent from the covenant of Evangelical grace. 1. Becauſe the new covenant is ſaid to be eſtabliſhed or ſetled as a Law on better promiſes, Heb: 8. 6. Now if the promiſes be better promiſes, it is becauſe they be of better things; and if of better things then of different things, and ſo the difference is more than in Rites, yea it is in eſſentials: for promiſes of different things eſſentially, make different covenants eſſentially. And that the difference is in the meliority of promiſes: and that theſe promiſes be of better things, is apparent from the recitall of the promiſes, Heb: 8. 10, 11, 12. & 10. 16, 17. where alſo by the offering of Chriſt, that Teſtament is ſaid to be of force. By this also the covenant at mount Sinai is proved not to be the covenant of Gospel-grace: For then it had had as good promises, yea the same promises. 2. If it had been the covenant of grace, they had abode in it. For that is a covenant, which they that are in continue in. But in the old covenant, or that at mount Sinai they abode not, v. 9. Ergo, &c. 3. That is not the covenant of grace which is faulty, or (which is the meaning of it) occasioning God to complain, for ἄμεμπτος, which we translate Faultless, is that which is without complaint, and the meaning is, the first covenant occasioned complaint of the Israelites, as it is v. 8. ἄμεμφόμενος γὰρ αὐτοῖς, complaining of them (he doth not say it, as Mr. M. seems to have understood it, as if God had found fault with the covenant; that's a mistake, he should then have found fault with his own act) he saith, therefore for remedy of such complaint and jarring, a second covenant was established, which should be ἄμεμπτος, faultless, and therefore the covenant of grace takes away occasion of complaint, or finding fault, because it provides for them to whom it was made, that they should not occasion God to complain by their breaking of it, as the first covenant had done, which was faulty, occasioning God to complain in that it was broken. Mr C. saith, it was faulty comparatively, not absolutely, and his meaning seems to be that the first covenant was faulty because of its imperfect manner of teaching the Gospel. But he is therein mistaken: For, as I shewed from the words, the first covenant is said to be faulty, because of the complaint of God against the Israelites, as not keeping it, as the holy Ghost expounds the word ἄμεμπτος, v. 7. by the expression v. 8. proving it not to have been faultless, that is, without complaint, because he complained of them, v. 8, to wit, that they abode not in it. v. 9. which if it had been the covenant of Evangelical grace, they should certainly have done, because that provides for the keeping and perseverance in it, by writing the lawes in their hearts, and forgiving their sins.

2. The same is further proved from chap. 12. 18, &c. where 1. the covenant at mount Sinai is set down as given with horror, to shew that it begat nothing but affrightments even in the best Moses himself, whereas the covenant of grace begets joy and gladness before God. 2. It is said the Hebrew Christians were not come to, therefore it was not the covenant of grace. 3. That they were come to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, v. 24. in opposition to Moses the Mediator of the old.

3. From ch. 10, 29. where the blood of the new covenant is said to sanctifie. And ch. 13. 20. Christ brings back the sheep by the blood of he everlasting covenant. This everlasting covenant is that which was confirmed by the blood of Christ oppositly, or in contradistinction to that which was confirmed by the blood of Calves and Goats, Heb. 9. 19. Therefore that covenant was not everlasting, nor confirmed by Christs blood, and consequently not the Covenant of grace

4. The same is the express doctrine of Paul, Gal. 4. 24. where he saith, Agar and Sara are two covenants, and he saith, Agar, or one Covenant, was from mount Sinai, and that this genders to bondage, and is in bondage with her children, v. 25. calls them that are under it such as are begotten according to the flesh, v. 29. to be cast out, v. 30. and opposeth it to Sarah, that is, the promise, the Jerusalem above who is free, mother of all believers, begetting children of the pro- mise, born after the Spirit, children of the free woman. Now what is this but the covenant of grace, and the other of works. For the covenant of grace never genders to bondage, nor is in bondage with her children, who are not according to the flesh to be cast out, but free, the mother of believers, bringing forth children of the promise born after the Spirit, children of the free woman. Therefore the covenant at mount Sinai, was not the same with the covenant of Gospel-grace, but a covenant of works.

5. In the same Epistle, chap. 3. 12. he saith, the Law is not of Faith, that is the covenant of the Law doth not promise righteousness before God upon faith, but by works. v. 13. therefore the covenant of the Law was not the covenant of Gospel-grace.

6. The same is expressed v. 16, 17, 18, 21, where the Law is opposed to the promises, the inheritance is denied to be by it, or that it could give life, or righteousness by it, therefore it is not the covenant of grace, for life, righteousness and inheritance is by it. The like is Gal: 2. 21. Rom: 4. 13, 14, 15, 16, & 3, 20, 21.

7. From Rom 10. 5. where the Apostle expresly saith, that Moses described the righteousness of the law that the man that doth them shall live in them, and this he makes opposite to the word of Faith: whence it follows it was the covenant of works, which was the Law: For what is the covenant of workes but that which promiseth life by doing the Law? Nor doth it make against it to say, the Apostle, v. 4. saith, Christ was the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth: for in whatsoever sense that be meant, yet it is certain the denomination of a covenant of grace or of works, is not taken from the end of the Covenanter, or the consequent on the covenant or command, but the promise and condition; therefore what ever end God had in giving the law, or what event soever fell out upon it, yet the covenant of the law promising righteousness upon perfect obedience to the law, and not otherwise, it is to be termed a covenant of works, not of Gospel-grace.

8. From Rom. 6. 14. where the Apostle saith, Sin shall not have dominion over you, for ye are not under the law, but under grace, which supposeth that they who are under the law, are not under grace; which cannot be understood of the command of the law, for men may be and are under the command of it, and yet under grace: therefore by the law is meant the covenant of the law, and then they which are under the covenant of the law, are not under grace, which they should be, if the covenant of the law were generally the same with the covenant of grace.

9. From Rom: 7. 4. We are dead to the Law by the body of Christ, iv. 6, We are delivered, or as I would read it, we are discharged (κατηργήθημεν) from the law, even the Moral law, v 7. not as a rule of obedience, but as a Husband, or Covenant, on which we depend for maintenance, help, supply, sentence, countenance, reward. But if the law were the covenant of grace, we should not be dead to it, or delivered from it: Ergo.

10. From 2 Cor. 3, 6, the covenant of the law is called the letter which killeth, opposite to the new covenant in which the Spirit which quickneth is ministred, and v 7. he expresly calls it the ministration of death graven in stones, the ministration of condemnation, v. 9, opposite to the ministration of righteousness; of which Paul denies himself to be a Minister, therefore it was not the covenant of Evangelical grace, but of works.

Yea

Yea Mr Cobbet himself, page 65. The covenant in Horeb had the stipulation of. Do so and live, not so in the covenant of grace that was imbondaging, shewed the way of worship, gave not grace to act it, was against us, &c. The Assembly Confess. of Faith, c. 7. Art. 2. ch. 19. Art. 1. cite Gal: 3. 12, Rom. 10. 5, Gal. 3, 10, which speak of the covenant of the law to shew the covenant of workes made with Adam, which shews they take them to be the same, or heed not what they cite, chap. 19. Art. 6. True believers are not under the law as a covenant of works, not as due to them by the Law as a Covenant of works. Greater Catech: page 25. The regenerate are delivered from the Morall law as a covenant of works. Yea Mr M. his words denying the law to be part of the covenant made to Abraham, but as a Schoolmaster to whip them to Christ, impossible to be kept (which are not to be said of the covenant of grace) doth in effect make it the covenant of works. Mr Anthony Burgess when he distinguisheth vindic. legis, lect. 24. pag. 223, saith the law considered more largly, as that whole Doctrine delivered on mount Sinai with the preface and promises adjoyned, and all things that may be reduced to it, was a covenant of grace, but more strictly, as it is an abstracted rule of righteousnes holding forth life upon no terms but perfect obedience abstracted from Moses his administration of it; was not of grace but of works.

In which words, he denies not that it held forth life upon no terms but perfect obedience, and so it was a Covenant not of grace but of works. 2 he shews not that it was given as a Covenant upon any other terms, or that it did propound or promise righteousnes before God upon condition of faith in Christ: but only tels us, take the Law for the whole doctrine &c. Which is in effect all one as to say, The covenant God made was of works, yet withal he delivered many things, which shewed he would also have them look at Christ, (which we grant true) but no where that he promised righteousnes through Christ in that Covenant Mr. Blake Vindic. Fad. c 24. pag. 174. the Law is taken sometimes in that strict sense as containing a Covenant of works and holding forth life upon condition of perfect obedience. So Rom. 10. 5, 6. and 3. 21, 22. Gal 3. 18. It were no hard matter to shew many of Protestant Writers who call the Covenant of the Law at mount Sinai the Covenant of works, but these suffice. What is objected to the contrary is not from the tenor of the covenant, but from some adjuncts of it. as 1 because there were sacrafices & other rites appointed, it must be a Covenant of grace. Answer. the sacrafices as they were commanded, so they did belong to the Covenant of works. But as God used them as shadows and types of Christ to come, so they signifie Gods purpose of Gospel-grace in Christ, but by another Covenant, not that at mount Sinai. 2 Gods end was not to give life by the Law, but to direct to Christ. Answer. 1 I grant the first and thence it appears he intended it not for a covenant of grace. 2. it directed not to Christ as it was propounded Covenant-wise, but by accident: in that it made known sin, and so made Christ appear necessary, and this also proves that it was of it self as propounded a Covenant of workes. 3 God could not enter into a Covenant of works with man fallen. Answer. True, so as to justifie him by it; yet for other ends he may, as to discover sin, shew mans impotency. As Christ said to the young man Matth. 9. 16. if thou wilt enter into life keepe the commandements though he knew he could not have life that way, and v 21. commands him to sell all; though it did but shew his covetousnes, not make him perfect. The covenant of grace is to be judged such, from the tenor of the promise and condition, not from Gods ends. For if so, then the Gospel it self, being sent to some to harden them, should be a Covenant of works, because the end was to to condemn them by it, 4 That God begins the Decalogue with I am the Lord thy God &c. Answ. 1 He is said to be the God of the spirits of all flesh: Numb. 16. 22. yet thereby is not proved all are in the Covenant of grace. 2 It may be understood, that he was their God de jure, that he had right to command them, because he brought them out of Egypt. 3 the plain answer is that he was their God according to the Covenant of grace made with Abraham antecedently to the giving of the Law, nor by the Covenant of the Law. And for that which is often objected that in the second commandement God promised mercy to thousands, but he promiseth no mercy but in a Covenant of grace, I know how that can be proved, I concieve that God did and doth shew temporall mercies out of his long patience, by the Covenant of the Law, though no man be justified by it before God. neither Psal. 105. 8. nor any other prove that the Covenant at mount Sinai was the same with that to Abraham, though the promise of Canaan was to a 1000 generations, yet on condition of obedience Dan. 9. 4 Ierem. 11. 4, 6, 7, 8. when they brake Gods Laws they were expelled, and so when they slew the heir of the Lord of the vienard he took his kingdome from them and gave it to a nation bringing forth the fruits of it, Matth. 21. 43. I do not say that a naturall covenant ex natura rei, is a covenant of works, but it is undoubted, that the covenant on mount Sinai was a covenant made with the whole nation of the Jewes, and it is proved before to have been a covenant of works. It is untruly said, That the Gospel covenant, Gal. 3. 9. was of a national nature. For that is a national Covenant, which is made with a whole nation, that is all the people descended from such a stock, whereas v. 9. the Apostle by saying, so then they that are of the faith of Abraham are blessed with faithful Abraham, plainly expounds who he means by all nations v. 8. to wit not whole nations, but believers of all nations. The Covenant of works at mount Sinai though it did not justifie before God, yet it held that nation in Canaan till they set up other Gods and revolted from the true God, and upon their forsaking Idols, they might plead it for the restoring of them to their own land, or continuance in it. Yea God did condescend so far that if there had been in Ierusalem a man that had executed judgment and sought truth he would have pardoned it, and not brought the Chaldeans upon it to burn it Ierem, 5. 1. It is true the Gospel threatens and executes corporal punishments, and promiseth rewards to the disobeying or obeying of it, but not an expulsion out of or setling in any one Country of an entire nation, but personal evils or rewards upon personal disobedience or obedience. The Covenant of grace admits of no carnal hypocrites, nor is it so said Gal 4. 21, 22, 23. though it's not denied but many who are admitted into the visible Church are such.

To the eight objection, That was in the flesh, this in the heart, Mr. C. speaks thus. Answ. was that only in their flesh? was not the word of Covenant as well in their heart as Moses judging Ecclesiastically avoweth of Israel Deut. 29. 10, 11. &c with 30. 11, 12, 13, 14. so Isai. 51. 7. Gods covenant now is to write his Law in our hearts Heb. 8. but is not all that included in this, I will be your God? whence all is inclosed up in that phrase ibid. or was not the first made to the Iews after their return from Captivity more expresly, Jer. 31. as before more implicitely Gen. 17.

Reply

Reply: The objection I conceive (though I do not well know whose it is) is this, that the covenant at mount Sinai with the Iewish nation, or the covenant with Abraham. Gen. 17. were not the same with the covenant, for that was in the flesh in circumcision, or with the fleshly Iew in that at mount Sinai, this is the heart by writing Gods Law there and comprehends onely them in whose hearts Gods Laws are written. And indeed this difference the Apostle makes between the Covenant of the Law and the Gospel, the one was of the letter, the other of the spirit 2 Cor. 3.6. the promise of the spirit is said to be by faith Gal. 3.14. and in the new covenant this is made the promise different from what was in the first which was faulty for want of it Heb. 8.10. that God would write his laws in their hearts. now what Mr. C. speaks seems to me no whit to infring this. For though it is true, the word of Covenant was in their hearts, yet it is true, if meant of sanctifying implantation, only of the elect, not all Abrahams natural seed, or the whole body of Israel. How Moses is said to judg Ecclesiastically I understand not. Deut. 29.10,11. &c. with 30.11,12,13,14. do not prove that Moses avowed of every Isralite that the word of covenant was in their heart. In some places doubtless the promise [I will be your God] includs also the writing of Gods Laws in our hearts, nor will I deny it included in the promise Gen. 17.7. But I do then not understand it of every Israelite in that sense: for if so then I must make Gods word fal, sith he doth not perform it to al. And for that which Mr. C. seems to hold, that they had the promise dispensed unto them with execution of the covenant, it is in my apprehension to charg God with falshood. if any say I wrong Mr. C. let him construe this passage otherwise if he can [yea but God did not actually write such holy dispositions in them: suppose he did not: that is the execution of the covenant, as for the very berith or Covenant it self, it is the promise whereof dispensed to them, and this they had both Gen. 17. and Deut. 30.6. To circumcise the heart to love God is, to imprint gracious dispositions; to promise the same to them is a Covenant to imprint it and so he did covenant with them and theirs ibid] In which words he seems plainly to make God promise to imprint in some the gratious dispositions he doth not actually imprint, which is to make God not keepe his word; nor is the matter mended by asking, is not Gods Covenant now also sacramentally on our bodies too, and in many no further? For I grant many are baptized, who are not regenerate, yet I do not believe Gods Covenant of grace is to any such, or as Mr. C. speaks Gods Covenant to write his Laws in their hearts is to any such. Nor do I think that either Ierem. 31.33. or Deut. 30.6. God promiseth to all Israelits to write holy dispositions in their hearts, but only to the elect; nor to these in his covenant at mount Sinai, though he made these promises to some of the natural seed of Israel. neither Rom. 11. from 16. to 24. nor Gen. 4.15,16. Compared with Gen. 6.1,2. nor Gen. 17.18,19,20,21. compared with Gen. 21.9,10,11,12. and Gal. 4. nor Heb. 12.15,16,17. prove that either Cain or Ishmael or Esau were ever in the Covenant of Evangelical grace, nor is there any text that proves that the new covenant is intailed to natural generations of the most Godly men. Mr. C. in answer to the tenth objection saith thus. But it's false to say the Commandement gave right to Covenant Interest. since Covenant right was first promised and declared to be the ground of that commanded service of the initiatory seal Gen. 17.7,8,9,10,11, &c. Thou shalt therefore keep my Covenant. He doth doth not say you must be or are circumcised, and therefore I will be your God: But I will be a God to thee and thy seed, therefore thou and they shall be circumcised: the nature of a seal supposeth a Covenant to be sealed.

To which I reply, I confess it were ridiculous for any to say the commandement gave right to covenant-interest, or covenant-right. For what is covenant-interest, but interest in the covenant, and covenant-right, but right from the covenant? But setting aside Mr C. his inept phrasifyings, (which I count to be Pædobaptists gibberish) it is not false, but manifest truth, that it is the command of God onely that gave title to persons to be circumcised, and is the Rule to know who are to be circumcised and who not, as I have often proved and shewed to be in effect confessed by Mr M. As for Mr. C. his inference from [thou therefore, Gen. 17. 9.] it is answered often before in the first part of this Review, Sect. 5. and elsewhere, that neither is the reading certain [thou therefore] nor doth the inference arise meerly from the promise, v. 7. nor is the inference at all of a right to circumcision, but of a duty, nor is this duty urged from each circumcised persons interest in the covenant but Gods making it with Abraham. Nor is it true, That the nature of a Seal supposeth a covenant to be sealed, sith other things are to be sealed, as Letters, Books, Stones, Men, Fountains, &c. besides covenants, Abrahams circumcision, Rom. 4. 11. was a seal not of a covenant of some things to be done, but of the righteousness of faith which he had yet being uncircumcised, & if it were true, yet is it as little to the purpose, sith there may be a covenant sealed to a person that hath no interest in the promise, as when ones name is used onely as a Trustee for others. And for what is said, That the commandment required only a male of eight dayes old to be circumcised, (which Mr. C. seems to conceive false) meaning not before the eighth day, is so plain by reading the chapter, that I should make question of his wit or his forehead that should deny it. And the reason thus exprest is as frivolous, The promise being made indefinitely to the seed whether male or female, and not to the eighth day old seed, but to the seed albeit but a day old For though the promise be to the child of one day old, yet the command is not to him, nor is he to be circumcised, and therefore the seal follows not the covenant, but the command even where the promise goes before. What he adds, Else what had become of them if they had died then, in respect of the ordinary covenant means of their good, Rom. 9. 6. Methinks Mr. C. might have as easily answered himself as he would do a Papist pleading this very plea for the necessity of infants baptism to salvation, or about the case of famales, or still-born infants. Surely he would say, God supplies that without means, which he bestowes on others by ordinary means, and so infants of a day old may speed well without circumcision. To what purpose Rom. 9. 6. comes in here I know not: This and some other passages seem to be the inconsiderate speeches of a man dreaming.

To the objection, with the Jews, the Church and State were the same, but not so now. Mr. C. thus writes. Answ. God never confounded Church and Civill State either then or now. Who dare make God the author of confusion which is the God of order? He then kept them severall, paling in the Civill State with the Judicials, with which the Church as such dealt not, but as Civil cases came under a Church consideration. She had her Ceremonials and Morals to regulate her Kings and Princes, Priests Levits, and Elders had their proper work, and word, onely in their own Spheares. The Elders of the Assemblies knew and acted in their places Ecclesiastically without interruption from Civill officers, or intruding upon Civil Officers as such, as Josh. 9. & 16. 1, 2, Acts 14. Luke 4. The matters of the King and of the Lord were carefully bounded and sundred, 2 Chron. 17.11.

Answ. According to the constitution of the Jewish people by God, the Church was not one body and the State another, but all the same persons were of the Church, who were members of the Common-wealth, he that had the right of a Iew, had the right of a Church-member, nor were any taken in or cast out of the one, but withall he was taken in or cast out of the other. Nor hereby is God made the Author of confusion, but good order was setled & kept in this way of coincidency of State Civil and Ecclesiastical. Nor is it true that God kept the Church and Civill State severall, or paled in the Civill State with Judicials, by which it was divided from the Church. In the Church the Priest dealt as well in judicials as in ceremonials, the Priest and the Levite as well as the Iudge gave sentence in matters of blood and plea, as well as between stroak and stroak, Deut. 17.8,9. Eli, Samuel, Iehoiadah judged Israel, managed State-affairs as wel as Temple service. Nor do I know any such Iudicials, but that they did belong to the Church or Priests (who were Iudges) as well as to the Civill State, that is, the Princes. As there were ceremonials and morals to regulate Kings and Princes, so there were also lawes to regulate the Priests. But no where do we read of any Court kept by the Church, or Officers of the Church, that is, Priests and Levits, wherein to censure Kings and Princes for meer morall sins called now (somewhat besides the Scripture use of the word) Scandals) though we find Princes deposing Priests. It is true, Priests, Levits and Elders had their proper work and moved onely in their own Spheares. And so had Princes and Souldiers, but not so as to make two distinct Corporations in Israel. If by Elders of the Assemblies which knew & acted Ecclesiastically in their places, he mean any other than the Priests, and by their Ecclesiasticall knowing and acting, the taking cognizance of moral evils, and proceeding against them by Ecclesiasticall censure in a Court distinct from the Civill, I must confess I find not either such Assembly, or such proceedings in the texts brought by Mr C. or any other. I grant there was a distinction between the matters of the King and of the Lord, 2 Chro. 19.11. & that Amariah the chief Priest was over the Iudges whom Iehoshaphat sent forth in all matters of the Lord, and Zebadiah the Ruler of the house of Iudah, for all the Kings matters. But this doth not prove that these men did keep severall Courts, but that in the same Synedrium these persons were best fitted to direct, the one in one sort of matters, the other in the other; As in a Parliament, Senate, or Council of Lords, Bishops, Lawyers, Souldiers, though they sit and act together, yet one may be more specially for one business and another for the other. Nor doth it appear that Iehoshaphat assigned in the Cities some Iudges for one kind of causes, and others for others. But because there was occasion to have recourse in many difficult cases to the Synedrium at Ierusalem, he instructs them whom they should have there for their help, according to the law, Deut. 17. 8, 9, &c. But I leave the Reader to Mr Seldens books de Synedriis Ebraeorum, to resolve him in this point.

What Mr C. gathereth out of the words of I. S. that he saith, That God made a covenant of grace in generall and so with the body of the Jewes infants and all, serves not Mr C, his turn, unless he meant his naturall seed in generall, which that he did grant in respect of Evangelicall grace, I do not believe. What he saith touching Baptism, that it sealeth the Covenant indefinitely to all sorts, and that it sealeth an infants present, federall grace, and unto future grace: likewise unto grown ones it sealeth personall grace less principally, covenant-grace principally, is meer fancy without any Scripture, which makes no such distinctions of federall grace and personall, of the sealing one grace principally, another less principally, of sealing an infants present federall grace, and unto future grace, of baptism, sealing the covenant indefinitly to all sorts, which the Scripture makes the act of the person baptized only to testifie his own repentance and faith.

I proceed to examine the ninth Section of that Chapter. Sect. 9 Mr C. sets down this Conclusion, That the covenant-interest, at least externall and Ecclesiasticall of Infants of inchurched believers is Gospel as well as such Covenant-interest of grown persons.

SECT. XLIV.

Animadversions on the ninth Section of the same Chapter, in which the Covenant-interest externall and Ecclesiastical of infants of inchurched believers is pretended, not proved to be Gospel, in which his allegations of Deut. 30. 6, &c. Gen. 17. 8. Luke 19 9. Deut. 29. 10, &c. Ezek. 16. 1, &c. Gen. 9. 25. 26. and other places are examined.
